For those who suspect the cause of an animal's death to be anthrax, I would say that the chief post mortem appearances are scattered hemorrhages in various organs, diffuse cellular exudations, congestion of the lungs, and a swollen and pulpy condition of the spleen. The blood is dark and tarry looking. In this latter contrasting with Texas fever, which reveals the blood on autopsy to be red, and the third compartment of the stomach to be black and charred looking. No germ has yet been discovered in this Texas Fever (splenic). That of anthrax was discovered by Pollender in the year 1849. In France the name of it is Bacteridium. In Germany the name Bacillus Anthracis was given by Cohn, and this is the name by which it is known in America and England. In every suspected case specimens should be sent to San Francisco closely sealed in air tight bottles to a skilled microscopist in this city. There are several medical gentlemen in close communion with Dr. Bowhill who are thorough masters of the instrument. The latter's experience in the Nebraska University when he worked with the celebrated Dr. Billings, a pupil of Koch, of Virchow, and of Schutz, will bear good fruit on this Coast. Wm. G. Hodson.

For twenty years Gombault's caustic balsam has been recognized as the great French Veterinary Remedy. It is prepared exclusively by J. E. Gombault, ex-veterinary surgeon to the French Government Stud. This preparation supersedes all canter or fling, and, as it is impossible to produce a cure or blemish, it is preferable. It is also a safe and speedy cure for curbs, splints, capped hocks, swellings, founder, wind puffs, strained tendons, skin diseases, pink-eye, thrush, diphtheria, lameness from spavins, ringbone, or other bony tumors. It will also remove bunches or blemishes from horses or cattle. One tablespoonful of this preparation is guaranteed to produce more actual results than a bottle of any liniment or sprain cure made. Each bottle is warranted to give satisfaction, and is sold by all druggists, or will be sent by express to any address on receipt of $1.50 by Lawrence Williams & Co., Cleveland, Ohio.

Harry Wilkes, long the foremost trotter actively on the turf, has been placed under the care of Dr. Sheppard at his veterinary hospital, half way between Brooklyn and Sheepshead. The great little horse has had a failing leg for some months past, and has been unfit to start this season. His owners, Messrs. Sire Bros., are hopeful that under Dr. Sheppard's care and treatment he will be as good as ever before next spring, and that he will yet lower his almost unmatched record of 2:13½.

CANOEING.

Oakland Canoe Club.

The quarterly contest for the Mayriscch Badge came due last Sunday, and there was more than usual interest aroused as a keen competition was assured. The Bonita has held the badge for the last period, and her skipper was on hand to defend it, the wind, however, was so light that he resolved to enter the field in his little racing canoe, Dart, instead of in the heavier canoe. The new canoe Frolic was out on the float bright and early, having her new mast stepped so as to hoist the Flirt's big racing sail, which was accomplished in good style, though doubts were expressed if she could carry it at all, a trial trip, however, soon proved it feasible in a light breeze. Gypsy presently appeared with a very business like air about her. In addition to the new mainsail hoisted last Sunday she now sported a new driver of large proportions. The race was called at 1:30, entries were Mystic, Gypsy, Frolic, Dart, Whisper and Conchita. The tide had just begun to ebb, and a splendid start was effected. The wind was light and the canoes kept well together to half way down the course when it freshened a little, and Frolic drew out ahead followed by Mystic. Frolic increased her lead and rounded the stake about fifty yards ahead and stood up towards the Alameda shore. Most of the others went right round and over to the Brooklyn side to get the fullest advantage of the ebb tide. No perceptible gain was made. When in the creek Frolic made a long tack right down to Lake Merritt slough, while the rest made short boards in the channel. Her skipper held a nice little breeze all the way, and concluded to let well alone. On coming up by the whalers he held about the same lead, Mystic second. It now looked like a soft thing for Frolic; he and Mystic stood over to the Saragoza and then back to the Alameda shore, where they came about for the last reach to the boat house. At this moment the wind veered due south, blowing stiff, and the Gypsy and Dart, who were down to leeward near the Saragoza, came right up the middle of the creek booming, and were abreast of the club house before the leading canoes realized what was up. The Frolic, however, with the wind almost free, dashed for the line, going about four feet to Gypsy's one, he having to do considerable pinching to make it. Twenty feet off they were exactly even when the Frolic shot ahead and won by three seconds. The same close race ensued between the Mystic and Dart, the latter just getting third place. The expired times were as follows:

	H.	M.
Gypsy,	1	3-3
Dart,	1	4
Mystic,	1	4 5
Whisper,	1	8
Conchita,	1	8-12

Frolic holds the badge for the ensuing three months, and her skipper hopes to do even better with her when he knows her better, she only having arrived ten days ago.

TRAP.

California State Sportsman's Association.

The seventh annual convocation of the State Sportsman's Association was called on Thursday, Oct. 4th, at Stockton. A misapprehension as to the precise date of the meeting kept some members away, and the business pressure incident to each "first of the month" made it impossible for others to attend; but despite the drawbacks, a goodly number of the most prominent and public spirited sportsmen of the State were on hand and the beginning of one of the most pleasant meetings of the organizations was made.

Stockton has but a few members, but fortunately they are all men of position and enthusiastic supporters of game preservation and stalwart opponents of poachers and "fish hogs," of whom several have been prosecuted and convicted by the Stockton members of the Association at private instance and expense. To C. J. Haas, Austin B. Sperry, Frank E. Lane, Charles B. Merrill and Dr. S. N. Cross and a few others, must be accorded credit for the ample provision made for the entertainment of the Association. The body was formed in Stockton in June 1881. Of the organizers, many have halted by the wayside, diverted by heavy business interests, family burdens or waning fondness for the sports of the field. But enough of the typical Stockton fire and vim imbue the gentlemen retaining active membership, to make a visit to them a great pleasure. As usual, an incident of the meeting was a series of trap matches, well arranged, and most generously furnished with special prizes by the leading gun firms, Messrs. Clabrough, Golcher & Co., and E. T. Allen, both of San Francisco. The Messrs. Golcher offered a valuable special in every match of the meeting, and Mr. Allen was represented in several. Prominent Stockton merchants also offered appropriate specials, among them being Messrs. Rosenbaum & Crawford, J. D. Gray, J. Glick, W. W. Stockwell, Jackson & Earle, J. D. Holden, R. B. Parker, Robbins & Morey, B. S. Moss, Steinhart & Goldsmith, Geo. Langridge, John Gawoods, H. G. Boisselier and John Guso for the first day's shooting.

The tournament began on Thursday at Goodwater Grove in the suburbs of Stockton, with a match at 15 live birds, plunge traps. All of those who shot were formerly accustomed to the use of plunge traps, but for four or five years had not used them, the result being a most amusing mixture of Hurlingham and plunge trap shooting. Even Dr. Knowles, perhaps the ablest exponent of all styles of trap shooting in the State was several times momentarily in doubt, when before the ugly and "no good" plunge traps.

In the first match the coin was divided by Messrs. Fanning, Haas, Cross and Leffler. Fifth was taken by Mr. Burnett, sixth by Dr. Knowles, seventh by Dr. Britton, eighth by Mr. Merrill, ninth by Mr. Norton, and tenth by Mr. Sperry.

The second match, a Hurlingham race at 15 birds, was much more interesting and much first rate work was done, Messrs. Fanning, Haas and Britton showing most brilliantly. The prizes were awarded as follows: First, second and third coin divided by Fanning, Haas and Britton; fourth and fifth divided by Merrill and E. Leffler, sixth Dr. Knowles, seventh Major Kellogg, eighth F. J. Leffler, ninth J. Burnett, tenth W. Burnett. The last regular match of Thursday was at 10 singles and 5 pairs of Blue Rocks, at which the veteran live bird shots were fairly outdone by younger and comparatively inexperienced men, the prizes going as noted. First and second divided by Fanning and Haas, third F. J. Leffler, fourth Dr. Knowles, fifth J. Delmas, sixth Whitehead, seventh Merrill, eighth (Stockwell), ninth Norton, tenth Kellogg.

After the last regular match a freeze out at live birds, Haas and Merrill dividing.

The last match of the day at 10 Blue Rocks, first taken by Haas, second, third and fourth divided by Dr. Britton, Mr. Hopper and Major Kellogg.

Among the leading sportsmen present from localities at a distance were Dr. O. F. Britton from Los Angeles, Mr. H. T. Hopper from Petaluma, Dr. S. E. Knowles, Major S. I. Kellogg and J. S. Fanning from San Francisco, J. Delmas and F. E. Coykendall from San Jose, and a number of others.

The sole referee in all the matches was the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN Commissioner. The scores for Thursday were as follows:

SECOND DAY.

Friday was as pleasant as the preceding day, it being just warm enough for comfort and a slight breeze clearing away the smoke. The attendance of spectators was much larger and the interest generally greater. A few of the more eager ones reached the ground very early and made up a 5 bird Hurlingham race, $2.50 entrance, three monies. The scores were: Dr. O. F. Britton 4, Dr. S. E. Knowles 5, Mr. Coykendall 5, Mr. Delmas 1 w, C. J. Haas 5, J. S. Fanning 0 w, E. Leffler 0 w, F. J. Leffler 0 w, F. J. Pair Pure Gun Hunting Boots, by John Garwood.

Two Jars Fresh Fruit in Brandy, by H. G. Boisselier.

Gents' Toilet Case, by Alex. Chalmers.

12½ lb. keg Dupont's Summer Shooting Powder, by John Skinker.

The shooting throughout the match was good, that of Mr. F. J. Bassford, winner of the medal, being particularly quick and even. Mr. C. J. Haas was a good second, although suffering from a headache he shot his score out, using his handsome little Sneider in his own graceful and sure way, and taking second money, first going to Mr. H. A. Bassford, the previous winner of the medal. Third and third money went to Mr. Fanning, whose work on Blue Rocks is invariably excellent. Mr. F. J. Leffler was but little behind Mr. Fanning's, although inexperienced at Blue Rocks. Mr. Leffler is of herculean frame, and stands up easily through the hardest race. His work on pairs was first rate. Mr. T. H. Buckingham divided fourth money with Major S. I. Kellogg with 74, using a gun crooked to the left in the stock to permit him to use the left eye while shooting from the right shoulder. Major Kellogg is quite the ideal trap shot in position and command of his gun, and his skill is undeniable, but he had so much business on hand in the way of attending to the traps and other details, that it is little wonder his worry lessened his score.

Mr. Jos. Delmas, a sturdy, brilliant shot from San Jose won fifth choice and took the powder. Mr. F. E. Coykendall won fourth choice under difficulty. The right scar of his gun dragged and so rattled him that only by a great effort was he able to pull himself together and win the gent's toilet case representing sixth choice. Seventh went to Mr. Austin B. Sperry of Stockton, not an old hand at the traps, but an athletic, muscular gentleman, exceedingly quick with a gun. Many of his second barrel-kills in the live bird matches were at astonishing distances, but at the Blue Rocks he seemed a little uncertain. He chose the set of gun cleaning implements. Doctor Britton was clear off in his shooting for some reason, and had to content himself with eighth choice, a pair of hunting boots. Mr. Crittenden Robinson had never shot Blue Rock targets before, and tried a few while preparations were being made for the match. He broke them readily enough, but in the match tumbled to ninth choice, two jars of fruit in brandy. The guns and particular loads used, all of the latter being made by the Selby Company, were as follows:

F. J. Bassford, 10 W. & C. Scott, 8½ lbs., A. B. 8 s; C. J. Haas, 12 Sneider, 7½ lbs., A. B. 8 s; Dr. O. F. Britton, 10 L. C. Smith, 9 lbs., A. B. 7's and 8's; T. H. Buckingham, 12 L. C. Smith, 8 lbs., A. B. 7's; J. S. Fanning, 10 J. P. Clabrough & Bros. 9½ lbs., A. B. 8's; A. B. Sperry, 10 L. C. Smith 9 lbs., Schnltze, 8's; Major Kellogg, 8's and 7's; 10 L. C. Smith 9½ lbs., Schnltze, F. J. Leffler, 12 Parker 8 lbs., A. B. 8's; F. E. Coykendall, 10 W. W. Greene 9½ lbs., A. B. 8's; J. Delmas, 10 J. P. Clabrough & Bros., 9½ lbs., A. B. 8's; Crittenden Robinson, 10 W. and C. Scott, 9½ lb., A. B. 8's.

THIRD MATCH.—At 15 live birds, 30 yards rise, Hurlingham style, ground traps. Entrance $5.

1. 40 per cent. of entrance.
2. 30 per cent. of entrance.
3. 20 per cent. of entrance.
4. 10 per cent. of entrance.

SPECIAL PRIZES.

Geo. Elliott's complete works, by O. H. Close.
Fine buggy robe, by H. C. Shaw.
Sole leather gun case and cleaning rod, by Geo. Ditz.
Pair of hunting boots, by ISI stores.

The third match was a lively one, at the Hurlingham style, with twenty entries, and a generous list of added specials. The preceding match had tired everyone, and the change afforded needed relaxation. The shooting was very fine, fourteen of the men getting into double figures, and six of them scoring thirteen of the fifteen. Mr. Crittenden Robinson led with fourteen and took first money. Those having thirteen divided 60 per cent. of the entrance money, and drew lots for choices of the specials, Mr. Coykendall taking the gun case and cleaning rod, Mr. Fanning the set of Geo. Elliott's works and Mr. Haas the buggy robe. The twelve came in for four specials, which were allotted by lot as follows: F. J. Leffler, ½ keg of powder; Mr. F. E. Lane, a case of wine; Major Kellogg, the meerscham pipe, and Mr. Whitehead a pair of hunting boots. Mr. F. E. Lane shot remarkably well in the match, perhaps because a carriage containing several pairs of bright and sympathetic eyes and other portions of the ordinary anatomy of the feminine form divine stood where the shooter could draw inspiration and admiring glances. The score:

THIRD DAY.

Saturday was windy, and as the breeze favored the birds the shooting was much more difficult than on previous days. The birds appeared to have been lightly fed and as the traps were well pulled, the flyers got away very quickly and taxed to the utmost the skill of the large company of experts. The interest was well sustained as shown by the large number of entries as well as the presence of about two hundred spectators, including many ladies, to one little coterie of whom the referee was indebted for a beautiful bouquet of roses, which was soon destroyed by the graceless San Franciscans, Maskey, Norton, Robinson, et al., who came to the score gorgeously decorated with their spoils. An incident of the first match was a brilliant bit of retrieving by Mr. F. E. Lane. Sent to get a challenged bird that gentleman made a properly "cold snook" and was just ready to pounce upon the pigeon when the bird rose strongly and attempted to fly over the retriever's head. Mr. Lane recalling his salad ball days, jumped and caught it, and thus insured his excellent score of thirteen.

FIRST MATCH.—The day began with a 6 bird Hurlingham, pool; $5 entrance, in which Mr. Charles Merrill took first money; second, third and fourth being divided by Messrs. Coykendall, Kellogg, Robinson, W. Burnett and Dr. Britton. The score:

F. J. Bassford.....	1	2	0	2	0	1-4

SECOND MATCH.—Association Match at 20 live birds, ground traps, 30 yards rise, Hurlingham style. Prize, a diamond badge, presented by Mr. E. Fay. Entrance $5. The winner to hold the badge from year to year until won three times by any member, when it shall become his personal property. The winner at each meeting to surrender the badge at the succeeding meeting and to receive the entrance money at such last mentioned meeting. Open only to the members of the California State Sportsman's Association.

SPECIAL PRIZES.

1 Sack of Chilled Shot, by Clabrough, Golcher & Co.
Set of Carvers, by John Jackson.
½ doz. fine white Silk Handkerchiefs, by H. Reier.
1 doz. Cabinets, by B. P. Batchelder.
Pair Canadian Hunting Boots, by E. T. Allen.
1 Sack Chilled Shot, by Clabrough, Golcher & Co.

The association medal was won last year by Mr. Charles Merrill, of Stockton, with a clean score, and a like score put it in possession of Mr. Crittenden Robinson at the recent match.

Competition for the medal was limited to members of the association, but any who desired to do so were permitted to shoot in the match for a side pool at $5 entrance, and Messrs.

Lastreto and H. T. Hooper did so, thus making sixteen entries for the medal, netting Mr. Merrill $50, and fifteen entered for the side pool. The special prizes went with the medal match, and the winners were, for first three choices, Dr. Knowles, who selected the silk handkerchiefs, Mr. Merrill, who took the Canadian hunting boots, and Mr. Fanning who preferred the set of carvers. Four tied on seventeen for the three other specials and decided by lot, a sack of chilled shot going to F. J. Bassford, a dozen cabinet photos to Mr. Maskey and a sack of chilled suet to Mr. Coykendall.

The pool money went first to Mr. Robinson; second, third and fourth divided by Knowles, Merrill and Fanning. The appended totals will show that most of the participants did splendid work, that of Mr. Robinson being especially clean and sharp. The score:

Kellogg.....	1	1	1	1	0	0	1	1	1	0	1	1	1	0	0-15

THIRD MATCH.—The next match regularly listed was at Blue Rock targets, but in order to leave the managers with as few live birds on their hands as possible it was decided to omit the artificial target match, and instead to go into match No. 8 of the printed list the conditions of which were:

At 15 live birds 30 yards rise, Hurlingham style, ground traps. Entrance $5.00.

PRIZES.

1. 40 per cent. of entrance.
2. 30 per cent. of entrance.
3. 20 per cent. of entrance.
4. 10 per cent. of entrance.

SPECIAL PRIZES.

One pair pure gum Hunting Boots by Clabrough, Golcher & Co., S. F.

Smyrna Rug, by A. & G. S. Easton.

1 Bronze Figure, by W. G. Barr.

25 lbs. Shot, by Hammond & Yardley.

$5 Whip, by H. T. Dorrance.

A Brush and Comb, by H. H. Moore & Sons.

A pair of Canadian Hunting Shoes, by E. T. Allen.

There were nineteen entries and very good average scores were made, although the incessant shooting during the three days told somewhat upon the participants of slighter physique and made them a little nervous and less certain. Mr. Henry T. Hopper, from Petaluma, took first money, killing all of his birds in pretty style. Messrs. Coykendall, F. J. Bassford and Doctor Knowles divided second, third and fourth, taking the coin. Messrs. Haas and Merrill tied on 13 for fifth and sixth choices, and drew for positions, Mr. Haas taking the Smyrna rug and Mr. Merrill the Canadian hunting shoes. Mr. Delmas with 12 taking the whip, Mr. F. J. Leffler, also with 12, the gum boots, Mr. Fanning the sack of shot. Mr. Buckingham, scoring 11, took the bronze figure.

Scores: W. Burnett, 5 w; Buckingham, 11; Norton, 2 w; Robinson, 10 w; Haas, 13; Merrill, 13; A. B. Sperry, 10; Coykendall, 14; Fanning, 12; F. J. Bassford, 14; Delmas, 12; Hopper, 15; Lastreto, 4 w; Lane, 9; Knowles, 14; Britton, 10; Maskey, 2 w; E. Leffler, 2 w; F. J. Leffler, 12.

FOURTH MATCH.—It was decided to omit the blue rock match previously mentioned, altogether and in its place to shoot a Hurlingham match at 8 birds, the special prizes allotted to the blue rock match to be awarded in the substitute.

1. 40 per cent. of entrance.
2. 30 per cent. of entrance.
3. 20 per cent. of entrance.
4. 10 per cent. of entrance.

SPECIAL PRIZES.

1 Can (1 pt.) of extra quality Gum Oil, by Clabrough, Golcher & Co.

Hst. by Lathrop & Noble.

1 doz. Cabinets, by M. Monaco.

Hammock, by J. H. Condit & Co.

Canvas Cartridge Belt, by Clabrough, Golcher & Co.

A Cigar Case, by H. Baldwin.

Mr. Robinson took first money, Messrs. Merrill, Hopper and A. B. Sperry dividing second, third and fourth, the balance of the coin. The ties on 6 took the specials by lot, Delmas choosing the can of gum oil; Doctor Britton the hat, Mr. Lane the photographs; Mr. Coykendall the hammock; Mr. F. J. Bassford the cartridge belt and Mr. Haas the cigar case.

Scores: F. J. Bassford 6, Merrill 7, Hopper 7, Coykendall 6, A. B. Sperry 7, Lane 5, Delmas 6, Fanning 1 w, Robinson 8, Buckingham 3, Doctor Britton 6, Haas 6.

FIFTH MATCH.—The last match of the day and the meeting was a Hurlingham pool, at six birds, $2.50 entrance. It was shot in the dusk of evening, the referee having to get into a Blue Rock trap pit in order to judge. Messrs. Coykendall, A. B. Sperry, Robinson, Fanning and Hooper tied on clean scores and divided the money. Scores:

Coykendall 6, Delmas 5, F. J. Bassford 1 w, Merrill 5, A. B. Sperry 6, Dr. S. N. Cross 2, Dr. Britton 4, Robinson 6, Lane 5, W. Burnett 1 w, Haas 5, Fanning 6, Scarlett 5, Hopper 6.

The matches throughout were free from wrangling, and but few decisions of the referee differed from, three we believe, in all of which the referee was sustained by a majority of the shooters. The birds were first rate, the traps, trapper and attendants all in good working order, and the pleasantest trap shoot within memory was voted to be that which had just closed. The Stockton newspapers, the Independent, the Express and the Mail all gave full reports of all matches, and contributed in every possible way to add to the interest and success of the tournament, the brilliant outcome of which was due as much to their generosity as to any other reason. Too much credit cannot be awarded Mr. Austin B. Sperry, Mr. Chas. J. Haas, Mr. F. E. Lane, Dr. S. N. Cross and Mr. C. B. Merrill for the perfection to which all details of the tournament were brought. On Mr. Sperry, perhaps, more responsibility was placed than on any other, and he met the emergency in his usual prompt and energetic way.

A degree of uncertainty as to the ownership of the special prizes won on the first day of the recent State tournament exists, and the secretary of the association requests those who won choices to report to him at 313 Bush Street, San Francisco, by postal card, naming the prizes won.

ROD.

Communications relating to this department should be addressed to BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN.

J. Harrington Keene.

A very pleasant face is that of the notable angler and writer, Mr. Keene, as shown in the electrotype used above. Although a new man to America and its needs in an angling way, Mr. Keene has shown that ready adaptability and ability to note and understand varying demands in the way of tackle which could only characterize the able disciple of St. Peter. He was born at Weybridge, a village on the lower Thames, England, in 1856, and is a young man. His fishing career was begun as soon as he was able to handle a rod, his father having been a noted professional fisherman from the earliest years of the subject of this sketch.

Mr. Keene, Senior, who quite recently died at Windsor, was, when the son was quite young, chosen fisherman to Queen Victoria, and presided over the preserves of Windsor Great Park for fifteen years. When but a youth young Keene began contributing to various publications, matter on fishing subjects, and by his twentieth year had passed the gradations preliminary to admission to the columns of the London Field. His first book was "The Practical Fisherman," which is yet valued as a source of hints to tyros in the art. Editorial work has been done by him on the English Country and Bazaar.

In 1885 Mr. Keene came to America and engaged in fly-tying, under employment of Mr. C. F. Orvis, during which time he compiled "Fly Fishing and Fly Making for Trout." Recently Mr. Keene has established himself at Cosayuna, N. Y., and has decided to work out the unsolved problems of angling as an American citizen. His writings, most of them, are peculiarly clear and, happily phrased. They bear the impress of "knowingness," and are of much value to those about giving rein to predispositions toward the pleasures of the rod. Mr. Keene has already contributed several readable sketches to our columns, and we hope he will soon resappear in them.

Professor G. Brown Goode of the Smithsonian Institution says that the art of boiling fish is so little understood that he deems it proper to include some instructions. He adds that the fish should be placed in salt water, which should be cold if the fish is large and hot for small sized fish. In the latter case two or three minutes in the boiling water will be sufficient, and a sheephead or bass of four or five pounds will not require more than about ten minutes from the time the water begins to boil. Whenever practicable a strainer should be used in placing the fish in the sauce-pan. Some kinds of fish may be first skinned, but carp should retain its skin. When only salt is added to the water the fish is said to be "à l'eau de sel," when sea water is used the fish is understood to be dressed a "à l'Hollandaise." When white wine or vinegar and spices and shred onions are employed to flavor the water, the fish becomes au court bouillon, and should the fish be simmered in a small quantity of water, to which is added a savory seasoning of herbs, it is known as being "à la bonne eau." In this case it is generally served in the liquor in which it was dressed. When done in equal quantities of red wine and water, strongly impregnated with aromatic herbs, the fish is described as being "au bleu," and is almost invariably served cold. Only the best of fish, such as striped bass, sheephead, moonfish, red snapper, squeteague, salmon, etc., are treated in the last way. Salmon and all dark-fleshed fish require much more boiling than the white-fleshed kinds. When possible some vinegar should be rubbed on the outside of fish before it is boiled, by which means the skin is prevented from cracking, but the introduction of much flavoring in the liquor in which it is dressed is principally necessary when the fish has been some time out of water, and is consequently deficient in natural flavor. It is considered preferable to serve boiled fish upon a napkin rather than have a sauce poured over it in the dish; and with salmon it is thought better taste to have a plain white sauce instead of anything less simple; cucumber or melon in slices may be served apart. No positive rules can be given as to the length of time fish should be boiled, as everything depends upon the size and kind of fish you have to dress. Salmon, usually, should be allowed at least ten minutes to each pound, while two or three minutes per pound will be ample for haddock, cod, etc.; a mackerel needs about a quarter of an hour to do it properly; herrings, and many other sorts of fish, scarcely half so long.

Outing for October, is of especial interest to sportsmen, having a bright fishing sketch, an article on duck shooting and an account of Coursing in Ireland, besides a deal of other excellent matter.

The San Jose Water Company is placing a new dam in the Los Gatos at Alma, and will erect an improved fishway thus insuring a good supply of trout to that beautiful stream, which has for several years been almost depleted because spawning fish could not run up.

THE RIFLE

Sacramento.

The excellent scores made on the Sacramento range two weeks ago have served to renew interest in the sport and bring large numbers to the targets, of whom many were enthusiastic riflemen in the earlier years. Harbor View.

At Harbor View the marksmen were out in force on Sunday last. The shooting was up to the standard. Following is the record made by the different classes in the California Schnetzer Club:

Visalia.

On Saturday last Company E, of Visalia, had its first annual target practice. After marching along Main street the guards were taken into wagons and buggies at 8 A. M. to Iron mountain, about eight miles from town where a range had been selected. Major G. E. Colwell of the 3rd Brigade staff had charge of the company. He was accompanied by Capt. M. W. Muller of Company C. It was late when all preparations were completed, and shooting did not begin until after eleven o'clock, says the Delta. Lunch was eaten under the trees and with a good appetite for sauce it was relished by all. The members of the company made a very good record under many disadvantages. Few had ever shot with an army piece of any kind, and the best rifle shots in the company, all of whom were used to triggers with light pulls, made poorer records than many others. The regulation six-pound pull was something they were unaccustomed to and they had no previous practice with the guns. Forty-nine were present and shot, but eighteen were absent. The average of the company was over 23 per cent. Two targets were made and, at the distance of 200 yards, were pretty well shot to pieces. The mucilage for pasting slips of paper over the holes having given out in the middle of the afternoon, a delay was occasioned, when the idea of using the jelly left from lunch was hit upon, and the shooting proceeded. Forty-nine members of the company paid their respects to the targets, which were hit 353 times out of a possible 490. Most of the officers, who usually shoot first, waited till the last, and shot at a great disadvantage, for the sky was cloudy, and the sun had set before the last score was recorded. It was impossible to see bulls-eye distinctly but as it was the 30 of the month (and the target practice was to be held in September) all had to fire their ten shots on that day or be marked as firing and missing.

When all circumstances are considered the target practice of E Company may be called very successful.

Twenty-one members made twenty-five or over, and are thus entitled to bronze medals. J. C. Ward gave a handsome and valuable silver and glass cake dish to the best shot, N. W. Kibler. Chas. A. Spier won the leather medal, which was a very ornamental one:

THE KENNEL.

Dog owners are requested to send for publication the earliest possible notices of whelps, sales, names claimed, presentations and deaths in their kennels, in all instances writing plainly names of sire and dam and of grandparents, colors, dates and breed.

Communications relating to this department should be addressed to BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN.

Whelps.

Mr. H. K. Silvie's English setter, Phoebe, whelped September 20th nine, six dogs to Mr. F. A. Taft's Gordon Dorr, at Truckee.

Mr. Jas. E. Watson's fox-terrier Lady, whelped, Oct. 2nd, five, three dogs to owner's Jock. One bitch since dead.

It is the intention of the Occidental Coursing Club to give a meeting in November, and Secretary Jerome B. Lincoln particularly requests the co-operation of all members of the club. The Occidental Club numbers many prominent lovers of the leash, and should be able to present a very attractive programme.

Occidental Coursing Club.

After a rest that has lasted through the summer, the members of the Occidental Coursing Club turned out in full force last Tuesday evening to attend a meeting for arranging the preliminaries for the proposed fall coursing match.

Vice-President Gregory was in the chair, owing to the resignation of President Stuart M. Taylor having been sent in some time ago. J. B. Lincoln officiated as Secretary.

It was decided that a club coursing meeting be held on Thanksgiving Day, when an unlimited stake would be run. Hugh Deane, Hugh Boyd and Colonel Gregory were appointed a committee to complete all arrangements for the course. As an inducement to the dog-owners to enter their animals, a beautiful "Thanksgiving cup," will be presented the stake winner. The entrance fee is at the usual figure, $5.

Section 4, Article 5, of the by-laws, calling for ten members to constitute a quorum, was amended so as to read five members.

Colonel Gregory was elected President of the club for the unfinished portion of the term. Wm. S. Kittle was elected Vice-President in the place of Colonel Gregory.

Plinlimmon.

Mr. J. K. Emmett has at last secured for America the most famous dog of his day, the celebrated St. Bernard Plinlimmon, whose career on the show bench has been one of unbroken success. This animal has been acknowledged by Swiss authorities at the most typical St. Bernard ever seen, and American breeders are to be congratulated at having him for use at stud, as he has proved to be as successful as a stud dog as he has been on the show bench. On six occasions he has secured the 100-guinea challenge cup offered by the English St. Bernard Club, and though Prince Battenberg was once placed over him at Birmingham, this was regarded as a mistake.

Plinlimmon is as good in temper as he is in looks, and Mr. Emmett is to be congratulated on his purchase. He is now rising six-year-old, and was bred by Mr. T. Hall of Liverpool. Weighs 206 pounds and stands 33 inches at the shoulder.

He is a son of Pilgrim. When a few weeks old he was sold for £30 to the Rev. Arthur Carter, and was re-sold within a few months for £200. He had, even in his first year, a remarkable career of success, and shortly after this second sale he passed through one or two more hands, and was purchased by his late owner, Mr. S. W. Smith of Leeds, for, it is said, £800. Several attempts have been made to secure him for America, but in vain. A few weeks ago Mr. E. H. Moore of Melrose, Mass., visited Leeds, and offered $3,750 for him, which offer was declined, and now he has been purchased for $5,000, the largest sum ever paid for a dog.

Mr. and Mrs. Emmett visited Mr. Smith's kennels, and sought to obtain Plinlimmon, but were unwilling to give more than $3,500 for him, Mr. Smith would not reduce the sum he asked, regarding that as its market value, and so they parted. An hour afterwards Mr. Emmett returned, and after some discussion said: "Well I mean to have Plinlimmon; so come over to the bank and I will give you the money." And in a few minutes more the business was settled.

Pacific Kennel Club.

The monthly meeting of the Pacific Kennel Club was held on Wednesday evening of last week in the reception room of the Palace Hotel, R. E. Wilson presided, with James E. Watson acting as Secretary.

F. C. Zimmerman's resignation as a member of the Executive Committee was accepted. The gentleman reported that he could not serve on account of business which required his entire attention in the country. John H. Wise was elected to fill the vacancy.

A letter was read from Nathaniel Hunter, the Secretary of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, thanking the Kennel Club for its assistance in the matter of appointing a committee to co-operate with the society in its efforts to procure control of the management of the Public Pound.

The club decided to hold its next bench show in this city commencing on May 22, 1889, and ending on the evening of the 23th.

The evening was principally taken up with Professor J. B. F. McCleery's dog case, the particulars of which have been published.

The Professor was giving his pet dog an airing some time ago on the street in front of his residence, when the Pound-keeper's deputies pounced down upon him and lassoed his handsome pug. Not being of a robust constitution Mr. McCleery resented the attack upon his charge by presenting a pistol at the deputy who held his canine in subjugation. The upshot of the affair was the Professor's arrest for presenting a deadly weapon at an officer when in the discharge of his duty. The case came up before Judge Joachimsen of the Justices' Court, who sentenced the Professor to a fine of $25. It was afterward appealed and submitted on briefs to Judge Sullivan, whose answer is daily expected.

The Kennel Club, after listening to the particulars as related by Mr. McCleery, stated that it would be only too happy to assist the latter in every way possible, but as the matter now stands it could not do anything until Judge Sullivan's decision was received.

The club acquiesced with Mr. McCleery so far as the right to protect his property by lawful means was concerned, but the arrest having been made on the public highway, it did not think that the owner of the dog was justified in presenting a pistol at a Pound-keeper's employe.

Mr. D. M. Murphy has just returned from England and brought with him four pure bloodhound bitches, which he is going to cross with the foxhound, and expects to get something fine for deer hunting. His kennels are near Gilroy, from which place he hunts his pack.

Elsewhere appears an advertisement offering some setter puppies for sale. They are by Fred A. Taft's Gordon Dorr, a dog of good natural quality and most excellently broken. The dam, Phoebe, is recommended by Mr. Taft as an English setter bitch of form and quality. Full particulars may be obtained by addressing Mr. Taft, at Truckee.

Mr. Fred A. Taft sends a note detailing the woes of the litter by Dorr—Phoebe, the whelping of which is noted elsewhere. Mr. Taft seems to be having a lot of trouble about his pets. In the note he adds:

In connection with the litter, notice of which is sent, there is an incident. A few days since Phoebe appeared in the house, and from her actions Mrs. Silvey knew that something was wrong. She went to the kennel and found all of the pups missing, hearing their cries in the direction of an out-house, she investigated the spot, and found that her little four-year-old baby had thrown every one of them down into the mire. With the help of some of the neighbors they were secured, and after a good washing were found to be none the worse off. She laid them out in the sun to dry off. Shortly afterwards she found that Phoebe had dug a deep hole in the ground by their side, throwing the earth back on the pups. She rescued them again, but found one dead, and as luck would have it, it was the one I had selected to raise for myself, he was marked in every respect like old "Dorr," and it is a great disappointment to me. There is however a bitch left, marked precisely the same, and I shall probably adopt her.

The quail are now leaving us on their migration for the foot-hills the other side of the summit.

The breeding of Mr. James Watson's black pointer bitch Black Bess, has reached him, having been sent by Mr. Wm. Graham, from Belfast, Ireland. Mr. Graham says she was whelped in March, 1887, bred by Mr. McDonald, and is by Sweep out of Gloom. Sweep by Peel—Moll. Gloom by Ranger—Gloom. The breeding is not traceable in the stud book, and the pedigree should have been sent in full if it could have been obtained by Mr. Graham. Names of breeders, colors of dogs, etc., should have been given. The silly way in which some of the English traders ship dogs to America, without avouched particulars relative to them, is aggravating. Mr. Graham may be a very good sort of person in his way, but his word as to the excellence of a dog selected and shipped by him, goes no length in determining its absolute worth to the purchaser. He should give all accessible data about the animal, and credit his customer with at least alertness and intelligence enough to enable him to judge the strength of the blood lines, and the form and quality of the purchase. Mr. Graham writes Mr. Watson, under date 29th August: "I never had more difficulty getting a pair of dogs than I had getting those pointers, as black pointers are very scarce, and most of those that are represented as black pointers are simply black dogs with very little pointer quality, and the most of them have white on chest and feet."

The Great Pacers To-Day.

We first wrote the great young pacers, but it did not require reflection to see that this was a misnomer. The adjective can be cancelled and then the caption will be correct. The juvenile sidewheelers in California are so good that the aged division of this coast are willing to stand back and watch the battle, while with a few exceptions those of the East would not stand a much better show. Two of the phenomenal three are to enter the lists to-day, Saturday, on the Bay District course, and the contest between the Empress, Yolo Maid, and the Emperor, Adonis, will be one of the biggest of the big events of the season. Both winners, neither having met with defeat. Both have shown capacity to "stay" a flight of speed that would have been considered incredible by colts of their age previous to this year.

From all the signs now the weather is likely to be of a type which it is impossible to improve from a racing view. Warm without the slightest inkling of being oppressive, bright sunshine without a cloud from early morning until the sun drops below the western line, and the evening air without a tinge of chilliness. With good weather there is always an assurance of the track being in fine order. The Bay District, when Jupiter Pluvius does not interdict, is sure to be all that can be desired. Whatever is necessary to be done in the way of watering, harrowing and scraping is bound to be accomplished, as Mr. Hinchman will not stop at anything below first rate order.

The pacing race has strong backing in the 2:27 class, and with so many attractions combined there is likely to be a large assemblage. Well worth the trip from even so many points of view.

Weak Quarters—Forging.

There was an allusion in the paper of last week to letters received containing inquiries. One was from W.
G. Murray of Bath, Steuben Co., N. Y., the other from Geo. Read, Honolulu. Mr. Murray states: "I have a three-year-old stallion, his hind quarters are weak and thin, and he has one bad quarter crack."

Mr. Read writes, "I have a very promising colt, four years old, that forges very badly. I have tried our local blacksmiths but they do not appear to be able to help it any."

Although there is a distinct variation in the cases, we couple them in answering, as both are in a measure due to shoeing, it may be said improper shoeing, though when that is done according to scientific formula there may exist both of these troubles.

In presenting our views and suggesting remedies, it must be borne in mind that it is not given from the standpoint of a veterinarian, especially in considering the case of weak feet and quarter cracks. Had it been the intention of our correspondents to solicit advice of that kind they, doubtless, would have made application nearer home, and if from the tenor of his letter that had been obvious, we should have turned it over to the gentleman who has charge of the Veterinary Department of the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN, with the fullest confidence that his reply would be in accordance with the latest and best teachings of the schools. Mr. Murray requests our advice, and that will be based on practice.

Previous to the substitution of tips for full shoes we had our share of trouble from quarter cracks. In fact the case of Hock-Hocking was the primary and leading cause of the change. Since adopting tips we have not had a single case of quarter crack or corns, and twelve years immunity is certainly good grounds for faith.
What we term quarter crack are fissures which commence at the coronet and extend downward. Usually the crack, on its first appearance, is slight, rarely exceeding an inch in length and some of them not half that. This proves that the force which separates the fibers is exerted from above, and that the natural guard has been rendered less effective. It also shows that the upper portion is the easiest to sunder and this is apparent when the horn is examined. Where the horn joins the coronary ligament it has a curved form, the outside and upper portion being brought to an edge. The guard is expansion and if that is not interfered with there is little if any danger of separation of the fibers. Expansion is due to elasticity of the horn and the open space at the heels. Were the horn carried all the way around its own elasticity would not subserve the purpose, and if similar effects are produced by confining the lower part as follows the rigid embrace of a full shoe, the wise provisions of Nature are rendered useless.

That the natural foot expands is easily demonstrated by taking the foot of an unsaddled horse between the knees as a blacksmith holds it, grasping the quarters, with the thumbs resting on the bulb of the heel and without using a great deal of force there is shown quite a movement back and forward. As when driving a horse in a vehicle which will afford an opportunity for closely watching the movements, such as a skeleton wagon or cart with a low seat, and every time the foot is brought to the ground expansion will be noticed, contraction when it is lifted. But a foot which is shod that motion can neither be seen or felt, for even without nails in the heels of the shoe there is pressure enough to prevent motion.

Presuming that Mr. Murray's colt has worn full shoes we would recommend that he be driven barefooted as long as that can be done without wearing the toe away to a degree that will be injurious. Better still, in that cold country where snow and ice may necessitate sharp calkins, to turn him out for the winter with a straw yard to run in during days when the weather will permit, and with a comfortable box at night and during bad weather. In the meantime treat the crack so as to insure a sound growth of horn at the coronet and when spring comes it will be so nearly obliterated that it will be easily handled. As the crack approaches the ground surface of the foot care must be taken to keep that part from too heavy a bearing, and it may be necessary to put on a clamp to hold it together, a strip of thin metal held in place by short screws will effect the purpose, and this can be retained until the crack is nearly grown out. Shoe with a tip the inside branch of which is just long enough to permit a nail to be driven about half an inch back of the crack, and, of course, sunk into the foot in the manner so often described in this paper. In a case of this kind we would prefer a tip which is only a trifle wider than the wall and so thin that it would not exceed two ounces in weight. If determined to use a full shoe the "round" or bar pattern will be altogether best as the bearing can be taken entirely off the inside quarters and the weight thrown on the outside and frog. Far better, however, to follow nature still more closely and trust to the bare foot or the nearest approach to that a light tip. It may be that a slight irritant applied to the coronary band will increase the deposit of horn forming material, though we have great confidence that nature will afford the remedy if not thwarted.

Forging is in some cases easily remedied, in others it seems nearly impossible to overcome the difficulty.
When resulting from dilatory action of the fore feet, there are numerous ways of correction, not one of them, however, which can be considered a specific. The "rolling motion shoe" we have known to be efficacious in several instances, and also a modification of it in the shape of a tip beveled at the toe. The philosophy of that is that when the foot has to leave the ground quicker than it would were the motion delayed, it will be out of the way of the approaching hind foot. Toe-weights in some cases will correct, in others aggravate the trouble.
Then again all appliances to the front feet fail, and the only hope would be in changing the action of the hind feet. This is a more difficult task than to modify the action of the anterior, and after many experiments none be found effective. For road purposes it is essential that changes in shoeing should be the dependence, and until these are exhausted a resort to track appliances not resorted to. If the colt forges with heavy shoes try light ones, and vary the weight as occasion may require, that is, when failure follows one experiment try another.
The common practice in shoeing trotters is proportionally heavy in front and light behind, and as a rule this is correct, but a reversal may prove the best in correcting the forging habit. As in the case of quarter cracks we should favor tips, when if the blow is on the posterior part of the shoe there will be no metal to strike.

To be more definite, in the case of Mr. Read's colt we would advise the use of tips on the front feet, beveled at the toe and extending no farther back than the point of the frog. They should be quite thin so as to be set into the foot the full depth, as the heels are probably too low to afford a chance for thicker.

The hind tips can be set a short distance back from the toe, and that rounded, and the pattern we use has the inner branch short, only one and one-half inches, with one nail, the outer longer, about four inches, in which three nails are put.

Washington Park—Closing of Stakes.

Monday next, the 15th inst., some of the most important stakes to California racehorse owners will close.
These are the Drexel, Kenwood, Lakeside stakes for the summer meeting, 1889, and the "fixed events," American Derby, Englewood and Sheridan stakes of 1890. Washington Park has established a reputation which is the best possible endorsement, and which in a great measure makes a single announcement of the fact sufficient.
Those who have taken a part in previous meetings do not require more than a reminder, but others who have not had that experience, late comers in the ranks of racehorse owners, may not be aware of all the advantages which nominating in these stakes bring.

The course and its appointments all through are of the very best kind, in fact it is difficult to select a point which will give room for adverse criticism. The course and stabling are the main things to owners and trainers, though when to excellence in these points are added attractions for the comfort of spectators the union is a desirable feature to all concerned. The management is on a par with the grounds; energetic, accommodating and using every endeavor to give satisfaction in minor as well as major matters connected with the racing.

But still more pleasant to those who own horses, is the small risk encountered with such a magnificent return in view. An addition of one thousand dollars is the minimum sum added to a stake, ranging upward from that to $7,500 which is the munificent amount added to the American Derby.

The main aim of the manager appears to be the praiseworthy object of giving men who do not feel able to make heavy investments, a chance. Thus in the three stakes to be decided next summer a risk of $10 in each will carry an option to the first of February and only $10 more to extend the time till the first of April.
Even in the big event the "Derby" $20 are all that are required in the first place, which will give to February, 1, 1890, for trial and $20 more gives the privilege up to April first of the same year. The forfeits are comparatively light, the usual h. f. being the rule and in the Derby it is $100 in a $250 stake.

In one respect California has the advantage, viz., in the declaration as on the first of April a better knowledge can be obtained here of what the colts are than on the first of June in the Eastern States. Every well bred colt in California can be named in the Derby with prospective advantage, and the inducements in the other stakes are nearly as good.

The advertisement will furnish all the necessary information and entry blanks can be obtained at this office.

The Napa Fair.

We hear a succession of panegyrics whenever the Napa fair is mentioned. Not a single person who has returned dissatisfied, and everyone we have conversed with enthusiastic in praise. We never had the least doubt of the fair being a "pronounced success," but it is rather more than the most sanguine could expect that there should be no adverse criticisms. Fortunate to all interested in the welfare of California that another great attraction should be added to the brilliant list of California fairs, and to those who are concerned in the "horse department" of these exhibitions peculiarly gratifying. Visitors who are familiar with the best tracks of the East as well as of this State, say that the Napa course has not a superior, and though so lately built is remarkably fast. This comes from the grading being so well done and the soil admirably adapted for the purpose. There is no variation, we are informed, in the soil, and every foot of the track is alike in this respect, and the whole circuit as good as it can be. The encomiums are not confined to the track and its adjuncts. The country and people come in for a full share of the plaudits, and when listening to the glowing accounts our regret is heightened that circumstances debarred participating in the exciting events of the circuit. There are intensified regrets when a visit to places we have not yet seen is coupled with absence from the fairs, and the famed Napa Valley is one of the points we have anxiously desired to see, and the first opportunity will be seized to make the long deferred visit.

The National and Junior Stallion Stakes.

Friday next the Primary and Junior stakes will be decided on the Bay District course, and the following day, Saturday, the stallions named in the National will come together. There have been some mishaps to the youngsters engaged, those that have come under our observation being to Ringwood and Balkan. The former had a touch of the prevailing influenza, though we saw him on the track Thursday and he jogged as though he had entirely recovered. He was moving so well before the attack that it is within bounds that he will rapidly pick up and should he entirely "round to" he will give a good account of himself in the race. When told on Wednesday evening that Balkan was seriously amiss we could scarcely credit it. Three days before we saw him at work and he made a fast mile with so much ease that his chance had a very rosy hue. He has from the first been a special favorite of ours, and he possessed very many of the qualities which will demand recognition from the sharpest critics. Finely bred, of fine form and fine size, in fact one of the grandest looking three-year-olds of the year, he also showed that he was a sure enough trotter. Should the trouble be removed in a few days, and from what we hear it is a slight attack of influenza, he will be in readiness when the bell calls. Direct went so very fast at Napa that there was a trifle of timidity on the part of a few to make the last payment which is due on Wednesday next, though it must be borne in mind that colts are more uncertain than old horses, and that second, third and fourth moneys are liberal sums. As seven are still eligible there is scarcely a question that there will be a good field of starters.

So far as our information goes there is no change in the outlook for the National. From all we can learn there are good reasons for the belief that all five will start. Antevolo has accomplished the allotted work, since the last report, satisfactorily, and though that work has been considerably lighter than would have been given under more favorable circumstances, it has been forcible enough to be a trial of the new method of treating sprains of the suspensory.

As the final payment of $500 has to be made Wednesday, and the next issue of the paper will be out the morning of the race, further comment will be reserved until more is known.

Auction Sale of Live Stock.

Tuesday and Wednesday next, S. B. Whitehead & Co., will offer at public sale, on the Pinole Ranch, a large lot of first-class stock. The horses include two draft stallions and a son of Whipple's Hambletonian, with one hundred and twenty-five work horses and a number of colts. There are mules which will be offered, and four hundred cattle, grade Durhams, milch cows and some which are ready for the butcher. Beside the live stock there are the usual multitude of things required on a large ranch, carriages, wagons, threshing machines, etc. The horses, carriages, implements, etc., will be offered on the first day; the second will be taken up with cattle, dairy utensils, etc. The station is called Tormey and is between Pinole and Port Costa. Further particulars will be learned from the advertisement.

Mr. Rose Explains.

We are pleased to publish the following letter from Mr. Rose, not only for the explanation it gives of his letter to the N. Y. SPORTSMAN, but also as the advice is well worthy of being acted upon. That portion of the communication criticizing the action of Guy and Woodnut we did not mention, that, as Mr. Rose says, being a matter of opinion which anyone has a right to express. There are good judges who prefer high action to the low, and if a man prefers that of Guy Wilkes or Woodnut to the manner of Stamboul or Antevolo, he has an unquestionable right to express the preference.

BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN:—Thoughtless writing as well as curses "come home to roost," and I can assure you that the article in the SPORTSMAN has caused me great regret. Mr. Gocher of the SPORTSMAN wrote me several friendly letters as he took much personal interest in my stock, and to one of these personal letters I made a hurried and unguarded, I may say thoughtless reply, but for Mr. Gocher's eye only, and it was so understood by him as his reply to mine shows that he understood that my letter was not written for publication.

What you cite about my saying that Woodnut and Stamboul being the only likely starters for the stallion race was so talked of by some horsemen after Guy Wilkes pulled up sore after his race in Sacramento. Since then I have heard more favorable reports about all the horses, and you will no doubt believe my being very glad that it is so. There is certainly no such littleness in my heart as to wish for success at the expense of misfortune to others, and if it lay in my power every stallion entered should be well and at his best. But I care less for this than I do that I gave some hasty opinion about the action of Guy Wilkes and Woodnut, and although I have said nothing in malice, yet what I said would never have been said by me in a public way, for I am very well aware that every individual almost, has some different opinion from some one else, and what may be considered as faulty by me may be considered perfection and also be perfection by another. Many of us say in friendly argument with one another what we would not say publicly, knowing by experience that all of us are often at fault, and one's own horse is perhaps too near to us to be fairly seen or talked about by oneself.

The only reparation I can make now is to say I am sorry and it is a lesson to be remembered not to say even in a hasty, confidential, gossip letter, things which will not stand the test of publication. Hope you may consent to publish this. Respectfully yours, L. J. ROSE.

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN, San Francisco.

Please give your decision in your next issue on the following race, run at Visalia, between Black Bess and Mattie. It was a match race for $25 a side, between Black Bess, owned by J. A. Hodges, and Mattie, owned by Oscar Duke, and stakes placed in the judges hands the night before the race.

Mattie ran away with her jockey and ran for a half or more, they took her back, and both got off well together, making a dead heat. It was late and Mattie being in great distress, Duke, the owner of Mattie, proposed to withdraw the money or run it off the following day, and Hodges, the owner of Black Bess agreed to withdraw, and stated the same to the judges. The judges objected saying there had been pools sold on the race, and it must be run off that night. Duke told the judges his mare was in no condition to run; they said they would take the horses in their own hands and furnish riders to suit themselves. Duke, instead of letting them have Mattie, took her to the livery stable in town, where he had been keeping her previous to the race. The judges then declared the pools off, but withheld their decision until the following day, which was as follows: "After due consideration, we have concluded the race a fraud, and fine Oscar Duke, owner of Mattie $100, and suspend him and Mattie for one year. J. A. Hodges we fine $50 and his rider $25, and suspend them one year," and they kept the stakes to apply on the fines.

The above was a one-quarter mile dash.

Yours respectfully,

A SUBSCRIBER.

Answer.—According to your statement we fail to see cause for the fines imposed by the judges. Owners have a right to "divide after a dead heat" in a race not of heats, or run it off after the last race of the day. But there may have been reasons which were thought to bring it under the class of frauds.

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN:—The following clause was the only condition, outside of those which the rules present, and in a race which was trotted. A horse distanced all but one competitor. There were three "moneys." Is the winning horse entitled to the third? National Rules: "Horses that distance the field will only take first money."
A. L. H., Oakland.

Answer.—Taking the above as the whole ground to base a decision upon, and the award must be that the horse is entitled to third money. When the published conditions do not cover a point definitely, it is then subject to the rules. There can be no difference of opinion on that, and as there is an omission of words which would restrict the horse from obtaining third money, it must be awarded to the horse which would be entitled to it under the general application of the law. It is unnecessary to take into consideration the intention as implied, meaning will not offset clearly expressed conditions. The same question was argued at Buffalo many years ago, 1872 we think, as the published condition was the same as that quoted. E. A. Buck, at that time one of the directors, brought it up, his opinion being that should such a case come up the association would have to award the prizes the same as if the clause had not been incorporated in the conditions. His view was sustained, and therefore the phrase was, "the field or any part of the field." One of the most important things in a "speed programme" is a clear statement which cannot be misunderstood.

CORRESPONDENCE.

BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN:—I am glad to see by your last issue, that Antevolo is going smoothly again, and that warm water invigorated with soda and hops have smoothed down the swollen tendon, and put the gallant bay on his feet again.

I sincerely hope that Guy Wilkes will be his resolute self on the eventful 20th, and that all the contestants will trot so purely that no questions as to gaining breaks will have to be considered on or after the race.

There never was a rose without a thorn. Perhaps Stamboul is the thorn, he certainly will be a thorn in the flesh, if he does not strike his own flesh, and reaches the post free from soreness. I hope in this great race it will not be necessary for any driver to take the law in his own hands, to ensure a satisfactory result. A fair field and no favor is the all and all.

I heard more cheers when Mr. Holly and Mr. Dougherty won at Sacramento with Woodnut and Victor respectively, than at all the other meetings put together.

Why is it? There are better drivers; Goldsmith, Mr. Holly says, can outdrive him three seconds. Hickok drives like a storm when he is whip in hand behind a Tempest, and is Duetin Gus Wilkes.

Why is it then that Mr. Holly and Mr. Dougherty are cheered to the Echo, (no joke on Victor)? Is it not because the voice of the people proclaims, these men own their own horses, they trot them to win, this is a genuine struggle, you cannot easily make a trade with the owner of a breeding stallion, to throw off the father of his colts, the children of his pastures. The wife and children are at the race to see, his neighbors and the patrons of his horse are present.

You hear it said that it is speed which brings great numbers to a race, the desire to see great time. As opposed to this view, the race manager will see on the 20th a greater crowd than when the free for all takes place.

I do not see how one can expect fast time in the stallions, except from Stamboul. Woodnut seemed stale at Napa, Wilkes and Antevolo are ailing and Director is an unknown quantity. But the people, ah! yes, the people, they know Mr. Rose raised and owns Stamboul (City of the Golden Horn) Los Angeles. The people know that the old Nestor among horsemen raised from Fashion into fashion Antevolo, and what is more, the owner drives his horse. Guy Wilkes, he of Oak Grove Farm, sturdy and resolute as the oak that adorn the pasture of his home. The California Guy belongs to Mr. Corbitt, who watch him with jealous eyes.

Fair faces are wreathed with smiles when he wins. Every step of his opponent is measured; when the race is lost only fair trotting is allowed by such fair judges when dear Guy trots.

Next comes Woodnut, the grand son of Nutwood, a hard nut to crack if one would. Educated from obscurity into prominence by him who owns and drives him, Mr. Holly, a tall, dark, quiet man, one who by strict attention to his business has had many holidays.

Next, last but not least, comes the storm-cloud Director, son of the mighty Dictator, (full brother to Dexter), sire of Jay-Eye-See 2:10, fastest gelding, also sire of Phallas 2:13, fastest stallion. Director belongs and has belonged to Mr. Salisbury since colthood. Director's colts are worthy sons and daughters and will induce their owner to use every exertion to prepare this great horse and send him to the front. A glance of the eye, a flash of thought, tells the busy toiler of the city, here is a race, no primary job can be put up here.

The busy farmer leaves his plow in the furrow, puts up the smoking team, puts the glossy neck of his colt, the get of one of these great stallions, hurries to catch the train to see the race. Elect your judges, support them to the hilt and when they apply the written law. Then will the people come outdoors to glory in the horse and learn to love and honor him for what God made him for, a companion to man, not a miserable device or means for us to cheat one another with.
RUSTICUS.

P. A. Finnigan's Sale.

On Thursday next, October 18th, will occur the auction sale of Mr. P. A. Finnigan's trotting bred horses. The stallions and mares are such as should be valuable to breeders, representing as they do the blood of such trotting sires as Santa Claus, 2:17, Geo. M. Patchen, Echo and John Nelson, and of the thoroughbreds imp. Sovereign, Williamson's Belmont and Lexington. Some of the individuals offered are bred in accordance with the provisions of the standard adopted and recently revised by the National Association. Mr. Finnigan has adopted the excellent plan of publishing in full the pedigrees of all the animals to be offered. We refer our readers to our advertising columns for more specific information.

Several ladies of fortune in England are so great admirers of Arabs that they have been breeding them pure by themselves for several years past; and also now and then crossing with the Thoroughbreds. Lady Etheldred Dillon writes the London Live Stock Journal that out of sixteen foals from Arab parents only one has died, which is a less loss than is usually sustained in breeding other races. Nearly every one of her horses is hardy, and they have better feet and stronger legs generally than Thoroughbreds and are entirely free from their diseases, which is a matter of considerable importance. The feet and legs in other horses are more apt to become weak or diseased than any other points, which renders it necessary to get them as strong and tough as possible in breeding, so that an Arab cross is usually found highly beneficial.—Cultivator.

Jockey Barnes has 137 winning mounts to his credit, against eighty-seven for Covington, fifty-nine for McLaughlin, fifty-six for Overton and fifty-five for Garrison.

The report of the Charter Oak Driving Park Association shows a profit of $10,700 for the season. The Spring meeting netted $2000 profit and the recent meeting $8,700. The Association is in first-class condition.

CATTLE.

Cattle Plagues in California.

Mr. A. S. Mercer, special agent of the Bureau of Animal Industries, whose arrival in San Francisco for the purpose of investigating complaints of the presence of contagious diseases in various sections of the State was noted in a recent issue of this paper, has finished his function and furnishes some results of his visit. He says:

"I left Cheyenne about a month ago for California on statistical business for the department, and came by way of Idaho, Washington Territory and Oregon. I found no serious complaints among the live stock en route, except that there were instances of actino-mykosis, or big jaw, among the herds. Big jaw is found everywhere. On arriving here I learned that there was a serious disease prevailing among the cattle, horses, sheep and other animals, which were dying in great numbers, in Salinas Valley. I telegraphed to Washington for instructions with regard to it, and got orders to visit the field, taking with me a competent veterinary physician, and investigate.

"Having secured the services of Dr. Thomas Bowhill, a veterinary doctor of this city, and Dr. Montgomery of the State University, we repaired to the district that was reported to be infected. At Mr. Breen's ranch, Cholame, Monterey county, we found that during the month of September 900 out of 1200 head of cattle and horses had died of Texas fever, and they will lose the rest. The animals were dying at the rate of about 100 a day. They have Texas fever all through that country. At a dozen different ranches we visited it was prevailing. About Gonzales, also in Salinas Valley, we found no Texas fever, but they had anthrax among the horses, cattle and sheep. Several hundred hogs had died from eating the carcases of infected animals. On other ranches we found actino-mykosis (big jaw.) There were thirteen cases of it on one little ranch. The country was full of it. We were surprised. We found also tuberculosis.

"Anthrax is the worst of all the diseases that affect the herds. It is contagious, and communicable to man as well as animals. It attacks poultry, especially ducks. It has probably existed in that valley for several years. When it made its advent, or whence it came, is not known. It is certain that it was there last year. The stockmen there have had more or less trouble for several years.

"The people are, however, very reticent; they are afraid of getting the valley a bad reputation, and consequently it is difficult to get facts from them. The Mexicans residing there are in the habit of going out and cutting from the carcases of animals that have died of anthrax, meat which they jerk and send to San Francisco.

"In Gonzales fourteen children died during the summer of 1887. They belonged to Mexican families who had eaten meat from these diseased animals. Dr. Hertel, of Gonzales, says he is satisfied that the children die from eating that meat. We made autopsies of the bodies of horses and cattle at Breen's ranch, near Cholame, and at Gonzales, and demonstrated that it was Texas fever that was killing a large amount of stock. We discovered the germ of the disease under the microscope. Our microscopic discoveries have been verified by investigations with the microscope by three of the most eminent physicians of San Francisco since our return. Texas fever is infectious but not contagious. It infects the stubble fields and pasturage where the cattle feed, and the trail on which they are driven. It is the strangest of all diseases. Texas cattle have it and get fat, it does not hurt them. They make good beef, while native cattle which come in contact with the Texas breeds become infected and die.

"Actino-mykosis, or big-jaw, is supposed to be caused by a fungous growth on barley, which the stock eat. It is a new disease to the profession, and not yet thoroughly understood. It is contagious, spreading to man as well as animals, and no instance of a cure is known. It is quarantined against in all the Eastern States. So is the Texas fever in summer months, north of the line of permanent infection. In the North the frost kills the germ in winter—that is, north of the line of permanent infection, which extends from North Carolina across the Rocky Mountains. The line has not been established yet on this Coast. Eating the flesh of anthrax animals produces internal troubles—putrid sore throat or something of the kind. The infection can be taken by handling the hides, and by getting the blood of the animals on the hands.

"My investigations in this State have only been from Coburn Station on the Southern Pacific road to Salinas—about forty or fifty miles, that being the area from which the reports came. I am through here now, and will leave shortly for Washington, where I will report in detail and exhibit the specimens of portions of the vitals of diseased animals which I have put up in bottles.

"All I or the Federal Department can do is to investigate and suggest. It is one of the reserved rights of the State to legislate concerning matters of this kind, and the State ought to take hold of it. The people of the State should be protected. Inspectors should be appointed with prescribed duties, and the diseases which are decimating the stock and imperilling the health and lives of men, women and children should be eradicated by vigorous measures."

Feeding Young Cattle.

No period of feeding is of more importance to success in breeding animals of a high standard of excellence than that covered by the first six or eight months after birth; and yet there is no subject on which we have more divergence of opinion than that of calf feeding. Says the Devon Bulletin: Everybody knows that the natural method for a calf is to run with its mother and take all it wishes from the udder at frequent intervals. But such a process would soon prove ruinous to the milking qualities of the herd, because the supply would adjust itself to the natural demand thus made upon the mothers, and would not much exceed them.

In the recommendations which follow we are guided by an experience obtained by feeding through a series of years under various methods, followed by reasonable success, producing animals of good size and fair form. We ought to say, however, that the aim has been for the production of dairy rather than beef animals, and that though we have estimated size in the sense of full development of bone and muscle, we have seldom striven to produce what in some sections of the country would be demanded under the term of fat animals. Feeding has been for growth, i. e., for bone and muscle on, to which fat could at any time be laid. The aim has been to secure a well rounded and well developed form, which should constitute the basis of future productiveness whether in the dairy or the beef stall. Fatness is a secondary consideration. Give us a secondary consideration. Give us a well developed frame and the Devon will always grow fat when the functions of procreation or milk production are made to cease and proper feeding is kept up. In six months fat can be laid on, but it takes years to grow a well developed frame. The latter should therefore be the breeder's first care whether he breeds for dairy or for beef.

The basis of calf feed must in all ordinary cases be the milk of the cow. This we have been in the habit of feeding to the calf whole and warm from the mother during the first six months or six weeks of its existence. We avoid in this way, better than in any other, the disturbances of digestion which too easily enter the artificial feeding. If the calf is small or from any reason weak; this method secures strength and a natural appetite. In a word, by this nearest approach to the instinctive method of nourishment the physical processes seem for the time to be best promoted and the foundation of future growth secured.

From the whole milk it is well to pass over gradually to milk that has been deprived of its cream. This is done by mixing skimmed milk with the whole milk and feeding together. At the same time that this process of mixing begins to go forward let the man in charge of feeding drop into the pail a teaspoonful of raw linseed oil, taking care that he secures the best quality and of the purest flavor, free from contamination by kerosene in measuring dishes or by storing in barrels that have been used for coal oil products. Be sure that raw oil is used. No calf of our age has been known to refuse that which is pure on account of the taste. Increase the skimmed milk and the oil gradually until the calf is taking only a mixture of these two in proportion of about a half pint of oil to twenty or thirty pounds of milk. The oil affects the bowels favorably, keeping them open. If too great looseness sets in diminish the oil, adapting the quantity to circumstances until the animal becomes accustomed to it.

Beside the milk calves when a month old should have before them a pan of wheat-bran from which they will gradually learn to lick a quantity, according to their taste for such food. They will never take it to their hurt if it is kept constantly before them, and when the milk food is gradually removed from them they are already prepared to pass over to the mixed grains such as wheat-bran, linseed oil meal, gluten meal, or whatever else may be thought best as an implement of hay. A small amount of grass or hay placed before them quite early will have accustomed them to this portion of their more natural rations.

The directions here given represent the latest and so far the most satisfactory experience acquired. Other methods may be equally good or better. Instead of linseed oil Prof. Stewart, of the Country Gentleman, has recommended a jelly made by boiling linseed to be introduced into the skimmed milk. But this method we have found more troublesome than the resort to oil, and not attended with results as satisfactory. Ground linseed we have not tried, but its use would come in more appropriately at a later period if such use has advantages.

In no case do we recommend soured milk. In such milk valuable nutritious substances have been converted into acid which contains no nutriment, so that there is an actual loss of feeding value, besides the disturbances to digestion which are readily produced by milk of various degrees of acidity. For the best feeding milk that has been set in cold water should be used, as this process admits of the extraction of the cream without souring.

Canadian Cattle Interests.

The live stock interest of the Province of Ontario, Canada, as compared with grain growing is making rapid strides, for the climate of that Province is particularly adapted to its growth and development, and that is the reason why the export trade has been watched with such concern by the farmers and those interested in the success of its agricultural resources.

For many years—indeed up to the close of the American civil war—the markets of Albany, New York and Boston offered great inducements to Canadian cattle dealers for the disposal of any surplus stock not required for home consumption, and a fairly profitable trade was transacted during the years of "reciprocity." But when the war was ended, and the army disbanded, thousands of soldiers beat their awords into plowshares, and land was cultivated, agriculture sprang into life, and the raising of live stock became the question of the day, so that in the space of four years American farmers could not only supply their great cities and towns, but they had a large surplus besides for which they were seeking a foreign market. Canada in the meantime had opened up communication with the mother land, and was doing a profitable trade in salt meats, not only with the great centres of England, but thousands of beef hams and tons of briskets of beef were finding a ready sale in Glasgow. Still flocks and herds increased, although the quality scarcely attained any degree of excellence, for there was no incentive to our farmers and feeders to breed good beef, and agricultural industries languished.

This state of things continued more or less from the year 1870 to 1875, when the attention of the Canadian cattle men was drawn towards England. That seagirt isle was suffering and had suffered through her farmers having lost millions of cattle and sheep by contagious diseases, which the veterinary department of the Privy Council of that day was unable to cope with, and as a consequence animal food was in great demand at extraordinary high prices. Canada up to that time had never attempted exporting, but through the agency of that old pioneer—Simon Beaty—we had done considerable importing, and was in possession of strains of blooded cattle that any country might be proud of, and only required attention to produce a great development from which Canada at this day is reaping a golden harvest.

In the year 1873 a score or two of cattle were shipped from Montreal by the agency of the "Bells" of Glasgow, and a few by Mr. Roddick of Liverpool, but they led to no tangible result. In 1875 the Cattle King of Canada, Alderman Frankland, of Toronto, determined to visit Great Britain together with the principal markets of the continent, and for this purpose took an interest in a small cargo of cattle, which was placed on the steamer "Quebec," of the Dominion Line. The freight paid was six pounds sterling besides having to build stalls at their own expense. The cattle met a successful market, after an enormous expense, some sixty-five dollars a head, they realized a handsome profit. Indeed beef and mutton at that time were selling from nine pence to ten pence per pound wholesale, or from ten pounds to twelve pounds per head more than they are realizing this year of 1888.

From this small beginning the cattle trade has developed to its present importance. Canada learned through the press what a profitable trade could be accomplished by closer ties with the mother-land. Men in the trade, full of patriotism and love for the Empire, wrote often and fully on the question of seeking a permanent market with our own people, and these men, with a determination worthy of all praise, took the lead and induced not only breeders but feeders to assist in the development of this great industry, and what is the result? Why, to-day Ontario has the finest herds of cattle—ever increasing in numbers—cattle of the highest pedigree, a clean bill of health, an increasing trade, and it is worthy of note that by the fostering care it has received from a small beginning—in ten years, the province has sold and is selling to Great Britain alone over Five Million Dollars worth of live stock per year.

A Strange Breed of Cattle.

A strange breed of wild cattle is found in the high hills skirting the Umqua Valley, Oregon. In the mountains near Riddle and Rosebud, they are probably most plentiful, but they do not venture down into the valley much. They stay on the hills and get water from the living springs which rise there. For the most part they are concealed in the dense growth of oak and fir in these mountains. There is heavy underbrush, too, so that it is a hard matter to get them. They go in bands of six or eight usually, but at night a herd of forty or fifty get together and lie down in the same yard—that is, they sleep in the same spot, which is usually a secluded spot among the trees. A band of wild cattle have been known to get together on a clear space like this every night for a couple of years. When feeding, there are always a few bulls to act as sentinels. While the cattle graze in bands of half a dozen or so, they are, nevertheless, close to bands, so that an alarm from any one of the bulls, which leisurely feed on higher ground, they all run away together. The cattle are all colors and wilder than deer. It is a hard matter to get a shot at them, for the reason that their scent is keen. They can smell a man a long distance off. They got wild in 1853, when the old man Riddle and two or three others of the old settlers came to the valley. Their cow wandered off and could not be found. After two or three years when the pioneers wanted beef all they had to do was to rig out two or three pack animals and go up into the mountains. The cattle had to be killed on sight, the same as deer or bear, for they could no more be driven down than deer could. Once killed they were quartered, packed on the horses, and carried down. They have been hunted a good deal in late years, so that there are not so many as there used to be. A peculiarity about these cattle is that their eyes and horns are jet black. The retina, iris, and the whole apple of the eye are one mass of black. You can't distinguish any difference in any part of it. The horns, too, while being black as ink, are long and sharp. Brought to bay, the Oregon wild cattle are very wicked fighters.

Mr. Gerritt S. Miller, of Peterboro, N. Y., is authority for the following statement as to the milk yield of some Holsteins: Two cows, bred and raised in the Kriemhild herd, have been milking well this season. Pledge 1506 began her milk record June 1st. June 23d she gave 100½ pounds; 30th 104½ pounds. During July and August she gave 6,105½ pounds. For thirty-six consecutive days her record was as follows, beginning with July 6th and ending with August 10th:

97½	106	100½	103½	110½	101
95½	101	100½	103½	104½	102½
96½	98½	99½	95½	109½	98½
96½	95½	93½	98½	99½	99
100	100½	95½	106½	92½	98

Total, 3,601½ pounds, or an average of a trifle over 100 pounds per day. The largest yield in one day was 110½ pounds, July 31st. She ran in a pasture night and day, where the feed was good; drank water from a stream passing through the lot, and had no additional food, excepting 16 quarts of grain daily up to July 19th, and after that 20 quarts. The grain was fed dry, and mixed in the following proportion: 4-9ths ground oats, 4-9ths coarse middlings, and 1-9th corn meal. Occasionally she had a little oilcake with the grain.

Copia 1067 calved too late to do her best during this trial, but she did very well, giving 99½ pounds for largest daily yield. These cows are seven and eight years old, both sired by Billy Boelyn. Pledge is a great granddaughter of Empress 539 (Holland record 108 pounds in one day).

In addition to the above, we have bred the following named performers: Sultana 1032, 101½ pounds in one day, 22,043½ pounds in one year; Echo 121, 23,775½ pounds in one year; and Aegis 69, 25 pounds 13½ ounces of butter in seven days, 100 pounds 6 ounces in 30 days. Several of the young animals now in the herd are doing better than the above did at same age.

At David City, Neb., seven steers have been shot. They were suffering from hydrophobia.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, OCTOBER 20, 1888.

SUBSCRIPTION
FIVE DOLLARS A YEAR.

Hark Comstock on the Stallions.

We were greatly pleased to meet "Hark Comstock" during the Golden Gate Fair. Gratified on many accounts. It was fully twenty years ago when we had the pleasure of meeting him before, and there is "solid comfort" in rehearsing the past if even the interview is limited. Then there is always a suspicion among those who have not visited California that there is a disposition to over color when any of the prominent features of the coast are discussed, especially the horse interests. Resident writers are supposed to be influenced by the feeling, and hence the observations of a man who stands so high in the ranks of horse journalism as does Mr. Kellogg are eagerly read. More than usually caudid in reviewing the claims of the various trotting families, his remarks are well worthy of the place awarded, and the readers of the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN can peruse them with profit. The letters were written for the N. Y. Spirit of the Times, and we congratulate our contemporary in securing the services of so competent a scribe.

In relation to the yearling Antevolo colt, we must offer an explanation. The only time Mr. Kellogg visited our place was during the fair, when after the main race of the day he accompanied us for a few minutes. It was then late in the afternoon, and he had to be in San Francisco to meet an engagement. There were two others of the get of Antevolo at home, a two-year-old from a mare by Wuthrop and a yearling filly from a mare by Del Sur, her dam by Clark Chief; second dam a thoroughbred mare by Captain Beard. Many people prefer the filly to the colt, Mr. Stout, of Dubuque, and Mr. Bowerman, of Kentucky, being among the admirers of the filly, Mr. Stout expressing a desire to purchase her, but the colt is our favorite, and having only time to show one, he was selected. Mr. Kellogg is right in calling the dam of Prævolo "trotting-bred," though she is also entitled to a place in the Stud Book. She is registered in the latter as Lady Viva by Three Cheers, her dam Lady Amanda by imported Hurrah; second dam Lady Lancaster by imported Monarch; third dam Lady Canton by imported Tranby. Now Hurrah, which is also the sire of Three Cheers, was the sire of Anniversary, a mare which "Knap" McCarthy said could trot any number of heats below 2:20. Monarch established a line of trotters and Tranby figures in the pedigree of some of the notables. Going back of the near crosses there is Diomed, which so many eulogize as one of the greatest mixtures in a trotting pedigree, so that altogether it is not far out of the way to say trotting-bred.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., Sept. 21.—Great interest is now centered in the National Stallion race at the Bay District track, to take place next month. When Stamboul won his first race of the season at Los Angeles in straight heats of 2:15, 2:17½, 2:16½, general comment conceded him the position of the fastest stallion on the Pacific Coast. It was said by many who were present, that the manner in which he won the first heat indicated that he had considerable reserve speed, and might have bettered the record materially if called upon. This was also openly conceded by candid men who were interested in rival strains, and Mr. O. A. Hickok, who drove Arab against him in the race, tells me that at no part of the mile could he take the lead from Stamboul, and finding when well towards the finish that the stallion was not going to tire as he had hoped, and that he had no possibility of beating him, he ceased to distress his own horse, seeing which, Walter Maben relaxed his hold on Stamboul, and allowed him to finish at will on a loose rein. He further says, that had he been driven to the finish, he probably would have made a better record. Some sanguine admirers put this possible difference as high as two seconds. A difference of that kind is difficult to estimate with any certainty, and two seconds below 2:15 has been so seldom reached, that while undoubtedly possible it should not be too carelessly counted upon as a correct gauge. But unless we accept the theory of much extra speed, the race proved Stamboul not only fast but a very game horse when in condition. Now, as his owner Mr. L. J. Rose, has never looked upon Stamboul as a dead game horse, in the sense in which he relies upon Alcazar, it has been argued with some shrewdness that Stamboul must have really possessed two seconds more speed than he showed to have repeated the next two heats with so little falling off in the time. The race, as it stands, is so high a gauge of public form that all concede the merits of Mr. Rose's great strain of blood, and Stamboul's performance is a crowning glory to the achievements of its other members. Yet it speaks well for the speed of California stallions and the confidence of their owners, that Stamboul's great record has had the effect to arouse their emulation, and probably two at least have made good their entries in the National, who would not have been likely to appear against a less worthy rival.

Until the Los Angeles Meeting brought Stamboul so prominently forward, Guy Wilkes probably enjoyed a majority estimate as the fastest stallion on this coast. Other horses had their friends, but upon public form he had the call. At the Petaluma Meeting an incident attracted some attention to Woodnut as a dangerous competitor. Arab was winning the free for all rather too easily, the first and second heats being taken in 2:21 and 2:24. A change of drivers occurred before the third heat, wherein Woodnut forced Arab out in 2:17½, finishing a short length behind him. Among peculiarities one notes in going away from home, none have struck me with greater force than the remarkable degree in which a change of drivers often rests a horse in this climate!

But as the Oakland Meeting approached, the thoughts of a contest between Stamboul and Guy Wilkes so excited expectation that Woodnut's little escapade was rather overlooked. The Oakland event proved a disappointment all around, Stamboul was off from a change of climate (?) and too much indulgence (?), Guy Wilkes was not yet seasoned, and Woodnut, if he had any speed, failed to show it at any part of the race. After Wilkes had won the heat in 2:18 "owing to a mistake made by Stamboul," and Stamboul had taken one in 2:17, Woodnut was quietly dropped from the public attention as outclassed. When the time fell to 2:19½ in the third heat, taken by Stamboul, and both he and Wilkes finished tired, people began to comment upon the chances of other stallions in the National. When in the fourth heat a struggle between the two only resulted in 2:24, somebody suggested that it might prove Woodnut's race after all. In truth, Woodnut was in far better condition, and acted more like a horse fit to trot a braising race than either of the others. As they scored for the fifth heat Woodnut's movements began to be of interest. A few people thought he had a chance to win it, but most horsemen were of the opinion that he was not at all dangerous. Mr. Rose, a close observer, who by this time had lost faith in Stamboul's chances, declared it his opinion that Woodnut could not trot "a little bit," and as he broke and fell behind the others and was far behind at the quarter pole, he said in confirmation of his opinion: "If Woodnut has any speed he would certainly be showing it now. It's his last chance; he cannot trot any." And the public also thought it must be so. Possibly there were a few skeptics when the heat, won by Guy Wilkes, proved only to have been trotted in 2:25. All things considered, Woodnut did the best piece of "sleeping" that has occurred in many a day.

If the Oakland race was a disappointment the Sacramento meeting of the same horses was a surprise. Stamboul, upon reasonable expectation of improvement, was favorite. Guy Wilkes, upon his reputation as a "money horse," was a close second with bettors. Woodnut—well, being an outclassed horse, the odds were $10 to $1 against him in the earlier pools.

Everybody expected Stamboul and Guy Wilkes to be in improved condition, and the latter was. The former hit himself, broke on the turn and made no effort for the first heat. Woodnut felt of Guy Wilkes a little, but the latter won in the slow time of 2:22½.

Stamboul broke again in the second heat, after leading to the quarter, and was out of it. Woodnut went at it hammer and tongs and beat Guy Wilkes out by a length in 2:16½. I was told by one of the official timers that the judges made a mistake and gave out the time of the second heat; that the official time will be 2:16½. A dead heat between them followed in 2:17½, and then Woodnut won the following two in 2:19½, 2:21½. In the fourth heat Woodnut broke several times, and in my judgment gained something by it, but the judges overlooked it. Mr. Holly contended that Goldsmith drove foul and tried to hinder him by crowding. Woodnut was the best horse, however, on that day, and, even had the fourth heat been taken from him, would doubtless have won in the end. His gait is not altogether smooth, though at times he settles and goes square. He was in better condition than either of his opponents, and appears a very game horse. He can no longer be ignored in the chances for the National. As for Guy Wilkes, the least that can be said is that he was a faster and gamer horse at Sacramento, where he lost, than at Oakland, where he won, and seems to be gradually hardening to the old form that made him so great in 1886. After two years of relaxation in the stud he cannot be brought to the same tension, except by degrees, and it is now said that one of his legs is wrong. The other horses have also been serving, but each was keyed up last year. Now, it is a question with Guy Wilkes whether the race at Sacramento gave him too much work for the condition he was in. If not, he will still have time to become a very dangerous horse by the date of the great stallion contest, for, despite the fact that he lost his race, it is patent that he has been an improving horse up to that time. In his previous victory at Oakland he had not a link to spare. But I am afraid the Sacramento race has overmarked his condition. A parallel may be found in Stamboul's retrogression, for I believe, notwithstanding all other theories, that the task put upon him at Los Angeles was too great for a horse so little seasoned, and that it has told upon his vital forces ever since. With a more gradual and complete preparation he would have trotted that race and been fit to repeat it at Oakland. At Sacramento he was made favorite upon the glamour of his Los Angeles form. His breaks, caused by hitting himself, would sufficiently account for his losing the first two heats, but in the third Maben went off more quietly and got him settled on the backstretch without a mishap. He kept close to Guy Wilkes clear around to the homestretch without a break, but when Woodnut drew up and challenged for the lead, Stamboul was unable to stay the pace, and both the others went away from him. No excuse of hitting himself could apply. He gave it up. The gamest will quit when not in condition, and Stamboul's want of gameness (meaning want of condition) dates no further back than his Los Angeles race, when he was game enough to satisfy the most captious.

Taking stallions out of the stud and putting them to trotting at short notice is asking too much of nature. Once retired let them remain there, and be contented with the glory of former achievements. A hastened preparation may give you one good race, but if it be a severe one it is rarely followed by a second. The temptation to "bring out the old horse again" is hard to resist, but it is a bad fashion to follow. It seldom secures any additional fame and I mistrust often depreciates the intrinsic value of a stallion for service. But "they do it" in California as if life depended on it. Director, 2:17, is going to take a hand in the National after his long retirement. I wonder if this game son of Dictator and Dolly will also manage to secure the reputation of a quitter before he has done with it. It is a pity to tarnish such a record, but how could a man like Mr. Salisbury hold still when he saw Mr. Rose come out with Stamboul and set such a mark? Well, if he must have a crack at the records let us hope he will not ask a second severe race of the old horse. Antevolo also yearns to lower his record from 2:19½ to a more fashionable neighborhood. This son of Electioneer and Columbine has shown his ability in races to go far below his present mark, which he took as a four-year-old. I have never seen him in harness, but he is grand looking and bloodlike. I am told by good judges that his action is very true and telling, and that he is game and reliable.

I have been at some length to speak of these horses, not so much because they are to compete in the National Stakes, or because they are also fashionable representatives of the breeding stud. Eastern horsemen will be interested in them from the fact that it will not be many years before their progeny will be trotting and selling east of the Mississippi, for it can no longer be doubted that California is to become one of the chief sources of supply.

Guy Wilkes has a few colts as old as four years, among which is the famous Sable Wilkes, that took a record of 2:18 as a three-year-old. Guy Wilkes is a handsome bay, about 15½ hands. He resembles his sire only in features and not in general conformation, yet his style of action, which many contend is mainly dependent upon conformation is more of the Hambletonian than Maubriuo kind. I was told on my arrival here that he was not a pure-gaited horse, but when he started in the Oakland race the same men who had criticised his action agreed that he had greatly changed for the better and that no exception could be taken in that respect. He is a very handy horse in scoring and in his races, in which respect he is unlike his sire, who could never start quick and to whom a break meant a stand-still. He is a fine looking horse, with very intelligent and expressive head, good neck and deep shoulders. His back and all propelling points are very powerfully formed and muscled. His legs are also very strong and good. When in a brisk jog there is something in the swing of his hind legs that reminded me of his sire, but when started up he gathers them under him in a different way. In shoulder action he is not as free and untrammelled as old Geo. Wilkes was—few horses are—but he is nevertheless a good gaited horse and one of fine courage and determination. As a sire he gives unusual promise. In Sable Wilkes he has, of course, made a great hit, for the little black wonder is not only a trotter but altogether one of the neatest and most attractive young horses in California.

He is long and low, with great power, evenly distributed, being strong in all essential parts, and with a finish and quality that lends a double charm. His action is bold, strong and even. It is of a kind to mature early. Whether it will develop in capacity with age remains to be tested. I have an impression that most of the get of Guy Wilkes will have hold action rather than the sterling sort, yet I have seen too few in harness to state more than the impression gained from the sire and his great son. His progeny at Mr. Corbitt's place are a thrifty and growthy lot of youngsters, quite uniform in conformation, and very attractive. A good many of them are from mares by Arthurton, whose get incline to show less coarseness and more of the Star quality than I had expected. Many of the dams also had the blood of the Moor, which is constantly gaining in popularity since the success of the Beautiful Bells and Sable families. It is of the grayhound type, and maintains its individuality with much tenacity when crossed with other strains. The get of Guy Wilkes can scarcely fail to trot. This question hardly needs a demonstration further than has already occurred to convince the public, yet Mr. Corbitt evidently chafes under the consequences of the mishap by which his trainer John A. Goldsmith, broke his leg, and was compelled to turn out a lot of Guy Wilkes youngsters that he had in hand for the stakes. However, with Sable's demonstration, and the fact that William L., full brother to Guy Wilkes, has brought out such a rousing two-year-old in Astell this year, the family prestige will keep until John's leg gets well, even if he has not time to fit his colts this fall.

Stamboul is a beautiful horse, of rich bay color, over 15½ hands, and very symmetrical. He is by Sultan, out of a daughter of Rysdyk's Hambletonian. In action he is even more handsome than in repose, for he goes with a low, gliding stroke, as light as a fox and with so little apparent effort that it seems a pleasure to him to trot. His action is more open than usual with the Sultans, and he is not as handy when he breaks. He possesses a wonderful flight of speed, but owing to a habit of hitting is liable to break on the turns if given his head. He is rather a sensitive horse, and not as easily placed as some others, but time and experience, if he is kept trotting, may improve him, as his defect is nervousness rather than want of sense. Since the earlier part of this letter was written Stamboul has trotted another race at Stockton, and though defeated appears to be recovering form. I did not see the race, but report says that he was driven a waiting race (doubtless to get him around the turns without hitting himself), and took the second heat in 2:15½, Arab taking first, third and fourth respectively in 2:16, 2:17½, 2:22½. He is to go into the hands of O. A. Eickok for the National, as Maben will return to Lee Angeles with his other horses. Stamboul is but 6 years old. He has a two-year-old record of 2:37, a three-year-old record of 2:16½, a four-year-old record of 2:23, a five-year-old record of 2:17½, and a six-year-old record of 2:15. As an individual he therefore possesses all the trotting power that could be reasonably demanded, while in conformation and finish he is remarkably attractive. I have not seen enough of his progeny to gain an idea of their character, but the two-year-old filly Visalia, by Stamboul, out of Iuez, by The Moor, is very attractive as well as very fast, having the back, loin and quarters of the sire. The shape of the head and neck and the setting on the head and all of the Sultan style in which particulars Stamboul is a departure from the family type. In her race at Sacramento, Visalia was booked to win, but she made a bad break from hitting herself it was said, just after getting the word and was distanced by Margaret S., the fast little daughter of Director. But Visalia's speed is unquestioned. She made Sunol trot in 2:25, at Los Angeles, and was separately timed in 2:26½. As the first of a very small number of two-year-olds by Stamboul to appear in public, she is certainly a high credit to her sire, though as yet, she has not secured a record.

Woodnut is a chestnut horse close upon 16 hands, of much substance and power. He was bred at Palo Alto, and foaled in 1882. I have seen none of his get older than weanlings. His record of 2:16½ at Sacramento, gives him the fastest public mark yet reached by the Nutwoods. He is not a pure gaited horse. Nearly all of the get of Nutwood that I saw trot in California show the Mambrino roughness in their action, yet the blood is in great demand. Woodnut's dam was a granddaughter of Rysdyk's Hambletonian and also of Henry Clay. She produced Maroon, 2:21, a full sister to Woodnut. For the past two years Woodnut has been liberally patronized by the public, but as he has not heretofore been considered a horse of the speed and character of a first-class one, the mares sent to him have not generally been of the best, and his owner, Mr. B. C. Holly, of Vallejo, Cal., has but few of his own. He will now have plenty of patronage, and his owner tells me he will not raise his fee but rather take advantage of his increased popularity to exercise closer discrimination in the quality of the mares accepted.

Director, 2:17, the black son of Dictator and Dolly, is too well-known to need comment. His qualities as a campaigner and this brilliant turf career were first-class. He has all his speed at command, and his owner, Mr. M. Salisbury, of Pleasanton, Cal., thinks his true measure will never be made public until 2:12 is placed to his credit on the records. He is one of those satisfactory trotters that goes with a pure, even gait—a square trotter at all four corners. Although from a daughter of Mambrino Chief, there is none of the roughness of action that so often comes of mixing Hambletonian and Mambrino blood together, and for which an American Star cross is a good corrective. I saw but two of the get of Director trot. One is the three-year-old Direct, out of Echora, 2:23½, by Echo. He is quite a race-horse when himself, but needs to carry a great deal of weight forward to square him for he is a natural pacer. As his action is excessive this goes against him, but it takes a good three-year-old to beat him. It is rumored that he has shown a mile in 2:22, and I doubt not he is capable of it. The other is the two-year-old bay filly Margaret S., out of May Day, by a son of California Patchen. This little lady is a hummer. Nature has balanced her action, and she needs no more iron than necessary to protect her feet. Her disposition is as good as her action. She was timed in 2:28½ when defeated by Sunol at Petaluma. She won as she pleased at Sacramento, but the time was slower, and I have failed to keep a record of it. She was a late foal and only twenty-seven months old when she trotted at Sacramento. I regard her as one of the most promising and satisfactory young trotters I have seen in California, for while I have seen nothing to lead me to class her with Sunol, yet I believe her fully capable of trotting to Sunol's present record, 2:25, before the year is out. If Director gets many of her stamp he has a great future before him in the stud.

Antevolo, brown horse, foaled 1881, by Electioneer, out of Columbine by A. W. Richmond, 2d dam thoroughbred Columbia, by Imp. Bonnie Scotland, and thence right back to the old Blue Hen; is the fifth of the candidates for the National. He was bred and developed by the present owner, Mr. Joseph Cairn Simpson, of Oakland, Cal. He is a magnificent looking horse, full 16 hands. At first glance he would be thought leggy, but when one considers the roundness of his harel, the great muscular development of loins, quarters and thighs, the width of hips and the power that lies between and below them, and this evident constitution of the horse, one likes him better for the daylight under him, for while long and low is the usual synonym for power and constitution, yet we all know that there is a style of horse with greater length of limb that having roundness of barrel and depth of back ribs possesses ample bodily space for every functional capacity, and when this is supplemented by great muscular power, his height and length of limb, if the limbs be strong, are an advantage and not a detriment, and signify no want of constitution. Such a horse I take Antevolo to be. He has great length, and his neck rises beautifully from his well-placed shoulders, his chest is well rounded and his legs fork beautifully below; his head is fine and good and well set on, and his eye, ear and countenance expressive and intelligent. I did not see him in harness, and cannot describe his action. He has never worn shoes, having trotted all his races in tips. His feet may be criticised as to shape, though they appear strong, and I am told they carry him sound. Viewed from any point Antevolo is a blood-like and grand-looking horse. To the usual trotting form he bears much the same relation that imported Lexington bore to the usual racing form.

I saw a yearling colt by him out of a trotting-bred mare that Mr. Simpson has entered in some of the stakes, of 1889 and 1890. Having mislaid my memoranda I cannot give the pedigree of the dam, but the colt is one of the trust made and best put up yearlings I have seen anywhere, showing much quality and finish, with loin, stifle and gaskin of greatest power, strong shoulder and the forehead light, airy and neat. Antevolo has been well patronized in the stud for two years past, but I saw none of his get save the one mentioned.

There are many other stallions in California that are very popular in the stud that I may mention in a later letter. Among them are such good ones as Anteo, Palo Alto, Sidney, and different sons of Nutwood and Electioneer. I merely class the candidates for the National in a convenient group for the present letter.

Yours,
HARK COMSTOCK.

Should Jockeys Bet?

For some years past there has been an outcry in Great Britain against jockeys betting, and it has rightly been deemed a serious evil, and rigid and severe rules have been enacted to suppress or minimize it. Even where a jockey only backs the horse he bestrides it may be deemed an evil by some who suggest that it may enable him to suborn another jockey whose mount he fears, by affording him the power to offer to save a liberal sum, either before or at a critical point in a race. If, however, it is an evil for a jockey to back the horse he rides for a big stake, how much more seriously wrong is it for him to back another animal in the race which he rides. For example, even if his own horse has no chance to win, how great is the temptation to make use of it to block or stop something which he may fancy has a chance of beating the horse upon which his money is staked; while if his mount has a show to beat the horse he has backed, he must evince a higher sense of honor than many jockeys are believed to possess if he uses his best efforts to win, and thus lose heavily on the race.

It is a well known fact that in England jockeys, despite repressive legislation, bet heavily; and in the colonies it is commonly rumored that co-partnerships and rings exist, especially in races run over hurdles and fences; and it has been asserted that at minor meetings the whole of the jockeys engaged have had a bit on the winner.

This, if true, speaks volumes for their discrimination and judgment, especially when subsequent revelations show that the owner had no idea of his horse's powers, and let him run unbacked, while some of the defeated division carried heavy investments both for their owners and their trainers, and yet went down.

It is a well-known fact that among our successful horsemen, and especially among our Hurdle and Steeplechase riders, are men who bet heavily, and who win sums to which the stakes run for are insignificant. Of course, some of our jockeys are also trainers and owners, and it seems hard to prevent these men winning money on the animals they own, train or ride, and I for one should doubt the policy of attempting to prevent their doing so. Still, the question of jockeys betting is one which public opinion is greatly exercised upon. And anyone who attends suburban meetings can, if he chooses to watch, readily see how greatly the trouble is increasing. Stable boys and jockeys of every age can be seen investing their money with the ring, or in eager conference with backers who bet for them. Lads of fourteen or fifteen think nothing of having a tanner on a horse in a race in which they are about to ride one of its opponents.

Those who know the sort of lads many of our stable boys are will be slow to believe that noblesse oblige is their motto; and as most men are aware that there are unscrupulous owners, as well as unscrupulous layers, it can easily be seen what must occur when lads without much moral training are surrounded with an atmosphere of temptation. Many of those who keep race-horses, and a still greater number of those who race ponies, have very little to say as to the manner in which their animals run; and it has become essential that some steps be taken to prevent jockeys backing, or having an interest in, any horse that they ride in a race.

The question at once arises, How is this end to be attained? The problem is not easy to solve. Of course the Victoria Racing Club is the only tribunal which has any power to deal with the matter, and its executive will find great difficulty in framing regulations which will entirely prevent the trouble referred to.

It is a scandalous sight to see registered bookmakers betting with the mere children who are the light-weight jockeys of the day. Yet at every meeting which takes place it is a common incident.

Under our present system, or want of it, neither the lads nor the ring are under any regulation other than that which Rule 134 gives, and these are of too general application to be of practical use. In order to check the practice of jockeys betting it will be necessary to render the layer and backer alike amenable to punishment in cases where a jockey backs another horse, or accepts a share in a bet on any other horse than that he bestrides in a race in which he is riding. It will also become necessary to prohibit jockeys saving money with an antagonist during a race.

The system of ready money betting which has now become the rule on all our courses must necessarily greatly increase the difficulty of dealing with this matter. The wagers under this system are not booked to name, and hence the task of proving a jockey guilty of improper betting becomes intensified, while his opportunities for doing so are enormously multiplied. As long as the cash is handed to him the ready-money metalician naturally looks no further;

and he, in the hurry of business, can hardly be expected to. Despite all these difficulties, the matter is too important and too urgent to admit of delay in dealing with it. With the English rules on this head before them, and with the aid of the club's detectives, steps may be taken which will abate the evil, and public sentiment not be shocked, as at present, by the spectacle of mere babies betting. About twelve months ago, at an important meeting, a race was run in which common report said an arrangement was arrived at between the riders of all the horses but one as to which was to win. This one was not thought worthy of consideration, and was left out of their rings, but proved the winner, and so upset a pretty conspiracy. This was an open secret, yet the stewards suspected nothing. What has happened in the past may again occur. If the chief club does not rise to the occasion, and at once "grasp their nettle," a handle will be afforded to the unco guid section of the community to raise a cry for legislative interference with racing. Like all great institutions, the Turf has its weak points, and it rests with those who govern it to sedulously repress abuses and guard against flaws in its armor. It must be remembered that if our jockeys, as a class, become demoralized, and lose their integrity, public confidence will be withdrawn, even although a few men remain in the profession whose whole career has placed them as far above suspicion as are the judges of our Supreme Courts.—Melbourne Sportsman

Time, 2:48, 2:42, 2:43, 2:44, 2:44

Pools: Ilton $25, field $8.

The owner of Silvertail claims that his colt actually distanced the others in second heat, but that the flag man took no notice of it.

Same Day—Trotting, for named horses, mile beats, 3 in 5; purse $150.

Little Frank, b g by Autocrat. 1 2 3 1 1
James C., ch g by Lemoni, dam by Barbaw. 2 1 1 3 3

George Kinney, b g by Alwood, dam by Bellfounder. 4 4 4 dis
Time, 2:40, 2:40, 2:42, 2:41, 2:41.

Pools: James C. $15, Little Frank $10, field $5.

James C. had it all his own way, only that a change of drivers was made, and Misner was put up behind Little Frank.

SECOND DAY.

Oct. 2d—Whitmore Bros.' ch h Coloma, 3, hy Joe Hooker, dam hy Norfolk, had a walk-over for the Derby.

Same Day—Running. Pioneer Stakes, five-eighths of a mile, for two-year-olds, $50 each, $200 added.

R. E. Bybee's ch c Broadchurch by Leinster, dam Tibbie Dunbar. 1
W. H. Babb's ch g Arthur H. by Geo. Wilkes, dam Neva Winters. 2
Whitmore Bros.' cb c Pat Curran by Glen Dudley, dam Laura C. 3
Time, 1:04.

Pools: Broadchurch $20, Arthur H. $4, Pat Curran $3.

Same Day—Running, 600 yards, purse $200.

W. H. Babb's ch g Bogus, aged, by Opbir, dam unknown. 0
W. A. McCarthy's gr m Cayuse Mollie, by grandson of Dasber, dam by Moffit's Grey Eagle. 0
H. F. Baker's b g Sunday. 3
Ben L., Daisy A., Little Dick and Pioneer followed in a bunch.
Time, 0:31.

This race was another surprise, and we are satisfied that nine-tenths of the people believe yet that the little mare won. Bogus sold in the pools for about as much as all the others. The gelding's owner refused to divide the purse, and, after much delay, on account of another race that had been called, the race was run over, resulting in Bogus winning by a short nose. Time, 0:32.

It was not Bogus, but his jockey, Tom McCaugh, that beat the little grey mare, who has been running all over the coast under many names, such as Percheron Filly, Grey Daisy, Lady Grey, etc. She is the mare that defeated Ten Cents.

Same Day—Trotting. 2:40 class, 3 in 5, purse $300.
C. G. Bradshaw's b g Col. Bradshaw, by Messenger Chief. 1 1 1
Sam Scott's h m Fantasia by Ranchero, dam Lady Kate. 2 2 2
McKnight Bros.' b h Oneco by Altamont, dam Belle Price by Double. 3 3 3
Time, 2:30, 2:27, 2:29.

This race was no more or less than a "pick up" for the champion 5-year-old. In this connection, we regret to say that by the publication of a dispatch from Montana, to the effect that Col. Bradshaw had trotted there in 2:23, many of the races in Oregon did not fill. His present owner, Mr. Butler, claims that he was damaged to the extent of over $1200.

THIRD DAY.

Oct. 3d.—Trotting. Breeders' stake for two-year-olds; $50 each, $200 added; mile heats, 2 in 3.

Van B. DeLashmuth's ch c Blondie by Lemoni, dam by Frank Chapman, son of Tuckahoe, grandam by Lummux. 1 1
Dooley & Hogboom's b c Eolus by Bedouin, dam Osgood Maid. 2 3
M. Balleit's br f Wallula by Altamont, dam Opheila Childs. 3 2
M. B. Mosber's br f Nervosa by Altamont, dam Snowflake. 4 4
Time, 2:43, 2:46.

Same Day—Running. Novelty race, one mile, $50 for each quarter, and $100 for the mile.

A. Hall's dn g White Cloud by Johnny Moore. 1 1 3 M
W. H. Babb's ch g Bogus by Opbir. 2 2 4 5
H. R. Baker's ch g Daniel B. by Glen Elm, dam Sun Dance. 3 3 2 3
Whitmore Bros. ch c Coloma, 3, by Joe Hooker, dam by Norfolk. 5 5 1 1
Matlock Bros.' b m Repetta by Alarm or Reform, dam Long Nine by Lightning. 4 4 3 2
Time, 0:23, 0:51, 1:18, 1:47.

It is an old and truthful saying that "murder will out." By an old foggy short horse custom, Coloma has been trained to start whenever his trainer sees fit to let him go. Strange indeed that this absurd and non-practical practice has been accorded to the owners of this grand son of Joe Hooker and the daughter of the mighty Norfolk when it is not endorsed by the running rules. Enough, Coloma got left at the post, and before his ground helper could get him off the field was sixty to seventy yards away. This delay developed the fact that there was a general collusion as regarded the three-quarters and the mile out. At present we shall only say that just before the three-quarters post was reached Daniel B., Repetta and Bogus each pulled up and out of the way and allowed Coloma to pass and win the three-quarters and mile. The judges declared the three-quarters and mile off. This created an unusual stir and it is understood that two or more protests were handed in, never, it is likely, to be called for by the protestors.

Bogus was a great favorite for the quarter, Repetta for the half, and Coloma for the three-quarters and mile.

Same Day—Trotting. 2:29 class, 3 in 5, mile beats; purse $400.

Pools: Sunday $25, Jordan $8, Roly Boly $3, field $3.

The talent were again downed by the favorite being left at the post, or at least, he got twenty or thirty yards the worst of the start. The black gelding's owner refused to divide, and in about an hour the two ran the dead heat off, which resulted in the mare heating the black gelding from the drop of the flag and the rest of the race was a mere formality.

Pools: Maud Knox $110, D. K. W. $30, field $30.

This was the race of the fair. From the first tap it was evident that Oneco was a better horse than was expected, and that Maud was not quite so good. To beat him then was the play, and if ever three drivers tried to defeat one, it was in this race. Each heat was a grand race, Oneco either winning or driving the others out on a lap. Indeed, every finish was a lap, and under the whip at that. When the horse won such a short never went out on a race course in the North Pacific.

This was a queer race, Repetta first sold favorite, then Coloma, and just before the start Nevada had the call in the pools. Coloma again virtually got left at the post or he would have won.

Same Day.—Running, handicap, three quarters of a mile; purse $600.

Pools: Roly Boly $20, Ida Glenn $12, Laura D. $7, Lady Duffy $6.

Soon after entering the stretch Laura D. fell and rolled over her jockey, breaking his shoulder blade and otherwise bruising him. He is not fatally injured, however. Whitmore claimed that Roly Boly fouled his filly and caused her to fall. Babb denied it. Witness after witness was sent before the judges. Every time, however, that Whitmore would send one, Babb would send up two. Babb bravely, and with much energy, defended the charge, showing much more skill as a defender than Whitmore did as an accuser. After an hour's investigation the judges decided in favor of Babb's filly.

What is a Thoroughbred Arab.

What is a thoroughbred Arab is a question that has often been asked, and a number of different answers have been given to it. The latest, however, is from the Melbourne Sportsman, which says:

Not every horse imported as an Arab is a thoroughbred. Many are what the Arabs call sons or daughters of a horse. What then is a thoroughbred Arab? A well known English writer on the Arab and an acknowledged authority on the subject, defines a thoroughbred Arab to be one belonging to the Khamsa. There is a tradition among the Arabs that the Khamsa is descended from one of the five mares of King Solomon. We read in Holy Writ that "King Solomon brought horses out of Egypt." It is asserted that the wise king procured the best horses available in Egypt. The eastern tradition, therefore, is that one of the Egyptian mares produced five fillies of surprising beauty, and from these five mares the five great breeds of Arab horses are descended. According to the writer referred to—well known by his initials, "E. F. D."—all true Arabs trace to one or other of these five fillies of King Solomon. Some of the Arab tribes preserve the pedigrees of their horses with as much care as a Scotch laird preserves the charter of his estates; and when a chief sells his horse he usually gives a written pedigree or guarantee that the horse is pure. The guarantee is generally preceded by the remark, "Praise be to Allah, this is a good horse!" It then recounts how the family came into possession of the tripe, and how it has been handed down unalloyed from generation to generation, and that the present is a pure lineal descendant of one of King Solomon's mares.

Sale of Lady Bunker.

LEXINGTON, Ky., October 11.—Mr. Gerhard Lang of Buffalo, N. Y., has just purchased, for $6,500, the famous brood mare, Lady Bunker, by Mambrino Patchen, the dam of the great California stallion, Guy Wilkes 2:15. Mr. Lang is a wealthy brewer, and is becoming prominent as a breeder of

Rough and broken in their coats, there are few horses now retaining the gloss for which the fit and healthy thoroughbred is so noticeable above all other horses. The majority are beginning to break out into fall overcoats, and, excepting by their performances, do scant credit to their trainers. The appearance of the horses was very noticeable in the paddock at Jerome Park. Sam Harper, by reason of his recent great record-breaking performance, came in for the lion's share of attention, but he showed the effects of his frequent races of late, and is by no means so big as he appears when at his best nor as Green Morris is proverbial for having his horses when he expects great things of them. Banner Bearer, however, looked better than ever, and is a credit to his joint trainers and owners.

In the second race Kaloolah was not supposed to have any chance with the crack mare of the season. She had picked up considerable flesh since she was purchased by the Chicago Stable, and Johnnie Campbell had evidently been allowing her to have an easy time of it, which suits both her appearance and disposition. There was $300 second money for her to run for, and that induced Messrs. Hankins and Campbell to start her. There was also a certainty of any starter getting $50 over and above his entrance money for third place, but neither the chance of getting second nor the certainty of $50 was inducement sufficient to make the Messrs. Dwyer start either of their two which they had left in the race, viz: Belle B and Bessie June.

Mat Byrnes continues to keep Firenze up to the notch, prepared to take her chances with all comers. Her heels are still a little cracked, and, now that the cold and wet have set in, will in all likelihood remain so to the end of the season. They don't seem to affect her at all, nor even to cause her to go sore in any degree.

In the third race Campagne Charlie took the palm for good looks. He is as good looking a representative of the late Prince Charlie as any now on the turf, and has the characteristic failing of all the breed, being a trifle leggy. Fresno was looking clean and full of muscle, but was securing a little both before the race and on his way to the post, which was not in his favor. With some horses this is the common result of funking when they see that they are about to carry silk, but in his races he has shown himself anything but a faint hearted colt, indeed very much the contrary. Holiday looked as well or better than since she journeyed East. When she was winning in the beginning of the season at Washington, her owner and trainer, Wyndham Walden, asked a very high figure for her. She was very fit and well then. Indeed her trainer has a name for bringing his two-year-olds fit to the post earlier in the season than others. Her subsequent performances tended to show that she had gone back a little, but now that she is looking so well and has regained her flesh, she will render a good account of herself.

Speaking to her trainer the other day, I asked him why it was that his horses invariably ran so well in the mud? The public is always on the alert to back anything trained by him when the track is wet, and have frequently found that they have made no mistake in doing so. It has often been said that he trains at home on a muddy track, and that that fact teaches his young ones how to move through the drift. He disclaimed any such idea and added: "I have as great an objection as any one to working on a wet track, and never do it, unless I am compelled on account of my horses needing work before running. I know people do keep their eyes open for my horses in wet weather, but the fact that most of mine can travel in the mud arises simply from the breed. Nearly all the animals I have run for the past year or two have been by Sensation, or else Tom Ochiltree, and both the Sensation and Tom Ochiltree are good mud horses. Now, this filly of mine, Holiday, she's by Hopeful and I know that she's not within many pounds in had going of what she is on the top of the ground." This is without doubt a very true statement, but Wyndham Walden has the name for training good mud horses, and it is likely to stick to him for some time to come, even when Sensation and Tom Ochiltree shall have gone over to the happy hunting grounds.

The Cyclone colt of Mr. Withers' is a fine, muscular looking horse, and with so many slashing fine young ones as Hanrahan has in his string, one wonders how it is that the Brookdale Stud can produce so much finer yearlings and two-year-olds than other Jersey City breeding farms. The grass in a greater portion of that State is naturally poor, and unless seeded down afresh at least every other year very soon proves merely a crop of hurtful weeds. This is more especially true of the land around Monmouth Park and its neighborhood. To compensate for this a much larger supply of provender in the shape of crushed oats and so forth is necessary. But this many breeders fail to see or do not wish to see perhaps. But at Mr. Withers' farm, Hanrahan says, matters are entirely different. His land is admitted to be an extent of first class pasture, quite an oasis in the midst of so much poor soil. Yet, despite the abundance of good grass, there is no stint of either oats, hay or anything else which he thinks can assist in developing the young ones into good sized horses and making the Brookdale bred horses something to be proud of.

In the race, as the horses came through the straight, Holiday, it was seen, was badly interfered with. Whose actual fault it was is hard to say, but Tiny Williams, the rider of Holiday, fancied he knew the offending party, and settling on McLaughlin, was anxious to avenge himself summarily. No doubt he felt sore at having what seemed to be a very great chance to win so ruthlessly spoiled, but under the influence of friends and time soon cooled down.

In the fifth race Messrs. Campbell and Hankins had decided not to run Kaloolah a second time in the heavy going, and declared her out, as they thought, in time. But the judges said otherwise, that they were not in time and must run. They did run, and moreover won. It was a picture to see the faces of the two partners when they saluted each other after the race. "Hello, Johnnie," said Hankins, "I thought we decided we wouldn't run the mare? 'That's so,' said Johnnie, smiling all over his face, 'but the judges said she must run, so she ran!' I fear, though, that owing to the uncertainty, the stable had not as much money on as they usually pile on their fancied good things.

There is little to be said of the last race, which resulted in a dead heat, but had any one versed in the science of heat racing been induced to play one, by merely judging from appearances he would assuredly have been on the wrong one. Huntress was still sweating, whereas Wynwood had cooled out nicely and looked fresh as paint for the decider. It was Wynwood's heart, no doubt, that failed him, for the filly won easily.

Latonia's Successful Meeting.

LATONIA, October 7th—Up to to-day the fall meeting of the Latonia Club certainly has been a pronounced success. Every day the attendance has been above what was expected, and the racing uniformly good. Latonia is gradually getting to be known as one of the best betting places in the west, and all of the big guns of the betting ring are to be seen here. In fact, Latonia has taken the place of Louisville as the leading racing center of the west. Of course Col. Clark's mismanagement and inexplicable blunders in the guidance of the affairs of the Louisville Jockey Club have contributed greatly in bringing this about, but the wideawake management and liberal spirit of the Latonia Jockey Club have endeared the Covington track to all the horsemen.

A large crowd from Nashville, Memphis and Louisville has been here ever since last Monday, and to judge by the way the bookmakers are talking, they have taken quite a good sized pile out of the ring. On the whole hackers have fared well so far, as in a majority of the races the talent's choice has passed the winning post first. Still, the general public have pulled the bookmakers out of what would otherwise have been a pretty tight hole. They have been rather shy of the choice of the talent, and put their money on short horses. The consequence is that the percellers and the talent are in very good humor with themselves, and the public is hoping for better days.

The betting has been very heavy for a fall meeting, but Latonia is having the same experience with the mutual machines as other associations. The people do not like them and won't bet through them, and that is the whole amount of the matter. A thing that has been quite noticeable during the present meeting is the large attendance of society people. Day after day the infield and club grounds have had a liberal display of vehicles belonging to the elite of Cincinnati. Gov. Buckner, of Kentucky, and his staff set the example on the second day of the meeting, and it at once caught on. Of course the fair sex are more easily aroused to enthusiasm than the men, and the way they bet their fives, tens and twenties is a caution.

One of the biggest surprises of the meeting was the defeat of Marchma by Tenacity in the fourth race on Wednesday. On paper it looked as though Marchma could not lose, and the best odds that were obtainable against the filly were 2 against 5. Tenacity, on the other hand, was so little thought of, that he went begging at any price. A prominent Cincinnati brewer, who had never attended the races before, was present, and said his wife had given him $50 to bet for her, and he wanted to get as much for it as he could. A bookmaker, who heard him talking, said he would give him $2,000 against his $50 on Tenacity. Of course Mr. Brewer accepted, and when Tenacity won by a neck from the favorite he was the happiest man in town, and the knight of the pencil was the sickest.

The day's sport on Wednesday was marred by what was for a time thought to be a serious accident. In the second race sixteen horses faced the starter and were sent away well together. The track was very dry on the back stretch and such a cloud of dust was raised that the horses were shut out from view of the grand stand. When the dust was cleared away two riderless horses were seen galloping the opposite way, and their jockeys stretched in the middle of the track like dead men. Some of the track hands hurried to their assistance and carried them to the club house. In a few moments they both revived, and it was found that Stone, who was riding Stewart, had suffered nothing but a severe shaking up, while Overton, who was on Somerset, was quite badly hurt. His injuries, however, are not serious, and he will be in the saddle again in a few days.

On Friday, a genuine sensation was caused by the effort of Jack Chinn, the well known sporting man from Kentucky, endeavoring to artistically carve the anatomy of bookmaker John Dowling of Chicago. There are a number of different stories as to how the row commenced, and they are all more or less contradictory. As near as can be learned, however,

Chinn, who had just arrived in Cincinnati to attend the races, made some slighting remarks about the judges having been fixed for the Donbt—Ira H race, in which they had given the verdict in favor of the former. He was standing in front of Dowling's stand when he made these remarks. Seeing a look of contempt on Dowling's face, he put his hand to his neck and drew a murderous looking dagger that had been snugly ensconced perpendicularly with his vertebra. It is not known whether Chinn conceived this rather novel method of carrying concealed weapons from a dime novel or not, but at any rate he had evidently practiced a great deal, for the artistic manner in which he prepared it to do the carving act would have delighted the heart of a Jim Bludsoe.

He sprang at Dowling and with an oath made a lunge that, had it reached its mark, would have ended the former's earthly career. Fortunately, however, Dowling slipped and fell and received the knife in the fleshy part of his arm; before he could rise, Chinn was at him again and made a vicious lunge at his heart. The dagger penetrated Dowling's heavy overcoat, but got no further. At this juncture, Tucker, who is a friend of Dowling's, stepped forward with his hand on his hip pocket, and said: "Give the man a chance."

"A chance; I'll cut the thief's stomach out," said Chinn. "No, I'll be d—d if you will," yelled Tucker, and pulling out a gun he leveled it at Chinn and was about to fire when some of his friends interfered. In the meantime the betting ring had been almost completely cleared, and men with blanched faces were spreading the wildest kind of rumors. Chinn was placed under arrest and Dowling was carried to his hotel. His injuries are not serious, and he will be out again in a short time.

From subsequent developments, however, it would appear that there has been an old standing feud between Chinn and Dowling which is many years old, and that Chinn was aroused to the action by officious friends, who told him that Dowling was looking for him and would not rest till he had driven him from Cincinnati. Both men have hosts of friends, and each party deprecates Chinn's hasty action.

The Executive Committee of the club met Saturday afternoon, and after fully investigating the whole story, exonerated Dowling, fined Tucker $500 and suspended him for the rest of the meeting, and ruled Chinn off. Chinn was at the track here when the decision was reached, considerable the worse for liquor, and when he was informed that he would have to leave he made some objection, but finally thought better of it and went. Tucker had Keaveena and Kermesse ready to start in Saturday's races, but when he was informed of the decision of the executive committee they were scratched. It is generally expected that Tucker will be reinstated, as he merely acted as peacemaker.

Abe Perry, the owner of Redlight, was taken sick the other day, and went to his home in Lexington.

E. Corrigan has engaged George Cochran as steeplechase rider for next season.

David Waldo and Ed. Corrigan will winter in Memphis. The latter will send a part of his string to New Orleans.

Col. R. W. Simmons acted as one of the judges yesterday and left last night for New Orleans. He says that he has been assured by horsemen here that after the Nashville meeting they will send some of their horses to New Orleans. He expects to have at least 400 horses at New Orleans by the middle of November.

Three-Year-Old Record, 2:14.

The Bay District Track on Saturday last was fairly crowded. Much money was pouring into the pool box, Yolo Maid $100, Adonis $62. The Maid was first to appear, with John Goldsmith behind her. She was repeatedly cheered as John jogged her up the stretch, as was Adonis when Lee Shaner moved him into view. Both horses were fit to go the race of their careers and the drivers seemed confident. Considerable scoring was done before they came fairly to the wire and were sent off, Adonis having the pole, with the Maid a half length in advance and well outside. At the turn Yolo Maid had opened such a gap that Goldsmith pulled her in and took the pole. The quarter was done in 0:35½, the Maid having three lengths the best of it, and going well within herself. To the half Adonia broke and lost six lengths, Yolo Maid doing the distance in 1:11. The three-quarters was taken in 1:46 by the Maid, and thence home in 2:18 she paced her own gait, winning the heat out of hand.

Before the second heat the pools were, Yolo Maid $100, Adonis $50. A good send off for the second heat, at the fourth attempt, and lively pacing sent the Maid to the quarter a length ahead in 0:34½, and to the half in 1:07½, where she was clear four lengths to the good, with Adonis going level and apparently not pushing. Around the back-turn Adonis let out several kinks, and helped himself considerably, but when fairly into the stretch, and under the whip, the horse could not show the foot of his fair competitor, and the Maid came away and sailed under the wire by three lengths, a winner in 2:14, the fastest three-year-old pacing or trotting record ever made. The ladies in the stand arose "as one man" and waved parasols and dainty handkerchiefs and clapped their little hands frantically when the time was hung out, and it appeared that the modest little Maid had established herself as the premiere.

This makes the sixth time in two months that the three-year-old pacing world's record (2:22½) has been beaten on this Coast: First by Gold Leaf at Santa Rosa (2:20½), next by the same mare at Oakland (2:19 1-5), next at Oakland by same mare (2:18); next by Yolo Maid at Stockton (2:16½), second and third heats, next by Gold Leaf at Napa (2:15), and now the record stands, Yolo Maid at San Francisco, 2:14! And it is admitted by all that she could have paced this heat if necessary in 2:12.

The filly now sold for $100, Adonis $10, and the X's did not go in in profusion. Adonis did not sweat well and looked a out of form when brought up to the third rally. The second attempt started them on their journey and they travelled to the quarter in :33, the Maid a length ahead, holding the same positions to the half in 1:06. Thence to the upper turn Adonis did some fast work and ranged alongside the filly holding her to the three quarters in 1:40, the crowd buzzing and yelling, as it seemed possible Adonis would do the mare up in the heat. But when straightened in the stretch Adonis settled back and the whip fell unheeded upon him, the Maid jogging in by six lengths in 2:14½.

Yolo Maid's performance in this race is remarkable for three things—first, as mentioned above, she lowered the three-year-old record of the world; second, she made the fastest time ever trotted or paced over the Bay District Track, and third and last, but not least, she carried Johnny Goldsmith, the veteran driver of celebrated trotters and pacers, the fastest heat he ever rode in a race—surely laurels enough for one little filly and only 3 years old.

Second Race—A trot for the 2:27 class with Don Tomas, Ha Ha, Perihelion and Alpheus named. In the pools Don Tomas sold favorite $40, Ha Ha $30, field $7. In the first heat, Don Tomas on the pole, led all the way, Ha Ha pushing for the heat and both breaking when in the straight, Tomas just catching his feet as he came under the wire and getting the heat in 2:23.

The pools then were, Ha Ha $100, Don Tomas $70, field $4, the talent imagining that something was to pay, and when Hickok came out behind Ha Ha instead of the previous driver, Houser, they put on more money. At the word, Goldsmith, who was driving Perihelion, made a wild rush from the outside for the pole. Durfee, behind Tomas, saw it and shoved his horse out in time to shut Perihelion off, and when they got well into the turn Tomas led by a length with Ha Ha second and Perihelion third. At the quarter Tomas made the one length two, and down the backstretch increased the lead to three full lengths. In the upper turn Ha Ha crawled up, his driver shouting to him at every stride. They came into the straight very fast, and just past the three-quarters Ha Ha got to the leader's wheel. There Hickok drew his whip and began slashing his horse and yelling like a madman. He crawled up to Tomas' shoulder, and then thirty yards from the wire Tomas lost his feet and ran under, half a length first. Time 2:22½.

Durfee went immediately to the judges' stand and claimed the heat for Tomas. He said that Hickok had been guilty of foul driving by shouting all the way around, and when they came down to the finish Hickok had struck Tomas with his whip causing the horse to break. Hickok denied striking Durfee's horse. After about a quarter of an hour's deliberation the heat was given to Ha Ha, Don Tomas second, Perihelion third and Alpheus fourth. Hickok was fined $25 for loud shouting.

Before the third heat the pools were quoted, Ha Ha $100, Don Tomas $50, field $7. When they were sent away Perihelion took the lead, but was collared by Tomas at the head of the turn, but he went up almost immediately, and Perihelion went to the lead again with Ha Ha in the second place. The three were in procession, about a length apart, when they passed the quarter, and the positions were the same down the backstretch. At the half Tomas and Ha Ha closed up to her wheel, and she broke as they went into the turn, Tomas passing to the lead and Ha Ha to second. They came into the straight this way, and then Hickok began his play for lead, whipping his horse hard. Tomas kept his feet and trotted fast. Ha Ha could not stand the pace, and quit at the draw-gate amid jeers from the crowd. Tomas got the heat easy in 2:23, Perihelion coming in for third.

There was nothing in the pools but Tomas and the field after the heat, and he sold for $100 to $28. They got away after a deal of scoring, with Tomas in the lead. They never caught him, though Ha Ha made a desperate spurt in the straight, and crowded in under the whip to a hot finish at Tomas' wheel. Don Tomas got the heat and race in 2:24½, Ha Ha second and second money, Perihelion third and third money.

To Gordon Setter Fanciers.

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN:—The Stud Book Committee of the American Kennel Club invites the expression of opinions at the next A. K. C. meeting, on the question of having a separate heading for Gordon setters. I would be pleased to present any written views of California breeders.

HERMAN F. SCHILLHASS,

Secretary Stud Book Committee.

Blood Will Tell.

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN:—I send you a copy of a letter which I received from a purchaser of a pointer pup which was seven weeks old at the time:

LOS ANGELES, CAL., October 5, 1888.
14 South Spring Street.

A. B. TRUMAN, Esq.

Dear Sir: Yours of the 30th received, also the pup, which arrived in good condition on Sunday morning. I was out hunting Sunday; had the boy from the store receive the dog. On my return I laid some quail in the hall. The pup came to a point at once. I then let him smell of one of them and threw it some ten feet; the little fellow was there as soon as the bird dropped and grabbed it, turned and brought it to me in fine shape. I assure you I am well satisfied, could not be more so. He is as pretty as a picture and marked beautifully. I only hope he will live. Tuesday I took him to our club house, situated on the coast. We keep a cook there, who is a good hand with a dog. Shall leave him there till about February, when I will take him home. All the boys call the pup a beauty. You say you have named him Rap Elcho, well, that is a good name, but I will call him Kan-Koo; he will answer to the name of Kan, which is short and easy to say. I intend having him registered, again assuring you that I am well satisfied. I am,

Yours truly,

E. K. BENCHLEY.

Mr. Editor, I am satisfied that all these puppies will be good ones, as all eight of them would point and retrieve when six weeks old. The instinct is born in them, as they have more field-trial and bench-show blood in them than any pointers ever whelped on the Pacific Coast, as my advertisement will show.

A. B. TRUMAN.

ELCHO KENNELS, 2618 Bush Street.

Mr. Wm. DeMott went to Bakersfield on Wednesday of week with a string of dogs to train for the coming field trials including his own English setter, Haroldine, a setter belonging to Mr. John Bergez, Senator Pinder's Scout Croxteth, Mr. P. D. Linville's Donna, a setter of Mr. W. W. Foote's, and two pointers belonging to Mr. J. M. Bassford, Jr. A likely lot of dogs all around, and liable to be heard from at the trials.

The winner last year, Mr. J. L. Breese's Gloster, lacks pace and style in motion, and is a bit headstrong, but has a deal of sense, good nose and is staunch.

Mr. Truman notes elsewhere the precocity of one of his Rush T—Patti Croxteth T pointers. The sense showed by the youngster argues well for the litter. They certainly should be first rats, both in looks and in field qualities.

The only one bred there which has undergone the training for and competition in an Eastern field trial is Mr. Bennett's Sirius by Sportsman—Sweetheart. The dog was sent to a trainer who was "the fashion," and who had more dogs than he could properly handle. The result was that Sirius did not have proper treatment, was run while "dead sick," and was returned to his owner a mere skeleton and suffering from Leucocythemia, from which he has not even yet entirely recovered. Sirius was of the type of his sire, a dog of slow development and unlikely at any time to be phenomenally fast; but even with such favorable pre-dispositions to easy training, he did not receive the slight care necessary to fit him and was so negligently fed as nearly to destroy him.

The entry for the Eastern Field trial, All Aged Stake, just to hand, shows 28 setters, all English, and 26 pointers. A splendid stake and one in which it will be hard to nominate the winner. Without professing prophetic foresight and certainly without intending a "tip" we shall expect to see close competition between Mr. Dexter's Jack Modoc, Mr. Cochran's Nat Goodwin, Colonel Merriman's Miss Thompson, and the latter's Cinch, among the setters. Among the pointers Col. Odell's Consolation, the Westminster Kennel Club's Lad of Bow and Mr. F. R. Hitchcock's Duke of Hessen may be expected to go a lively race. The champion stake, with five entries is a good one, Colonel Merriman having a splendid entry in Jean Val Jean, with a hot competitor in Bob Gates. We look to see Jean's comparative youth stand him in good stead.

A champion stake is more difficult to judge and less satisfactory than any other field trial race. The dogs are all presumably perfectly trained, of the rarest natural quality, and have had a deal of experience. To impute such idiocy to an owner as to think that he would start for a championship, a duffer would be unfair. Then the matter of judgment must necessarily include every jot of performance under the rules. No allowance can be made either for dog or handler and the utmost severity is demanded. The races should be long and perfectly equal opportunities given to all of the dogs. A seeming superiority based upon a lucky lead into birds, or a spurt of brilliant work cannot serve except as assiating to judgment. The verdict should go to the dog which can stay through hours of work, in good style, at good pace, with sense, nose and biddableness.

As the field trial season approaches it is impossible for those who really enjoy seeing the work of setters and pointers to avoid a measure of exultation. We can picture Mr. Otto Donner with his "fore and aft" cap, well groomed Mr. F. R. Hitchcock, jolly Governor D. S. Gregory, sardonic Uncle Ned Dexter, apathetic Wash. Coester, rustilag Captain Hamilton, friendly John Henricka, shrewd "Dad" Wilson, trim Colonel Merriman and all the rest of the splendid company of sportsmen flocking to High Point to await the arrival of "Pap Bergez" and to submit to the draughts and drifting snow of the Bellevue Hotel. The town will soon be full of sportsmen, every one of them of more than local repute, and with what hearty pleasure will they grasp hands and settle down for three weeks of arduous pleasure.

The notices of sales, etc., this week justify several conclusions. One is that English setters of the very first order of merit are in demand. That is proved by the record of the California Kennels. We are not unaware that when the proprietors of that breeding Kennel desire advertising they order it and pay for it, and we shall therefore be absolved from all desire to "puff" when we say that in all the wide world of English setterdom no better bred animals are to be had than those recorded as sold recently by Judge Post and Mr. Watson. It has been our lot to note the origin and progress of the fancy for setters on the part of these gentlemen, and to know very well the extent of their studies of breeding and performances, and with that knowledge in mind, the statement is made that whether judged by size, form, quality or excellence of blood lines, no better dogs of the breed can be had than at Sacramento.

There, too, will gather that little band, perhaps lessened since a year ago by disease or accident, the reporters, upon whose alertness, impartiality and thoroughness all public estimate of the trials must depend. Waters, with his "sawed off" corduroy jacket, all pockets and contents, Milliken, blushing, but keen as a briar, Luke White, Sullivan like in physique but gentle as a sucking dove, Major Hammond, full of kindly shrewdness, and with pipe and suit but a year older than they were when they were ten, Leslie Bruce, rather interested, but more willing to go shooting than to report, and bustling about, ubiquitous, perhaps, Doctor Rowe, chief of trial reporters will be there. Even Mr. Fusch, of the Bolivar Tocsin, may impinge upon that company, if not yet in vivid remembrance of the sad day when his friends were so very friendly in '86 because he appeared on the snow-clad fields, with an ample supply of "anti-scorpution." Writing in mid-October, beneath a cloudless sky and a roof, with none but spring-like days to come for months, one cannot but extend sympathy to the poor reporters in frigid North Carolina, whose work it is to follow every heat of every stake from start to finish; who are not permitted to see by proxy like those who oftenest take exception to reported work of the dogs; who must write without ceasing, whether frost or sleet benumbs fingers or rain makes things "smeary;" whose work is but begun at eve-tide and must be prolonged through the still watch, while others slumber or snuggle by crackling fire. As against the remembrance of dog work as given by any judge, spectator or handler, or any number of them, we would take the report of any fairly competent reporter who had seen the work. Good luck to them, and a happy half hour after their "copy" is in the mail, and chairs are pulled about the hearth in Major Hammond's cosy den.

The request to Gordon setter fanciers printed elsewhere should arouse some profitable interest. The breed rather seems to have been relegated to unmerited obscurity. Pedigrees are lacking, the black and tans do not breed to type, there is no typical form really, and they are but little used. Concerted effort might re-establish them and grade them up to their former beauty and efficiency. We shall be pleased to hear from Dr. Davis, Mr. Kaeding, and others what they think about the advisability of doing as Mr. Schellhass suggests.

Without desiring to seem over-persistent, we cannot but intimate again that the Pacific Coast Field Trial Club should select its judges and announce them. Entries to the All-Aged Stake do not close until just before the trials, but the preparation of the dogs must begin now, and owners wish to know who will judge, because some of them have prejudices against certain men and will not care to be at expense of fitting their dogs if those whom they dislike are to judge. We have listened to numberless criticisms upon judges and have sifted very many complaints against them, with the result that, in most cases of complaint, the complainant has been clearly found to be at fault. Usually this discontented owner, while loudly professing only a wish for a "fair deal," is yet unmistakably desirous of having a little the best of his races in so far as the judges are concerned. That is to say, that while perhaps unwilling to attempt openly to influence judgments he yet prefers to have men who have either directly or indirectly expressed great admiration for his dogs or their breaking. Such a feeling is, perhaps, not unnatural, but it militates strongly against the fairest outcome in dog races. The tendency on the part of some clubs to be guided in the selection of judges solely by the wishes of those who expect to run dogs, is unwise. It is true that without dogs there can be no trials, but it is also true that even those who, by the exercise of influence or pertinacity, secure the appointment of judges who will unfairly favor them, will be first to withhold entries from trials because, knowing that they have been successful in cheating they will suspect others of attempting to do likewise. The clubs should, through their executive officers, select the judges solely on the qualifications, competency and honesty. That there are a dozen fairly qualified men in California who could be induced to serve cannot be doubted, and among them might be found several quite as good as any in the country. January is near at hand, and it is to be hoped that the P. C. F. T. C. will not procrastinate in this matter.

Mr. A. B. Truman, owner of the Elcho Kennels, advertises in another column some thoroughbred Irish red setters for sale. The youngsters are of unexceptionable breeding and of fine size, and color. Full brothers of earlier litters have grown into very handsome and that rare field dogs, so that buyers have the best possible assurance of excellence in those now offered.

The London Hooting Times sides strongly with the American Kennel Club as against the National Dog Club, Editor Clement going all lengths in denouncing the latter.

John Davidson is to be Field Marshal at the trials of the American Field Trial Club. He and General Shattuc combined should be able to keep order. The trials bid fair to be very good.

ATHLETICS.

A Worthy Object.

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN:—Mr. Chas. Hartman, one of the best amateur gymnasts on the Pacific Coast, who met with a serious accident in fracturing his left leg recently, is to be given a grand testimonial benefit at the San Francisco Turn Hall, 323 Turk Street, Saturday, November 24th. Some of the very best talent in our city have volunteered to perform.

CLEMENT J. SCHUSTER.

SAN FRANCISCO, October 13, 1888.

[It is a pleasure to urge attendance on the evening mentioned. Mr. Hartman's unstinted and unceasing efforts to perfect himself in gymnastics have entitled him to a leading position, while his likeableness and misfortune should induce a full house.—ED.]

A Fragment From Lake Webber.

The rising sun tips the tall tree-tops with gold,
The morning is bracing, the air clear and cold,
And the lake lies like glass in the full morning light,
Not a breath stirs its bosom, no ripple in sight.
Now ready for breakfast—we breakfast at eight,
For the city too early, the country too late.
No hurry this morning, the weather is fine,
And the breeze will not be here till long after nine.
After breakfast we fix up our flies and our leaders,
For although trout are said to be voracious feeders,
Taking all kinds of insects, and all things vernacular,
They are finicky here and very particular.
Your flies must be right in color and size,
Or, work as you will, you will not get a "rise."
And now we are ready, and wait for the breeze,
For you might as well cast on the tops of the trees,
As to hope to catch trout where the water is still,
Except just at dusk, and then with great skill.
At last a slight trembling is seen far away,
This promises well for the fishing to-day;
A slight puff is felt, like the soft breath of spring,
And the waters seemed moved by the touch of a wing.
Hurrah! it has come; hear it hum through the pines;
Be ready, and soon you shall all "wet your lines."
Push out from the shore with a stroke strong and steady,
Have the deck cleared for action, have everything ready,
All alert for a "strike," it will come like a flash,
But unless you respond, it will end in a "splash."
If one does "catch on," what a pleasure you feel,
No music so sweet as the screech of the reel.
From the prick of the hook, and the snub of the line,
He resolves not to die without making a sign;
So he shoots like an arrow, straight out through the water,
All ripe for the fray and asking no quarter.
The battle now opens, results are in doubt,
For sometimes the man wins, and sometimes the trout.
If the man wins, the trout is brought safely to shore,
If the trout, then he fades, and you see him no more.
But the man does not fade, and whoever harks,
Will be likely to hear some emphatic remarks:
Not the choicest of English, nor yet quite oracular,
But a sample of strong and expressive vernacular.
In short, as he stands there and vacantly stares,
He "takes off the brakes," and sometimes he swears.
Not a great horrid oath, but one just the size
And the wickedness, too, of a woman's "white lies."
We all know, of course, how such oaths disappear, Washed out from the book by the good angel's tear.
San Jose, Oct., 1888.

C. H. A.

Mr. Chas. G. Yale, editor of the Mining and Scientific Press, returned on Monday last to business after two months' confinement to his residence, the cause being a fractured toe. Mr. Yale had just started upon a prolonged fishing tour when he was injured, and has perforce fished only in his well stored mind since then.

Gun Wads.

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN:—I am inclined to think after mature deliberation, that the principal reason breech-loaders were so unmercifully riddled at their introduction, and for many years subsequent to it, was in a great measure due to insufficient or inadequate wadding over the powder. The error in loading was a very natural one, for to the man who had been accustomed to pouring down 2½ drams of powder in his tube and following that with a mere lump of something soft, be it paper, leaves, rag or what not, it must here seemed superfluous, nay, wilful extravagance, to use more than one regular gun wad, whether black or pink edge, while the more fastidious, though perchance inferior marksman, who had used regular gun wads in his muzzle-loader, was very apt to continue the same dose in matter of number when charging a brass or paper shell. Although he had been told by his comrades that a larger charge of powder became imperative, yet little or nothing had been imparted for his information in the manner and quantity of his wadding.

It is quite evident now, that a charge that has to shift from one cylinder to another must need more wadding to confine the powder gas than when the powder is confined in a metal tube, as in the case of muzzle loaders; besides a very small charge of slow powder has not the same effect on the wad as a larger one of quick would have—hence it is safe to use plenty of good wads, even if a trifle less powder be used.

My own experience teaches me that medium good powder well wadded, is superior to the best powder improperly wadded, and that an increase of force equal to a full half dram of powder may be gained by properly keeping the gas behind the shot.

I once ordered a high grade English gun for a friend, and when I next saw him was non-plussed at the dire accounts he gave of his $400 investment. It would not kill anything over twenty-five to thirty-five yards; would only feather birds, and made such beastly, scattering, buncy, irregular patterns that it was not worth anything as a game-killer, though it might do splendid service on exhibition in its handsome and well-appointed case. Having ordered the gun and recommended that particular make, I felt responsible to a certain extent for the performance of this gun, a beauty in every line and perfect in its symmetry, balance and finish; so I proposed to my sad and gloomy friend that we go out and try it on chickens that evening, there being plenty in Minnesota in those days. I took my gun, of same gauge and make as his, and off we went to the nearest stubble field, and while crossing the fence my dogs came to a stand, and so handsomely did they back each other that it seemed to me a piece of vandalism to break the picture. Not so with my dispendent companion, bent on showing me what a swindle had been perpetrated on a too confiding American. Up went the birds, down went the dogs, bang, bang from his gun and—just as he said. Only a few feathers floating in the evening breeze to show that the aim had been correct, but that the gun had failed to do its duty. I did not shoot, being busy with my puppy, but I plainly saw the result of his shots, and felt obagrined accordingly. Still I thought he might have shot off the birds and just scratched them with the outside of the charge. Frequent repetition, however, plainly proved that something was wrong, and as he assured me he had loaded the shells himself, I could not understand the cause of this non-killing business. At last as a "dernier resort" I proposed that we change guns, as I was becoming painfully aware that his gun was indeed of no earthly use. He handed it to me unloaded, having just missed, or rather clipped, two birds not an inch over forty yards off. I put in two of my own shells, flushed a couple of birds and killed them both stone dead, one at say thirty, and the other thirty-eight to forty yards. Wiping his eye on the second shot, as he had only clipped a few feathers off the chicken which I bunched up all in a heap. I at once "caught on." His ammunition was worthless, and how do you think it was loaded? about 3½ dms powder, Eagle Duck 2, one card wad, almost 1½ oz. shot and a thick felt wad. The fact is he got the position of wads mixed and I have given the result.

That is the worst break I have ever heard of, but many a man have I seen loading his shells with only a black edge wad or powder, and that very often of the same gauge as the cartridge, and then cuss because his neighbor pulled down ducks ten or fifteen yards further, never thinking for a moment that perhaps he used three or four times as much wadding, though just the same kind of powder and shot. I therefore repeat that men, good shots too, speak for hours on powder, fine, coarse, high grade, cheap—nitro-compound or black, wood or imported, and yet seldom says beans about the wadding they use.

In fact, I once heard one of the finest shots in America declare that he did not fill up his shell with gun wads, as it was hardly big enough to hold the ammunition!!! In other words, powder and shot are ammunition, but gun wads—mere filling it seems! That same individual, shooting in a tournament using 5½ drams powder, 1½ oz. of shot with one pink wad between, could hit nothing; borrowed some of my shell and shot magnificently, yet I only had 4½ dms, two No. 9 and one No. 10 wads. Eley's pink edge on powder and a split wad on a struck 1½ ozs. of shot. "In those days there were no Von-Lengerke shot wads, by all odds the best wad for over the shot ever used.

American gun wads, especially U. M. C. card, black and thick felt are excellent, as good as any, but there is no pink edge wad made anywhere that compares with Eley's, while he makes the poorest black edge wad of all. The U. M. C. card and black edge wad are, in my opinion, superior to any of like kinds made. The Winchester black edge is also a splendid wad and both concerns make good, thick felt; but the U. M. C. are better, more regular and tougher, and I like them for use in English guns or when nitro-compounds are used, better than any of home make.

Compare two machine loaded cartridges containing the same quantity of powder and shot and notice how much longer the Selby Standard one is, and that is because more wadding and of a better quality is on the powder. Then look at the crimp and you will discover that the machine loaded cartridge is the best finished and well turned out cartridge made. They will shoot more evenly and better than any cartridge I have ever seen, the main reason being that they are wadded in such a manner that there is always the minimum escape of gas.

The ordinary 10 gauge shell is 2½ inches long; it is quite safe to say that half an inch of that space ought to go to the wad over the powder, which should be pressed to place squarely and just firmly enough to form a solid wall in front of the powder. In smaller bores the wad column may be shortened somewhat, but never less than two pink edged wads should be loaded on the powder, with the thinner the wad on the shot the better.

If, however, machines can be made to load ammunition successfully for rifles that require the greatest nicety of loading, it is quite evident that a properly constructed one can load with infallibility, cartridges for shotguns. The Chamberlin machines seems to me to come nearest perfection so far, and I say this after having tried other kinds, and further having used several thousand rounds at the trap and in the field in the past two years, to say nothing of the general verdict of a large majority of my shooting companions hereabouts.

Schultze powder is, in my estimation, as far ahead of any other explosive used in shotguns that I can't see where even a comparison commences. It is quick, strong as the strongest, clean as the cleanest, and where both barrels may be used it is dollars to cents that equal shots using it against others loading with black powder the Schultze will win. But it must be well wadded, else disappointment is sure to follow. I must add in all truth and sincerity, that lately I have been using Schultze cartridges loaded by Selby of San Francisco and that never in my life have I used such thoroughly satisfactory ammunition.

California State Sportsman's Association Annual Meeting.

The seventh annual business meeting of the Association was held at Stockton on the evening of Friday, Oct. 5th last, in the office of Mr. Austin B. Sperry, Vice-President Dr. S. N. Cross of Stockton in the chair. Those present were: A. B. Sperry, F. E. Lane, C. J. Haas, C. B. Smith, A. E. Myers and C. A. Merrill of Stockton; Messrs. F. B. Norton, Crittenden Robinson, Frank Maskey, Dr. S. E. Knowles, Will De Vaull, J. S. Fanning, Major S. I. Kellogg and H. H. Briggs of San Francisco; Messrs. F. E. Coykendall and Joseph Delmas of San Jose; Dr. O. F. Britton of Los Angeles, and a large number of visitors. The minutes of the last meeting were read and approved. The Treasurer, Dr. Knowles, reported $139.60 in the treasury. On motion of Mr. A. B. Sperry, seconded by Mr. Crittenden Robinson, Messrs. Kellogg, Robinson, Knowles and the Secretary, were appointed a committee to draft resolutions relative to the death of Judge L. D. Freer. The committee was instructed to have the resolutions spread upon the minutes and to have an engrossed copy sent to Mrs. Freer. In connection with the passage of the resolution, Mr. Robinson made some remarks detailing the peculiarly admirable qualities of Judge Freer, and his services to the Association. The Secretary also made suitable remarks about the distinguished deceased.

The following gentlemen were elected individual member of the Association: Messrs. George Ditz of Stockton, J. S. Fanning of San Francisco, and C. H. Corey of San Jose. The Los Angeles Rod and Gun Club was elected to membership, its roll of officers and members being: President, T. E. Walker; Vice-President, Eugene Maxwell; Secretary, A. O. Adams; Treasurer, J. B. Winston; Captain, E. Unger; Dr. O. F. Britton, Dr. Willard Bird, H. L. Jordan, H. M. Thomson, H. Slotterbeck, Jr., A. West, H. Holborow, J. C. Dotter, T. B. Brown, Thos. Foster, J. H. Schumacher and John Q. Tafts.

A general discussion of the condition of game and fish interests was then participated in by Messrs. Robinson, Sperry, Cross, Norton and others, the general sentiment being that such ducks as breed locally should be protected by law, because they are not of the sorts that damage grain fields.

The officers elected for the ensuing year were: President, Ramon E. Wilson; Vice-President, Doctor S. N. Cross; Secretary, H. H. Briggs, 313 Bush Street, San Francisco; Treasurer, Doctor S. E. Knowles; Directors, Messrs. Jos. Delmas, F. E. Coykendall, F. B. Norton, Doctor D. W. Hays, Jr., and Mr. C. J. Haas.

The next meeting was ordered to be held at San Jose, beginning on the second Thursday of October, 1889, the 10th of that month.

A vote of thanks to the Stockton Committee on Entertainment. Messrs. A. B. Sperry, C. J. Haas, S. N. Cross, F. E. Lane and C. Merrill was passed, also a similar vote about the referee.

The newspapers of Stockton, the Daily Independent, Evening Express and Evening Mail were especially thanked for the very full and accurate reports of the tournament made by them from day to day, and for the generous treatment accorded by them to the Association. The meeting then adjourned.

BANQUET.

On Saturday evening the members of the Association were invited to banquet at the Independent Restaurant. Doctor S. N. Cross presided, and about thirty were present. After discussing an elegant spread, a lot of toasts were offered and responded to with that eloquence which is usual. Doctor Cross was particularly felicitous as master of the feast, and found able supporters in Doctor Britton, Mr. Robinson, Mr. Sperry, Mr. Haas, Mr. Fanning, Doctor Knowles, Major Kellogg, Mr. Frank Bassford and others. The Association Medal won by Mr. Robinson, was formally presented to that gentleman.

The activity of the Bakersfield Knights of the Trigger, in causing the enforcement of the game laws in Kern County, was commended, and the Secretary of the Association instructed to convey to that Club a formal expression of the sympathy of the State Sportsman's Association. With the end of the banquet came the end of the most pleasant and satisfactory meeting yet held by the Association.

Messrs. W. E. Houghton and Richard Seymour, members of the Bakersfield Knights of the Trigger, are deer hunting on Mount Breckenridge. We hope to receive an account of their trip.

The Grass Valley Sportsman's Club holds its semi-annual field shoot and camp stew at Indian Springs to-day. Mr. George Fletcher writes: "Disturbance begins at sunrise. Breakfast in camp at 9.30. Camp stew from 2.30 to sundown." That is a programme unspeakably enticing and altogether lovely.

Shot Concentrators'.

Among the earliest devices used, and one that has come down to the present day for concentrating shot, although used mostly in large bore single guns, is that of a small flannel bag filled with shot which would burst and allow the shot to separate, and thus extend the range of the gun. One of the earliest patents which was issued for a concentrating shot cartridge, was issued in 1827 to Joshua Jenour, who invented a wire shot cartridge, made of woven wire, in which the meshes were so wide that the shot would scatter after leaving the gun, says B. M. in Shooting and Fishing. In 1828, Edward Orson patented a shot cartridge made in two parts, so the parts containing the powder could be detached from the section containing the shot, which was so formed that after it left the barrel it would separate, and thus allow the shot to scatter and proceed farther, thus in a measure increasing the range of the shot, and adding to the ease and rapidity with which the gun could be loaded. Some years later came the invention of the wire cartridge, of which four kinds were made, as follows: the "Royal," which was made to serve as a ready and easy method of placing a charge of shot in the barrel; it was somewhat more effective than a loose charge, as it served to prolong the range of the shot, and, as a consequence, the penetration also.

Then, in point of range and general effectiveness, came what was termed the "Universal," which was made to carry the shot much farther than either a charge of loose shot or the Royal cartridge. These were much used 20 or 25 years ago for shooting up to 60 or 65 yards, as by its use good work could be done at such range with the medium sizes of shot, and by the use of cartridges loaded with larger sizes, the range was increased to 75 or 80 yards.

There was also made the "Eley-Green" cartridge, which was for extreme long range, and by the use of these cartridges, which were very popular 15 years ago in muzzle loading guns, many long shots were made, and game killed at distances that were far out of the range of loose shot.

But the advent of the full choke bore has, in a large measure, driven the Eley cartridge out of the American market, except for the use of a few, who, still have faith in the modified choke bore as being the best for all around work with all kinds of shot, and also producing the most regular shooting, doing away with the use in the field of the apparatus used by trap-shooters for keeping the muzzle clean in order to secure regularity of pattern with their close bored guns.

As a more modern invention than the Eley wire cartridge, we find the Lancaster concentrator, invented in 1867, which consisted of a cylinder of hard paper, about one-half inch long, of such size that it would just fit inside a paper shell. These, when used with a cylinder bored gun, would produce a pattern as close as many of the so-called choke-bored guns, and a much more even pattern was made than with many of the earlier choke guns.

In a trial made in 1868, between a cylinder gun of acknowledged excellence, shot with a loose charge, and then shot with concentrators, there was a difference of 24 per cent. of gain in pattern, and 28 per cent. in penetration, over the loose charge.

These concentrators have been made, of late years, in a so-called improved form, which consists of closing one end of the cylinder with a dome-shaped end, but this improvement, while greatly increasing the pattern, does not shoot with as much regularity as the older pattern. The new pattern is liable to ball the charge, and cannot be used in a choke-bored gun. The plain concentrators are made in this country, for use in both brass and paper shells, but very few of them are now sold, and they have probably passed out of the memory of many sportsmen.

Still another production is a French invention for concentrating the shot, which was made of thin brass, of dome shape, which was used mostly in muzzle-loading guns. It was of doubtful value, and was but little used in this country.

Since the general introduction of breech-loaders in this country, there have been several inventions in the way of shot cartridges and concentrators of various patterns. Among them was the Kay concentrator, that was used quite successfully for a time; then this was superseded by the Kay chips, so called. Both these, however, were open to the objection that, while they extended the range and improved the penetration, they were liable to ball, and thus cause wild shooting, and in some cases the muzzles of the barrels were blown off by the use of them. As a later American invention, there has been placed on the market the Schleiber thread-wound cartridge, which is made for use in choke-bored guns. These are made for different bores and for varying ranges, namely, 50, 70 and 90 yards.

These cases open at the distance of range for which they are wound, and carry the shot twenty yards farther, and are said by those who have used them to be all that is claimed for them, but some judgment must be used in the selection of the gun in which they are used, as, on account of the distance to which they are thrown, if the barrels are not straight, or if the gun has much taper to the barrels, there is danger from the shot crossing. That is, a charge from the right hand barrel, if the gun is shot at ranges over 40 yards, will be found to go to the left, and vice versa, to the amount that corresponds to such divergence; consequently, if the cartridges are shot from such a gun, an allowance must be made in order to hit the object, and that amount must be governed by the force of the wind when shooting.

The last invention which has been placed on the market is the John's Shrapnell shell, which is of Scotch origin, and is made in two shapes, the spherical pattern, and what is called the elongated shape, the latter holding the larger charge of shot.

This concentrator consists of two segments of thin brass, bolted together by a light wire spindle, which is attached to an ordinary wad that is of slightly larger bore than the inside of the shell. The shell is filled with whatever size of shot is used for the game to be sought. The action of this concentrator is different from any of the others, as the range of the shell is regulated in a certain measure by the length of the wire spindle used, yet the action of the shell is in a degree independent of the spindle, owing to the fact that the segments of the shell are locked together by the pellets of shot pressing on the sides of the segments, because of the rotary action of the shot and enclosing shell.

When the pellets of shot have acquired a uniform velocity, they settle down, and, as a result, the shell relaxes, and the spindle and wad are withdrawn by the action of the atmosphere and when the range for which the spindle is cut is reached, the shot move forward in their own path, and at 120 yards, a four-inch circle ought to contain the entire charge from a Shrapnell shell.

The minimum range is 90 yards, but its effectual range reaches to 140 yards. This last invention has been used but little in this country as yet, but has given good results when used.

Yolo Maid 2:18, 2:14, 2:14.

There can be no dispute over the claim that Yolo Maid is the greatest pacer which has yet appeared. While it is true that there is not a positive basis for rating her above Johnston and others which have shown faster, taking cognate testimony for a guide, there are good reasons why she should occupy the first place. Sable Wilkes leads the class of three-year-old trotters with his record of 2:18, Maud S. at the head of all ages with 2:08½. Johnston, 2:06½, occupies the same position among pacers. Therefore when Yolo Maid is only 7½ seconds behind the fastest and Sable Wilkes 9½ seconds in the rear, she is closer comparatively to the front position. It can be claimed that pacers come to their speed quicker than trotters, and that young pacers are more ready to acquire fast action than those which trot. That can be granted without endangering the position given to Yolo Maid. There has been such a succession of surprises brought about by the young California pacers that people are in a measure stunned. Last year Arrow brought the four-year-old record to 2:14. This year Gold Leaf went on from good to better until she struck 2:15, and Adonis beat her although he did not mark so low a figure. With two topsawyers of the caliber of Gold Leaf and Adonis it would have been thought the height of presumption to predict that a faster would appear in the same season. It is not often that two brilliant stars are shining in the same quarter of the firmament, and when a third of still greater brilliancy flashes into light there is a spectacle so rare that this is the first recorded appearance. People are prone to undervalue those which have to take second place and forget in the glare of the last luminary the sparkle which delighted them a short time before. The light is not put out by any means, if even the stronger throws it into shadow.

But it is not the intention at present to review the track doings of the California season, as we are altogether too busily engaged to do the subject justice, and also too early for retrospection. We have not seen the great filly and therefore a description is wanting which we hope to present in the near future, with others which have won distinction. Even of more interest, however, than a portrait is the genealogy of horses which have gained high renown and the pedigree of Yolo Maid has been kindly furnished by her breeder and owner, C. R. Hoppin, Esq., of Woodland. She was foaled in 1885, her sire Alexander Button. Her dam Mollie, bred by Mr. Hoppin, was by Dietz' St. Clair, second dam also bred by Mr. Hoppin, by St. Charles and her third dam, Old Phil, was brought from Northern Indiana by Col. Charles Lewis in 1853 and was claimed to be a descendant of Bertrand.

Her sire was foaled in 1877 and in 1880 was conceded to be the best colt of his age in California. He beat Belle Echo, Annie Laurie, Honesty, Len Rose and others, gaining a record of 2:29, and when a four-year-old he defeated Romero in a race of five heats. Romero won the first and second in 2:29, 2:26½, Button the others in 2:26½, 2:27½ and 2:31½. At that time he "had a leg" which eventually threw him out of training. But that he would have got a very fast record had it not been for the mishap, is nearly certain. He was a square trotter and that he can get fast trotters as well as the fastest pacer is proved by the performances of his daughter, Rosa Mc, 2:20½, and this practically her first season. Alexander Button is by Alexander, his dam by Napa Rattler. The pace comes in from the next strain, Dietz' St. Clair by Old St. Clair, backed up by St. Charles, a son of St. Louis and of a sister to Mary Waller. We saw a son, Duroc, run on the Abbey track, St. Louis, in 1859, and a right good racehorse he was. The third dam, "Old Phil" (by the way about as inappropriate a name for a mare as Ned, the dam of several fast trotters), was something of a character. She came across the plains in the lead of a four-horse-team and was as "cranky" in the hands of men as could be, but docile and pleasant when a woman held the reins. She was a mare of great resolution and endurance. She made a trip of 200 miles with two men in a Concord buggy in a day, and came back on the next. Ten or twelve miles an hour seemed to be the slowest gait to which she could be restrained, and if given her head would go a good deal faster.

There is an interesting history connected with the ancestry of Yolo Maid and when there is more leisure it will be given.

Sale of the Kinloch Stud.

Were there plenty of time to go over the records, the following description of the stallions Aristides and Uhlan, which will be offered at the above sale at St. Louis, Mo., on the 21st of November next, could not be improved. We heartily endorse the encomiums of the N. Y. Sportsman, from which it is copied, in regard to Aristides, and cannot see where undue praise is given Uhlan. The only sons of Leamington on the Pacific Coast that we know of are in the Rancho del Paso stud, and an addition to the blood will be a grand thing for California. We shall have more to say about this sale hereafter. Catalogues can be obtained at this office.

It is a mournful necessity which compels the sale of the Kinloch Stud, announced to be brought about on Wednesday, November 21st, at St. Louis, under the management of Messrs. B. G. Bruce and P. C. Kidd. The founder of the stud, Mr. J. Lucas Turner, died prematurely in the very prime of life. He had looked forward to a long and successful career as a breeder, but it was not to be. The place misses the guiding hand of its enthusiastic founder, and the splendid collection of native and imported mares; the two great racers, Aristides and Uhlan, twenty-five weanlings, and some two and three-year-olds will be sold to the highest bidder.

Uhlan has been an unlucky horse from the day that the erratic Frank Sherwin brought him to the arid plains of New Mexico. The mares were barren, and Uhlan was blamed for it. After years of knocking about the stud passed into the hands of Mr. Turner, and it began to look as if the great cup winner, Uhlan, would at last get a fair chance. But with the death of his owner the project which at its fruition would have done much for the thoroughbred interest of Missouri, got another sad blow. Now the horse is again on the market. He will be twenty years old next spring, but he was never abused, and ought to be good for many years' service yet. He is a grandson of Voligeur, whose son Billet revolutionized American racing, and whose grandson, Galopin, as sire of St. Simon, at one bound achieved immortal fame. He was a good performer himself, as his victories in the Ascot and Goodwood Stakes, Brighton and Doncaster cups, and four Queen's Plates attest. He stood sixth on the list of winning sires in France in 1855. His best representative was Blonde II., who at four years old won the Prix de Societe d'Encouragement, a mile and seven furlongs, with 133 pounds up; also the Prix National, two and a half miles, with 132 pounds up. Sceptique, by Uhlan, won the Grand Prix de la Ville, mile and five furlongs, at Lyons, beating Kluisant, who had just won the French Derby. Uhlan's list of winners stretch out so much that a mere mention of their best performers would take up too much space. Breeders need not fear to bid on this horse. Bonnie Scotland languished for years in comparative obscurity. Give Uhlan a chance at a good stud of fresh young mares, such as Mr. Milton Young, for instance, has, and in two or three seasons there would be a new craze—the Uhlan fever.

His mate, Aristides, was a better race-horse in a better year than was Uhlan. It is almost impossible to name a son of Leamington who was not a success at the stud. Aristides was a good spring horse and a good fall horse. He won the Kentucky Derby when it took a great one to win it. He won the Withers, at Jerome, in the spring, and the Breckenridge at Baltimore. His record at two and a half miles is still the best. For years, too, he held the best record at two miles and a furlong. Those were the days when horsemen ran from end to end, a great pace all the way, and the fittest survived. And that only twelve years ago! It was a crying shame that such a horse as Aristides should have been virtually banished when he passed into the possession of Mr. A. Hawkins, who kept him at his Indiana farm. The horse is now sixteen, in the prime of life, has never been overdone, has ten weanlings in the list to be sold, proving him to be a sure foul-getter, inasmuch as the other stallions had to be given a chance with an allotment of mares, and we would consider Aristides one of the great bargains of the day.

San Diego Fair.

"Ho! for the Sunny South" Not so significant, perhaps, in California, even this far northward, when in these bright October days there is warmth enough without the envelopment of heavy dresses and heavier overcoats, as back home when October brings sharp frosts, and in many places snow and ice, yet there are so many things to attract to the famous old town that we envy those who are so situated as to make the trip.

The fair opens on Tuesday next so that there is plenty of time to reach there after the National is decided. A pleasant journey in itself, and when there is so good a prospect for enjoyment at the end of it those who have the least fondness for the sports of the turf and track will be sure to attend. The entries were published in this paper two weeks ago, so that there is little necessity for republication, but as many are likely to see this number who are not informed, we give the space.

Races No. 16, 17 and 18 not filled.

In view of the purses which did not fill there will be substitutes, and as quite a number of horses, we learn, are going from here, there will be no difficulty in getting up exciting contests. From reliable sources the information is obtained that owners need not be afraid of taking horses, as arrangements will be made to give them a chance to make expenses and with a good show for a margin above. It is undoubtedly to the interest of all who are identified with turf sports to aid the Association in making this fair a success. Ultimately when the Los Angeles and San Diego meetings are brought together so that horses and visitors can go from one to the other without delay, their meetings will not be second to the best on the Coast. Unfortunately this year in coming so close to the stallion race, as that deterred many from making entries who, under other conditions, would have been pleased to participate. This will not happen again as the dates will be arranged to accommodate both.

If the San Diego meeting had been announced before the date was fixed for the National that would have been arranged to come off a week sooner, and in that case not only the stallions would have made the trip, as horses which were detained by trainers and drivers being compelled to stay would have accompanied them.

Notwithstanding drawbacks there are plenty of attractions to insure a large attendance.

The National Stallion Stakes.

The full description of the stallions which made the second payment which appears on the first page of this paper, written by "Hank Comstock," for the N. Y. Spirit of the Times, does away with the necessity for editorial comments of like character. Until the last few days it was generally supposed that the five would start, but Guy Wilkes fell out, the reasons for so doing we have not learned. In what was to be his final work before the race, Director stepped into a hole, we are informed, and wrenched a fore-leg. These casualties are greatly to be deplored, and we heartily sympathize with the owners. Heartily and sincerely we say this, having been in the "same boat" and knowing so well the anxiety there is when the welfare of a favorite horse is at stake. The gloomy prophecies of those who take delight in predicting evil are partially fulfilled, and we must acknowledge that when it was learned that Director and Guy Wilkes had not made the final payment, we have been more nervous than is our wont about Antevolo.

"I told you so," rings, or rather tolls in our ears and the muffled bell of evil sounds a doleful note. This will not be entirely overcome until he warms up for the race. He stood the work of Tuesday without apparent injury. Since then he has been jogged, and the only chance now for disaster is in his work to-day, Friday, and his journey to the track Saturday morning. Whatever the result we feel that his mishap has not been without benefit, a benefit which will accrue to all who have horses in training. The treatment of a sprained tendon, radically different from any course we have read or heard of before, has in this case proved wonderfully effective, and hereafter it will be described minutely.

His work since the last bulletin was written for this number, but we have concluded to delay the publication until after the race.

In this it may not be out of the way to state that anxiety has interfered with work which should have been done. Correspondents have been neglected and other matters postponed which should have been attended to. Ownership alone would lead to a good deal of anxiety, when to that is added those pertaining to training and driving there is an accumulation of troubles. Were ten times the amount of money at stake that would not try the nerve one-tenth as much as the other incidents connected with the National.

It is sad to think that the cause for the sale at public auction of the horses on two of the prominent stud farms is death. There was a wonderful collection of horses gathered at Erdenheim, and though the disposal may prove a greater benefit to the country than if consolidated on one farm, there is always a feeling of regret over the scattering. Such being the inevitable, however, we hope that some of them will be purchased by California breeders. Every procreative animal of a high class added to the present stock appreciates those which are already here.

Breeding fine horses, especially thoroughbreds and fast trotters is now one of the great interests of this country and sure to increase in the future to an extent which will place California in the front rank, if not occupying the first place in all of the "racehorse regions." But to insure this the foundation must be broad as well as strong. While it is true that no American breeding farm can compare with Rancho del Paso in numbers and quality, with others which are only a short way behind, it will not do to depend entirely on the stock which are here, and such an opportunity of getting what are wanted as this sale offers, is of rare occurrence.

Catalogues which can be obtained at this office will show the high class of the animals offered.

Dash Trotting.

The following is the telegraphic account of the "new system" adopted at Fleetwood, and from other reports it appears to have been favorably received:

NEW YORK, Oct. 15.—The Driving Club successfully inaugurated a new system of trotting contests at Fleetwood Park this afternoon, the results being as follows:

First race, free for all, half a mile, Governor Hill first, Bertha second. Time, 1:11½.

Second race, 2:40 class, two miles, Red Star first, Billy second. Time, 5:14½.

Third race, 2:25 class, one mile, Perplexed first, Corroua second. Time, 2:20½.

Fourth race, 2:30 class, one and a half miles, Cyclone first, Frederick B second. Time, 3:49.

Fifth race, free for all, two miles, Black Jack first, Judge Davis second. Time, 4:56.

The Mail and Express of October 11th says:

The entries to the Fleetwood races on Monday next will close on Saturday next, at 6 p. m. Of course the very best of the trotters will not be on hand to help along the experiment of dash races because they are more or less crippled by their long campaign this season. The speediest of those now in training will compete. Mr. Robert Bonner had added his opinion in favor of the new system of dash races. If the meeting on Monday is successful President de Cordova, of the Driving Club, will open several stakes for dash races to be run next spring. The rules of trotting will be changed so as to agree with the new conditions of the races.

Matt Storm.

We are pleased to learn from the appended cutting from the Sporting World that "Matt" is out again. That he has recovered from injuries which were only a shade behind a "deciding heat" so soon, shows vitality of the foremost kind. That he retains his buoyancy is evident from the paragraph quoted:

Mr. Matt Storm was at the races yesterday, and for a man who has just gone through what he has and lain at the point of death as long as he did after the railroad disaster at Port Jervis, in which Mr. Gebhard's horses were burned, he looks remarkably well. He has, however, not yet got over the loss of his horse Grover Cleveland, who, he said, would have been the horse of the year if he had not broken his pastern at Monmouth Park, which necessitated his destruction. He says that before leaving California in the spring he showed him a mile in 1:38. He was suffering from cracked heels all the spring and was just coming round when his untimely end came.

Will you please answer through the columns of the BREEDER, what is the fastest record for running one mile and three-quarters on this Coast and the name of the horse that made it.

Answer.—To answer the above the Pacific Coast records will have to be examined, a work requiring more time than can be given at present. While only a few have been run at that distance, to speak authoritatively of all of the meetings will have to be gone over. This will be done as soon as the time can be spared.

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN:—Cannot you favor your readers with any letters subsequent to the last published, (if any), that were written by "Hank Comstock" to the Spirit of the Times, descriptive of stock, etc., on this Coast? And oblige,
A SUBSCRIBER.

Answer.—We shall publish the whole series of these letters concerning our western breeding interests. They are, we find, very generally and deservedly appreciated and admired.

By F. Margrave, Menlo Park.

O'ro, for bay filly, hind ankles white; foaled May 6th, 1888. By Woodnut, dam Belle Lockwood, by Fallis.

Mr. Irwin Ayres, of Walnut Creek, has sold to Edward Dalton, of Reno, Nevada, the standard bred, registered stallion Romaine, b. h., foaled 1884, by Mambrino Wilkes, dam by General McClellan, son of the Drew horse, second dam by Dr. Holden's Black Hawk. Price, $1,500.

Romaine will be deservedly popular in his new home, for another three-year-old son of Mambrino Wilkes made a great showing at the recent Reno races, bettering the Nevada-made three-year-old record by thirteen seconds. Mr. Dalton is to be congratulated on his purchase.

Bay District Races.

October 18.—The match race between Belmont Boy and Almont Patchen, the pacers, was not as interesting as was expected. Belmont Boy won with such ease that there was not the least excitement. Those who love to see speed, however, felt considerable satisfaction when Belmont Boy made the first heat in 2:15.

Before the first heat Belmont Boy sold in the pools for $55 against $20 for Almont Patchen. At the start Belmont showed a length in the lead. At the quarter in 0:33½ Almont was at his wheel, but down the backstretch he drew away again to a length and held it home, winning easily under a pull in 2:15. No pools were sold. They were sent away for the second heat to a good start, but Patchen went up at the head of the turn and lost over one hundred yards before getting down again. Belmont went leisurely enough down the backstretch and allowed Patchen to recover his lost ground. At the half Belmont had five lengths the lead, but Patchen was closing the gap and pacing very fast. They went round the turn in this position, and Patchen showed fast, but Belmont finished winner by two lengths in 2:20½.

The third heat was a repetition of the second. Belmont had two lengths the worst of the start, but his driver nodded for the word and they were sent off. Belmont had the lead by the time they got well into the turn, and held it by one and two lengths all the way round, pacing under a pull, and finishing two lengths a winner in 2:20, with plenty of wind to spare. Patchen was dead tired.

SUMMARY.

Bay District Track, Oct. 18, 1888.—Match race for $1000; mile heats, 3 in 5, in harness.

Charles Robert's g Belmont Boy by Nutwood	Baylies	1	1	1
William Billup's brs Almont Patchen	Sullivan	2	2	2
Time, 2:15, 2:23½, 2:20.

A trotting race for named horses, purse $300, was the next event announced, and Argent, Hidalgo and Johnny Hayward came to the post as starters. In the pools Argent sold for $60, Hidalgo for $22, and Hayward for $16.

At the word Hidalgo took the lead, with Argent following and Hayward trailing. At the three-quarter pole Argent closed up to Hidalgo's wheel, but lost ground again in the race home, and Hidalgo got the heat easily in 2:30, Argent second and Hayward a poor third.

The pools now sold $50 for Argent to $12 for Hidalgo and $6 for Hayward. The second heat was another walk-over for Hidalgo. Argent made a tumbled break in the homestretch, and finished second, Hidalgo first. Time, 2:25½.

Hidalgo jumped up a hot favorite and sold for $50 to $14 for the field. It was thought that Argent was willing to lose, and after scoring once for the third heat Goldsmith took Walton's place in the sulky.

They got the word with all the horses going strong. Hidalgo took the lead at the start, but half way round the turn Argent collared him. They went together a short distance when Argent lost his feet and Hidalgo drew away to two lengths at the quarter. Down the backstretch Argent went after him hard, and caught him before reaching the half and led by a length on the turn, and though Hidalgo crowded close up to him in the straight he went under the wire a neck the winner in 2:25½. The crowd cheered lustily.

After the heat pools on Argent were $25 to $12 on the field. Goldsmith again showed his ability as a driver. He put Argent to the fore on the turn and kept him there. At the finish Hidalgo made a hot rush for the leader, but broke at the drawgate and finished third, Hayward second, Argent an easy first. Time, 2:24½.

Argent was a favorite after the heat at $30 to $13, and one pool was sold on him at $550 to $105. When they came out Marion was behind Hidalgo and made the heat hot. Argent took a slight lead going into the turn, but Hidalgo closed up to him, and they passed the quarter neck and neck. Down the backstretch Hidalgo gradually drew away and had half a length the lead at the half-mile post. Around the turn he made it a length, but lost his feet and Argent passed him. The finish was hot. Argent had a length lead at the head of the straight, but was doing his best, while Hidalgo was closing up slowly. Both came to the wire under a push, and Argent won by no more than half a length in 2:24½, a remarkably good fifth heat, especially for horses of that class.

Reavis' Sale.

The sale of mules, work horses, roadsters and trotting horses held on the Reavis' Ranch on Monday of this week was a success, buyers being present from nearly every county in the State, whilst the prices realized were in many instances much below the actual value of individual animals. Yet taken as a whole the total amount realized was quite satisfactory—the principal interest was manifested in the splendid string of mules—some fifty span of which were sold at an average price of $300 per span. Next week we hope to be able to mention the sale more in detail. Great credit is due Messrs. Killip & Co. for the successful results of the sale.

Thoroughbred Mares.

The auction sale of thoroughbred mares announced by Mr. Haggin to take place November 24th, will give many Pacific Coast breeders an opportunity for selection, such as they have never had before. The mares are all of the best strain, most of them tried producers and representatives of the most popular and successful racing families of this country. They are sold to relieve the crowded condition of Mr. Haggin's establishment, and for no other reason. Catalogues with extended pedigrees will soon be ready.

Thoroughbreds and Trotters.

The following article appears editorially in the London Field:

In the current number of Wallace's Magazine—an American publication which is a repository of a vast amount of trotting lore—Mr. Leslie Macleod deals, in pardonably laudatory fashion, with the "National Horse of America." That this designation belongs pre-eminently to the trotter is an obvious truism, that Mr. Macleod could perform do nothing else than give it utterance; though, at the same time, it may be open to doubt whether at some future day the galloping thoroughbred may not press it hard in the affection of the people. Nor are we disposed to quarrel with the statement that the trotting horse "fills, with the American people, a range of uses that no other breed or variety can fill, and that he is bred in America to an extent unapproached by other breeds." Other writers have said all this before, and have explained that, whereas the English thoroughbred is a mere galloping machine, of no earthly use beyond the limits of a race course, the transatlantic trotter is not only what may be termed a sporting horse, but, without any crossing or admixture of extraneous blood, fulfils the duties incidental to the carriage, phaeton, or dog-cart horse, as we should say over here. This close connection between the trotting track and the street, the race-horse of the country and the horse for private purposes, is unquestionably at the bottom of the estimation in which the American trotter is held, in what we may call his native land. The direct link between sport and utility is wanting in England; and though, as Mr. Macleod says, "the thoroughbred race-horse may with propriety be called the national horse of Great Britain," he is not the national horse to the same extent as the trotter answers to that definition in America. This will easily be seen on comparing the uses to which the two breeds may be, and are, put; The trotter which is too slow to cut a credible figure on the track, may, nevertheless, be a most satisfactory animal for driving about; and, pace being proverbially a comparative term, the cast-off from the track may be marvellously quick for private work. But when we turn to our thoroughbred, it is not so easy to find a suitable berth for the cast-off from a racing stable, until we come to put him at hack price, at which suggestive figure he becomes a cab horse, a hack, a dog-cart, or light-weight hunter. Exceptions there are, of course, as hunting stables could tell us; but when we find horses sold out of a selling race for from £10 to £30, it is rarely that a career of greatness lies before them.

In England, although we are, by no means lukewarm in our devotion to the thoroughbred, we do regard him, outside of the race course, as the foundation of our other types, and venerate him accordingly. For example, the government, the Royal Agricultural Society last year gave valuable prizes to blood stallions, not for the purpose of raising up stock in all respects like themselves, but in order that they might exercise a beneficial influence on our half-breeds. This we regard as a very important distinction between the thoroughbred and the trotter, and one upon which our friends on the other side are quite justified in basing a doctrine favorable to their own national horse. On the other hand except for state and parade purposes, and for use by the very wealthy, harness horses occupy a very secondary place in the estimation of the English; and it is no uncommon circumstance to find that the man who keeps from six to a dozen valuable hunters finds his harness requirements met by the possession of a £50 driving horse. A glimpse at the park in the season, the remembrance of the horses in the coaches of the Driving Club, and the prices paid by dealers for harness horses at the recent Horwcastle fair, sufficiently prove that this is not invariably the case; though, as a board rule, it is true to say that saddle horses are thought more of than harness horses. We cannot, however, give unqualified assent to the opinion expressed by Mr. Macleod about our Norfolk trotters. That gentleman scarcely speaks by the book when he says, "the more that is learned of them the less certain can we be that it is at all correct to regard them as a breed of trotters." The first trotting match in America is said to have taken place in 1818, when the baker of time thought it good enough to bet against Blue Boston doing a single mile in three minutes; but he lost his bet. Prior to this period, however, the Norfolk horses had not only trotted speedily, but had shown themselves possessed of stamina. In 1753 Mr. Aldridge's brown mare trotted sixteen miles in an hour, on the Epsom road, carrying 12 stone; and in 1791, when eighteen years old, covered the same distance in 56 minutes 34 seconds. Then again, in 1792 Spider trotted twenty-four miles in 1 hour 25 minutes; in 1800 a brown mare trotted seventeen miles in 56 minutes; and in the same year twenty miles were done at Newcastle in 1 hour 32 minutes 16 seconds, the rider weighing 13 stone 8 pounds. These were surely good performers, one and all of them, regard being had to the fact that they took place in the distant past.

If, however, Mr. Macleod has somewhat overlooked the merits of the Norfolk and Yorkshire horses, he cannot be said to have done them a greater injustice than they have suffered at the hands of their own breeders and Englishmen generally. As a racing horse the trotter was overlooked, and was never set to perform any more important duty than carrying his owner about the country; yet, if the Norfolk horses were of no greater account than Mr. Macleod would rank them, would the famous Hiram Woodruff have asserted that in failing to appreciate the trotter "England had willfully thrown away an enormous sum." Moreover, the American critic might not unreasonably wonder what becomes of the trotters we do breed. At the various shows he sees hackney stallions in plenty; but he may walk many miles and never catch a glimpse of one in harness; while, although you may see race-horses, hunters, eastern horses and other foreigners in cabs, who ever saw a Norfolk horse drawing one? Mr. Macleod expresses the indebtedness of America to England for "the nucleus of our breed of trotters;" but attributes the unquestionable benefits conferred by Messenger to the fact that he was not thoroughbred, and must have had some strain of trotting blood in his veins. With Messenger's pedigree we have here nothing to do; there are a few gaps which cannot be filled up in the lineage of Eclipse. Whether the famous grey was thoroughbred or not, it was for a race-horse that he was taken to America—galloping, be it remembered, was in vogue long before trotting matches were dreamed of—and had been for some few years at the stud in Pennsylvania when a law was passed in that State forbidding racing. Those who had young Messenger stock on their hands were at a loss to know to what use to put them, and so broke them to harness in sheer despair; and thus, as Mr. Joseph Cairn Simpson says, the outcome of the bigotry of the House of Representatives was really little less than a mercy. Messenger died before his great-grandson, Rysdyk's Hambletonian, was in the height of his fame, but the "fontain head of trotting" had already done enough to be honored with a grand funeral.

One circumstance in favor of our horses should not be overlooked, whatever they erstwhile accomplished was done over ordinary roads, and either under heavy weights or in the shafts of substantial vehicles, very unlike the American sulky. In forty years the record has been reduced in America from 2 min. 28 sec. to 2 min. 5½ sec.; and whereas there were in 1872 but 96 horses capable of trotting a mile in 2 min. 30 sec., there were 2,000 capable of accomplishing the feat in 1885. Careful breeding and training account for this improvement to some extent; but perfect tracks may not have been without their influence.

Victoria Racing Club.

The Victoria Racing Club, of which Mr. Strafford Streatle who recently visited San Francisco is a member, receives some wholesome rating from the Melbourne (Anst.) Sportsman. From the content it appears that the policy of the club has been to permit control to be exercised by a small proportion of the membership and the institution seems to have been led to cliquism. Our exchange says:

There are few institutions in Victoria whose acts are more closely watched and more freely criticised than are those of the Victoria Racing Club. Standing as it does above all other racing institutions, and regulating, as it will, not only the conditions under which they race, but also the days upon which they may race, it is a species of realm within a realm; and therefore stands "in that bright light which beats upon a throne." That the recent action of the members present at the late general meeting in making the entrance fee which must be paid before any one is eligible to become a member of the club twenty pounds is a popular one with the general public it would be folly to assert, and that its effects can possibly be of a beneficial character is very doubtful.

The club now numbers about 1,000 members. Of this number about fifty were present at the recent general meeting, so the meeting could hardly be deemed a fairly representative one; but still its acts had force and power. Now, of the thousand members who compose the club, some nine hundred have never paid an entrance fee beyond the usual annual subscription of £5, while the remaining hundred have paid an entrance fee in addition to that sum. A large majority are over forty years of age. In the common course of natural events each year must lessen their numbers, and it becomes a question of some moment as to whether the making of the club a mere plutocracy is either wise or desirable. At the present time the colony is most wonderfully prosperous, and wealth lightly acquired is often lightly spent; but, given a period of depression, and it becomes a question whether such a tax may not seriously injure the club by depriving it of the youthful energy and force and intellect which is the life-blood of all institutions, and most especially of those which have attained, or been entrusted with, governing power, and which the sons of the old members who leave the ranks may be expected to possess.

It is the duty of those who direct the destinies of the Victoria Racing Club to avoid all action which will estrange public confidence and sympathy. There can be no question of rivalry between it and other clubs or racing institutions, while it rests on a broad basis of national support and sympathy. But to do this it is essential that it show no inclination to pander to mere wealth. Of the million residents of the colony whose representatives make our laws, how many may reasonably be expected to sympathize and be in accord with the recent action of the members who were present at the club's last general meeting?

The fact that the Victoria Racing Club has assumed the position of dictator and arbiter in all questions of turf law and practice in itself necessitates its reception of popular support.

With the inception of wealthy racing companies, progress must ever be its watchword if it is to maintain the high position it has achieved. As fresh wants arise they must be met, and each fresh call on its energies must be responded to.

Pink Eye in Horses.

Pink Eye is the name generally used to indicate the disease which came upon the horse stock so suddenly in the fall of 1872, and spread with wonderful rapidity all over the country, and continues to break out occasionally in various localities. It is described by Teller in "Diseases of Live Stock" as "contagious epidemic disease, characterized by inflammation of the membranes of the air passages, discharge from the nostrils, cough and debility. Some seasons it proves quite fatal. During a single month in the fall of 1872, upwards of 10,000 horses died from its effects. The earliest symptoms are great weakness, shown by a staggering gait, hanging head and trembling, shivering as from cold, loss of appetite, and watery discharges from the eyes, soon followed by a staring coat. The whites of the eyes are changed to a bright red or pink color, from which the disease derives its name. The pulse is quickened and weak, ranging from fifty to sixty beats a minute; there is a short, dry cough, and the breathing is a little hurried. Later on the pulse rises to eighty or ninety, the temperature to one hundred and four to one hundred and five, and the breathing from forty to fifty times per minute. The body is propped up by extending and bracing the legs, and the sufferer is evidently afraid to lie down. The bowels are bound and the urine scanty.

The disease often extends to the throat and lungs, bringing in bronchitis and pneumonia as complications. There is a white, yellowish or greenish discharge from the nose. Sometimes rheumatic swellings and tenderness take place in the muscles and joints of the limbs, that may last for months, some time lead to a fistula or abscesses. Death comes through weakness and exhaustion, suffocation, paralysis or clots forming in the heart. Good nursing is indispensable to success in treating serious cases of this disease. The patient should be turned loose in a roomy box stall, well littered with clean, fresh straw. A plentiful supply of fresh, pure air is indispensable, but the animal must not be permitted to stand in a draught. In warm weather, when flies are troublesome, the windows and doors should be protected by wire or cloth netting. If cool an extra blanket must be added, and clean, woollen bandages applied loosely to the legs from knees and hocks to the hoofs. Quinine is very highly recommended, by those who have tested its merits, and among this class is Mr. L. Brodhead, the well-known able independent of the famous Woodhurn establishment. Mr. Brodhead's treatment, as described and published a few months since, is as follows:

"Give a weanling from fifteen to twenty grains a day; we generally give this quantity once a day, but when first taken and the fever is high, give about fifteen grains twice a day, morning and evening. If the attack is mild only one dose a day, and continue until the disease leaves the system. The quinine allays the fever, is good for the inflamed throat, is a fine tonic, and so far has cured every case we have had, to the number of about 150. In the spring we had several very severe cases that I am sure we should have lost but for quinine; these were yearlings, and we gave about twenty grains twice a day. Older horses can take sixty grains a day in two doses. Whenever there is fever use quinine freely, no matter what the disease. It is almost a specific for lung fever and pneumonia. I have cured two cases of lockjaw in sucklings this summer with quinine and atrophy, twenty drops of the latter to the dose. We are not particular to weigh the quinine, but guess at a dose; put it on a spoon and place it on the tongue, without elevating the head or exciting the animal. We pull the tongue to one side, insert the spoon, turn it over and wipe it on the tongue. It is easy to administer, and the animal gets it all. It is perfectly safe, and there is little, if any, danger in giving too much. I have used quinine for four or five years, and always with good results." This remedy will no doubt prove valuable for the treatment of the distemper which is now prevailing extensively among the horse stock of New England. To those not accustomed to its use we would recommend getting the druggist to put up a quantity in powders of ten grains each, and also of fifteen grains, marking the number of grains distinctly on each. When 20-grain doses are required, two ten-grain dose powders will constitute a dose, and if thirty grains are wanted it can be had to a certainty. We would recommend all our readers who are interested in horses to cut this remedy out and paste it in a scrap book, where it can be referred to when wanted."—American Cultivator.

Records Broken on the Grand Circuit.

This was the sixteenth year of the Grand Circuit, and the following beat on records were made on the trip from Cleveland to New York: Brown reduced the four-year-old stallion record to 2:18½. Guy trotted in 2:12½, the fastest mile made in public this season. His 2:14½ is also the fastest contested heat of the year, and his quarter through the stretch in Hartford in 30½ seconds is the fastest quarter ever trotted in public. Susie S. reduced the Eastern-bred four-year-old record to 2:18. Johnston reduced the pacing record to saddle to 2:13, paced a mile in 2:12, the fastest heat of the year; paced a half in 1:00½ and a quarter in 29½ seconds, the fastest time ever made at the distance in harness. Arrow reduced the five-year-old pacing record to 2:13½. Bessemer reduced the four-year-old stallion pacing record to 2:15. Roy Wilkes reduced the five-year-old stallion record, and also the race record for pacing stallions, to 2:14½. An unprecedented feature also appeared in the 2:24 class at Island Park when Del Monte had a walk-over for the deciding heat. His mile in 2:37½ was the only one in the Grand Circuit of 1888 that was not finished below 2:30. Sixty-seven races were trotted and twenty-two paced at the eight meetings. The former called for 252 heats and the latter 92. Of the 374 contested heats, 242 were won by descendants of Hambletonian, 62 by the descendants of Mambrino Chief, 17 by the descendants of Pilot, Jr., 6 by the Morgana, 6 by the Clays and the balance by families not coming under any of the above heads. Two hundred and thirty-five of all the heats trotted were finished below 2:25, and sixty-four below 2:20. Sixty-one of the heats paced were finished below 2:20, and eighty-three below 2:25. One hundred and eighty-eight horses started at the Grand Circuit meetings this season, and forty of them were winners.

The Hambletonian family supplied 100, the Mambrino Chief 22, the Morgan 13, the Pilot, Jr., 7, the Clay 5 and the Norman 3. Eighteen of the forty winners secured but one set of brackets. Eight received first money in two races, eight also received first money in three races. Golden Rod and Favonia each won four races. Spofford, J. B. Richardson and Jack each won five, while F. T. S., who had trotted more races in fast company than any other horse on this season, landed six. Geneva S., T. T. S., B. B. Custer, Jeremiah and Balsora Wilkes are the only horses that started at all the Grand Circuit meetings.—Philadelphia Record.

Fox Hunting in Virginia.

RICHMOND, Va., Oct. 11th.—The feature of the Virginia Exposition yesterday was a fox hunt that eclipsed in every particular everything of the kind that has ever been held in this State before. 'Tis true that the foxes were not numerous nor did they display any particular objection to being slaughtered, but they furnished a fine day's run for about 150 members of the F. F. V.'s and their friends, and that was all that was desired. It was not the foxes' fault that they furnished the run because they were not consulted about the matter at all, in fact if they had been the probabilities are that they would have refused point blank to have had anything to do with the affair whatever. But they were bundled into a bag, hitched to the saddle of a horse and dragged over the ground for a couple of miles and then turned loose. The scent they made while being bumped along was a magnificent one and was easily followed by the hounds.

When Reynard was turned loose he appeared to have all the run jolted out of him, and after making a feeble attempt gave it up and allowed the hounds to finish him. Miss Maud Blacker was the first lady in at the death and was presented with the brush.

A second fox was then liberated, but he would not run, and wanted to make friends with the hunters. He was finally persuaded to make a start, but before he had gone fifty yards the hounds were on him. To-day the whole party will go up the James river in search of a wild fox who will make it his business to do some running, but in case of failure to unearth one, a captive will have to submit to the dragging process.

A number of New Yorkers were present, among whom were William Talman, Col. W. F. Cody, Col. F. G. Skinner, H. A. Q. Wilmerding and Herman Schellbass.

Fordham used to say that one mare on which he won a number of races knew as much about starting as her jockey. She keenly watched the white flag, and when it fell was off like a rocket, but of course she was altogether an exception. Under the most favorable circumstances it is not easy to start a field on equal terms, and when the circumstances are not favorable, when some horses through temper, excitability, or sulkiness defy the best endeavors of their jockeys, when other horses are seen to be too much for the light weights on their backs, when one or two riders are anxious to steal a few lengths if possible, and when perhaps—such things have been known—another rider is determined to be left; when such a combination of difficulties is before the starter, the only wonder is that he gets them off as soon and as fairly as he usually does.

CATTLE.

Inspection of Live Stock, and Diseased Meats in San Francisco.

During the past week much has been done in the city towards securing a proper supply of wholesome meat for the inhabitants. Early visits to Butchertown were daily made by the new Veterinary Inspector and already the results of his supervision are apparent. Nine dairies were also visited, time not permitting of a more complete tour of inspection. The condition of those cattle examined was good; upwards of 2,000 were seen, and but three animals were condemned for tuberculosis, and three for actinomycosis. Any one of the cattle, however, might eventually infect others of the same herd. The owners were greatly surprised when Dr. Bowhill demonstrated the nature of the disease, they felt grateful to him and promised to have the animals destroyed. The law should give an inspector power to order the destruction of such animals should there be shown any opposition to his decision, at present he has no definite powers.

The report of Doctor Bowhill concerning the live-stock and meat supply of San Francisco was as follows:

"I have much pleasure in submitting my first report as Veterinary Inspector. I visited Butchertown, including the hog department in Chinatown, and some of the larger dairies. I found the slaughter houses at Butchertown in good order, with the exception of the hog pens underneath the slaughter houses. Those places I consider a mass of filth, and accordingly a means of contaminating the meat hanging above. It is well known that the foul air rising through the fissures in the floor must be absorbed by the freshly killed meat. Moreover, hogs confined under such circumstances cannot but be unhealthy and unfit for human food.

"I have had occasion to condemn the following animals at the cattle department: Five old cows suffering from tuberculosis, and one cow suffering from actinomycosis. The greater number of these cases occurred among what is known as old dairy stock.

"The inspection of sheep yields very good results considering the number killed. In one lamb I found three Cysticercus Tenicollis. The following were condemned, seven goats and two sheep.

"Concerning the hog department in Butchertown it is unnecessary for me to enter into details, as the committee appointed to investigate the matter has made a full inquiry into it.

"The following were condemned, three hogs and twelve dead hogs.

"I would like to call the attention of the Board to a point which requires immediate action, and that is, the manner in which hogs are removed from Butchertown. They are not hung up like cattle and allowed to cool out and become hard, but in a still warm and steaming condition they are packed layer upon layer in waggons and driven off to Chinatown, there to be quartered and hung up in dark and dirty holes, the like of which for filth and foul odors cannot be surpassed. From here the white dealer buys his pork and retails it in his store. The fat hams after their journey to Chinatown, and a few hours exposure to the odors of these dens, are sent to the packers and cured.

"I visited twelve places in Chinatown, spending one forenoon there, and in all of them I found the hogs in a frothy condition, not one of them being 'set.'

"I have also paid a visit to some of the larger dairies. The first one visited was that of Nayer Bros. Here was found one cow afflicted with actinomycosis, the other cows were in a healthy condition. The next dairy visited was that of J. A. Christou. I found all his cattle healthy. I also visited Mr. Hall's two dairies, in one of which I found three cows suffering from tuberculosis. Mr. Smith's dairy was next seen and two cows were found afflicted with actinomycosis. I also visited Mr. Brown, Mr. Johnson, Mr. Lannigau, Mr. Chifford and the French dairy. In all these the cattle were in a healthy condition.

"I would like to call the attention of the Board to the fact that certain parties have the contract for the removal of all animals that die during transit to this city. Such animals being removed before your Inspector can ascertain the cause of death.

"I also visited, in company with the Market Inspector, the Clay street wharf, and seized ten calves as unfit for food, on the previous Friday nine were seized by the Market Inspector. The majority of the calves presented a starved and emaciated appearance.

"Besides this manner in which calves enter the city I am informed that they come in waggons from all directions. To arrest such consignments would require the services of several experienced detectives.

"Concerning the live stock inspection intended for slaughter, with the small force of inspectors at hand, and the scattered positions of yards, it is an impossibility to maintain a complete surveillance.

"I must also call the attention of the Board to the fact that a number of old cows are slaughtered outside the county line and brought into this city and sold, and in view of this being the case would ask some means to be taken to prohibit this way of disposing of the carcasses of old, diseased cows."

The above is a presentation of very good results for one week's work, extra care will doubtless be taken by owners of diseased stock to keep it out of the market. A persistent vigilance is to be recommended, and the Board ought to support Dr. Bowhill in his endeavors to maintain a right inspection.

So close has this been, that in one lamb the cysticercus tenicollis or small egg which gives rise to one of the tape worm family in the human subject, was discovered.

Mr. A. N. Towne, general manager of the Southern Pacific, states that the company will do everything in its power to protect the public. He thinks that the disease is limited to certain localities and not so general as the people might be led to believe from some of the reports which had been circulated. With a view to the interests of the State it is right that consumers be protected by law. Sensational reports, however, are to be condemned as only tending to alarm present and coming visitors. Governor Wisterman fully realizes the situation, and when the Legislature meets adequate laws for the protection of Live Stock Interests on this coast will be presented and their enactment urged.

Cattle Disease in Monterey County.

Much interest is shown in the work of Mr. A. S. Mercer, who has been looking into the cattle plague alleged to exist about the Salinas Valley. The Salinas Index, of October 11th, after a complimentary introduction of Mr. Mercer and Dr. Bowhill to its readers, says:

Mr. Mercer came to San Francisco on business for the Department of Animal Industry, and, while there, learned that large numbers of cattle were dying of some mysterious disease in Monterey County and other places in the southern portion of the State. He telegraphed to Washington for instructions, and received in return directions to make a full investigation and take with him an experienced veterinary surgeon for the purpose of performing autopsies and microscopic field work. He engaged Dr. Bowhill, who took with him microscopes and all necessary apparatus for making whatever tests may be required. They first proceeded to the ranch of E. J. Breen, at Chalona, a few miles south of Soledad, where they found that out of a herd of 1,200 cattle 900 had died within thirty days. Several of the cattle in the last stages of the disease were killed and autopsies performed on them, proving conclusively that they were suffering from splenic or Texas fever.

Since Mr. Mercer and Dr. Bowhill came away we understand that nearly all of the remaining 300 of Mr. Breen's herd have succumbed to the disease. Texas fever is a contagious disease, and has been known to exist in the southern portions of the United States for upwards of a hundred years. It originates in the low, swampy lands of southern Texas and extends by exportation of cattle to other sections. In its effects on the system it very closely resembles the Rinderpest of Asiatic Russia. There is no known remedy for the disease. An autopsy of the diseased animal shows a greatly enlarged spleen—in some instances two or three times its usual size—resembling red currant jelly. In one of Mr. Breen's cattle examined after death, the spleen was 26 inches long and 16 inches in circumference. The fat is yellow, the blood thin, of a bright red color and great coagulability. The liver is also enlarged, and changed from its normal color to a bright brick-red. The third compartment of the stomach, or manplies, is found impacted, and has the appearance of a charred black mass.

Texas fever is only imported by cattle coming from below the line of permanent infection. Where that line is located west of the Rocky Mountains is not yet known, but is a matter for future investigation and determination. In the Atlantic States, after years of investigation by the Government this line has been determined. It extends from a point on the Atlantic Coast near the boundary of North Carolina, and extends in a general westerly direction to the north-east corner of the Indian Territory; thence westerly for two-thirds of the way across the territory, when it turns abruptly to the southwest, continuing in the same general westerly direction to the Rio Grande River, a little below El Paso, thus leaving one-third of the northern portion of Texas free from infection.

Texas cattle themselves do not appear to suffer from the disease in a violent form, but it proves very fatal when introduced into northern herds. Its contagion is communicated through the dung, and the roads, pastures and streams convey to other localities. Frost destroys it. Southern cattle driven along a dusty road or across the prairie leave so much poison that native cattle crossing the road or the trail are infected in the varying percentages of 20 to 60, according to the virulence of the germ. A very peculiar characteristic of the disease is that one northern animal cannot give it to another. More definitely speaking, Texas fever in its primary condition is transmissible; in its secondary condition not transmissible. There is no known remedy, safety depending upon quarantine regulations alone. Observations thus far taken justify the opinion that there is a large section of country on the Pacific Coast south of this line of permanent infection. Where that line is located is a question worthy of the most careful research on the part of the Bureau of Animal Industry and the State of California.

In regard to symptoms of Texas fever: Four or five weeks may pass after the poison has been taken into the spleen before it shows itself. At first there is a moderate fever followed by dullness, drooping of the head, arched back, cough, trembling, jerking of the muscles, hot horn, and appetite and cud lost. The eyes become glassy and watery, the urine turns to a deep red or black from the blood that is in it, and the dung is hard and often coated with blood. The animal dies in a stupor or in convulsions. As a rule the animal dies in 24 to 48 hours from the time the disease is perceptible. Sometimes the animal becomes delirious and vicious before death.

More or less Texas fever was found in a dozen fields in the vicinity of, and between Chalona and Soledad.

BIG-JAW.

One place was visited where the cattle were found affected with tuberculosis and actinomycosis, the latter being popularly known as "big-jaw." At request of Mr. Mercer an animal was killed suffering from both of these diseases. The case was diagnosed previous to death and an autopsy taken. The germs of the disease, actinomycosis, were found in specimens taken for microscopic examination from the animal. Big-jaw is very prevalent on the Pacific Coast. It takes its origin from a fungous growth, the actinomycosis, found on barley. It is transmissible to man, and the greatest care should be exercised to prevent the sale and consumption of meats affected with this disease. Without exception, in all cases reported in the United States, where man has been affected, inevitable death has been the result. All animals found affected with this disease should be slaughtered and the carcasses burned.

ANTHRAX.

Gonzales was visited and the stubble fields on a ranch near that place were found to be affected with anthrax. Post mortem examinations of both horses and cattle showed the common signs and microscopic tests revealed the germ of the disease. Anthrax is a contagious and malignant disease of the blood, most common in cattle but communicable to all domestic animals, including horses, sheep, hogs, dogs, fowls and even to human beings. The general characteristics of anthrax are somewhat similar to Texas fever, the main difference being that the blood in Texas fever is red and coagulable, leaving no stain upon the fingers, while in anthrax it is black and noncoagulable, staining everything it touches. Anthrax is sometimes called "black quarters," "black leg," "black tongue," etc., because the part attacked turns a dark purple or nearly black color, from the decomposition of the blood. The contagious principle is in the shape of rods and have been called anthrax bacteria and bacillus anthracis. Millions may exist in a single drop of blood. Every part of a diseased animal—the blood, flesh, hide, hair, hoofs, horn and excrement—are poisonous and will convey the infection. Buzzards and birds that have fed on the carcass of an animal dead of anthrax, will communicate the disease and flies carry it on their feet and proboscis. Every grain or straw grown on soil where a diseased animal has been buried will communicate the malady.

The symptoms of anthrax are: The animal becomes languid, ears drop, eyes red, mouth and nose hot and dry, pulse rapid and feeble; swelling about loins, back, head, neck, brisket or legs, causing pain or stiffness, making animal unwilling to move or get up if lying down; loses appetite and does not chew cud; bowels constipated, urine scanty and dark. The animal becomes exhausted and cannot rise from the ground; the eye is fixed and staring, breathing shallow, and death ensues often with convulsions.

Mr. Mercer and Dr. Bowhill report that, in the neighborhood of Gonzales, there are several Spanish families who are engaged in cutting up and drying this diseased meat and shipping it as "jerked beef" to Salinas and San Francisco. There is also evidence, supported by local testimony, that during the year 1897 fourteen Spanish children died in the village of Gonzales of putrid sore throat, or a peculiar kind of diphtheria caused by the eating of unbrax meat from affected animals. There is no question as to the fact that the flesh of animals dying of anthrax imparts the disease to man. The malignant pustule is of a most infectious and dangerous description. No successful method of treating anthrax has yet been discovered.

This is a dangerous condition of affairs, and our people should be careful what meat they eat. The interests of cattle-men are of small importance when compared with the health of the community. It is on record that, in the year 1617, 60,000 persons perished from using the flesh of animals diseased with anthrax in the vicinity of Naples. It is to be hoped that the matter will be carefully considered by our next Legislature. In the meantime, Boards of Health and other local authorities should wake up to the danger of the situation.

The Devon as a Dairy Cow.

Fifty to eighty years ago Devon cows generally were excellent milkers and butter makers. Those of the Earl of Lewiston, which he kept and bred on his large estate in Norfolk county, England, particularly excelled, as well as other herds there; also in their own county Devon and in some of the adjoining ones. Mr. Patterson, of Maryland, imported from these, and was careful in his breeding to retain only such as gave large masses of rich milk. Devon beef is of a superior quality, ranking next to that in British markets of the Scotch Black Polled. In consequence of this when choice beef came to pay a better profit than dairy products in England, as in the case of Shorthorns, many of the breeders sought to excel in this rather than in milk and butter. The dairy products have now become the most profitable again, and English Devon breeders are changing back to them; and also in the United States. I see repeated in the agricultural papers of their giving large masses of rich milk, making six to seven pounds of butter per week; and even more than this occasionally. In fact, there are instances recorded in England, and I can say the same in our own country, of Devon cows yielding eighteen to twenty-two quarts of milk per day, from which ten to twelve pounds of butter were made per week, and they milked steadily up to one to two months of calving. As she is only of medium size and a moderate eater, these are very large products, and perhaps not excelled even by the Jersey cow, except in a few extraordinary instances. The Devon will pick up a good support from much shorter and poorer pasture than the larger breeds, like the Shorthorns and the Holsteins. A. B. ALLEN.

Dairy Notes.

The advice given by a prominent breeder to a friend, to spend half the money he proposed to invest in cattle in buying a bull, was good advice.

The importance of using great care in selecting a sire cannot be overestimated. If the cows are full-bloods, we should find the bull of the same breed, which combines in individual merit, and pedigree to the highest degree, the points of excellence we desire to develop in our herd, and having found such a bull, buy him even at an exorbitant price.

If our cows are natives or grades, we should make sure to use a bull that ranks high in the breed to which he belongs. A dairyman should never use a bull of a breed that is smaller than his cows, because that will result in making his herd inferior in size. No matter how poor in quality the herd may be, he should always use a bull that will improve the herd, not make it poorer. If he has a half-blood bull one year, and cannot afford a full-blood the next year, at least he can be sure to get a three-fourths or a seven-eighths blood.

Let him pick out his cows with utter disregard to the qualities most necessary to make them profitable if he will, but in selecting a bull the wise dairyman will use his best judgment, and not decide on one until sure he is just what is needed.

But it matters not how much care and intelligence has been used in selecting a dairy herd, the production of milk and butter will not be satisfactory, if the cattle are improperly fed and housed and seldom, if ever cleaned.

The dairy farmer does not live, who cannot by judicious breeding, proper care and feed, increase the flow of milk, the yield of butter and the intrinsic value of his herd (no matter how good or poor it is). Each year should show an increase in the dairy products of the herd, at the same cost of production, should come a marked improvement in the natural tendencies, which enhance the value of our cows as milk, butter or cheese producers.

It is as easy to reduce the flow of milk and the quality by giving our cows an insufficient quantity or improper kind of food, and allowing them to shift for themselves in poor pastures, finding shelter from cold and storms as best they can—as it is to increase the yield of butter or milk by keeping the cows comfortable and clean, and giving them a proper amount of such food as they can best assimilate. No one can afford to have his cows, or any one of them, return to him a less profit in milk, butter, or cheese, than is possible, and at the same time keep them in perfect health.

What kind and how much feed should the cows have?

The amount of allowance depends upon the cow.

Some cows require more food than others to produce the same amount of milk. Therefore the proper ration for each cow can only be known by actual experiment.

Cows are sometimes injured by over-feeding—more frequently a cow is not properly credited with what she can do, because she does not get enough to eat. The observing dairyman soon knows just how much each cow will eat and digest, and instead of over-feeding one cow and under-feeding another, thus overtaxing the powers of one, and depriving the other of the chance to produce as much milk as she easily could, he studies the appetite and powers of assimilation which each cow possesses, thus giving every one an opportunity to do her full share of the work of milk production, and at the least expense for feed.

Why Riders are So Easily Thrown From Ordinary Saddles.

A novice at riding is apt to think that a pair of stirrups help to keep him down in his saddle till a fisky horse convinces him that they are the means by which he is mostly unseated when he gets a fall. This is caused by his trying to make his stirrups help him while he is sitting on the saddle, and the horse expects or prances about. If he stood in his stirrups and gripped the horse by his knees, he would both be and feel more secure and consequently have all the wits about him to attend to his reins, on which the novice relies as an extra tie to hold him to the saddle, but the reins, like the stirrups, if misused, as surely help to unseat a learner. If a horse is "nailed" about the mouth by the reins, he will resist by boring or snatching his head or pulling on the rider's hand. When a horse does this he is not amenable to the guiding or controlling action of the reins. But the horse's an'a dignity rises above his r'pidation, and he has faith in the very things that cause the inevitable spill—the stirrups and the reins. If, instead of the stirrups, he being hung so forward that he has to stretch his legs forward to reach them, he had two loops from the girth to put his toes in, as the Aiquano Indian of Chili have, and a loop in front of him like a cloak strap to catch hold of with his hand, no horse would ever be able to throw even a timid novice on horseback. However the horse's head and legs may be flung about the part of the horse thus set upon moves little in relation to the whole; the rise and fall of the horse, its forward or later; plunges or swerves, affect the rider but little, for the simple reason that he is central, and watches and anticipates the radii of the animal's motion, which must precede central action, which is so slight in relation to his seat or foothold, as scarcely to be felt by the rider, thus the most violent kicking only rises the sitter an inch or two, and then is only felt as a slight undulation. Rearing is equally harmless, especially as the hands have no reins to clutch at to pull a horse over backward. If the sitter be a youth, he is best on a bare-back horse, as in case of a horse rolling, he can slip out of the way quickly, and by pouncing on the animal's head, prevent it rising till he has made a friend of it by his familiarity and kindness, for the horse is at his mercy then.

The following is the early experience of one of the best riders in England: When about ten years of age he was taken into the riding school and lifted on the back of a vicious horse without saddle or bridle, and told to "stick on," and keep his hands down. The horse plunged, kicked and reared, but the youth, holding by a lock of the mane, seemed very little concerned. Bounding forward, the horse reared against the wall like a spread eagle. If the youth had had reins to hold, he might have pulled the animal back on him; but the mane he held being so nearly central with the horse's equilibrium, the pull by that did not affect it. The lash of the riding master's whip under the horse's flank quickly brought it on its four feet again. At every kick the whip stung the horse's breast; any sign of rolling was checked by an under cut by the long whip thong. His furious rushes tired it before the youth, and by degrees it watched the whip, and took the word to "Stop" or the word "Ah! ah!" to go on from the youth, who was made amenable to the whip being cut across his own shoulders if he raised his hands, for that act would have helped to unseat him at once. Such training could not fail to make an expert and fearless horseman, and lead on to the proper use of the reins to spare the whip and voice and the stirrups to relieve the sway of the body, and give the purchase for the pull of the reins to help the horse—not the rider, mind—over some difficulty.

From the foregoing remarks, does it not appear that a rider's feet should be placed where they will aid his equilibrium? Indeed it becomes a reproach to the common sense of the readers to have to say things about riders, which they invite by their seeming incapacity to understand right from wrong on matters of horseback seats, which they would have sense enough to understand if referring to a seat or chair. Yet there is no alternative but to make these remarks about a man sitting on a rail or chair. If tilted back, the legs of the sitter, without stirrups, would be thrown forward to aid the equilibrium; if with stirrups, they would be thrown back to get the foot pressure to maintain a balance. If the feet are fixed in stirrups six inches forward beyond the line of the rider's gravity, they have to be dragged back from their fixings six inches every time they are required to aid the balance; but they will not come back without an effort of the rider or sitter, whether on a rail, chair, or a horse's back. The rider must do something to get them under his weight, so he tilts his body forward to get over his foot pressure; but his seat remains in its fixed position strapped to the horse. Were it strapped to the rider we should see the comical sight of a rider bringing his seat six inches forward every time he wanted to make a sensible use of his stirrups by resting on them, with his weight poised over them. This would be a fitting climax of absurdity worthy of dunces on seats, who ride like toads on shovels, ready to be flung off at the first little fence or puddle they try to get over, when the use of wrongly-placed stirrups tilts them out of the saddle to kiss mother earth with a force that for a time takes away consciousness, which, as it slowly returns to the prostrate rider, make him think—"Well! Here am I! But where is the rest of the world, and my horse?"

The Stallion Race.

In order to present an account of the race which could not be classed as governed by partiality or sulky feeling, the following is copied from the San Francisco Chronicle:

The bell rang for the stallions. The crowd was feverish to see them. Holly came in first with Woodnut, then Hickok followed with Stamboul, and last came Antevolo. As the latter jogged past the grand stand a round of applause was given him by the crowd. Each of the horses seemed in good form, although Stamboul was the only one appearing exactly right. He was a perfect picture of equine beauty as he swept by the stand while being warmed up. The betting shed was so densely packed that it was difficult to gain entrance to the pool-boxes. Stamboul started a warm favorite, selling at $80 to $38 for Woodnut and $17 for Antevolo. Everybody had money and was anxious to put it up. In the lottery for position Antevolo drew the pole, Woodnut second place and Stamboul on the outside. They began scoring. The crowd grew more feverish, and the betting was heavy. There was some difficulty in bringing Antevolo up to the post. Four times they scored, and then the starter gave instructions to score by the pole horse, and warned Holly and Hickok that if they rushed ahead of the pole horse again he would fine them. They scored for the fifth time, and Stamboul and Woodnut came to the post a length in the lead of Antevolo. Holly was fined $5 for crowding up. He paid it and went back. The horses started down to the post again, when Holly drew Woodnut in and allowed the others to pass him two lengths. They were called back, and the starter warned Holly that if he failed to come up next time he would be fined $25.

Again they came down and this time were sent away, Stamboul having a slight advantage. Woodnut took the pole at the head of the turn and Stamboul came up beside him, Antevolo third. Midway round the turn Woodnut showed in front with Stamboul at his wheel, and all going strong. At the quarter in 0:34 Woodnut was leading, Stamboul at his wheel and Antevolo back two lengths. Down the backstretch Woodnut held his lead, but Stamboul hung on his wheel with bull-dog pertinacity. The half was put down in 1:08. All around the upper turn Stamboul held his place at Woodnut's wheel and came past the three-quarters in that position in 1:43. Then began the race for home. Antevolo was three lengths back and clearly out of the heat. Woodnut hugged the pole close and went fast as Stamboul began his play for the lead. Their positions were unchanged half way down the straight. Then Hickok touched Stamboul lightly with the whip and he responded with a rush that carried him up to Woodnut's flank, but Holly shook the chestnut up and sent him along with a rush that carried him under the wire a length ahead of Stamboul and four lengths ahead of Antevolo. The time was 2:17. There was a yell from Woodnut's friends as he passed under the wire.

The bettors rushed for the pool-boxes the moment the result was announced, and began plunging in dead earnest. In the first pool sold Stamboul brought $260, Woodnut $250, and Antevolo $45, and at such prices as these the tickets were sold as fast as the clerks could write them out. A heavy crowd surged around the Paris mutuel box, and kept the clicker going at a lively rate. Just before the second heat the pools were selling at $200 for Stamboul, $190 for Woodnut and $40 for Antevolo.

When the bell called them out for the second go Stamboul was first in, looking fresh and eager. Antevolo came out next and looked the better for his heat; Woodnut looked comparatively fresh and moved with a quicker, firmer action. Stamboul's friends eyed him askance, and not a few of them hedged out.

The horses got the word at the second attempt and went away fast and strong, but Antevolo went up as they swung into the turn, and the other two drew away from him. Well into the turn Stamboul led Woodnut a length. At the quarter his lead was two lengths, when Stamboul flashed past the post in 0:35. As they swung in and began the race down the backstretch Woodnut commenced going fast and gradually closed the gap. Half way down he had his head at Stamboul's wheel. Cries of "Look at Woodnut" were heard on every side. Another hundred yards he had reached Stamboul's flank. They flew by the half in 1:09, almost neck and neck. Fifty yards past the half Woodnut, who had been making spasmodic skips, went off his feet, and again daylight showed between them. Holly's master hand drew Woodnut down again in a flash, and he went in to cover ground. They came around the turn like the wind, Woodnut closing up the distance all the time. At the three-quarters he was at Stamboul's neck. They had made the third quarter in 0:33. As they swung into the straight and came down home the crowd pressed to the fence and craned their necks for a glimpse. In the grand stand even the ladies stood in their chairs and a long, loud shout went up. Stamboul was coming with that sure, quick stride that makes him resemble a machine. Woodnut was close after him and gaining. Hickok glanced at the chestnut beside him and drew his whip. Holly did the same. As the whips swished through the air both horses surged forward and the buggy wheels were hub to hub. At the draw gate the stallions were even with both whips going and both drivers talking to the horses. The crowd was wild. Hickok gathered Stamboul in and glared at Woodnut, then by a mighty effort he shook the bay altogether and landed him over the mark a bare head winner. A great shout went up from the crowd. It was a hot heat from start to finish and one that brought out all there was in the horses. Antevolo finished some distance back again. The time was 2:17.

Stamboul was again a hot favorite and there were scores eager to buy him at $100 to $50 for Woodnut and $8 for Antevolo. When Shippee gave them the word for the third heat Stamboul had a slight advantage. Well into the turn he was a length ahead of Woodnut and two lengths of Antevolo. They made the quarter in 0:35, Stamboul leading by two lengths. Holly was evidently laying by for the race on the straight. On the backstretch Woodnut crawled up so that at the half in 1:10 he was but a length behind. Antevolo went fast on the stretch and came up within a length of Woodnut. They entered the turn in those positions. Woodnut increased his speed and once came to Stamboul's wheel, but the bay drew away again to a length lead and held it past the three-quarters in 1:45. Then Holly began his play for lead with the evident idea of out-speeding Stamboul. He got Woodnut up to the bay's wheel, but all his efforts could not crowd the chestnut to the lead, and under the pressure Woodnut went up at the drawgate. Holly set him down again quickly and sent him in with a rush, but it was too late, and Stamboul went under a winner, with Woodnut at his wheel. Antevolo trotted strong for the whole mile, but made no attempt to take the lead. Time, 2:17.

The Stamboul men went into the betting shed and took all of the pools which they could get at $210 for Stamboul, $105 for Woodnut, and $3 for Antevolo. After scoring four times Shippee sent the flyers away for the fourth heat, with Stamboul slightly in the lead. Antevolo went up as they were swinging into the turn, but caught quickly, and half way round he was trotting alongside Woodnut, Stamboul leading them a length. Woodnut drew away from his companion before they reached the quarter, and at that point was a length behind Stamboul and going fast. The quarter was 0:35. On the backstretch Woodnut started after the leader at a fast gait, but went up. Down again after two or three leaps, he spurted and got to Stamboul's wheel, hanging there all the way down the half, but skipping as if dead tired. Into the turn he held his place. Half way round he got to Stamboul's neck, but again broke. Holly set him down in an instant with only a slight loss. Stamboul was going perfectly steady and very fast when they went by the three-quarters in 1:43, and straightened into the stretch. Another hot race for home began. Woodnut was trotting fast, but with a skip. He got up to Stamboul's neck and held the place for 100 yards, but at the drawgate he dropped and quit, and Stamboul was eased under the wire in 2:17, winning the heat and donning the Grand National Crown. There was a round of cheering, and as Mr. Rose, Stamboul's owner, came down from his chair under the judges' box, a hundred friends rushed over to congratulate him.

It was expected that 2:15 would be made, and there was some disappointment expressed that this was not the case, but it was a great race, and two heats in 2:17, a third three-quarters slower, and then a fourth in 2:17 are not made every day by stallions, and the owners are perfectly satisfied. Had Woodnut been in such a form as at Sacramento he would have made a better race. Too much cannot be said of Antevolo. The noble stallion was faster in the last than in the first heat, and plucky in them all. He had everything to contend against and was in poor condition, so that yesterday's performance cannot be taken as a criterion of his power in speed. To prove his confidence in Antevolo, Mr. Simpson, his owner, challenged the owners of Woodnut and Stamboul for a race at any time of three in five two-mile heats, for $2,000, and should any such challenge be accepted, it is every chance that Antevolo will take down the stake.

In the judge's stand, where L. U. Shippee, J. N. Bailach, and A. K. Grimm, Mr. Shippee acted as starter. The timers were C. H. Kingley, E. H. Miller, Jr., and Richard Carroll. Stamboul, the winner, is too well known to make a publication of his full pedigree and performances necessary. It is sufficient to say that he is by Sultan, out of Fleetwing, and his record is 2:15. Next Wednesday he will be sent at the Bay District track to beat the 2:15, and then Mr. Rose will take him to Los Angeles.

Between the second and third heats of the Grand National Charles Durfee drove the bay stallion three-year-old Gossiper for a record, and sent him around in 2:22. Gossiper is by Simmons out of a dam by Smuggler (2:15), second dam by Mambrino Patchen. He belongs in the Los Angeles stables.

Two Good Days at the Bay District Track.

Friday and Saturday, October nineteenth and twentieth, were two days to which California horsemen had long looked forward. The chief events that took place were the Primary, Junior and National stallion stakes, in which were entered not only the best bred and most prominent horses in California, but also some of the chief performers from the East. Death and mishap had lessened the numbers of the competitors, but as the field narrowed the interest in each individual grew more intense, and when the time for contest had arrived horsemen were fairly a-tiptoe with excitement.

Unfortunately Friday was, as Mr. Mantalini would have said, "a dem'd damp, moist, unpleasant day." There was a fog and a chilly southwest wind. In spite of these drawbacks, however, a very fair number of spectators had gathered to see the events on the card for the first day. Palo Alto's two-year old filly Sunol would start to beat Axtell's recent record of 2:23, G. Valensin's yearling filly Fleet would start against her own record of 2:36, C. A. Durfee's Don Tomas and J. N. Ayer's Bay Rose were matched for a purse of $500, and the Primary and Junior stallion stakes were to be decided.

The judges for Sunol and Fleet were Messrs. Samuel Gamble, John Howes and A. J. Allen, while those for the races were Messrs. C. S. Crittenden, A. J. Allen and A. K. Grimm. The timers were Messrs. E. H. Miller, Jr., C. H. Kingsley and R. T. Carroll.

Captain N. T. Smith had offered a silver cup to Sunol to beat 2:23, and under the guidance of the veteran driver, Charles Marvin, she made the quarter in 35 seconds, the half in 1:10, the three quarters in 1:45 and the mile in 2:20. This not only beats the record of the stallion Axtell, but also the 2:21 of the filly Wildflower, which has led the two-year-old list since 1881. Sunol was foaled April 14, 1886, and is by Electioneer, dam Waxana by General Benton 2nd dam Waxy (dam of Alpha), by Lexington.

Count Valensin's yearling filly Fleet was sent two trials to beat her record of 2:36, but failed, making the first in 2:40 and the second in 2:36.

The Junior Stallion stake for three-year-olds found but three starters—Balkan, Direct and Strathway, with Strathway the favorite in the pools at $40 to $25 for the field. In the draw for positions Balkan got the pole, Direct next and Strathway on the outside.

In the first heat Direct took the pole on the turn and led away with Strathway after him and Balkan trailing. Half way around the turn Strathway broke and Balkan passed to second place. The break was a bad one and cost the unfortunate the heat. Down the backstretch they went in procession five lengths apart, Strathway going only to save his distance. The only change in the positions was a shortening of the distance between Balkan and the leader to three lengths, and in that way they finished, Direct an easy winner and Strathway just inside the distance post. Time, 2:28.

The second heat was the first repeated. Direct again led off and Strathway followed him to the middle of the turn, going off his feet there and leaving the heat to Direct and Balkan. Direct went around at his ease and won again in 2:28, Balkan three lengths second and Strathway saving his distance.

Before the heat Strathway was still a favorite, selling at $80 against $55 for the field, but after his bad performance the field sold for $25 to $17 against him.

When they came out for the third Hellman, who had driven Strathway in the first two, gave way to Goldsmith, and when Johnny drove past the stand the Strathway men revived and ran him up in the pools. For once, though, Goldsmith could not win, but he gave the leader some trouble. They were sent away to a good start and around the turn Direct led, with Strathway hanging to his wheel and going steadily. They went like this to the lower turn, where Strathway, with a good chance to win, lost his feet and dropped away back, Direct going in first, Balkan second. The time was 2:25½.

This was an excellent race, and Direct is much to be congratulated on his victory. Balkan made a good showing for his condition, as he had had the epizootic for some time, and it had taken the form of intermittent fever. He was sick over three weeks at Marysville and had a slight attack at Reno. At Carson he was in fine condition, but about twelve days before this race he had a very severe attack. For seven days he did not have a harness on. On the Sunday previous to the race, the Doctor would not even allow him to go out to walk.

Direct, the property of M. Saliebury of the Pleasanton Stock Farm, is a beautiful black stallion, 15½ hands high and a perfect model of his sire. His record 2:23 was made at Napa in a race against aged horses. That he can and will trot much faster is an established fact and his performance today, as well as those previous, reflect credit on his sire, owner and driver.

SUMMARY.

Bay District Track, October 19, 1888—Junior Stallion stakes for three-year-olds; $100 entrance; mile heats, 3 in 5, in harness. M. Saliebury's blk s Direct, Director—Echora (2:23½) by Echo 1 1 1

H. H. Helmer's ch s Strathway, Stetway—Countess 2 2 2
Time, 2:25½, 2:25½, 2:25½.

Kilrain was not in trim to come up for the Primary Stallion Stakes for two-year-olds and Palo Alto's Leon was driven for a walk-over.

A match race for a purse of $500 between Los Angeles stables' blk g. Don Tomas and J. N. Ayer's b. s. Bay Rose was the next thing on the card. The first was driven by his owner, C. A. Durfee, the latter by J. A. Goldsmith. Though neither horse is what turfmen call fast the race was very close, and decidedly interesting. Before the first heat Bay Rose was the favorite at $40 to $25. They were sent off to a neck and neck start, Tomas going to the front on the turn. The bay hung on to his wheel down the backstretch around the turn, where he collared him and came into the straight half a length leader. Just then Tomas went up, but caught quickly, and they came down home for a hot finish. Bay Rose was leading slightly, when he went up for some unaccountable reason, and before he recovered Don Tomas was under the wire in 2:21.

After this heat the pools were about even. They were sent off with a good start, and Don Tomas, taking the lead, reached the quarter in 36 seconds, the half in 1:10, and the three-quarter pole in 1:45. Just at the head of the stretch Bay Rose, who had been from a half to a full length in the rear, came up even, and the horses came into the straight neck and neck. Bay Rose led a little way, then the black gelding got a slight advantage. Nearing the wire Tomas broke, and Bay Rose also went up, and both horses plunged under the wire together, making a dead heat in 2:21. After this heat Don Tomas was $50 in the pools to $27 on Bay Rose.

The third heat was another hard one. Tomas took the lead. At the quarter the bay was at his wheel and stayed there down the back stretch. At the half Tomas broke and ran some distance, and Bay Rose led him into the upper turn. After he got down again Tomas began trotting fast and caught Bay Rose at the middle of the turn. They went around to the three-quarters neck and neck. Down the straight there was not a perceptible difference in them, and it seemed as if there would be another dead heat, but right at the post Goldsmith lifted his horse and fairly shoved him in, winning with Don Tomas at the bay's throatlatch. The time was pretty fast for a third heat of that class—2:20½.

After this heat Bay Rose was the favorite at $70 to $43 for Don Tomas. To a good start Bay Rose took the lead at the first turn and was three lengths in advance at the half. At the three quarters Don Tomas was doing nicely, and only a length of daylight was between him and the leader as the stretch was fairly entered. Don Tomas made a grand trot coming home, and only those persons stationed right under the wire could see that he had lost by a nose. Time, 2:27½. Pool selling was brisk before the fifth heat, Bay Rose bringing $100 to $50.

The fifth heat was the most exciting of them all and it was anybody's heat to about half way down the stretch, when Bay Rose broke and Don Tomas came on and won the heat easily in 2:23.

On account of darkness the deciding heat was postponed until Saturday. The pools on Friday night showed that for this race Don Tomas was favorite at $50 to $36. For the National Stamboul was the favorite at $100. Woodnut next at $35, while Antevolo was warmly supported at $30.

In her work Friday morning Yolo Maid paced a quarter of a mile in 29½ seconds by a dozen reliable timers and watches, and now her driver, J. A. Goldsmith, throws to the world the following distance:

I will pace Yolo Maid against any horse, mare or gelding in the United States (pacer or trotter) for $2,500 a side. The race to be paced in California.

On Saturday the crowd began betimes to gather. Cable and railroad cars were crowded, buses and hacks were busily engaged, and private equipages in large numbers followed each other through the gates. The Club House balcony was early filled, and downstairs there was scarcely standing room. Beside the immense crowd that had legitimate points of view, the great unwashed congregated in large numbers on every possible vantage point outside, to see even a small part of the grand race.

Bay District Track lies among hills of sand that look dreary to the Eastern eye, accustomed to see green grass over all uncultivated places. The beautiful Golden Gate Park is in sight on the one hand; on the other, the silent City of the Dead lies on the slope of the Hill of the Holy Cross. There is nothing to impede the view all around the track, and from the Club House balcony every footfall can be watched. The day was perfect, as are so many days in California; the sun shone from a cloudless sky, there was a very light breeze and the track was in fair condition.

The first event for the day was the trial of the two-year-old Palo Alto Belle to beat 2:30. Driven by Charles Marvin she made the quarter in 0:37½, the half in 1:12½, the three-quarters in 1:51½, and the mile in 2:28½. Palo Alto Belle was foaled April 16, 1886, and is by Electioneer, out of Beautiful Bells, 2:29½, by The Moor, second dam the great Minne-Ha-Ha by Bald Chief. As all the world knows, Beautiful Belle is the dam of Hinda Rose, 2:19½, St. Bell 2:24½, Bell Boy 2:26 and Chimes, 2:30½, while Minne-Ha-Ha has produced not only this great brood mare but also Sweetheart, 2:22½, Eva, 2:23½ and Alcazar, 2:23.

The finish of the postponed match race was next called for, and Bay Rose and Don Tomas promptly appeared.

Don Tomas is a big, rangy gelding by Del Sur. He has a high, bold action, and although not handsome, being too lightly built for his height, he has shown well this year and horsemen think well of him. There is too much daylight under him and he is too ragged in finish over the hips to please the critical observer.

Bay Rose is a dark brown stallion, tan muzzle, and flank like his sire Sultan. In common with many Sultans, he is very large—indeed, he is far above the average height of the Sultans, being 16-3. He weighs 1,250 pounds, is well proportioned, beautifully finished. A "bay rose" is something of which no florist has ever heard, but his beautiful color and the name of his breeder has furnished the horse with a cognomen which at least has the merit of oddity, and merit it surely is, in these days of multiplying initials and confusing foreign names.

On the third score a good start was given, and at the turn Don Tomas was slightly leading. He increased this lead to over a length as they neared the three-eighths, traveling well within himself, but when near the half he broke, coming almost to a standstill. He ran for half a furlong, Bay Rose gaining by the same. On the last turn the pace was faster, the black still in the lead on the stretch. Bay Rose was going better, but Don Tomas came under the wire so easy winner. Time, 2:22.

As the hour approached for the great race the crowd grew thicker under the wire, and the merits of the respective horses were still more eagerly canvassed. Pools were $100 on Stamboul, $45 on Woodnut and $25 on Antevolo. The great interest taken in this race was made evident by the knots of talkers earnestly and quietly discussing the points of the different combatants. Woodnut's speed at San Jose, although he had not beaten the wonder Yolo Maid, was eagerly quoted, he having shown there—so report said—2:15½, with portions of a mile much faster.

Stamboul's performance of 2:15 and the prestige of his former races, together with the marked improvement he has shown in Mr. Hickok's hands, carried him to the position of favorite. At $45 to $100 for Stamboul, Woodnut found many backers, while Antevolo at $25 was popular with many who relied on his former well-known speed to carry him to the front. Antevolo had not been seen at his work on the Bay District Track, as had the other two horses, nor had he been through the series of races this summer, as had the chestnut son of Nutwood and the dapple bay son of Sultan. But the blood of Electioneer has a glamour which increases the value of its possessor in the eyes of most observers, especially those who had seen the great performance of the two-year-old Sunol, who the day before made 2:20½.

When the call was given for the champions to appear the great Woodnut was the first to jog before the waiting crowd. In spite of his quarter crack, which he sustained a few days ago, and the bar shoe which he must therefore wear, he did not appear to favor that foot particularly, and was in fine shape for the race—not too heavy in flesh. His races through the circuit have hardened and steadied him, and his backers felt jubilant.

Antevolo came past the stand with a good strong gait, promising well for the race. The crowd watched him with great interest and welcomed him with a round of applause, as this is the first time in two years that he has appeared in public. No one seemed to know how fast he was, and the wildest possible reports had been current. He had made 2:17, he had made 2:16, he had beaten 2:13½, he was winner sure, he was dead lame, he had no chance, he was only starting to save his stake, he had had no fast work in weeks—no one knew. He jogged up and down, and as he warmed up the veins glistened under his beautiful satiny coat, his color darkened, and his perfect motion drew all eyes. The strain from which he suffered some time since did not seem to impair his motion, but after passing the stand several times he was observed to be nodding a little. Pools went up to $160 on Stamboul, $60 on Woodnut and dropped to $22 on Antevolo.

The judges were L. U. Shippee, J. W. Bailhache and A. K. Grimm.

Calling up the three contestants in front of the judges' stand, Judge Shippee made a terse and pointed address:

"We want you to understand that we propose to have this race exactly according to rule and we shall be exceedingly strict with the drivers and handlers of these horses. The drivers are all old drivers and know the rules much better than the judges, and we shall hold them strictly responsible for every rule. We shall have patrol judges out on every corner, and we want you to understand that if any of you drive foul or interfere in any way with the others, you shall be punished in accordance with the rule and strictly."

Antevolo has the pole, Woodnut second, Stamboul outside.

On the first score both horses were far ahead of Antevolo. On the second score Antevolo broke. A ring broke in Stamboul's martingale. After repairing this damage there was another score, in which Woodnut came up second in place of Stamboul, who was some lengths in the rear. The fifth score called forth a warning from the starting judge that they must score by the pole horse, and again after the eighth trial that they must score in accordance with the rules. Even at the eighth attempt the other two were still ahead. Antevolo does not score up at a fast rate. The ninth score was still the same, and Mr. Shippee fined both Hickok and Holly $5. On the next score both the drivers of Stamboul and Woodnut, like pettish schoolboys, refused to come up to the wire, stopping several lengths behind. This childish behavior was promptly reprimanded by Mr. Shippee's promising them a further fine of $25 for a repetition of such conduct. At last they were sent off.

On the turn Woodnut took the pole, with Stamboul well up and Antevolo two lengths behind. The quarter was reached in 34 seconds, Woodnut leading with Stamboul on his wheel. These positions were maintained all the way into the back stretch. At the half, in 1:07½, the positions were the same, Antevolo, though, being still farther behind. On the third turn Stamboul began to draw up. At the three-quarters, in 1:42½, Stamboul was fighting hard for first place. They swung into the stretch with Antevolo at the pole, coming fast, and drawing up to the leaders. Drive as he might, Hickok could not bring Stamboul to the lead, and Woodnut came under the wire easily first, Stamboul a good second, and Antevolo some three lengths in the rear. Time, 2:17.

After the first heat, pools on Stamboul went up to $260 to $245 on Woodnut and $35 on Antevolo. Some pools were over $300 on Stamboul, $190 on Woodnut, and $15 on Antevolo.

Just before the second heat of the stallion race, pools were $200, $190 and $40.

On the second score they were sent off to a poor start, Stamboul at the pole being behind, the other two ahead.

On the turn Stamboul got the pole, with Woodnut following, and at the quarter in 34 seconds, Stamboul was a length in front of Woodnut, with Antevolo three lengths behind. Nearer the half Woodnut drew up, and at the half in 1:09, his nose was at the girth of the leader. On the third turn he fell back somewhat, but again recovered his place, and at the three-quarter pole they were almost neck to neck. Rounding into the stretch the Los Angeles horse still had the lead but Woodnut was close up, and under the wire they went amid wild shouts of the crowd, with Stamboul half a head winner, and Antevolo about three lengths in the rear. In the last fifty yards both the leaders used the whip. Stamboul first, Woodnut second. Time 2:17.

Woodnut sold favorite after the second heat at $170, Stamboul $105, Antevolo $9. Mr. Hickok was fined $5 for being late in coming to the score. On the third score they got away, Antevolo with a very slight advantage. On the turn Woodnut took second place, some two lengths in front of Antevolo. At the quarter in 34 seconds, Stamboul led, Woodnut a length and a half in the rear, and Antevolo three lengths behind. Gradually Woodnut drew up, but at the half in 1:10½, he was still over a length behind Stamboul. They preserved these positions all around the turn to the three quarter pole, time 1:44½. Rounding the turn Woodnut was close to the leader, and they came down the home stretch struggling hard for first place, with Antevolo drawing near. Half way home Woodnut made a single jump, but settled down and gave the leader a hard race for the finish. Stamboul won by a half a head. Antevolo eased up inside the distance seeing that it was hopeless, and finished six lengths in the rear. Pools now were, Stamboul $310, Woodnut $155, Antevolo $3. For the fourth heat the same tedious scoring was experienced. On the fourth score the pole horse was somewhat in the lead; Antevolo seemed lame. The next score Woodnut came up off his feet. At last, on the seventh score, they got away to a very good start. Shortly after Woodnut made a skip, and on the turn Antevolo was fighting him hard for second place. At the quarter in 34, Stamboul was leading, Woodnut a good second, and Antevolo a few lengths in the rear. At the half in 1:09½, Woodnut was on Stamboul's wheel, and around the turn he closed up to his girth. At the three-quarters in 1:42, they were close together, but Stamboul had the foot of the mighty chestnut and came under the wire a winner by two lengths, Antevolo a good third. Time, 2:17.

Between the heats of the stallion race, Mr. Durfee appeared with his handsome three-year-old Gossiper, and it was announced that Gossiper would start to heat the record, 2:18. The prize offered was a Toomey only. Gossiper trotted well until just opposite his stable on the homestretch, where he broke and swerved towards the stalls; and, under the whip, went clear off his feet, reaching the wire in 2:22½. But for the bad break the time would have been much faster but not fast enough to equal the great Sable Wilkes, although the 2:19½ of Hinda Rose and Patron might have been touched. After the close of the stallion race Gossiper again came out, but as the crowd had already begun to depart, Mr. Durfee concluded to wait until next week for another trial. There is some inquiry concerning his pedigree, so we give it in full. He was bred by W. H. Wilson, Abdallah Park, Cynthia, Ky., and is by Simmons record 2:23, son of Geo. Wilkes. His dam is Lady Bryan by Smuggler record 2:15½, second dam Mary B. by Bryan's Snake, third dam Old Nannie by Gossip Jones, fourth dam Old Mike by Bald Hornet. Snake was by Mambrino Patchen out of Old Den by Black Denmark. He had very few colts, if any, other than Mary B, as he was gelded. Old Den is the dam of Jennie Bryan (who produced Olaf 2:22½, McLeod 2:24 and Eric 2:28½), and of Merry, (dam of Wild Rake 3 y. o. rec. 2:22½).

The fine young filly Sunol, who has just made a two-year-old record of 2:20½, was led out on the track without harness. To call her a greyhound would be a fair indication of her speedy conformation. The writer did not see her except at a distance, and so can not describe her appearance in detail. Yolo Maid, three-year-old pacing record 2:14, also appeared before the crowd.

We gave recently an extended account of her pedigree and performances. She is a bright bay filly, with a large, brainy head with intelligent eyes. She has a strikingly powerful appearance, as have most of the champions of the track. To stay at a killing pace, and come again and again to a great flight of speed, needs not only great muscular power, but plenty of room for heart and lung. She has deep, strong shoulders, powerful quarters, and good, large, round feet. She has not the slope of rump usually considered characteristic of a pacer, and her hind legs are the straight legs of the thoroughbred St. Charles.

After the close of the stallion race Mr. Simpson issued a challenge to any and all stallions to trot against Antevolo, two mile heats, best 3 in 5, for $2,000.

Thus closed a great day's racing. Four closely contested heats in 2:17, 2:17, 2:17½ and 2:17, are very much to the credit of both Woodnut and Stamboul.

The pacers are busy building up a table of age records. The following are the best for two, three, four and five-year-olds:

Five-year-old stallion Roy Wilkes	2:14½
Five-year-old gelding Arrow	2:13½
Four-year-old stallion Bessemer	2:15
Four-year-old gelding Arrow	2:14
Four-year-old filly Lillian	2:19½
Three-year-old stallion Dodd Peet	2:22½
Three-year-old gelding Adonis	2:24½
Three-year-old filly Yolo Maid	2:14
Two-year-old filly Irma	2:24½

The well-known trotting stallion, Daniel Lambert, now in his thirty-first year, was exhibited recently at the Vermont Trotting-Horse Breeders' meeting held in Rutland, and the old fellow came into the ring with the vim and determination of a five-year-old, showing few of the signs that a life of more than a quarter of a century leave on the average horse. He was surrounded by his sons and grand children, and the sight was one that did the admirers of the Morgan family a lot of good, as Daniel Lambert has for many a year been the head of the tribe, that position being accorded him on the death of his sire, Ethan Allen, a dozen years ago.—Breeders' Gazette.

Lexington, Ky.

LEXINGTON, Oct. 8.—Never since trotting first began in old "Kentuck" was there more spirited racing or a larger attendance than that at the first day of the Kentucky Trotting Horse Breeders' Meeting on Tuesday last. The weather was delightful, the track in almost perfect shape, and everything wore a business air, indicative of the energy and care bestowed by the management. The grounds were in holiday attire, and prominent horsemen from all sections of the country were among the visitors in attendance. Just before the fourth heat of the stallion race, the celebrated two-year-old Axtell was brought out and driven a mile by his owner to beat the best record over this track, 2:26, made by Bell Boy last Fall. He went the mile in 2:27½, having made a very bad break just after leaving the three-quarter pole. However, after taking the usual time for cooling, he was brought out a second time, and went a mile in 2:23, the second fastest mile ever made by a two-year-old. The quarters were trotted in 36 seconds, 1:10, 1:47, 2:23. This fellow is a very good-looking colt by William L. (brother to Guy Wilkes), out of a mare by Mambrino Boy, by Mambrino Patchen. The best performance of the day, and undoubtedly of the year and meeting, was the 2:28 of the yearling Belle Vera by Vatican, out of Nell by Estell Eric, belonging to W. H. Neale of Richmond, Ky. She did the quarters in 39½ seconds, 1:20, 2:01½, 2:38, and was bought by Mr. Henry Simons, of Louisville, before her owner and driver could get out of the sulky, for $2,500. Angelina in the Futurity Stake, distanced her only competitor, Lissie Ben, in 2:28½. This mare could have trotted in 2:25 had she not been pulled up.

The judges were P. P. Johnson, the President of the Association, and Messrs. David Bonner and R. S. Strader. The timers, Allie Bonner, B. C. Bruce and J. A. Hall.

The first race was the Stallion Stake, 2:25 class, worth $1,400. In this race there were seven starters, and was for blood, as the prolonged contest shows. They were as choice a lot of stallions as ever came to the post, and worth in round numbers $100,000. In this race the audience went wild, threw their hats and shouted, as their favorite won or lost; it made no difference, they were enthused with the contest and the struggling energies of the horses, and were bound to vent their feelings. The ladies waved their handkerchiefs, and some were seen to "hollo," and especially was Mrs. Stoner excited and enthused as Baron Wilkes took the fifth and sixth heats. She certainly is one of the most pleasant and agreeable women in Kentucky, and deserved the success of her horse, and "Quinton" admires her all the more for her faith in her gallant steed, and felt like shouting with her.

The pooling before the first heat was: Baron Wilkes $50, Superior $35, Sunrise Patchen $20, Hinda Wilkes $12, Granby $10, Ben Hur $5, Prince Edward $5. They were off in the third attempt, with Hinda Wilkes first, Ben Hur second, Baron Wilkes third and Sunrise Patchen running on the extreme outside and out of the race. At the eighth pole Superior had gone into second place, followed closely by Baron Wilkes and Granby, and all about two lengths behind Hinda Wilkes, who was going very fast and hugging the fence closely. The first quarter was reached in the same order, except that both Superior and Baron Wilkes had colored Hinda. Up the backstretch they sawed, Hinda reaching the half first by half a length, Superior second, Baron third, Granby fourth and close up, Sunrise Patchen last and still running. The three-quarters was reached with Hinda first, Superior second, Baron Wilkes third and running, Granby close in fourth place on the outside and coming like a western cyclone. In the stretch the order was the same, except Baron Wilkes had gone back to fourth place. As they neared the string Granby went into the air and Baron took third place. From the sixteenth home Hinda was hard pressed by Superior and Baron, who had gone to the extreme outside, but Hinda had them safe all the time and won by two lengths in 2:20½, Superior second, Baron Wilkes third, Granby fourth, Prince Edward fifth, Ben Hur sixth and Sunrise Patchen distanced.

Pooling was now, Hinda, $50; field, $16. They were off at the second trial, with Hinda first, followed by Superior, Baron third and the others well up and all going for blood. The order of the first quarter was the same. Going along the backstretch Hinda and Superior had an even thing, with Granby third and Baron fourth. They maintained their positions at the half and three quarters. Coming into the stretch it was Hinda, Superior, Baron and Granby and all fighting hard. After passing the sixteenth pole Baron went into the air and Granby took third place. From here home it was a horse-race between Hinda, Superior and Granby, Superior finally winning by a length, Hinda second, Granby third, Baron fourth, Prince Edward fifth and Ben Hur sixth, in 2:20½.

The pooling in third heat was, Superior, $50; field, $20. To a good start Superior was away first, closely followed by Granby and Hinda. Hinda was first at the quarter, Superior second, Granby third, Baron fourth and out for the heat, the others in their usual positions, fifth and sixth. Hinda still continued to lead up the far stretch and at the three quarter pole, with the Baron and Superior right on his wheel. Here Superior broke badly and went to fourth position, Granby taking second and Baron third, which they maintained to the finish, Hinda winning by a head right on the pole from Granby, Baron third, Superior fourth, Edward fifth, Hur sixth and last. Time, 2:20½.

Pool-selling on the fourth heat saw a change, and the "sportsmen" hustling to hedge. Where to go was their trouble, but they, one and all, finally landed on Hinda $50 to $20. After scoring several times they were sent away with Hinda slightly leading, Superior, on whose wheel was Granby, followed by Baron, and all struggling hard and going fast. Around the turn the order was the same. At the quarter pole Baron had taken first position, followed by Hinda, Superior, Granby and the others nowhere and out of the race. Between the half and three-quarters Granby assumed the lead and Baron broke and went back to last place. At the three-quarters Granby still led by a length, with Hinda second, Superior third and the others back. At the sixteenth pole the race narrowed down to a match between Granby and Superior, which was won by Granby, Hinda second, Superior third, having made a very bad break, Baron fourth, Edward fifth and Hur last. Time, 2:19½.

Granby was now made the favorite at $50 against $15 for the field, and the betting fraternity more at sea than ever, floundering about and without any hope of getting out of the hole. Several attempts were made before they got the word to "go." When they were off Granby showed in front, with Hinda second, Superior third, Baron fourth, Edward fifth and last, Hur having been drawn. At the quarter it was Superior, Granby, Baron, and the other two behind sawing for fourth place. Up the backstretch it was head and head between Superior, Granby and the Baron, Granby reaching the half first by half a length, Superior second, Baron third but on leaving it Superior took the lead by a short head. At the sixteenth Baron had forged ahead on the outside, with Granby second, Superior third, Edward fourth and Hinda last and tired. Just here it was anybody's race, and all driving. The pace was too hot for Superior, and he goes off his feet, leaving the Baron and Granby to fight it out. On they come, nose and nose, each struggling for the goal and their owner's money, until George Bowerman finally by hard and determined driving lands the Baron a winner by half a length from Granby, who was second, Superior third, Edward fourth, Hinda fifth and last. Time, 2:21½.

For the sixth heat the Baron was favorite at $50 to $20 against the field. They were off at the first attempt, with the Baron slightly in the lead, followed by Superior and Granby. This same position was held all the way round to the finish, the finish being Baron, Superior, Granby, Hinda, Edward having been sent to the stable. Time, 2:24½.

The race now went over till the next morning, and the betting at the Phoenix showed Hinda favorite at about even money. The race was called promptly next day at one o'clock, and on the second attempt they were sent away to a good start, with the Baron in the lead, Superior second, Granby third, which positions were maintained all the way round and into the stretch, where the Baron drew away and won a great race in the fast time of 2:18½.

The Turf in England.

LONDON, September 29.—The Newmarket First October meeting has been in progress this week, and was opened most inauspiciously by the wet weather and a shocking poor attendance. The principal race of the meeting was The Great Foal Stakes and it occasioned considerable betting, as it was thought that Ayrshire would find the journey across the flat too far for his liking. The fielders, seeing as they thought a possible chance to recoup themselves for former losses, at first were willing to accept 2 to 1 about his winning, but at the close, 9 to 4 was freely laid on him. He never gave the layers of odds any uneasiness. None of the opponents could go fast enough to extend him out of an exercise canter and so test his stamina, and he passed the post, hard held, a winner by a length. Lord Rosslyn's colt, Grafton and Surbiton were second and third.

This race has been instituted ten years, run always during the Newmarket First October week, has proved the principal item of the opening day's card, and fallen to high class three-year-olds, with perhaps one exception, in 1884, when Cambsmore carried the stakes to Kingsclere. The victors include Rayon d'Or, Robert the Devil, Dutch Oven and Ossian (winners of the St. Leger), Melton (Derby and Leger), Ormonde (Two Thousand, Derby and Leger), Reve d'Or (One Thousand and Oaks), and Ayrshire (Two Thousand and Derby). The distance is one mile two furlongs and seventy-three yards. It was run in 2:19 2-5, and the value to the winner was £1,070. The Rous Memorial Stakes, the chief two-year-old event of the meeting was won by Mr. Hammond's chestnut colt Laureate, who has only recently appeared on the turf. Such prestige has he already obtained that he is mentioned as the probable winner of next year's Derby. This was not his first race; he has run previously and won easily a minor race at Yarmouth, where he first started.

The Cesarewitch and Cambridgeshire are for the present the nuts which speculators find hard to crack. There is more evidence than ever that the three-year-olds of this season are particularly good, and that there are more of them than in most years. Kenilworth, in L'Anson's stable, remains favorite, with the French mare, Tenebreuse, second in the quotations. Capt. Macchell's stable mares Trayles, and he has been very heavily backed, despite his not having been seen on a race course for twelve months, when he was purchased by the captain for £2,000. 'Tis said the captain has been forestalled, and the horse may be scratched, but let us hope not, in the interest of Turf morality, seeing that he has been allowed to remain in the race so long, and is moreover a public fancy. It is a heavy handicap for most, as the weights have been raised by scratchings. Both Tenebreuse and Orbit will have the steadier of 124 pounds to carry over the 2 miles, 2 furlongs and 28 yards. The race will be run on Oct. 9.

Those who pride themselves on being early alive to a good thing, had a serious set back on Tuesday last. They had rushed to be on Minting for the Cambridgeshire, backing him freely down to 4 to 1, and the report came that not only was Minting absent from exercise, but that he had broken down. Perhaps the regrets at the misfortune to this great horse were not in reality so serious as the regrets for money considered lost. It was not quite so bad as that, but Minting has without doubt damaged his near fore leg in some manner, and with the ground heavy as it is likely to be between now and the decision of the Cambridgeshire, is apt to give way at any time.

The coming jockey of the day is Robinson, who successfully steered the winner of both this and last year's Leger. He is a very unassuming, nice boy, who was in the first place apprenticed to Tom Cannon of Danebury. For a consideration his indentures were transferred to Lord Rodney and Capt. Macchell's stable, and he is now just out of his articles and receives a retainer by way of a start of £600 from Lord Rodney for first claim and £400 from Capt. Macchell for second call on his services. He promises so well that if his future is to be equal to his past he will soon come into as great prominence and obtain as high retainers as the late Fred Archer.

C. Wood has given Lord Durham notice of his intention to proceed with his libel suit, and it will probably be tried before the spring. The Chetwynd case remains in statu quo, the jockey club stewards declining to take the initiative, and Sir George feeling probably like the timid hater—afraid to step in lest he may find himself out of his depth.—Anglian in the Sporting World.

A monster chronograph has been made in England for use by the Racing Association of Australia. It will occupy a prominent position over the judges' stand. Its dial measures thirty inches. It registers minutes, seconds and fifths. The action is start, stop and fly-back. A ninety-pound weight furnishes the motive power; the hair spring is cylindrical. It will be operated by electricity—that is, the starting and the stopping. This is a very

In Welbeck Paddocks.

London, Oct. 3rd.—One of the most wonderful estates in England is Welbeck Abbey, the estate of the Duke of Portland. The present Duke succeeded his cousin some ten years ago, and within a very few months started his turf career. Possessed of almost unlimited means, he does not attempt to increase them by speculation, but races for amusement and glory alone, although at times he makes a small bet or two. Welbeck Abbey is one of the most extraordinary places in the country, and it would take days to thoroughly examine its wonders and inspect the treasures that are displayed inside its walls. The late Duke had a mania for underground passages and buildings; and miles of underground roads and pathways lead in every direction. The gardens are of vast extent and the stables and outbuildings, which are situated three-quarters of a mile from the house, cover about two acres of ground. A riding school, the largest in the world except that at Moscow, is 132 yards long by 36 yards wide, and there is a tan gallop under glass 422 yards long. There are ninety horses in the stables, and of these thirty are hunters. The gardens are very extensive and forty men are employed in them. The very vast extent of the place can be imagined when I say that it costs eighty thousand pounds sterling to keep it going. But it is not with all these wonders that I will deal.

The racing paddocks and buildings were the object of one of my recent visits to Welbeck, and these I would describe, as they are said to be the most perfect of any of their kind in England. They are situated about a mile and a half from the Abbey, on the summit of some rising ground that insures perfect drainage. There are in all five paddocks, occupying about a hundred acres of land. The soil is rich and the grass heavy and nourishing. The large paddock is about twenty-three acres in extent, the second one about eighteen, and four more contain about twelve acres each. The stud groom in charge, Mr. Chapman, is a man of great intelligence and understanding, taking the greatest interest in his charges and gladly giving all the information possible. He was at one time with Lord Falmouth's stud, a guarantee that he was no novice when he first came to the Duke of Portland. The buildings are arranged in squares. They are of solid stone with slate roofs, and the boxes are as commodious and perfect as could be desired. The exercising yard of the yearlings is padded all round the walls with felt mats in case the youngsters in the exuberance of their spirits should "let fly" and injure themselves. In this place they are exercised for two hours every morning.

The first yard entered contains three boxes only, the remainder being walls that are padded with a view to avoid injury. The first box was occupied by a handsome chestnut stallion named the Mate, by Blandford, dam Gretna. He is about 16.2, and is kept by the Duke chiefly for the use of his tenants to breed a better class of hunter. Next to him is the great St. Simon. His admirers say he was the best horse of the decade, and as Chapman very truly remarked, no one knew how good he really was. His breeding is undeniable, being by Galopin, dam St. Angela. He stands nearly seventeen hands high and is a rich dark dappled-brown, almost a black. Perfectly quiet as he stood in the corner of his box, playfully nibbling the rattan Chapman held out to him, he was a sight worth coming to see. That English breeders value his services is shown by the fact that last year his subscription list of forty-one mares at a hundred guineas apiece was filled at once, while his list of forty-five mares at the same rate for next year has long been filled. His produce at the yearling sales this year fetched large prices, some as much as £3,000, while one or two the Duke has kept would have fetched at least a thousand more. His produce inherit his magnificent hind quarters and splendid bone and look racing all over. No finer specimen of the thoroughbred could be seen, and his surroundings certainly do not detract from his lordly appearance.

The yearlings were a grand lot, and if the winner of the Derby of 1890 is not among them, looks count for very little. Space prevents my describing all, but from the sub-joined list a few stand out far and away beyond all others. The first of these is a brown colt, St. Serf, by St. Simon, dam Feronia; a more marvelous resemblance to his sire could not be found, the likeness being almost perfect; color, conformation, indeed, in every respect. He is a wonderfully well-grown yearling, but shows a great deal of quality, and will very certainly make a name for himself well worthy of his sire. Another grand yearling was Hunciccroft, named after the village near by. He is a rich brown, approaching the bay, and is by St. Simon, his dam being Lady Gladys. He was born and bred at Welbeck, though the dam did not belong to the Duke of Portland, who, however, bought him at auction and paid £2,600. He is a month younger than St. Simon, and is nearly, if not quite, as large. He does not, however, show quite as much quality as his half brother. A bay filly by St. Simon, dam Mowerina, she by Scottish Chief, is decidedly a home-bred one, as Mowerina was one of the first purchases of the Duke, and won him several races. The others are a fine lot, but space prevents more than their names being given. They are as follows:

Ch. filly La Cloche, by Hermit, dam Min Bell; b. f. Else, by St. Simon, dam Larissa; br. f. Scoter, by Galliard, dam Golden Eye; b. f. Ben-ma-chree, by Galopin, dam Ulster Queen; b. c. by Foxhall, dam Fact; ch. f. hy Master Kildare, dam Staffa; br. f. by St. Simon, dam Gueveo, and b. f. by Victor Chief, dam Baroness.

The horses the Duke has in training were at Newmarket, so I did not see them. He only has eight, but among them the winner of the Derby and two thousand Ayrshire, while Donovan has won him not less than £12,000 already this year. The Duke's winning balance from these eight must be close to £25,000 already this year.

The list is as follows: Ayrshire, 3 years, by Hampton, dam Atlanta; Johnny Morgan, 3, by Springfield, dam Lady Mar; Dorothea, 3, by Sterling, dam Cherry Duchess; Donovan, 2, by Galopin, dam Mowerina; The Turcophone, 2, by Galopin, dam Lady Mar; Malanion, 2, by Hermit, dam Atlanta; Marens, 2, by Wenlock, dam Marquessa; Dechamps, 2, by Speculum or Camballo, dam Larissa.

This is not a very long list to achieve the success gained this year.

Wandering in the paddock were the brood mares, quiet dames, with a peaceful, contented appearance that did not put one in mind of the maddening excitement of the race track, nor the muffled roar of thousands as the winning post is reached.

In one of the smaller paddocks were two, one of whom in the days of her zenith was a popular idol—Wheel of Fortune. Very different she looked from the days when she carried the popular colors of Lord Falmouth. She is by Adventurer, dam Queen Bertha. At Lord Falmouth's sale she cost £5,000. She is a dark brown and her legs were as clean as when she was a two-year-old. She snatched into a

St. Simon. In the same field was Golden Eye, also in foal to St. Simon, as indeed are all the mares excepting Larissa, who is in foal to Bendigo, and Satchel to Ballcaline. In an adjoining paddock was Mowerina, a chestnut mare by Scottish Chief, dam Stockings. She was an early purchase of the Duke and won him several races, while her son, Donovan, has done more service. Her bay daughter, Modwena, by Galopin, was in the same paddock, and another bay daughter, Amcena, by Hampton, kept them company. Atlanta, the big brown mother of this year's Derby winner, Ayrshire, was with them. She is a grand looking mare and is by Galopin, dam Feronia, the mother of St. Serf.

In the big paddock was Lady Mar, a neat-looking bay mare, foaled in 1873 and the mother of some very good ones. The Staker, a very well bred chestnut, by Scottish Chief, dam Travoliner, who however, has been a failure at the stud hitherto; Larissa, a bay mare, by King of the Forest, dam Acropolis; Tact, bay mare by Wisdom; Staffa, a chestnut mare, by Scottish Chief, dam Tail; The Baroness, a very handsome mare by Saunterer; Satchel, a very neat bay mare, by Galopin, dam Quiver, who won some good races and is in foal for the first time, and Flying Footstep, by Doncaster, dam Atlanta. These finished the list of mares, there being in all nineteen.

The luxury of the place always calls attention, and when a number of the guests from the Abbey come to see the yearling a carpet is laid down for the youngster to stand on, which called forth a remark lately from one of the guests, "Padded walls and carpets outside! I suppose they've a feather bed inside?"

Taking it all in all, a visit to Welbeck is a thing well worth the trouble for those who like to see new and strange things and good horseflesh.

San Diego Races.

[San Diego Bes.]

There could not possibly have been a more beautiful day for the races than Wednesday proved out at Pacific Beach Driving Park. The sky was without a cloud, and the heat of the sun was sufficiently tempered by a breeze from the ocean to make the atmosphere simply delightful. The track was in perfect condition and just fast enough to give every opportunity to the flyers to make their best time.

Before the regular programme was entered upon, an extemporized match race was got up for one-fourth mile dash between "Jack Brady," entered in the name of George Stobie, and J. Patterson's "Corleuroy," for $250. The latter won in 23.

The judges selected were Capt. G. W. Johnston, E. W. Woodmsnee, Esq., and Captain W. H. Crawford, and the decisions throughout the day's racing gave the most satisfaction. Messrs. T. W. Hickey and J. W. Doffern were most satisfactory starters. Indeed, not a fault could be found by the most captious with their work during the day.

The first race was a half-mile dash, for a purse of $300. Odette acted ugly in the attempts to secure a start, and Fandango also acted somewhat sulky, but after a little while a fair start was made, the horses getting off well together. Odette set out to make the running with Four Aces close up and Fandango and Emilita at two length intervals in the first furlong. Four Aces made a gallant effort to overhaul Odette, but could not reduce the interval beyond three lengths where it stood at the quarter pole, and in the home stretch the whips being used freely by all the jockeys, Odette maintained the lead to the wire, Four Aces making a plucky second, Fandango third (lamed) and Emilita a poor third. Time 49½.

SUMMARY.

San Diego, Cal., October 21, 1898. Half mile dash. Purse $300.
B. P. Hill's Odette, 107, by Ephion, dam Margery by Error
John Dunn's Four Aces by Hick-Hocking, dam Maid of the Mist
Captain Field's Fandango by Billy Lee, dam Lorinda by Hardwood
T. Stratton's Emilita Cliford 3
Time, 0:49½.

The second race was a half-mile dash, for all ages, for a purse of $250.

In the first furlong Lida took and kept the lead, Sleepy Dick and Johnny Grey running neck and neck and Adam trailing. Before the quarter pole was reached Johnny Grey left Sleepy Dick and challenged Lida on the home stretch. The grey made a gallant bid for the winning, but let the mare get the pole and was beaten under the wire by a length. Sleepy Dick was a length and a half to the head, and took third place, while Adam was a very bad fourth. Time, 49½.

SUMMARY.

B. P. Hill's Adam, 115, Charles Dale 4

In the second heat Leo broke badly in the first furlong and gave Phoenix second place, Rex as before leading. At the half mile Rex was about ten lengths to the good, with Phoenix still in second place with Leo on his wheel. Before the last quarter pole was reached Leo had passed Phoenix and was drawing up on Rex. The race between the two down the stretch was beautiful but in spite of all the game grey could do, his rival came in four good lengths ahead. Time 2:37½. Phoenix was a good third and the Welling mare came in a fair fourth.

The light beginning to give way, it was agreed to postpone the finish of the race until next day.

The third event was a mile dash for a purse of $500, all ages.

This was a very closely contested race, and the riding of Mikado's jockey, Benny Stewart, did a great deal towards keeping the lead he secured at the half mile to the finish, which was a very fine one. Treat had no show, but Jack Brady ran a very game race and made a good second.

SUMMARY.

San Diego, Cal., Oct. 23, 1898. Mile dash, all ages, $500.
B. P. Hill's Mikado, 115, Benny Stewart 1
L. W. Davis' Jack Brady, 118, T. Hazlett 2
B. P. Hill's John Treat, George Housen 3
Time not given.

The trotting race was for a purse of $500. Dixie was out of it from the start, and it was soon evident that neither Phoenix nor Hattie Welling were at all "in it." Rex took the lead early in the first furlong and kept it, although Leo made a good showing, but broke and took second place, about five lengths behind Rex. Phoenix made a tolerable third, while Hattie Welling made only a fair fourth. Dixie's arrival was considerably later, and unnoticed. Time, 2:34½.

Races at Bay District this Week.

On Wednesday, October 24th, the events advertised were a trotting race for a purse of $1000, and Stamboul's attempt to beat his Los Angeles record of 2:15. In spite of his hard race on Saturday, Stamboul came out upon the track looking fairly well and moving with an easy, graceful action. Hickok was behind him, and he was accompanied by a running horse driven by Marvin, to coach him.

At the second attempt the word was given. The first quarter was made in 33½ seconds. Up the backstretch Hickok held him well in hand and the half was passed in 1:07.

The half-mile post was reached in 1:07, to a 2:14 gait, although the wind undoubtedly lost him a quarter or a half a second. The horse was holding his own well, but when about half way to the three-quarter post he broke.

The spectators expected to see Stamboul go all to pieces, but Hickok brought him up in a moment and managed so well that he did not lose over three-quarters of a second. Old turfmen expressed surprise that he could recover himself so quickly when going at such a rattling clip.

The three-quarter pole was passed in 1:41. Marvin kept the running horse well in front, and Hickok gave the horse his head. Stamboul held himself together in fine shape and closed the mile in 2:14½, although two timers made it 2:14. Had the day been still, he would have undoubtedly made 2:14.

It was rumored that Stamboul would be given another trial later in the day, but Hickok was not in favor of the attempt, as the wind was rising down the backstretch. The horse may be put on the track again shortly.

A few pools were sold on the trial, $29 to $25 that the horse would fail to lower his record. The judges were C. A. Durfee, P. Farrell and George Bayless, and the timers were A. Lathrop, W. H. Brown and Johnny Goldsmith.

The second event was a match race for $1000, with the stallions Ha Ha, Junio, Allo, Jim L. and Argent as starters. Before the first heat Ha Ha was the favorite, selling for $25 Junio at $11; Allo at $11, Jim L. at $15 and Argent at $5.

They had a great deal of trouble scoring, and when they got off at about the tenth attempt Jim L. took the lead, with Ha Ha after him. The other three were plainly not out for heat and Jim L. and Ha Ha had the fight to themselves. After they left the quarter-post Jim led by a couple of lengths up the backstretch and by a length or more around the turn. In the straight Ha Ha began to close up and under the whip they raced home in a hot finish, Jim L. winning by half a length in 2:20½, Ha Ha second and Argent third.

Jim L. became a decided favorite after the heat and was worth $25 to $12 for Ha Ha, $4 for Allo and $8 for the field of Junio and Argent. In the second heat the order of things was reversed. Junio was the leading horse when they got the turn and Allo was second, with Ha Ha at his wheel.

On the backstretch Ha Ha went up and the two drew away from him, and he was never heard from again. Junio led Allo by a length at the half mile post, the same distance in the turn and half a length as they swept into the straight. Then both got the whip and went home for a close finish, Junio taking the heat, Allo second and Jim L. a poor third. Time, 2:22.

Few had faith in Junio, and so, after the heat, Jim L. jumped into the favorite's place, selling for $40, field $18, Ha Ha $13 and Allo $7. The third heat was much like the second. Again Junio took the lead, with Allo second, and Ha Ha kept close to them until past the quarter, the pace was too fast, and he broke and dropped back with the rack. Junio led all the way. Allo was pushing him to a hard finish, but went up at the drawgate, and Junio trotted under the wire in 2:22½, Allo second and Jim L. third.

When Junio was announced as the winner of the heat there was a glorious chop in the pools. Everybody wanted to get in on Junio, and they soon ran him up to $160 to $29 for the field of four. Some of the gamblers began to cry "jobbery," but their money was in and it took heavy hedging to get it out.

After a deal of scoring the flyers were sent off for the fourth heat. Junio and Jim L. disputed for the first place all around the turn and into the home stretch, but there Jim lost his feet and Junio drew away, Allo passing to a second place. Jim was not heard from again, Junio and Allo came around a length apart and made a very pretty finish, Junio taking the heat and race. Allo a length second, and Argent third. Time, 2:25½. The short ends were happy.

THURSDAY'S RACES.

[San Francisco Chronicle.]

There were two events on the card at the Bay District track—a pacing race for a purse and stake of $1,000, and a trot for a $250 stake. The pace brought out a surprise by Adonia when he put down a fourth heat in 2:14½. The entries were Adonis, Almont Patchen, Belmont Boy and Gold Leaf; but the latter failed to appear, and the three had the go.

Belmont Boy had a strong coterie of backers and sold a favorite in the pools for $50, Adonis selling for $37 and Almont Patchen for $15. They were sent away for the first heat to a good start, Belmont immediately showed in the lead, closely followed by Patchen, Adonia trailing. In this position they went past the quarter post and up the backstretch. Adonis was laying by, and allowed the two to draw away a considerable distance. The pace in the backstretch was very fast, the half being made in 1:06½. Around the upper turn and into the straight Belmont led in an easy stride, Almont Patchen a length behind. The three quarters was made in 1:40½. Down the straight they had a close race. Patchen began forging up as they passed the three-quarters. He caught Belmont half-way, however, and crowded in a winner by a neck in 2:15—his fastest mile. Belmont was not given his best speed at the finish, and his driver seemed content to lose the heat. Adonia dropped in just inside the distance post, having had a very easy heat.

When the pools opened again Belmont Boy started as favorite at $40 to $26 for Adonis and $18 for Patchen. All at once the men who knew a sure thing began to get anxious for Adonia and the three-year-old became valuable. In ten minutes after the first pool was sold he was worth $210, Belmont bringing $85 and Patchen $42, and there were plenty of bidders for the favorite. It began to be whispered that the colt was in for the race and would show some fast work. He was in excellent form and going strong.

When they got off for the heat Belmont repeated his performance of the first heat and took the pole. At the quarter in 0:33½ he was leading by a length, Patchen second and Adonia third, but close up to Patchen. They were the same up to the backstretch. Going into the upper turn Adonis was three lengths back and taking it easily. Half way round the turn he began to close the gap. Before they got to the three-quarters he had caught Patchen and was reaching for Belmont. He showed some good speed on the turn, where he is usually weakest. When they got well into the straight and began the struggle for home, Adonis was at Belmont's wheel. Fifty yards down the straight he collared the leader. They raced together to the drawgate, where Belmont quit and Adonis paced in an easy winner in 2:16½, Belmont getting second and Patchen third. It was the fastest time Adonis had ever shown, and he did it so easily that there was no doubt he could have made it in 2:15.

He was the hottest kind of a favorite after the best and the pools were rather off. Adonis $120, Belmont Boy $14 and Patchen $11. When they came out for the third Billy Dono. than was behind Belmont Boy. When they were sent off Patchen showed in front, with Adonis after him and Belmont Boy laying back. Patchen led by a length up the backstretch and half way round the upper turn, then Adonis began his play for first place. Patchen led him half way down the straight, but the three-year-old was too fast, and swept in by him, winning the heat by a half length in 2:21½.

The fourth heat was a phenomenal one. No pools were sold, as it was looked upon as a dead sure thing for Adonis. Dustin was behind Patchen. At the word Adonis went off fast, and on the turn showed in the lead, Patchen second and Belmont trailing. They made the first quarter in 0:34½. Up the backstretch Adonis and Patchen went almost together, Adonis having a slight lead. At the half, in 1:07, Adonis began to draw away, and led around the turn and into the straight by a length. The three-quarter mark was 1:40. Down the straight Patchen made a last effort, under the whip, but quit at the drawgate, and Adonis went in scarcely faster than a jog in 2:14½, according to the official time, but the majority of the watches held on him made it 2:14 flat. As he finished in so slow a pace there can be no doubt that had Patchen carried him out to a hot finish he would have broken the world record.

The trotting race found Hidalgo, Perihelion and Johnny Hayward as starters, but did not develop much interest. In the first heat Hidalgo took the lead, with Perihelion second, and held it all around to the middle of the straight, when Perihelion rushed in under the whip and took the heat by a neck, breaking at the wire. Hidalgo got second and Johnny Hayward finished a poor third. Time, 2:31½.

The second heat was more interesting. Hidalgo and Perihelion went together from the start to half round the upper turn, when Hidalgo went up and dropped back a length. Hayward trailed all around to the straight, where he had got up within a length of Hidalgo, and in this position they began to race for home. Perihelion held the lead under pressure and got the heat in 2:25, Hidalgo second.

After the heat, which was sandwiched with the pacing race, the pool boxes were opened and Perihelion sold for $50, Hidalgo $25 and Hayward $5. In the third heat Hidalgo took the pole and showed to the front on the turn, Perihelion second. In that position they went to the half, where Hayward passed Perihelion for second place. Hidalgo came in at an easy gait and won from Hayward by a length in 2:30.

A private letter from "Knap" McCarthy, who is in the East, says that he will bring out a three-year-old filly by Red Wilkes to beat Gold Leaf. When the letter was written, Gold Leaf held the world record with 2:15. Now two others have gone below that and the phenomenal Kentucky filly will find three fast ones to beat before she can carry back the trophy. In addition to the filly McCarthy will bring out Lena Wilkes, by George Wilkes, the famous Geneva S., the five-year-old who has won over $15,000 this season, and Rajah, by Sntau. The string will winter at Los Angeles.

Mr. Rose has changed his mind about Stamboul, and will send him again Saturday against time. With a fair day and a fast track there is a good chance of his going under 2:14.

"Wonderful Action."

"Leicester is a well-proportioned, strongly-muscled dark chestnut stallion, a little rising 15 hands in height, with an intelligent, attractive countenance, indicative of a pleasant disposition. He is a pure-gaited trotter, wears a sixteen-ounce shoe forward, without weights, quarter, shin and toe boots, and a padded martingale to prevent striking himself with his hind feet back of his fore legs. This safeguard is unnecessary now, however, as he does not touch at that point."

The above was cut from the "Eastern Department" of The Horseman, and is a description of the finest action ever heard of. Fullerton, after he came into Hickok's hands, had to have a "padded martingale," and we have known a few others with a similar appendage. But in nearly forty years' experience we have never seen a trotter, pacer or galloper which required that kind of buffer to guard against a blow from the hind foot. The nearest approach was the old time trotter, Piledriver, who astringed so badly that his hind feet were jerked so far upward that it seemed as though a very little more force would bring them against his corporosity. He brought them down with so much emphasis that his name was not inappropriate. Nearly, if not quite, thirty years ago he trotted in St. Louis obtaining a second of 2:43, and it was remarkable that he could do that with such an excess of hoek action. Inasmuch as Leicester has a four-year-old record of 2:27, it is scarcely possible that the statement is correct, and that the good colt was prone to strike with the toe of the up-turned forefoot. Hickok reduced the weight of Fullerton's shoes ten ounces which did away with the necessity for protection and also increased his powers of endurance. A few ounces subtracted from the "pound shoe" of Leicester might prove beneficial.

Dash Trotting a Success.

[Sporting World.]

There was an unwonted throng of people at Fleetwood Park yesterday. The occasion was the first systematic trial of dashes for trotters in place of heat races, and the result of the experiment had been awaited with intense interest by the thousands of horsemen who breed, drive or own trotters. It has been a very general expression that by the results of this experiment trotting in this vicinity would stand or fall—that failure would surrender every neighboring trotting track to the runners, that success would assure to the trotting turf a new life and a more prosperous future than its past has known for many years.

If failure awaited the experiment, it would have been well to have had just such a day as yesterday, so that there would be no question about it and no second attempt. The day was one of October's choicest products—rarely bright, free from wind, and warm enough for early September. Hurriedly as the races had been arranged, there was a good field of horses for each event. In quality they were not the best. That they would be, under the circumstances, no one expected. But they were good enough in every respect to afford excellent sport and to test fairly the new system.

The results of the day may properly be summed up as an unqualified and most satisfactory success. Here and there, in discussing the day, some hidebound trotting man would say, "I don't find these dashes as interesting as the heat races." But nine out of ten of the same class expressed an opposite opinion. Every one agreed that for betting purposes and for the convenience of speculators the dash system was vastly better than the heat race.

Much interest was felt in the trial of starting the horses by means of flags, which method was necessitated by the dashes for distances involving fractions of a mile. The starting flag was held yesterday by Col. W. T. Cbester, and Mr. Alfred de Cordova, president of the Driving Club, held the second or advance flag. It may be remarked here that every driver expressed unqualified approval of this method of starting as compared with the old plan of giving the word "Go!" at the wire. In one instance yesterday it secured an earlier start than would otherwise have been possible. Murphy was driving Governor Hill, and as the horses approached the starter he was able, standing on the track, to call out to Murphy, "Do you want to go?" and in response to the driver's nod, to drop the flag. Had the starters been perched on the judges' stand, this could hardly have been done.

The five events were easily trotted in a little over three hours. There was the usual amount of scoring, but as the horses were not as a rule required a second time on the track there were no hitches or delays, and the bell was promptly answered by the starters.

The events of the day were as usual good, bad and indifferent.

The 2:40 race, two miles, was the best of the day. Ferdinand and Billy were the favorites, though Red Star had an occasional friend. The word was given with the pole horse behind and on a break. Charlie R. led the way at first, but Ferdinand and Red Star soon passed him, and after that the race was between them. The black stallion held a lead of from one to three lengths until he climbed the hill the second time, when he tired, and coming home Red Star went by him without an effort and won by two lengths well in hand. The driving of Whelpley in this race was very judicious, and won him much praise.

Perplexed was the favorite in the 2:25 class, one mile. Her previous race seemed to have done her good, for she acted like an angel, and though Corona, who was admirably driven by Harry Howard, made a fine finish, Yereance landed his mare first at the wire.

The 2:30 race, at a mile and a half, occasioned lively betting. Frederic was a big favorite, with Cyclone second choice, and there were many who fancied Mamie Knox. The latter is a bad actor generally, and yesterday she was especially unsteady. After many attempts they were sent away with Mamie Knox jumping up and down. Cyclone took the lead at once and was never crowded during the race. Mamie Knox, when she settled down, would not trot fast enough to go to a funeral, and finished last by about a quarter of a mile.

The free for all, two miles, was a very pretty race between Black Jack and Judge Davis. Black Jack who seems to have recovered much of his old form, had things his own way until the finish, when Judge Davis came on very fast, colored him and should have beaten him. The black gelding was too tired to break and therefore atayed on his feet, while Judge Davis, who was full of go, made a mistake near the wire and was beaten by a length. The summary:

W. H. Wilson, owner of Sultan, tried his hobby of starting horses abreast at a late meeting held in Kentucky, and a horseman present writing of it says: "W. H. Wilson, the starter (as well as the President) of Abdallah Park, last week demonstrated clearly that he could manage a trotting meeting from commencement to finish to the satisfaction of the public, and have the tedious scoring done away with, and all horses started abreast every time. It is also believed that every heat was contested on the square and all horses driven to win, and therefore the meeting was remarkable."

In the four days racing there was but one score, except in two heats where there were two scores in each.

CANOEING.

Oakland Canoe Club

It blew great guns on Sunday morning, and most of the canoes were out having a good time with reefed sails and deck hatches well fastened down. A scrub race round the long course was got together with a good entry, it being a straight run up and down with a heavy wind. The squalls were very severe, and before the turn was made in the basin no less than four canoes retired disabled, Mystic rounding first. Frolic who was second missed stays owing to driver sheet getting loose, and Bonita got around next; Mystic came in first, Frolic, Bonita and Gypsy in the order named. The wind lightened up considerably about 2 o'clock, and some very pretty sailing was enjoyed. Frolic was out with his cruising sail reefed and did well, there being much too much cock on the boom in the whole sail, it will be altered next week. Mystic in storm rig was enjoying the blow with a passenger. Hebe was also out later on. There is talk of subscribing for a fine sailing trophy, and it would doubtless intensify the already keen interest felt, and if possible, the competition, though it would be hard to increase that. A new canoe will shortly be brought to the club house of the Ricalake model.

SALES—W. H. Wilson, of Cynthiaana, Ky., has sold to Byron G. Kimball, of Bradford, Mass., the five-year-old bay mares Ada Wilkes and Madam Brodhead, both bred this year to Sultan, the sire of the great Stamboul. Ada Wilkes is by Hambletonia Wilkes, dam Kate Sparkle (dam of Mambrino Sparkle, 2:17) by Sparkle; second dam Dolly Charta by Magna Charta; third dam Marchioness by Gallatin. Madam Brodhead is by Indianapolis, 2:21, (sire of Indigo, 2:28, and Budd Doble, pacing record 2:20½) dam Mollie, record 2:27, (dam of Shamrock, pacing record 2:27½, and Magna Wilkes, 2:29½) by Magna Charta, 2:33½; second dam Fox Cline by Young Florizel.

Caldwell, Chillicothe, O., the bay colt Senator Rose, foaled 1887, by Sultan, dam Georgiana by Overland; second dam Maggie Mitchell by Clay Pilot; third dam Mignon by Spalding's Abdallah. This colt, Senator Rose, was the winner of the yearling stake at the Abdallah Park meeting a few weeks ago in broken heats, making a record of 1:21½ for half a mile. He afterwards showed an eighth of a mile in 19 seconds, at the rate of 2:32.

Messrs. Platt & McComas, of Helena, have sold to Wm. Hogaboom, of Washington Territory, the roan gelding, Bishop's Hero, record 2:27, five-year old, bred by Huntley & Clark, foaled 1883; son of Princeps, sire of Trinket, 2:14. First dam, Lida Kendall, by Hero of Thorndale 549. Second dam, Mollie Higgins, by Joe Downing 710. Third dam, by Picciola, pacer. Fourth dam, by Robert Bruce. Price $1,250.

Messrs. Huntley & Clark, of Toston, have sold to J. H. Willard, of Minnesota, the bay colt Locksmith 6077, foaled 1886. Sired by Bishop 1688, record 2:37, son of Princeps. The Pony and the Bull.

An adventure in the stock ranges in Nevada is described in the Philadelphia Call which reads well. For its accuracy we are not responsible: I rode once with some cattle buyers through the stock ranges of Nevada. My pony—it was called Bob—had drifted into Nevada, Utah, and was known as a buffalo hunter. Bob was as mean looking as a sheared sheep, and as bullet-headed as a political opponent. However, Bob and I got along very well the first day of our acquaintance; got along, in fact, about fifty Nevada miles, which I have carefully estimated to be equal to sixty five Christian miles.

The next day Bob was tired, or cross, or bored. He regarded the wastes of sage-brush disdainfully, and lunched off the sage-brush while I threaded my whip upon him, and wore out my spurs on his shaggy sides. Then I led him a few miles, and he regarded me in big-eyed meditation. When I remounted, which I did only when my shoes were worn out, Bob appeared so broken up that I felt sorry. I determined to go no further that day than the ranch house that we were approaching, for I did not want Bob's life charged to my cruelty. Just before we reached the house a herd of cattle reached us. I may say reached for ns. A big bull, the biggest and wildest I remember ever to have seen, selected us for a target.

Considering Bob's condition, I was about to dismount and take my chance afoot, when Bob started. I believe he thought he was entered for the Derby. You never saw such a remarkable rate of speed attained by such a remarkable gait. Bob would alternately roll himself up into a ball and stretch out to three times his normal length; his head would go out of sight into his shoulders, and then go out of sight in the distance. Suddenly Bob stopped—very suddenly—so suddenly that it unseated my dignity and pose. Looking about I discovered the cause to be that the bull had stopped. Just as suddenly as the bull began charging the other way, and Bob—that fool of a Bob—began charging the bull. If the bull had been a peck of oats Bob could not have displayed more earnestness in the chase.

Between my anxiety lest Bob should catch the bull, and not know what to do with it, and my uncertainty as to my seat, I was very unhappy. Bob, however, appeared to be having a real good time. The chase was kept up for miles, and until the bull suddenly stopped short, and awning his big-horned head around at Bob and me as we came along. Bob dodged beautifully, and then the bull chased us awhile. The thing was kept up for hours. If the bull wouldn't chase ns, Bob would chase the bull; it was all the same to him—just as much fun for one as for another. I reckon we chased each other—Bob and the bull and I—about fifty miles, when we happened upon a little oasis and Bob and the bull began browsing the unexpected grass together in the most friendly manner. I excused myself and walked back to the ranch.

Mr. Geo. Turner, 1602 Wabash Avenue, Chicago, has evidently taken a fancy to the Herod family. After driving Nubina through a very successful campaign, putting him in the thirty list, and showing capacity to trot a good mile track in 2:20. Mr. Turner bought Heather by Herod, and was so well pleased with him that he has ventured again. His last purchase is the black colt Hawthorn by Herod, dam Maud by Trample.

The Lexington Meeting.

There was one thing quite remarkable in the four days trotting; twelve races were decided, five of which were won by George Wilkes or his sons' get. Baron Wilkes won the 2:25 stallion race. Angelina, by Wilkes Boy (son of George Wilkes), won the Futurity and Special Stakes for two-year-olds; and Repetition, by Red Wilkes (son of George Wilkes), won the Kentucky Stakes. There is another remarkable fact that some may overlook, and it is the great success of Mambrino Patchen mares. Baron Wilkes, Hour and Bermuda's dams are by Mambrino Patchen. Angelina's sire's (Wilkes Boy) dam is Betty Brown by Mambrino Patchen, out of a mare by Mambrino Chief (sire of Mambrino Patchen), and Eglena's dam is by Mambrino Time (son of Mambrino Patchen); making six out of the twelve winners with a cross of Mambrino Patchen. There is also five out of the twelve winners who have a double cross of Mambrino Chief—Baron Wilkes, Angelina (a double winner), Bell Vara and Hour. Breeders as a rule acknowledge that the Mambrino Chief cross is one of the gamest and best we have. While they do not perhaps show as great a turn of speed as the Hambletonians they possess the staying qualities, and these two combined give a first-class trotter.—Lexington Lx.

Disparaging the Horse.

"A writer in one of our contemporaries thinks the intelligence of the horse is greatly overrated, and submits the results of some of his observations as evidence: I have seen horses walk about a post until they had wound up the bridle and then stand there with their heads bound down to the post, because they didn't have sense enough to walk the other way and unwind the bridle. I have seen them get a foot over the bridle when tied to a ring in the pavement, and then go into fits because they didn't have sense enough to lift their feet over the bridle again. I have seen them prance around in a burning barn with their tails and manes on fire, and burn to death, because they did not have sense enough to run out. Anybody can steal a horse without any objection from the horse. A horse will stand and starve and freeze to death with nothing between him and a comfortable stall and plenty of oats except an old door that he could kick down with one foot, or that could be opened by removing the pin with the teeth. If this is a high degree of intelligence even in a brute, then I am lacking in that article myself. Compared with the dog, the elephant, or even the parrot, the horse seems to me to be a perfect fool."

A horse in one of our stables thinks that the intelligence of his owner, man, has been greatly overrated. He has known him to drink whisky until he became brutal and drove and whipped him until he dropped from exhaustion. He has known him to gamble in lotteries, bet on horse races, sit in a draft until he takes cold, eat ice cream and drink hot coffee at the same meal, eat of everything to gormandizing, take medicine to cure his indigestion and immediately overeat again and repeat the operation. He has known him to grossly abuse his animals, his employees, his wife and his children; to gamble and drink half the night and then expect to have a level head for successful business the next morning. He has left his colts and calves in the corn fields and on mean pasture all the winter long to train them to habits of economy and hardness, not knowing that both exhaust vitality, impair the strength and usefulness and lessen their value. He has often seen horses, badly trained and developed by incompetent owners, expected to do as much and act as intelligently as if trained by the most thorough and accomplished owners, and whipped and scolded because they did not know better. Men do not expect the unread and uneducated to make profound statesmen or skilled doctors, but they do expect their poor horses to have sense beyond their training and in that show how very little intelligence they have themselves.—Colman's Rural World.

Waterwitch.

Waterwitch is rapidly moving up to first place among the famous speed producers of the trotting turf. In another year, perhaps a few weeks, she will be known not only as the greatest daughter of Pilot Jr., but also as the greatest of all broodmares. Five of her get have already entered the 2:30 list, two members of the quintette having graduated with 2:20 honors. In this respect Waterwitch is second only to Green Mountain Maid and Emeline, while she has as many speed producers among her sons and daughters as both of those mares. Each year adds to the value of this great mare's blood, and at the present time the following horsea of merit trace directly to her:

Mambrino Gift, 2:20, ch h, by Mambrino Pilot, sire of Mambrinette, 2:24½; Faro, 2:25½; Alfretha, 2:26½; Mambrino Soham, 2:26½; Gift Jr., 2:27½, and Tecumseh, 2:28.

Peri, br m, by Edwin Forrest, dam of Alice Tyler, 2:30, and Gen. Hancock.

Scotland, 2:22½, blk g, by imp. Bonnie Scotland.

Fairy Belle, b m, by Belmont, dam of Nymphia, 2:26½, Elf King, Manxman and Sea King.

Sprite, ch m, by Belmont, dam of Sphix, 2:23, and Spry, 2:28½.

Undine, 2:35½, ch m, by Woodford Mambrino.

Wavelet, 2:24½, b m, by Belmont.

Viking, 2:19½, ch m, by Belmont.

Waterloo, 2:29½, b h, by Belmont.

Warder, 2:38, ch h, by Belmont.

Waterwitch produced speed to the cover of four horses, one of them being a thoroughbred, and all of her foals that were trained have been fast. Elf King out of Fairy Belle is the only one of her descendants that has to our knowledge showed a disposition to pace, although Manxman, his full brother, had a liking for the lateral gait when going slow.

A few of Waterwitch's descendants have been very unfortunate. Mambrino Gift, the first stallion to trot in 2:20, died when upon the threshold of a successful career in the stud. Peri had two of her foals by Tom Rogers, both of which had shown close to 2:30, burned in a stable at Latonia last year. Sirena died at sea. Fairy Belle is also dead, and Manxman, one of her sons, sleeps on the hill at Tuscarora Farm, in Maryland. Had he lived he could not have failed to trot better than 2:30. Elf King has paced a mile in 2:20, and Sea King showed a mile in 2:42 as a two-year-old. Undine died after her first season on the turf.

This year the blood of the famous old mare, whose ashes are buried beneath one of Woodburn's oaks, was to the front in Viking, who reduced his record to 2:19½; Waterloo, who won a race at Syracuse, N. Y., making a record of 2:29½; Wavelet, 2:24½, and Warder, who received a record of 2:33 in his first race.—Spirit of the Times.

Some Leaping Records.

The season of leaping competitions at horse shows is over, and before long horsemen will have to reckon with obstacles of a less yielding nature than wooden walls and tenderly propped gates. One of two morals, according to the taste of the moralist, may be drawn from the performances by these show jumpers. So many of them jump gate, wall, and high gorse fence, that the onlooker may, in his inmost soul, confess that he does an injustice to his own Bucephalus in avoiding gates and six foot fences when hounds run. On the other hand, when he sees some ewe-necked brute galloping right through the wall, sending the gate flying, overturning the fences, and jumping in the middle of the water, splash, he may come to the conclusion that jumping is very dangerous, and many wonder what the tale of grief would have been had these trials taken place at something a little more resembling natural fences. In the course of the forthcoming hunting season some reader may come across an obstacle which will be liked the less the longer it is looked at, or haply he may pound the field by taking a fence in ignorance of its real nature, or by being "committed to it" by reason of the "going" tendencies of his mount, just as Multurn in Parvo's owner was occasionally taken whether he would not. In the annals of the chapter of accidents, however, are to be found some curious records, some of which I give for the possible amusement of those who may be interested in the leaping powers of horses.

What is called riding straight to hounds is sometimes thought to be an accomplishment of comparatively modern institution; but, if old records are to be credited, formidable leaps were taken at an earlier period than is commonly assigned to the commencement of hard riding. The Royal Buckhounds had, we are told, a tremendous run, seventy miles, from the neighborhood of Windsor to Lord Petre's seat in Essex, in the reign of Charles II. There was naturally not much jump left in the four horses which got to the end of this long journey; but the Duke of York and a couple of others are said, in the early portion of the run, to have ridden regardless of whatever fences came in the way. On the 24th of January, 1738, the Charleston hounds (subsequently the Goodwood) had a famous run of ten hours, in the course of which the Lord Hartington of the time rode down one of the steep hills on the edge of the Downs and jumped a five-barred gate at the bottom; this would be very good form even in these days of long necked spurs and cutting whips. In 1753, Sir Charles Turner, who kept foxhounds in Yorkshire, and hunted about Kirkstatham, rode a jumping match which deserves to be mentioned, though the leaps were not particularly formidable. He made a bet of 1,000 guineas with Lord March, the "Old Q" of later days, that he would ride ten miles in an hour, and take forty leaps, each leap to be one yard and a quarter and seven inches high; in other words, four feet four inches. I cannot find out whether touching or knocking down a leap disqualified the rider; but Sir Charles won, doing the whole distance, jumps included, in what appears to be the incredibly short time of thirty-six minutes, especially as he rode a galloway. In 1794, however, we find a Sydenham sportsman taking a formidable piece of timber in cold blood. There was then no Crystal Palace, nor surrounding villas; Penge was a fine grass country, and the residents in those parts had their choice of both fox and stag hounds. The latter had one day run a fox along the meadows near Sydenham, when some of the field came to a gate, guarded by a stalwart butcher who barred the way, and declined to open the gate. The hero of the story "regretted to find that the butcher's temper had been ruffled by some mishap, and asked if he might be allowed to go over the gate." Seeing that it was a full-sized five-barred one, with a paling on the top, the whole being upwards of six feet in height, the butcher gave his consent, and withdrew to one side, expecting to witness a refusal or a downfall. The Kentish sportsman, however, cleared gate, staves and all, the feat, we are told, bringing forth from the morose land slayer the exclamation that he would be damned if he would ever again prevent this gentleman from going through his gates when he thought proper.

At times one hears a good deal about what are called natural jumpers, a term which is not self-explanatory, but which I suppose must be taken to indicate a horse that jumps without any previous training. In those parts of Ireland where the mare and foal ramble together over the banks, the foals learn a good deal of their hunting duties, as they follow their dams anywhere; but they will, of course, do the same in England; and the other day I came across an account of a two months old foal by Strathmore, following the mare over a wall 5ft high and 1ft thick. This youngster may surely be termed a natural jumper. Another foal, bred in 1844, jumped a high gate out of the paddock in which it ran, and the owner was in ecstasies, and looked longingly forward to the time when he should ride this promising juvenile with hounds. By the time he was a year old he was considered an extremely well-grown colt, at two he was remarkably forward, but, alas! he grew ugly, and it was seen that his shoulders were by no means as aloping as they might have been. He was 17.1 by the time he stopped growing, and was utterly useless for a hunter, so he was sold for £50, and went into the Royal Mews, though in what capacity we are not told. One of the most wonderful authenticated leaps on the part of a foal, however, was accomplished by a colt dropped by a thoroughbred mare on the 25th of April, 1884. On the 2nd of June this active young thing, in the presence of three persons, jumped a closely cut thorn hedge 5ft 10in high and 3ft wide at the top, with an up-hill take off, and a ditch on the landing side; the base measurement of the hedge and ditch was 13ft 2in. This colt may also with justice be considered a natural jumper. It was a curious leap, too, that was taken by a young horse bought in Lancashire, and taken into one of the Midland Counties. He was standing with a dumb jockey on in a loose box, which was divided from the adjoining boxes by partitions 6ft 3in high. On the groom approaching, he saw the horse, dumb jockey and all, jump over the partition into the next box. Of horses jumping over great heights with a rider on their backs there are a great many instances, of which a few may be selected. At Rugeley Fair, in 1851, a man who had a horse to sell rode it, at the request of a dealer, over a brick wall which divided the street from a paddock, and then rode him back again into the street. The height, which was measured by the late Mr. White, was 5ft 11in on the street side, and 6ft on the other side. The leap was taken in a cramped situation, and after the owner had shown his horse's powers he sold him for £50. Before the fair was over he changed hands several times, his last buyer giving considerably over £100 for him. Then a gentleman once rode a horse over the wall which used to separate Hyde Park from the Knightsbridge road; the wall was 6ft 2in on the taking-off side, and there was a drop of 7ft on landing. A half-bred hunter in Roscommon jumped a wall 6ft 2in high, with a drop of 6ft 11in; while a great big seventeen hand chestnut horse, shown by Mr. Gebhardt at Islington a few years ago, jumped 6ft 6in at a show in New York. With the editor's permission I shall have something more to say about jumping horses at a future time.—FALCON in Sporting and Dramatic News.

Fox-Hunting Types.

A chatty writer from Queensland Mungal describes some curious people seen at the Covertside. He says:

"Herr Leberwurst aims to be thought an Englishman—he seeks to convey the impression that he couldn't tell you the German for sausage if he tried. Ask him what part of Germany he hails from, and he will mutter 'Hundssohn' under his moustache; but ask him if he's a Devonshire man and he will charge you twenty per cent. less than he would otherwise have done on the next transaction. At the meet he sidles up to you mounted on a livery stable hack (said hack has a heastly habit of standing still for a half a minute and then canoning his tail end suddenly against one's knees). 'Goot-tay, Mr. —. A goot hunting-tay, you dinks? Ve haf ein goot schmell! 'Oh, yes Mr. Leberwurst, burning scent.' 'Ach yahl! oop to der shtoomsch.' The old fraud has a vague idea of 'breast high' in his head. He has been reading the literature of the chase for weeks, and is loaded to his Pimsoll mark with sporting phrases, which he fires off at intervals, and mostly in wrong places. Keen observers believe that he has a lot written on his shirt cuff, and I certainly noticed him furtively glancing thereat from time to time.

Then there's the man who knows all about it, young Snipkins. (On the strength of a trip to England for the purpose of "buying for his firm, he corners innocent Colonials, whom he knows to have been all their life in their own country (carefully avoiding any of whom he has doubts), and bombards them with fabulous accounts of his fictitious experiences. The awe-stricken banana-lander is speedily overwhelmed with "When I was in the Pytchley country"—"first flights," "having the hounds to ourselves," "the only three of us who got over the brook," "the bullfinch that stopped the rest of the field," the locked gate into the road," and so on." "Mungal" humbly begged that his colonial ears might be gratified with the sound of a real view halloo, Snipkins benevolently assented, and loosed off something which "Mungal" described as a mixture of a cooee and a jodel, and he asks me if that is right? Not having heard Snipkins I cannot say, but it seems doubtful. "Mungal's" letter is too long to quote, so I am picking out bits for comment, and cannot find room for all his description of how Snipkins came to grief. He gallantly offered to pilot a lady who was out so as to ensure her being in at the death (of the shin of beef), and tried short cuts with his companion through thickly timbered country where no tracks could be seen. The result was he was "bushed and no matches" to us a colonialism—that is to say, he got lost. Finally this miserable couple reached a main road. He safely delivered his fair charge to her wrathful father about 11:30 P. M., and has not appeared at the meets since.

Young Snobson is another type. He is "going to show these infernal Colonials how to do it," and is got up elaborately; four-ounce jockey boots which he believes to be characteristic of the best English hunts, forming part of his attire. "He wears a good deal of distingue soon per aquare inch," "Mungal" says; but his troubles soon begin. He has a lively bit of stuff under him, wherever he raised it, and the crowd fidgets the animal, the more especially as such a thing as hunting-field etiquette is unknown. He drops his crop and dismounts to regain it. Then the circus begins. He is at last compelled to accept the assistance willingly offered by a couple of foot folks—one steadies the gee, and the other boosts up the rider. Snobson tries to look dignified as he offers his assistants a shilling. "Keep it, matey, and get a pair o' saddlestraps to keep yer on," says one; for young Queensland is a bit too independent to accept payment for helping a lame dog over a stile. Nor are Snobson's troubles at an end. At the first jump he gets over all right, but forgets to bring his horse. He lands on his stovepipe hat, from which he has to be carefully dug out by a German agriculturist. His horse having been secured, he is once more helped up, and revengefully roots his Bucephalus with the spurs, being intent on catching the "infernal Colonials" before it is too late to "show 'em how to do it." Bucephalus doesn't like the spur, so jumps round suddenly and bolts with the bit between his teeth. Snobson saws and says swear words, but all to no purpose, for the gee-gee continues his course, and before his rider has time to sit firm rises at a cowed fence belonging to a local dairyman, and deposits his rider safe and unhurt (physically) in the slush. Snobson is glad enough to accept Mr. Dairyman's offer of a clean pair of moleskins, a coat and hat, and a lift into town in the afternoon cart. N. B.—The infernal Colonial is still waiting to be shown how to do it.

Disastrous Pacing Contest.

NEW ORLEANS, Oct. 21st.—In the race between pacers at Audubon Park this afternoon, John T. Shaw, a prominent merchant and turfman, was driving Muggins against three others, including Newman, a powerful blind horse. Muggins was ahead, when he broke. Before he could be turned Newman struck the rear of Shaw's sulky and climbed over the vehicle, one of his hoofs striking Shaw on the back of the head, fracturing the skull. Mr. Newman was thrown a considerable distance from his sulky unconscious. Next instant both horses went down, the sulky being reduced to kindling wood. It was twenty minutes before Newman regained consciousness. Shaw was found lying between the two horses buried in the debris of the vehicles. He was removed to his home where he still lies unconscious.

CATTLE.

Anthrax.

Doctor Thomas Bowhill, Inspector of Cattle, communicates some interesting facts about the plague which is now decimating herds in parts of the State. He says:

Mention of the terrible scourge, anthrax, occurs in the earliest writings. It is found in the Bible, and Virgil gives a graphic description of the disease, taking it through all its various stages, and concluding with this allusion to the fate of a man who died from handling the wool of anthrax sheep:

But should a man attempt the odious garb,
With burning pustules and disgusting sweat,
His limbs offend, and in no lengthened time
The fire accursed consumes his poisoned frame.

By some later writers the disease is termed in animals sacra ignis and carbunculus in man.

In the year 1845 Gerlach first demonstrated the contagious character of anthrax, and shortly after Pallinder proved the presence of vegetable-like organisms, now known as bacillus anthracis and peculiar to this malady.

In Russia in the year 1864, 7,200 died of anthrax, and in the space of four years in the province of Novgorod, 56,000 horses, cattle and sheep and 525 men fell a prey to the dread disease.

DEFINING THE DISEASE.

Anthrax is defined as an acute infective disease of rapid development and extreme fatality, usually appearing as an enzootic, affecting all animals including fishes and birds, but more especially horses, cattle, sheep and camels, and characterized by the presence and rapid multiplications of the bacilli anthracis in the blood and tissues. It is of universal distribution, no clime being exempt from its ravages.

In Siberia it is termed the "Siberian plague." It is known as "Loodiansh" in India, where it is of frequent occurrence, while in Australia it is termed "Cumberland disease." It is also met with in North and South America and Central and Southern Africa.

The immediate cause of this disease is the entrance of the bacillus anthracis into the blood, and its development there. The bacillus anthracis is the best known of all the endoparasitic fungi. They are found in the blood of animals dead of anthrax in enormous numbers, five to twenty millimeters long by about one millimeter broad, straight and motionless.

In a suitable culture material, with a good supply of oxygen and a temperature of between 15 and 20 degrees C., they develop into very long filaments, and these filaments have round, highly refractile spores which form at short and regular intervals. The filaments then break up and the spores escape and may grow into bacilli.

In the living animal the germ multiplies by division, and spores are never formed.

The bacillus anthracis is always present in splenic fevers in enormous numbers, which may be separated and washed with distilled water, alcohol and ether, and dried, yet they will still cause anthrax fever when inoculated into animals.

This germ always gives rise to anthrax fever and never any other, therefore the germ is recognized as the direct cause of the malady. M. Pasteur asserts that he can modify the micro-organism of anthrax by artificial cultivation.

By inoculating animals with the attenuated virus he is able to cause a mild form of the disease conferring a certain immunity against further attacks, on the same principle that vaccination is a protection against smallpox in human beings.

Pasteur's method of attenuation is as follows: A drop of blood from an animal in the last stages of anthrax is put upon a sterilized glass rod, and placed in suitable clear pabulum, such as fowl broth previously rendered sterile by subjecting it to a temperature of 115 degrees C.

The vessel containing the fluid is kept in pure air at a temperature of from 42 to 43 degree C. The fluid gradually becomes cloudy but no spores are developed.

Now, one drop of fluid thus prepared, and which is in the first degree of attenuation, is put into another vessel containing fowl broth and placed under the same conditions as the first. This process is continued until the requisite degree of attenuation is reached. The greater the intervals which elapse between cultivations and the greater the number of cultivations, the less virulent will the culture become. The vaccine may be injected into the subcutaneous tissue. Great care is required in obtaining the proper degree of attenuation. Large numbers of sheep and other animals have thus been inoculated by Pasteur, and the reports show that the result of his labors have attested the practical value of his investigations.

Anthrax is especially prevalent in low-lying, swampy districts, where the soil is rich in organic matter and salines.

The same influences also act upon animals, rendering them more fitted for the reception of these germs.

Fowls were once believed to possess immunity from anthrax, but Pasteur showed that by immersing them in water and thus lowering their temperature, they could be inoculated with the disease. When not immersed he was not able to induce development of anthrax in them.

Rats when fed on animal flesh, resisted inoculation, while others, fed on bread, readily contracted the disease.

Animals in which no other disease is present, and those in a plethoric condition, are especially liable to attack. Young animals are also more liable than older ones, and it is in those warm, low, marshy districts, where food especially rich and nutritive is growing, and where, in consequence, animals are best nourished, that they afford a more genial soil for the reception of those parasites.

Again, it has been shown in many cases in moist districts, where anthrax has been long endemic, that after thorough drainage the disease has disappeared. A hot, stifling atmosphere, charged with electricity, is said also to favor the development of these germs, but on direct application of electricity to the bacilli they are readily destroyed. Experiments made in this direction having produced highly gratifying results.

Many attacks of anthrax have been traced to the indiscriminate burial of diseased carcasses.

Pasteur claims that the spores of the bacillus are brought to the surface by the earthworms, sometimes a year after the carcasses have been buried; this is a disputed point, however. There are cases on record of dogs which had fed on anthrax carcasses having bitten sheep afterwards and thus inoculated them. Flies feeding in anthrax blood have absorbed in their probosces sufficient poison to convey the germ to the blood of animals. Anthrax may be spread by eating contaminated food, such as the pork, beef, mutton and fowls furnished from Chinatown.

ANTHRAX IN HORSES.

The disease has been known to be propagated by knives used to slaughter cattle and left uncleaned. It often makes its appearance first in an enzootic and then in an epizootic form. The incubation varies from a few hours to several days.

The symptoms of anthrax in the horse are violent muscular tremors, free perspiration and difficult and irregular breathing. There is a total loss of muscular movement, especially of the lumbar muscles and those of the loins. The acute symptoms, especially of nervous complications, abate in a few days. The internal temperature is very high, but falls before death. The animal is affected with a disinclination to move, inco-ordination and loss of power in the muscles of locomotion, and various twitchings of the muscular system. There is a yellowish discharge from the nostrils, sometimes tinged with blood, and the nasal membrane is covered with blood extravasations; the breath becomes fetid and the superficial lymphatics swelled. The respiration becomes tumultuous, the nostrils dilated, the animal foams at the mouth, the temperature declines, the horse staggers at every step, convulsions ensue and at last the animal finds relief in death.

DEVELOPMENT OF TUMORS.

At a certain stage in the febrile symptoms there is an external eruption in various regions. This consists in the development of tumors—the dread malignant anthrax pustules—in the interstices of the muscles in the loose areolar tissue and in the lymphatic glands. They are especially met with in the upper part of the throat, and in the lower part of the neck behind the shoulders, on the back and in the inguinal region. They may appear as well-rounded nodosities, about the size of a walnut, and having a pedunculated base. In other cases they appear suddenly as large undefined swellings, and invade the surrounding parts. They extend rapidly and become cold and insensible, while vesicles appear on the surface. These burst quickly, discharging an irritant, serous fluid. They are filled with gas from the decomposition of the tissues, and thus render the part emphysematous. This is a special feature of the tumors of anthrax. Sometimes the tumors appear without being preceded by any very marked symptoms, and their course is, in all cases, the more rapid the earlier they make their appearance. They attain a large size in a short space of time, and the surrounding tissues mortify as they become invaded. The fever abates with the advancement of the tumors, and the urgent symptoms vanish. In some rare cases the tissues of the tumor are suddenly absorbed and the animal recovers again. The tumor will disappear by resolution, but generally the subject dies in about twelve hours.

HOW CATTLE ARE AFFECTED.

With cattle the first symptom is isolation, blowing, stiffness of the hind quarters, with elevation of temperature. In the great Missouri River outbreak the highest register of temperature was 107 degrees Fahrenheit. Rumination is entirely suspended; the inclination of the animal is to remain in a recumbent position. When standing, the back is arched and the legs stiff, the heart beats with great rapidity against the thoracic walls and the pulse becomes feeble and irregular. Prior to death there is a sanguineous discharge from the anus, and in some cases a similar discharge from the nostrils; frequently vomiting occurs; there is more or less tympany and diarrhoea present; the anus and vulva are everted and of a dark color. Towards the fatal end the eyes sink in their orbits and ecchymotic spots appear on the mucous membrane of anus, mouth and vulva. In milch cows the first great symptoms are partial cessation of milk. Prior to death the ears first and then the limbs grow very cold; after these changes come convulsions, which result in death during the fit or the calm which follows it. The best and fattest of the calves always go first, especially young heifers. Some die in a few hours, others linger for several days. The work oxen are usually the last to become affected, but when the anthrax grips them they succumb to the charge more readily than any other class.

Anthrax in sheep occurs in two forms, the symptoms of the first being a shortened step with an inclination to lie down and rise frequently. They stand apart with the head depressed and the back arched. The contracted step is occasioned by pain in the bowels, as it is noticed before any swelling occurs which would cause an impediment in the step. The sheep with his delicate nature soon becomes a sorry looking object, presenting a dull and dejected air.

The second form is analogous to splenic apoplexy in the cow. The disease quickly arrives at its full development; general tremblings set in, and the animal can no longer stand; there is profuse lachrymation, and the vision becomes very imperfect; blood is discharged as in the cattle, and indications of putrefaction become apparent. Death follows the convulsions. External tumors are rarely seen in the sheep, and then only about the head and udder.

Anthrax sometimes appears in the pig in the form of gloss-anthrax, which is of an anthrax cold nature. Its symptoms are subject to some modification in the pig, though it is most destructive to him, sparing neither the old or the young.

The porker attacked by anthrax frequently dies within an hour after it is noted, it advancing on him so insidiously that there are no symptoms or suspicion of the disease apparent. The visible symptoms are sudden loss of appetite, general prostration and dullness, pendant ears, prominent and haggard eyes, staggering gait, highly injected mucus membrane, rapid alterations in temperature of the body, the vomiting of an unpleasant-looking, blood-tainted fluid, followed by death in convulsions.

DANGER TO HUMAN LIFE.

The treatment of anthrax is always attendant with great personal danger to those in charge on account of its virulent contagiousness. Every available antiseptic has been unavailingly tried in its treatment. The only curative agent is the constitution, which, if strong enough may resist or, indeed, overcome, the virus.

Following are the sanitary laws adopted by the French regarding anthrax:

1. Proprietors or possessors of animals must declare its presence.
2. Isolate from those good in health.
3. Avoid driving to drink or pasturage.
4. Remove the diseased and do not allow them to come in contact with neighboring stock.
5. Mark those that are affected.
6. Do not sell to the butcher.
7. Apply an ax to those which are incurable.
8. Bury the dead in deep pits or bury them at a distance of 200 metres from all habitation or ways of communication or burn them.
9. Bury the litters and alimentary matters in deep pits or burn them.
10. Ask proprietors to disinfect those places which have been occupied by the diseased (meaning sheds and corrals).
11. Forbid the consumption of animals which have ever been ill of anthrax.

Loco.

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN:—In your issue of August 25th I was interested by the article "Loco Poison." Recently the Examiner speaks of the same malady. The Examiner also speaks of a disease in cows, alluded to again in your issue of the 22nd ult. as the "Retuluma Cow Disease." Having had much experience with both, I endeavor to offer a few of the many observations I have made, with both diseases.

The disease of horses known as Loco, originates in the stomach. The brain affection is a symptom merely, which sometimes does not appear, and may properly be termed the "chronic form."

In the first stage of the disease the brain is not affected. The primary affection is of the membranes of the stomach. The brain is involved by distension caused by a superabundance of blood flowing to that organ, caused by the irritation of the stomach. In the more advanced stages, after the brain has been highly inflamed, serum is deposited in the brain cavity, and partial paralysis ensues.

The disease in its inception, is easily cured. In its more advanced stage, or when the animal appears most violently affected, it yields to treatment. In the third or morbid stage, an entire recovery seldom, if ever, takes place. Originally it was thought that the disease was caused by poisoning from eating one or other of the species of "Rattleweed." Now, it is well established that the disease is frequently caused from eating a species of willow, some kinds of clover-hay, and from gathering sand and gravel in eating seed from ranges where seed forms the food.

I have been a breeder in California for thirty-eight years, and have had much experience with Loco in horses.

I am no veterinary, nor am I familiar with scientific terms. The disease of the cows I have known for over forty years as "Mad-itch." Mad-itch is nearly the same disease as Loco, and is originated in the manfolds of the first stomach.

Where cattle are fed stalk fodder and swine allowed to run on the same ground, the malady is nearly certain to appear.

Hogs chew the stalks finely, suck the juice out of it and spit it out in quids somewhat after the fashion of tobacco chewers. These quids are soon dried by the sun and become very light, but at the same time hard, almost as glass, that is the fibres. In gathering food cattle use their tongues, and these fibres are gathered by the tongue and carried to the stomach where they work back into the acute angles of the folds, become imbedded in the mucous membrane and thereby produce inflammation which soon produces blood poison and death, if the animal be not relieved. This disease is frequently cured even in its advanced stages.

If any readers be interested and shall write to me, I will gladly communicate to them special cases, symptoms, remedies, etc., which have come under my observation. I never charge or take pay. Very Respectfully,

J. J. HOLLOWAY.

Points in French Butter Making.

In a foreign paper we find the following respecting butter making in Normandy and Brittany, which is full of good suggestions: Milking takes place twice, and in most places thrice, a day by milkers with carefully washed hands. All the utensils used in the process of butter-making are very simple, and they are kept scrupulously clean. The dairy is always placed on a ground floor in a cool place facing the north, and in a spot where water is readily accessible. Ventilation is carefully looked to. The French are most particular to have their dairies as far as possible from all stables, piggeries, etc., so as to prevent any unpleasant effluvia reaching the dairy. A thermometer is always used so that they can churn at the same uniform temperature from 50 to 53 deg. Fahrenheit. This temperature is maintained by cooling in summer and warming in winter. The skimming takes place while the milk is perfectly sweet, and placed in stone vessels to ripen. It is a most important thing to remember that the sooner milk is skimmed and ripened, the more delicate is the flavor of the butter, and the higher the price it obtains in the market. The simplest of barrel churns are mostly used, and butter comes in the least time when the temperature is 57 deg. Fahr. In winter the churn is warmed before the cream is poured in, and churning takes place in the middle of the day. In summer the coolest period of the day is selected, and the churn is half-filled with cold water and allowed to stand for some time before using. Careful attention having been given to the temperature and the speed of the churn, the operation is carried on until the butter has begun to come in small particles, not larger than a grain of mustard seed. If the operation is continued beyond this point the small particles of butter cohere and imprison among them small drops of butter-milk. This butter-milk can never be properly extracted from the butter when it once gets in, and, as it decomposes very easily, it turns the butter rank. The next process is that of washing the butter. The butter-milk is drawn off and clean cold water is substituted. Three or four turns of the churn are given and the water is drawn off. This is repeated until the water comes out as clear as when it went in. After this the butter requires only a little consolidation with a wooden worker.

Danish Dairies.

The British Foreign Office has just published a report of great practical interest about dairy farming in Denmark:

In 1887 there were 900,000 cows in the different Danish dairy farms, divided among 150,000 owners, and the total annual export of butter, which averaged 19,000,000 pounds between 1877 and 1882, rose to 32,000,000 in 1886 and 45,000,000 in 1887. This notable increase is attributed in great measure to the rapid increase of the use of the centrifugal cream separators, of which there are said to be 2,200 in daily use. Not the least striking movement is the extension of the co-operative system to dairy farming. At present there are said to be 200 co-operative dairies, treating the milk of from 5,000 to 6,000 cows daily. Mr. Inglis appends the rules of one of these dairies, in which the terms of membership, the mode of withdrawal, the quality of the milk, and state in which a member is to deliver it at the central dairy, the winter feeding of the cows, the appointment and duties of directors, and various other matters are provided for. It is said that the system of paying for milk according to the quality of cream contained in it, which was introduced in 1886, in eight dairies, has proved an excellent means of awakening interest in the quality of the milk, and in making farmers more careful. Farmers go through a course of instruction in testing the fatty qualities of milk, and many of the younger dairy hands attend the five months' course of instruction at the Ladalund Farm. Official tables relating to the winter feeding, consumption, produce per cow, cost of such produce, and prices realized are given in the report, and "give an idea of the minute care with which every fact is registered and tabulated in a Danish farm." M. Boggild, in the official report in question, expresses the opinion that no more than one pound daily, per cow, of any kind of oilcake should be used; sunflower cake in small quantities is one of the cheapest foods known, but if more than half a pound is given the butter may acquire a peculiar sweet and greasy flavor. Cotton-seed cake is not much used; carrots are the best root fodder, and it is believed that in future swedes and other turnips will be but sparingly used. M. Inglis has investigated certain depreciatory remarks in English papers on the quality of Danish butter are due to the great care devoted to its production, and to the beneficial influence exercised by the co-operative dairies, which lay down standards, and an English judge at the recent Copenhagen exhibition emphatically asserts the purity of Danish butter and the utter absence of adulteration on the part of the farmer. The report contains plates representing the ground plan of a working dairy at the exhibition, a section of the cream separator most in use in Denmark, and other testing and separating appliances.

The People and Meats.

It goes without saying that those who make money in growing any kind of fat stock are those who produce an article which meets with the approval of the best paying consumers, is an editorial remark of the Stockman. Please their fancy, and one's stock is popularized and the top of the market secured. To work up to his own notion of what is good is a matter of no consequence to the producer unless that notion tallies with that of the man who stands with open purse offering a premium for the best to be had. To put it briefly, a certain standard must be reached if the top of this market is secured. But it must not be overlooked that this standard is by no means stationary. It is an ever-advancing measure of quality. Those who pay the best prices now eat better beef than the markets afforded a generation ago. Our own observation goes to show that the choice beef retailed to-day has never been surpassed, and certainly has not until within recent years been equaled. One reason why so many do not find cattle-feeding profitable in the ups and downs of a term of years is that they never grow anything which sells among the best. The same remarks are as plainly applicable to sheep, and in a limited way to swine.

Successful Breeding.

Success in breeding depends quite as much upon close attention to all the details of management as upon anything else. The herd or flock, it must be admitted, is rather a jealous mistress and is apt to earn dividends somewhat in proportion to the degree of care bestowed upon it. The greatest breeders of all times have been men passionately fond of their animals, and it must be conceded that where "the inspiration of enthusiasm" is wanting the chance of pronounced success are not especially brilliant. Of those Bates it has been written: "Those who have strolled with him in his pastures can recall how the cows and even the young heifers would lick his hand and seem to listen to every gentle word and keen comment, as if they penetrated its import;" and another writer says: "The enjoyment of his life was in his cow pastures, which were generally visited once or twice a day, and the history and points of each animal made known to any visitor, as it came up to have its head rubbed. On these occasions he was in the habit of manipulating the animals all over, pressing them gently with his fingers, thereby to detect unevenness or want of quality in any particular part and guard against the patchy appearance that so many Shorthorns exhibit, being overloaded in one place and bare in another." It is this personal attachment to the animals under one's charge that insures that degree of thought and attention inseparable from success; and while in the case of the herder or feeder such feeling may sometimes result in overburdening some favorite beast with the good things of the granary, and lead likewise to some display of temper upon the part of the faithful attendant when a "pet is beaten in a show-yard, yet it is the absence of such intimate relations—much oftener met with than the opposite condition—that in a great measure explains the indifferent results attained by some people in the breeding of improved livestock. Periods of general depression, such as most breeders have passed through of late, are especially apt to wean the more fickle-minded from their attachment to the members of the herd or flock, but it is during just such times that the deepest interest in their welfare will bring the greatest proportionate reward. Stay by your good things, study your business closely, modify your practice to meet altered conditions, and time may be safely trusted to do the rest. Neglect never yet lifted a mortgage or bettered a bank account, and just now the thrifty breeder will bestir himself to see that provision is made for carrying the live stock properly through the winter months. Feed is cheap, it is true; but it is never so low as to justify a reliance upon corn alone as taking the place of reasonable shelter from cold and inclement weather. Now is a good time to look to this. —Breeder's Gazette.

Judging from the number of big-jawed cattle this fall, the disease must be increasing in the country. Nearly a car load was shipped into San Francisco some weeks since, but fortunately the health officer found them and they were condemned. The meanest thing in connection with this shipment is the fact of their having been gathered up by a shipper because they could be bought cheap, and then offered to the public as healthy food. The man who offered these diseased cattle on the market is just as guilty as if he had succeeded in selling them, and a number of persons had become infected and death-smitten by their consumption. He tried to accomplish this, and the laws should be so framed as to permit his punishment in a degree corresponding with the magnitude of the attempted crime.—Cheyenne Journal.

Stamboul, 2:14 3-4.

A quarter of a second does not appear to be much of a lowering of a record to people who are not fully posted in trotting affairs, but when it comes to taking that from as fast a rate as 2:15, it has a good deal of significance.
In the case of Stamboul it has a peculiar bearing. His fastest previous mile was made at Los Angeles, and some are apt to be sceptical when "Time" is the question.
He was at home, people argued, and not unlikely that favoritism influenced those who took the official time.
This is thoroughly disposed of, and more than that clearly demonstrated that he is capable of further reduction.
His race of the previous Saturday was sure to take away the fine edge of his speed. As is stated elsewhere the track was deep, and a horse with such action as Stam-boul is gifted with, is not adapted to show the best on heavy ground. With only three days intervening there was not time to recover fully, and the muscles could not have regained elasticity after being so severely tried.
Then, too, the training for so important a race as the National was not what would have been given for a fast mile, and we have not the least hesitancy in predicting that if he is left in Hickok's hands a few weeks longer that he will make the mile fast enough to place him very close, if not in the front of trotting stallions.

Regarding the time announced we are enabled to say that it cannot be questioned. We were in the press stand immediately over the wire, and our watch marked fourteen and two-fifths. The track was in good shape, Hickok thought it a trifle too hard, but in our opinion it was just right. The day was not as favorable as many of the October days in California, there being a strong wind which retarded the horse in coming around the upper turn. Give him a chance, Mr. Rose. Leave him until the track becomes settled after the Blood-Horse meeting has come to a close, and it may be that another fastest on record will be marked to the credit of California. Quien Sabe?

Sunol, 2:20 1-2, Palo Alto Belle, 2:28 1-2.

Two grand two-year-olds, one the bright star of the trotting firmament. Some years ago, writing of the wonderful performance of Wildflower, she was given the foremost place in the trotting calendar. There were good reasons for this rating, and now there are still better for placing Sunol on the throne. Maud S. has the first place by a second and a quarter. Wildflower had a whole handful of these minute fragments of a minute the best of her age, and now after the lapse of so many years every effort made to surpass 2:21, the best that even Kentucky-bred colts could do is two and a half seconds behind the time made by Sunol. Granting that 1½ taken from 2:10 is a huge subtraction when the time of a two-year-old is lowered from 2:21 to 2:20½, it will bear comparison. One-quarter of a second will be a grand drop from 2:08½, but should a youngster of the class of Wildflower or Sunol meet with a fair share of good luck, it certainly seems that it is only a question of good luck that it should be made. A virulent distemper destroyed the chances of Wildflower, and there have been mishaps to others of the Palo colts which had a fair show to rival the Empress of the tracks.

But there are reasons beside a half second, the best record to rate Sunol the superior of Wildflower. Although the latter had a remarkably speedy formation, we consider Sunol of still higher form. In fact, it is difficult to pick a fault in the make-up of the handsome filly, and from all points of view she is very nearly a model. As her portrait will be given as soon as our artist can make the sketch, there is no necessity for amplification on this score. Form being one of the main points in trotters as well as race-horses, superiority in that respect is a grand "pull," but if anything of still greater importance is the breeding. We shall not offer a word which can be considered derogatory to the well-earned reputation of the St. Clairs. That rests on too solid a foundation to be shaken, but rubies are no less valuable if diamonds are rated above them, and there are good grounds for giving the preference to Sunol when the objective point is to "beat the record." That record is held by a mare which is of similar blood lines. Both by sons of Rysdyk's Hambletonian, both having thoroughbred granddams.
The granddam of Maud S. by Boston, the granddam of Sunol by Lexington, a son of Boston.

Then again the second on the list, Jay-Eye-See is also by a son of Hambletonian and his granddam a thoroughbred mare by Lexington. Given a greater degree of speed than either of these had at the same day, only a second and a half behind what Jay-Eye-See had when two years older, with form equally as good if not better, blood which is so closely allied as to be practically the same, and certainly it is not extravagant to expect a better showing when there are fully matured powers.

Palo Alto Belle had the disadvantage of trotting on the day the National was decided, and as heretofore stated the track was far from being at its best to make fast time upon. Still 2:28½ is a great mark for a two-year old. Regarding her breeding it is sufficient to say that she is by Electioneer, her dam Beautiful Bells.
The family has gained such high renown that it would appear as though we underrated the intelligence of our readers to amplify upon it and it is not at all in accordance with our feelings to confine the consideration to the short space available now.

Out of School.

After the long confinement occasioned by the tribulations attendant on getting ready for the National, we feel like a schoolboy with the long holiday before him.
Strong was the feeling to play truant while the circuit was progressing and now that the embargo has been removed it is still difficult to settle to work.

There are a hundred interesting topics to discuss, a whole lot of grand youngsters to write about, and some of the older division which are well worthy of special commendation. Yolo Maid, Adonis, Gold Leaf a brigade of sidewheelers bred and reared upon California soil that defy the world, and for promising trotters the crop is a grand one. Sunol, Direct, Margaret S., Gos-siper, Vesolia, Balkan, Strathway, Redwood, Alfred H., etc., etc.

Ben Ali, 2:22.

In the summary of the race between Ben Ali and Maggie E. the time of the latter, 2:19½, was credited to the son of Patchen. Although in the account of the heats the time was correctly stated, while it could not mislead careful observers, it is as well to correct it now.

The National Decided.

The National Trotting Stallion Stakes has now become a part of the history of trotting events, and a prominent chapter it will be in the volume. In many respects it is worthy of extended notice. It was the largest trotting stake ever opened for free-for-all stallions. There were the greatest number of nominations of entire horses ever known. For the first time in trotting annals six stallions were named with records inside of 2:20, with another only a quarter of a second behind that figure.
Of the nine nominations seven were bred in California.
We have written so much in relation to the race and the horses engaged in it, that a repetition in that direction might be tiresome. Still there are notable features which it will not be proper to pass. Never in our knowledge has there been so much bad luck in the same number of horses in one season. Of the nine nominations seven went wrong. The disastrous fire at Palo Alto was the death of Rexford, and this young horse was a great deal faster than anyone outside of the stable was aware. Dawn had a leg which prevented him from trotting last year, and early in this season it was seen that he must be laid up. Before the second payment became due he was "fired and blistered." Jim Mul-venna, from some unknown cause, developed so much temper that he had to be thrown out of training, and this wonderfully "speedy" horse was counted out. That Palo Alto would have been a dangerous competitor had he come to the post all right, no one of the least candor can gainsay. Never a four-year-old which gained so much distinction as he did in his campaign of 1886, and even the brilliant series of victories, was not up to the mark of what he had shown in private. The four named were disabled before the second payment became due.
After the first of September Director and Guy Wilkes met with such serious mishaps that the final payment in the stake was not made. Guy Wilkes trotted two races, winning the first, owing to his competitors being of "little account" on the day of trotting. A fourth heat in 2:24, and a fifth in 2:25 for that class of horses is sufficient proof. A far better race was his second, in which he was beaten, and from that it was hoped that he would display his old form when the 20th of October came.
What the ailment was appears to be in doubt.

His owner claimed after the race was decided, that he could have started and won. Were that the case, he missed the grandest opportunity of his life, but this view will not be shared by others where prejudices do not mislead their judgment. In our opinion it was the best race ever trotted in California, and for that matter, the best race ever trotted by stallions in any country.
Without taking into consideration the slowness of the track, four such heats were never made by entire horses, the plural being used as Woodnut is entitled to within a fraction of as much glory as Stamboul. If Mr. Corbitt is sincere in his expressed belief he displayed a whole plume of white feathers in not permitting his horse to start.

It was a sad disappointment to the many admirers of Director that he was incapacitated from starting. He was doing well up to the time of making second payment, and not until the Tuesday before the race did Mr. Salisbury lose hope. In what was intended to be the last work previous to the race he wrenched his shoulder and that so badly as to preclude thoughts of his participating.

And now for the starters. Supererogatory to say much in addition to what has already been presented about Stamboul, and yet there are additions which could not be passed without doing him injustice. Unjust to the horse and, furthermore, unjust to the man who had him in charge for two weeks preceding the race. We regard the race as the best he has shown, not even excepting the Los Angeles performance, although the time of that was faster. As has been intimated the track was slow.
The fast time made by Sunol the day before might mislead those who were not aware of the difference. Friday the loose dirt was scraped away from the inside and deposited further out. The track was watered Friday night and harrowed to quite a depth Saturday forenoon.
Even the inside position was soft, beyond that it was so deep that the horses sank half the depth of their hoofs.
Stamboul glides along without much bending of knees and hocks, and at no time in the first heat could he get on even terms with Woodnut, although his driver made every effort. Although Woodnut's action is better adapted for heavy ground, when in the second heat Stamboul got the pole and forced him to the second place from the fence, he was at a disadvantage. Mr. Hickok informed us that he realized the importance of better "footing," and that to win the race he must secure the firmest ground.

There was a regular volley of dirt thrown by the leading horses, and when that is the case the track must be slow. In relation to the training and driving. His former mentor, Walter Maben is worthy of all the credit of making a fast trotter of Stamboul. From colthood to the present time he has handled him. He has taught the colt a rate of speed which approaches the phenomenal, and has piloted him in races which required a high order of skill as a reinsman. But it could scarcely be expected that a young man, however skilful, could cope with a trainer and driver of the experience of Hickok. Joined to that experience is acuteness in all pertaining to trotting horses. Mr. Hickok had an opportunity to study the horse before he took him in charge. He had been beaten by him, had turned the tables and his quick perception caught at the causes for Stamboul's defeats. With this knowledge he adopted a system which proved to be correct. Familiar as we are with the talent which Hickok has displayed, as our acquaintance covers a quarter of a century, and rating him as one of the foremost masters of the profession, we were not prepared to see such an exhibit. He may have sacrificed a portion of the great speed which Stamboul possesses, that is speed for a brush, but when a horse finishes by trotting the last quarter of a mile in 32½ seconds, that is better than going "round the first turn" or up the backstretch at a higher rate. At all events, Stamboul must now be accredited with the valuable quality of "rating." This was not only shown in the National, but still more strongly exemplified in his match against time. First quarter in 33½, half in 1:07, second quarter 33½ seconds, a break in the third made this the slowest of the four, 34 seconds, and the home quarter in 33½ seconds. Had it not been for the break, the third quarter would, in all probability, have been as fast as the second. Hereafter we will present the changes made in training Stamboul, as it will be a lesson worthy of consideration.

As was predicted some time ago the second in the race. Woodnut, gained nearly as much credit as the winner. We rank his last race as a superior performance to that when he beat Guy Wilkes and Stamboul at Sacramento. The glamour of success is apt to overshadow everything else, and the horse which comes to the winning score first absorb all the encomiums. Not having witnessed the contest for "The Grand," we are not in a position to write authoritatively on that point, but in The National had a better opportunity than any other observer to come to a proper conclusion. In the first heat when Woodnut secured the pole Stamboul could not overcome the advantage. In the second heat he had enough the worst of the start to lose that advantage before fifty yards were covered and when he essayed to beat Stamboul up the backstretch the heavy going held him back. The gap he closed on the homestretch when that quarter was trotted so fast, proves how "speedy" he was, and the persistency with which he hung to his competitor demonstrated his "game." Beaten by so little, "a short head," who shall say that the glory of that heat did not belong to him? He struggled valiantly to the end. When nearing the half mile post in the last heat he threw off a quarter boot, and we could see that it was a hindrance as he fell back when the boot came off and did not regain his stride until he had lost a good deal of ground. Whatever has been said heretofore it cannot be claimed that he did not trot fairly all through the race. There are other features which will be discussed in the future.

We have little to say about Antevolo at present. Hereafter a full account of his troubles will be given, as we hold that the lesson will be of great value to those who are unfortunate enough to meet with similar mishaps. We may be pardoned for exulting over the fact that he was the only horse engaged in the race which "had a leg" and started in it. From all we can learn Dawn is the only one which was as seriously affected, as it is well known that an injury to a hind leg in a trotter is a greater drawback than a like injury to the anterior limb. Our main anxiety was to start him and that desire has been gratified. Furthermore the "bad leg" is no worse than before, though the "well leg" "filled" from doing the work of both. As the tendons do not appear to be involved we hope that it will be transient. Two accounts are published, that of our reporter being supplemented by the Chronicle account in order to give our readers a statement which would not be liable to the charge of favoritism.

We also append the first great stallion trot that of 1860 thinking it will be of interest in connection with this:

The First Great Trot of the Season.

Geo. M. Patchen and Ethan Allen Patchen Victorious.

The anxiously looked for meeting of these two famous stallions came off at the Union Course, L. I., on Wednesday, the 16th inst.

The day was overcast and chilly for the season, and the attendance, though large, not quite equal to what we had expected; the crowd possibly numbered from four to five thousand persons. For several days previous to the trot the Patchen party had been very confident. There assurance was based first on the report of a private trial in which the Jersey horse had gone a quarter in 33 sec.; and secondly on the conviction that he could stay, as well as go, whereas Allen is notoriously unable to improve on his own time, and if pushed in the first heat invariably falls back in subsequent ones. We were therefore somewhat surprised on reaching the ground to find Allen decidedly the favorite at 5 to 4.

Both horses in liabs, coats and condition generally, looked all that could be desired, but we remarked at least three bar shoes among the two. Neither of them however, showed any signs of tenderness, but Patchen did not seem so quick on his feet as Allen. He has indeed, a most deceitful way of going, slipping over the ground with long, low strides, so that it requires a practiced judge of pace to appreciate his speed. Both horses were driven nearly two miles to "warm up," and the magnificent action of the little Morgan made him still more a favorite, 100 to 60 being offered in some cases. The track was a bit heavy; owing to this and the day there was a general disposition to bet against very fast time. We believe no one dared to predict anything better than 2:26.

Tallman held the ribbons over Patchen, and drove him with perfect tact and skill. Pfeiffer handled Allen capably, but struck us as being at least, a stone over-weight, which is more than a little horse can afford to give away to a big one. Ethan drew the pole, and at a quarter past three, after one false start, they were off for the

FIRST HEAT.

Allen outfooted Patchen from the score and took a lead of two lengths to the quarter in 37 sec., Patchen then closed up a little, but could not quite reach Allen's wheel. The little horse passed the half-mile post a clear length ahead in 1:12, and preserved the same lead all through the third quarter, but as they turned in the homestretch Patchen lapped him. At the drawgate Ethan went up, and though he caught quickly, as he generally does, the Jersey horse was already a half a length ahead, and at the distance had increased his advantage to a length. Tallman now took his horse in hand and drew the thing very fine, for Ethan made a magnificent spurt at the finish, and was only beaten on the score by a neck. Time, 2:25, remarkably good considering the day and the track.

Second heat.—2 to 1 on Patchen. Time betting as low as 2:23: why, we couldn't see, unless Patchen was to go for the fun of the thing, since it was clear Allen could never drive him to that time. After three false starts they got off, Patchen making play from the score this time at a tremendous pace and leading a length to the quarter in 36 sec. Allen then closed up a little, but before reaching the half-mile pole Patchen let out a link and opened the daylight. Time, 1:11. Just after passing the half-mile pole Allen broke and Patchen led two lengths round the last turn. Inside the drawgate the little horse broke again, and Patchen sailed right away from him, winning by four lengths, in 2:24.

Third heat.—Dollars to Dimes, and no takers. A number of false starts, Allen scoring faster than Patchen. At last they got a beautiful send off, and trotted together to the first turn, after which Patchen opened out and led to the quarter in 37 seconds, a full length. Just before the half mile post Allen broke and lost four lengths. The race was now "all over but shouting." Patchen passed the post in 1:13 and went over the last half mile at his leisure, but still widening the gap and coming in the easiest of winners in 2:29. Thus ended the capital trot. The big horse has covered himself with glory; he never made a skip in the three heats, and could evidently have shown two seconds better time if called on. Should he win the remaining two matches in equally good style, he need not fear any horse, mare, or gelding in the country, save always the unapproachable Flora.

Eureka Jockey Club—A Grave Error.

A mistake which would have been serious had there not been time to correct it was in giving the time of the closing of the entries of the Eureka Jockey Club, Sept. 15th, and the error led to throwing out the "ad" as dead. The cause of the mistake it is unnecessary to scrutinize, and the redeeming quality is that the remedy is within reach. We learn from the Secretary, Mr. Cohn, that the prospects for the fall meeting could not be better. Last week nine horses came from Oregon, and there will be a large contingent from this section. The track has been greatly improved since the July meeting, turns raised to a grade of three-quarters of an inch to the foot, eight inches of loam put on, and to insure proper quarters for the horses 18 new box stalls built.

Entries to Eureka Jockey Club close October 15th.

Errors Corrected.

We are under obligations to The Horseman for correcting errors which appeared in a communication published October 6th in this paper. It had an air of candor and inasmuch as we join in the views of the writer, that continuous racing day after day for months at a time is detrimental to the sport, supposed that the meeting at Washington Park had been injured by that on the west side. We are pleased to learn, however, that the late meeting was successful in every way, and suppose that the error, in that respect, came from the summer meeting being superior. Such an immense affair as the summer exhibition proved to be is likely to make others of less magnitude smaller than the really are, and the comparison is scarcely fair. It is hardly within the scope of legislative action to limit the time for a race meeting, but if Chicago has the same drawbacks to horse sports which are felt here, the limitation of betting and pool-sales would be a move in the right direction.

In all probability the errors came from associating outside talk with the views of the directors, and that there was a good deal of error was evident from the telegrams received by the daily press.

We copy the whole so that our readers can understand the exact situation.

It is not often that our California contemporary, the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN, gets imposed upon by false information, but in its issue of October 6th it publishes a letter from Chicago, under date of September 15th, which contains several gross misrepresentations. The statements in dispute are as follows:

"The fall meeting of the Washington Park Jockey Club is a thing of the past, and no one seems to be more thankful than the Executive Committee. It has had a number of difficulties and annoyances to contend against, and in the face of them all has done remarkably well. The meeting has not been a pronounced success, and it is more than likely that Chicago has seen the last of fall racing, at least for some time to come.

There is no denying that the continued running at the West Side Park has hurt the older organization, but then it is doubtful that even if the former had closed its gates whether the latter would have been a success or not. The people of this vicinity have had too much of racing this year, and that fact is well recognized by the Washington Park people, who are beginning to look around for a remedy. The question has been discussed on all sides, and a number of different solutions have been offered, but the most favorable as well as the most feasible one seems to be the getting of the Legislature to pass a law limiting racing in Illinois to thirty days during the year on any one track.

The club directors held a meeting for the express purpose of wrestling with this question, and came to the conclusion that their only salvation would lie in having such a law passed. There is not much doubt but what it can be done, and before the racing season of 1889 is opened, an ordinance will be seen upon the statute books prohibiting more than thirty days' racing in the State of Illinois on any one track. Such a law will be thankfully received by the better element of racing circles in this locality, and they will do all in their power to have it passed.

At the same meeting it was practically decided to discontinue the fall meetings of the club for the present, and the programme for the year 1889 was formally agreed upon. This calls for a summer meeting commencing on June 22d and ending on July 24th, with an average of five races to be run every week day between those two dates."

The Executive Committee had no difficulties or annoyances to face in connection with the autumn meeting of the Washington Park Club, as the meeting was a most harmonious one from its commencement to its conclusion. From a financial standpoint it was a success, and the statement that Chicago has seen, in all probability, the last of fall racing, has no authority except the anonymous scribe who wrote the letter. The directors of the Washington Park Club have held no meeting to discuss the feasibility of asking the Legislature to pass a law limiting racing in Illinois to thirty days on any one track. The subject has not been discussed formally or informally by either the officers, racing stewards or the Board of Directors. The only meeting of the Board which has been held since the close of the autumn meeting was called specially to consider the programme for the summer meeting of 1889, and one of the by-laws expressly stipulates that the Board can only discuss the question for which they have been called together. The programme for the summer meeting of 1889 was the only subject which the racing stewards laid before the Board, and we have excellent authority for saying that neither before the meeting or after its close was the subject of past or future autumn meetings or legislative enactments mentioned at all. The paragraph is almost wholly a fabrication of fancy and falsehood.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Ben Ali is being credited in the Eastern press with a record of 2:19½. The BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN does so also in summary of race (page 223) although in preceding description the time named is given to Maggie E. Would it not be as well to call attention to the error before it goes any further? SUBSCRIBER.

BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN, San Francisco, Gentlemen:—I received several letters to-day from different horsemen, asking how it was that the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN stated in their issue of the 13th inst., that the entries for our Fall races closes on the 15th inst., while the advertisement states on the 15th of November. Furthermore I was very much surprised that this week's issue did not have our advertisement in it. We notice also that dates of meetings and closing of entries of the same is placed on the top of your editorial column, but that ours has been omitted. Please attend to and correct the errors, and make mention of it in your editorial of next issue. Our fall meeting we expect to be a great success, from entries received so far, and horses at present here in training last week. Nine horses arrived overland from Oregon. Our track has been placed in good condition, far better than what it was last July. Eight inches of loam has been put around the entire track, and the turns raised three-fourth inches to the foot, also 18 new box stalls have been put in, making enough to accommodate 75 horses. Yours truly, HARRY COHN.

Springfield, Mass.

The Springfield riflemen have covered themselves with glory at the late Creedmoor meeting. They carried off several prizes. H. P. N. L. S. Farnsworth of this city made a score at 200, 500 and 600 yards in the Hilton trophy match that has never been equaled at Creedmoor. Massachusetts won the Interstate and Hilton trophies. This city had the following men on the Massachusetts State team: Lieut. Bumstead, Corp. W. W. Bull, Privates F. R. Bull, L. T. Farnsworth and T. T. Cartwright. Lieut. Bumstead made a run of ten consecutive bull's eyes at 200 yards, offhand, with a Springfield regulation rifle.

At the Massachusetts State shoot the Springfield city guards won the first team prize and the tricolor for the Second Regiment Infantry making the score of 200 points, seven shots each, seven men, no sighters; this is the best score yet made for it. The city guards have now won the trophy two years in succession.

The Western Massachusetts Rifle Association was recently formed and officers chosen. The Association will hold its first annual rifle tournament October 30th. The past week has been a lively one for this city as the Bay State Agricultural Society has been holding its second annual show and exhibition in the exhibit of cattle, horses, etc. There was probably one of the finest exhibits ever seen in this country, there being over 1,000 animals.

The poultry exhibition was also good. Some of the finest Percheron horses in the United States were exhibited, among them the mare Rosell, 16 hands high, weighing 1450 pounds, foaled March 12, 1885, bred at the Elmwood Stock Farm, and has won $122 in prizes in two years. Noyes W. Fish of this city took first prize for the best pair of draught horses with his handsome pair of Percherons which he uses on his heavy dray, he also exhibited a fine pair of matched carriage horses which were much admired. John W. Aiken of Scipio, N. Y., took first prize for full bred Percheron stallion. Esthan Brooks of West Springfield secured. M. Aiken also took first prizes in the following classes: Yearling stallion over 1 year, mare over 4 years, fillies 2 and 3 years, yearling filly and mare with foal at foot. A. W. Wildes of Chicopee Falls, took several first and second prizes for trotting stock. The Payne Stock Farm also took prizes for trotting stallions. Mr. Aiken had 32 Percheron horses at the fair. Revier, the stallion is a fine animal, is 16½ hands and weighs 1,750 pounds, being a nice white color, and was much admired.

The cattle exhibit was one of extreme fineness, some of the exhibits being the best there are in the country. Mr. W. A. Russell of North Andover exhibited a fine herd of Holsteins, among them the fine bull, Lord of Cornwall, who carried off first prize. He is 5 years old and weighs 2,400 pounds, is a very quiet animal and children can play around him at any time.

The only herd of Galloway cattle in the New England States was on exhibition by Mr. E. N. Russell of Shoreham, Vt. They are jet black in color and were much admired, three of them were imported from Scotland, the bull Green Mountain Boy, and the cows Fanny and Dolly, there are but one or two other herds in the United States. The Aberdeen Angus is another class of Scotch cattle that attracted much attention, there being two herds, L. B. Harriss of Lyndon Center, Vt., being the owner of the largest herd. I. A. Frye took first for Jersey cattle in Devons, Jonathan Hoag of Tomhannoch, N. Y., Joseph Hilton of New Scotland, N. Y., took prizes. The poultry exhibit was good and was judged by H. S. Hall, W. B. Atherton and H. B. May.

The first three days of the fair there was a bad rain falling most of the time, consequently the attendance was poor. The society will lose over $10,000, which is guaranteed by the citizens' committee; the expenses alone are over $40,000; all the prizes, premiums and gold medals have been awarded. The exhibition of farming implements was very fine.

Rifle shooting is now about over for this season, as little or no interest is taken in it by the local club.

T. T. Cartwright, the well known rifle-shot, has severed his connection with the rifle company of this city, and has accepted a position with the well known revolver manufacturers, Smith & Wesson.

Mr. J. A. Huggins, the well known rifle-shot of Pittsburg, Pa., was in town the other day, and while here obtained a Smith & Wesson 32-44, Russian model, as he intends to take up revolver shooting. At the fall tournament of the Massachusetts Rifle Association at Boston, he won first prize in the offhand rifle match, and fifth in the revolver match.

The Whitmore hammerless shotgun, invented and patented by Mr. A. C. Whitmore of this city, will soon be put on the market and will be made in Boston, Mass. Experts who have examined it pronounce it the best hammerless yet introduced. The price will be low and each gun will be made as good as fine machinery and fine workmen can make it.

The gun business is dull here but the revolver trade is flourishing. Smith & Wesson now employ 550 men and turn out over 300 of their fine revolvers a day. They are shipping large quantities to Europe where they find a big market.

"SPRINGFIELD."

The tenth annual target shoot and picnic of the Austrian Military and Benevolent Association was held at Harbor View Gardens on Sunday last. The military company, under command of Captain J. M. Russell, marched from the Austrian headquarters at No. 310 O'Farrell street to Union Square, where the cars were taken for the gardens. Dancing was carried on in the pavilion, while shooting progressed in the range. Those having charge of the affair were P. M. Miloglov, President of the Association, and a committee consisting of J. M. Russell, V. Zupar, M. Rudolovich, A. M. Batchia and G. Josich. The shooting contest was for two gold medals and several cash prizes, which will be distributed next Saturday night. Each contestant had five shots over the 200-yard range. The following scores were made: Otto Kunze, 25, A. Tomisch, 21, A. Rsdich, 18, Felix Dlaw, 14, N. Erdleich, 14, B. M. Enren, 11, L. Veevich, 11, Jerry Fairis, 10, M. Herzo, 9, N. Melardien, 7, C. Radovir, 7, M. Kapusch, 6.

There are various opinions about what can and cannot be done with a rifle. It is presumed that every rifleman has met individuals who relate startling stories about the skill possessed by some friend, and when the work is compared with that of honest riflemen, it would seem as though the work of a really skillful marksman dwindled into insignificance beside the feats said to be accomplished by somebody's friend, uncle or grandfather. Such feats are often performed with an old muzzle-loading rifle; that poor old muzzle-loader! how many colossal falsehoods have been laid at your door!

Many tales of marvelous marksmanship have been related by sensational writers, and some of the fiction scribblers have made such blunders as to make their recitals ridiculous. If a person desires to introduce rifle and pistol shooting into a narrative or conversation, it would be well to familiarize himself with the possibilities of those weapons, for at the present time there are a large class of persons who are well aware of what can be done with rifle and pistol, and to those who are prone to relate startling tales of wonderful marksmanship, we would say, don't rest assured because the rifleman on whom you are inflicting a story of what your friend did is silent, that he believes you.

It is unnecessary for you to add, as a final clincher, but that was done with an old muzzle-loader, or he made his bullets himself, or he had a special contrivance which no one could find out. No, Mr. L. I. Arist, silence means pity, and it is not worth wasting breath in controverting your statement; you have made a record, and forever you are looked upon by rifleman as one to have some fun with, and you must not be astonished if you are asked frequently to tell your little story, for the boys like to be amused.

THE KENNEL.

Dog owners are requested to send for publication the earliest possible notice of whelp, sale, name claimed, presentations and deaths in their kennels, in all instances writing plainly names of sire and dam and of grandparent, color, date and breed.

Fall Meeting of the O. C. C.

The attention of the members of the Occidental Coursing Club is called to the fact that the Club will hold a meeting at Newark Park on Thanksgiving Day, November 29, 1888, when a valuable silver cup will be competed for; also money prizes.

It is earnestly hoped that a full attendance will be present, and that the members will do all they can to make the meeting a success. It is also particularly desired that there should be a full attendance at the next regular monthly meeting of the club, which will be held on Tuesday evening, November 13, 1888, at No. 539 California street.

JEROME B. LINCOLN, Secretary.

What creature moves quickest—travels, I mean, at the greatest pace? The flight of the woodcock has been, apparently on good grounds, estimated at 150 miles an hour—that is a mile in twenty-four seconds, or two miles and a half a minute. A fact which tends to confirm this statement is that a woodcock has been known to fly against and break the plate glass, three-eighths of an inch thick, in a lighthouse, killing itself and smashing its breastbone. Now, this bird had, of course, only just arrived, and the chances are that it only weighed some nine or ten ounces, for though woodcock fatten with marvellous rapidity, they are very attenuated when they first reach land; and though it need not be said approximate calculation can be derived from the occurrence described, a general idea of the amazing speed at which the soft feathered ball must have been traveling in order to smash glass of this thickness may be gathered. I am not "np" in the relative speed of birds, but it seems incredible that any winged creature can go and "stay" much more than two and a half miles in a minute. What can pigeon flyers tell us on the subject?

"Rapiet," gives these interesting items: "In your notes of September 8th I notice the statement about dogs standing tortoisies, and I can bear witness to its accuracy. About here there are great numbers of tortoisies, which are often collected and sent to England for sale; and they are a great nuisance, as young or newly imported dogs will draw up to and stand them much more steadily than they will fur or feather. Dogs, indeed, which are almost useless with game will stand tortoisies in excellent style, and I should be very unwilling to accept a dog as valuable for sporting purposes because he stood a tortoise well. Very few dogs lose the habit of drawing up to a tortoise, but after a few corrections they generally find out their mistake before coming to 'the point,' and turn away in disgust. Talking about dogs reminds me of a fact that may be interesting to many of your readers. I believe that in England it is generally accepted that greyhounds have no 'noses' worth speaking of. Here they have very fair 'noses,' and often find their own hares, being allowed to follow or precede their owners. I had a greyhound who would draw, or rather sniff up to and stand partridges (red legs) and quail very steadily. When he was too old for coursing I often used him instead of a pointer, and found him very useful and trustworthy. He never mauled dead birds, but would pick them up and wait till someone relieved him of them. Another fact about dogs may be interesting: During long sea voyages almost all dogs lose their 'game nose,' and do not regain it until they have been on terra firma from a week to a fortnight, and sometimes longer. I have met with several cases in my own experience to prove the above, and I daresay that many of your readers who have taken dogs abroad can say the same."

A sportsman who has been present at the California trials several times and has always had entries, sometimes handling them himself, in writing to a friend recently, remarked a remark that it may do good to repeat. He said, "I would like to send two dogs to be prepared for the coming field trials, providing we are to have any. I hear nothing about them anymore. They seem to be dead. Field trials properly conducted I think one of the grandest sports, but when not properly conducted, one of the biggest humbugs in existence." The writer is prone to what he considers vigorous expression of his notions, and once in a while does say a good thing, of which sort the remark quoted is a sample. But he is as much to blame for the seeming lack of interest as anybody. If he wishes to insure such trials as he would like to see, let him go to work actively and stir up his fellow club members. There are plenty of good dogs, the very best trial ground in the country, a delightful town in which to stay, plenty of birds, hospitable sportsmen to receive visitors and to arrange for suitable entertainment. All conditions are favorable for a grand meeting at Bakersfield on January 14th, and the Derby will be a great stake. Now if only the owners of aged dogs will fit them and start them, what more is to be wished for?

TRAP.

Summary Treatment of Game Butchers.

Under date of Oct. 21st, a Cheyenne special telegram to the Daily Examiner says:

A cowboy who rode in from the Snake river country to-day brought news of the lynching of F. W. Adams and a companion known in these parts as "Dutchy," two hunters, who maliciously burned the house of a ranchman a few miles north of the Snake river.

The pair started out with horses and Winchester rifles to kill elk and deer. They found game in abundance everywhere on the plains, but instead of killing one or two deer, as hunters generally do, they began a wholesale slaughter of the animals. They were not hunting for venison, but for hides and horns.

Tom Johnson, a ranchman, met them on Thursday and remonstrated with them. He said they were violating the game laws of the country and threatened to have them arrested if they did not cease the useless slaughter. This threat enraged Adams, and that night, accompanied by his partner, he rode down to Johnson's ranch and set fire to his house.

Adams did not attempt to avoid detection, for instead of riding away he hovered around the burning building until Johnson came out carrying his wife and little girl in his arms. Adams rode over to the ranchman, and holding a cocked revolver in either hand told him that he (Adams) was going to kill all the elk in Carbon county, and he added: "If you interfere with me again, I'll kill you, too."

A short time afterward Adams rode away, accompanied by his partner, and then Johnson, who had placed his wife and child in a barn, mounted a fleet broncho and set out for a little settlement on the Snake river to alarm his friends. He reached the settlement about daylight, and within an hour he had gathered a force of forty men who were eager to join him in the chase after the vandal hunters.

The pursuers separated into squads and started in a northerly and westerly direction. They rode on until noon without discovering any trace of their men, but a short time after an old trapper who belonged to the party found a trail that led in a southerly direction. Fresh imprints of horses' hoofs could be traced distinctly in the clay, and every member of the party who saw this agreed with the trapper that they were made by the bronchos of Adams and "Dutchy." Such proved to be the case, for the trail had not been followed an hour when the pursuers rode down upon a little dinner camp of the hunters.

Adams first saw the approaching force and instinctively grasped his Winchester and raised it to his shoulder, but he lowered it meekly when he saw the long line of gleaming sixshooters that suddenly sprang in view. The two hunters were made prisoners, and after being tied securely to their own horses were started back for the settlement. They reached there about 7 o'clock on Friday night and were placed in an old adobe hut, of which armed men guarded the only entrance. The orders of the latter were to shoot the first head that showed outside of the mud prison.

About 10 o'clock that night, while a furious thunderstorm was raging, 100 men whose faces were hidden by crude masks, surrounded the adobe. Their leader, a tall man who carried a sixshooter, commanded the guards to fall back and return to their homes. The command was obeyed without a murmur, and the tall man followed by half a dozen of his companions, sprang through the narrow entrance of the hut.

Those who were on the outside heard a chorus of angry yells and curses, with sounds of a fierce struggle and finally a single shot. When the masked men who entered the hut reappeared they were carrying Adams and "Dutchy," both of whom were bound hand and foot.

"What are ye going to do with us?" growled Adams, as he looked around the strange assemblage.

"Hang ye," said the leader in a low voice. "Boys," he added, "take them to the red tree and let them both dance from the same limb."

The "boys" responded with a cheer. Adams and "Dutchy" were seized by a score of hands and carried swiftly in the direction of the river. Neither of the doomed men uttered a word, though they knew they had only a few minutes to live, and when the noose of a lariat was adjusted around Adams' neck, he smiled as if he rather liked the touch of the leather.

Presently the red tree was reached. The knots and nooses were readjusted, the ends of the rope were thrown over the lower branches and seized by as many hands as could find a hold.

"Have you anything to say?" the tall leader demanded, and eyed the two victims. Adams shook his head, but "Dutchy" did not move a muscle.

The leader raised his pistol, cocked it, and after counting one, two, three, as deliberately as possible, fired a shot in the air. That was the signal for which the men who held the lariats were waiting. The instant they heard the detonation they gave a great shout, and two writhing bodies rose into the air. The ends of the lariats were made fast around the trunk of the tree, and the lynchers left the spot with all possible haste.

When the cowboy who brought the news left the Snake the bodies were still hanging from the tree.

A new target, which indicates the value of the last shot without the necessity of a marker, has been brought out. When the shot strikes a colored disc appears, which tells the value by its color. The target has been tried successfully at in-door practice, and it is hoped that a trial at long range will be afforded the inventor.

A paragraph in Monday's Chronicle stated that the birds used in the recent Stockton tournament of the State Sportsman's Association were duffers, would not fly well, and were "pie" for the shooters. The paragraph was inserted at the instance of some pigeon-seller who was not favored with an order from Stockton. In fact, the birds were as good as any ever pulled from a trap in the State, much better than those usually to be had about San Francisco, and tried the skill of the marksmen to the full. The best birds hadly pulled do not equal those slightly inferior which are sent from traps sharply opened. The Stockton committee of arrangements need feel no chagrin at the statement of the Chronicle. It is known to be at variance with the truth by all who were present, and they will be at pains to correct the wrong impression received and given out by our contemporary.

Cranks.

An unusually frank article recently described certain gun and tackle shop visitants from the standpoint of the tradesman as follows:

The experience of dealers selling at retail to the many varieties of cranks would fill a large volume. There is the gun crank, who wants to buy at a certain price, but no matter how large the variety he may have to select from, he can be suited only by one that costs a little more than he wants to pay. Show him one at his price and "the flower of barrel is not as nice as some other," or, "wood in stock is not as pretty," or, "if the barrels were only a little longer or a little shorter," "if it only weighed a half pound more or less," and a dozen or more such arguments are raised against it in the endeavor to secure the better arm at his own price. If a sale is made it is generally at the expense of throwing in enough extras to nearly eat up the profit. After wasting an hour, or possibly two, in showing the goods, you feel more like "throwing him out" than "throwing anything in."

The tackle crank is a terror. He must put together and handle every rod in stock, and when one is found to balance to his taste, it is a hundred chances to one that it is too heavy or too light, too long or too short, a "leettle" top heavy or too limber in the tip. Is sure to want it with reel-seat above the hand if it is made the other way, and vice versa. He will scan every inch of it from butt to tip, anxiously seeking a flaw or imperfection and be mad if not successful. The reel comes in for its share of peculiar criticisms and objections to any good feature pointed out by the patient salesman. It would appear that there was only one good reel made in the world, but the price of it was beyond the reach of "every-day mortals." In selecting a line he gives you to understand that they are all quite worthless and the more he pays for one, the more gigantic is the swindle. He is very particular as to the color of his leaders, and only one certain shade will meet with his favor—generally the one you are out of. The most trying ordeal is in selecting his books. Your advice is solicited as to the best size, style, etc., which is disregarded and your suggestions are met with abuse. Selecting from a sample card will not answer. He must see the goods as they are. A package of every kind in several sizes must be opened and he has a terrible struggle to decide on the one to take. If this one bent out just a little more, or if the point was just a little lower or set out more, it would hook and hold much better. If the shank was longer or shorter, or the wire heavier or lighter, had more or less barb, the point nearer or farther away from the shank, it would make a dandy hook. One dealer told us a few days ago of a customer who brought back a single hook to exchange for one a little different in the bend. A person unacquainted with the trade, witnessing one of these transactions, would naturally suppose there was a grand opening for a manufacturer who was competent to materialize suitable goods for the modern angler.

But, after all, the cranks should be encouraged. They are the outlet for unloading more new and worthless articles than are concocted in any other line of goods. Every one of them is a ready victim for any new swindle thrown on the market. They make nearly all the experiments and their demands and schemes are the sources from which come most of the novelties that make such an endless variety of goods now to be seen in any first-class tackle stock.

Australian Rabbit Pest.

"A pair of rabbits will produce 2,000,000 rabbits in two years in Australia," is a statement that at first seems incredulous, and when James Watson, of Victoria, made it the other day to a party of gentlemen they thought he was jesting. Yet it is as true as gospel.

Mr. Watson is one of the largest ranch-owners in Victoria, Australia, having under fence alone 30,000 acres. The problem of how to exterminate rabbits is the greatest question that confronts the people of Australia to-day, as their entire prosperity depends upon it. It is in hope that Ysnkee ingenuity might be able to solve this important problem that Mr. Watson now visits America.

"You can imagine what a terrible plague the rabbits are," said Mr. Watson, "when the Australian government is now building a fence of wire netting which, when completed, will be 3,000 miles long, and which will divide New South Wales and Queensland. The rabbits have not yet made their appearance in Queensland, and the fence is to prevent them from getting over there."

"We have tried hundreds of ways to get rid of the rabbits, but so far nothing has been successful. We are only able to check the increase. About the best means to do this is to scatter fruit with arsenic over the ground, but this is a very expensive method. In this way I have killed 600 rabbits with ten bushels of sliced apples. Then we used phosphate of oats, but the trouble with this is that the phosphate soon loses its effect. I think the best method in use is the ordinary rat trap, but all these methods are very expensive. For instance, it costs the government of Victoria $125,000 a year to keep the rabbits down on the crown (government) lands. The government pays ten cents a pair for all the rabbits killed on their lands. A good man can make forty dollars per week killing rabbits. These men use traps, and one man can work 100 traps."

"A law has recently been passed that compels the owner of lands to keep the rabbits down. If he should fail to do this he is fined fifty dollars for the first offense, $100 for the second, and upon the third offense the government employs men to attend to the rabbits at the expense of the land owner. In many instances owners are compelled to give up their land as the expense is so great. The owner of 10,000 acres is obliged to employ 100 men for killing rabbits alone. To give you a still better idea of the damage these pests are doing, let me tell you that land that a few years ago was worth fifty dollars per acre is now only worth four."

"I have found a way by which I can keep the rabbits down and make money by it, but, of course, every ranchman can not do this. I have started a rabbit-canning factory. We can the rabbits much the same way that beef is canned here, and our principal market is England. At present I am canning 500,000 rabbits a year, all of which are killed off my ranch, and still this number does not keep the pest down as the government requires. I put a rabbit and a half in a can, and at present I make thirty-seven cents profit on a dozen cans. They are retailed to England at twelve cents a pound, and, considering the high price of beef, it would be supposed rabbits would become a favorite dish with the poor of England, yet the rabbits are now only purchased by the higher class, who consider the rabbit a great dainty."

"How long have we been bothered with the rabbit? About ten years. Rabbits were brought to Australia about twenty years ago from England for sporting purposes."

"Tell me how fast the rabbits breed?"

"A pair of rabbits will usually produce four does and two bucks. The does breed when two months old, and they have, on an average, four litters a year. You can calculate from this, and you will find that the statement that a pair of rabbits will produce 2,000,000 in two years is not so preposterous as it at first appears."

"I brought a man over from South America just before I left, and he firmly believes that the South American skunk would get rid of the rabbits. Any way, the Australian government offers a reward of $100,000 for the best plan for their extermination."

An Outrage.

EDITOR BREEDER & SPORTSMAN.—You may say that parties lately returned from the Rubicon, in the Sierra Nevada, in El Dorado county, report that certain deerslayers up there have been butchering the deer for their hides by the hundreds, sparing neither sex nor age. Out of several hundred hides ready for the market they are said to have at least one hundred doeskins which they are hiding until a good opportunity offers to run them to market.

These vandals are operating in the vicinity of "Uncle Tom's Cabin," and are boldly violating the law at all seasons. Is there not some way by which the officials of El Dorado can be induced to investigate the matter? It is, however, no new thing, has been going on for years, and has been frequently exposed.

SACRAMENTO, Oct. 18, 1888.

Doctor Knowles and Mr. F. B. Norton were up Tomales way last week for quails, and had good sport.

Of the duck shots, Mr. Harry Babcock is the premier as yet, having twice bagged more than one hundred on the Ibis grounds. At the same club Mr. Will Kittle has made several good strings.

The Teal Club is affording its members rare sport these days, Mr. Edwin Goodall having the lead on score, as usual, with Messrs. W. F. Whittier and Taylor good second and third.

At the Byron Club the best bags, all things considered, have been made by Messrs. Willard, Maynard, Fraser, King and Barling. Feed is abundant, and sprig, mallards, gray ducks and widgeon plenty. A sack and a half to the man is not extraordinary there.

Mr. C. W. Kellogg has done some shooting over the Cordelia preserve and had fine success, particularly in getting spritgails.

At last that veteran hunter, Mr. "Dick" Seymour, of Bakersfield, has been beaten in the field. Those who have sat in the delightful club rooms of the Knights of the Trigger and heard "Dick" tell with tears in his eyes about killing three grizzly bears with a single rifle ball and bemoan his luck because the fourth was not hit by the same shot, can imagine the feelings of the thoroughbred old boy at having to return from a deer hunt without even a "toothpick," while his companion, W. E. Houghton, had two handsome blacktails. They were up on Mount Breckenridge near Bakersfield for two days, and had a good time, barring Seymour's having to jump out of the way of several fierce-eyed deer, which seemed to single him out for affectionate demonstrations, one of them even going so far as to jump clear over him. "Dick" lost his temper then, and, after carefully placing his rifle out of harms way, threw a great big stone at the buck which would have hurt him real badly if he had not been a half mile away behind two high ranges of hills. However, Mr. Seymour soon after more than retrieved his reputation as an actual hunter by kicking two chip-munks until they cried like fun. It was an awful time, that last deer hunt of the Knights of the Trigger, but they won't do it any more.

Miss Annie Oakley, the famous lady expert shot, met and defeated Miles Johnson, at the Trenton, N. J., Fair, on October 6th, in a match at 50 live pigeons at 25 yards rise, otherwise Hurlingham rules, for a purse of $200. Miss Oakley used a new 6-pounds Lancaster hammerless, 12 g., with 1½ ozs. shot and 3 drs. Schultze powder. Johnson stood at thirty yards, using a 10-gauge 9½ pound Scott, 1½-ozs. shot, Schultze powder in right barrel and Quicksbot black, in left. The birds were a good lot. A large number of persons witnessed the match, and Miss Oakley's remarkable shooting was frequently applauded and greatly admired. Miss Oakley missed her 47th bird, a blue twister, which went from No. 5 trap like a rocket. She turned to Johnson and said, laughingly: "Did you bring that bird from England?" Johnson—"No; I trained that fellow in order to get in one miss on you!"

With regard to the guns that are being made to-day, it is the opinion of a writer, and he is well supported in this position by others, that the high grade guns of most of the makers are not as well made and fitted as those of ten years or more ago, and that as the prices have, in a measure, been reduced, the quality of the work has kept pace with the reduction in prices. Perhaps, to make any such statement is like telling tales out of school, but facts are stubborn things, and the telling of such tales will not do any harm, but it may, perhaps, have the effect of somewhat modifying the extravagant demands of some kinds of sportsmen, who think that they can and must get a gun that has all the improvements of the best guns, and yet they are not willing to pay even a fair price for the same. Such persons usually learn after a few trades that the gun that has the most of the so-called improvements, and yet can be purchased for a low figure is the most costly gun in the long run, and after numerous repairs, they are then willing to purchase a good gun, and are then usually satisfied.

With regard to the use of the plain steel barrels, it has been the custom to use the so-called decarbonized steel barrels for some years by some of the leading American makers, and by many experts they are considered much better than the cheap twist barrels of Belgian make, which have been adopted in their place. This change has been brought about by the statement that twist barrels are much stronger than the plain barrel, and because there have been so many cheap single and double guns of foreign make placed upon the market that many, in order to protect themselves from such deception, refused to purchase guns with other than twisted barrels of some description. It is the opinion of the writer that the barrels made in this country twelve or fifteen years ago, of the so-called homogeneous wrought steel, have never been surpassed for close and hard shooting and wearing qualities.

Brittle Hoofs in Horses.

Horses are frequently troubled with brittle hoofs caused by deficiency of water in the bones. This is caused in various ways—fever of the feet, or common founder, inflammation of the interior of the foot, exposure to fermenting manure or filthy stables, by which the hoof is saturated with moisture containing ammonia, leaving the foot covered with mud; or even continued hot or dry weather or an unhealthy condition of the system will produce this trouble in the feet. The horn becomes dry and granulated and separates very easily, crumbling or splintering away until there is scarcely crust enough left to fasten a shoe upon. The remedy is of course, the removal of the cause and restore the moisture. Frequent washing of the feet with cold water, with attention to the health and to give the horse clean bedding and an earth floor to stand upon, or else a deep bed of sawdust will prevent it or cure it in many cases. Glycerine and water in equal parts are an excellent dressing for the hoofs. An occasional soft feed, as bran mashed with a little linseed, is also useful, because it keeps the horse in good health and tool. Tar is sometimes used as a hoof dressing with advantage, but it needs caution in its application.

Died at His Post.

A good many boys think that the life of a cow-boy in the far West is a very jolly one. They imagine that cow-boys have little to do except ride fast ponies, shoot antelope, and have a good time generally. This is as great a mistake as can be made, and any boy who goes West with the expectation of making a fortune by simply amusing himself on the plains will come East again a bitterly disappointed youth.

Cow-boys have much hard work to do; they are often exposed to the severest weather and their very lives have frequently to be risked in the course of duty.

A cow-boy must not shrink danger when his employer's or his own interest is at stake. The following story illustrates this:

A cow boy known as "Tex" was ordered to drive a small herd of cattle from a certain ranch in the southern part of Nebraska to a station on the Union Pacific Railway. It was a drive of only one day, and Tex started out alone very early one morning, believing that he would need no help to manage so small a number of cattle. During the forenoon Tex observed clouds gathering in the north, and he felt sure a storm was coming. He knew it was of no use to try and hurry the herd, but he felt a little uneasy as storms in that locality are likely to be very severe. His fears were well grounded. Rapidly the wind increased, blowing dead against the cow-boy and his charge. Colder grew the atmosphere, and a few snow-flakes fell. A blizzard was coming, but Tex kept moving forward. Brees was fairly howling now, and the air was bitter cold. Tex's cattle, with heads low down, breasted the storm, and moved slowly along the trail. Tex shouted cheerily to encourage himself as well as his cattle, but by degrees he grew more and more chilled and hoarse, and after a while he stopped shouting. To keep his blood in circulation, he threw his arms about and beat his hands against his thighs and body, but soon that did no good, and he sat still in his saddle, freezing. The storm rushed and roared yet, the colder grew the air. About mid-afternoon a few cattle were blown by the wind to a group of shanties standing out on the plain far from the regular trail. A pony nearly frozen followed, and stopped in front of one of the shanties. His rider sat motionless, and men rushed out to help him down, but he kept his saddle like a marble figure. The rider was Tex, and he was stone dead.—Harper's Young People.

A pure white Arabian mare owned by John M. Wilson of Norristown, Pa., met with a most singular accident last week, says the Philadelphia Record. The injury is known as a fracture of the inferior maxilla or the lower jawbone posterior to the incisor teeth. Both bones of the animal's jaw are broken completely off, and the lower portion of the jaw is now being held in place by a mask of pliable copper lined with cotton. The case is exciting widespread interest among veterinary surgeons. While tied with a halter in its stall at Mr. Wilson's stables it broke loose, and while mingling with other horses was kicked squarely on the front of the jaw. Dr. H. O. Dengler, a veterinary surgeon residing in Norristown, was summoned, and he found that the jaw was twisted to one side, and that the animal appeared to be suffering but little pain. After an examination of the fracture he reset the broken bones temporarily, and applied a truss to the mare's head, and then bandaged it tightly. The next day a consultation was held by three veterinarians. They made an exhaustive search of the archives of animal fracture, but could not find a similar case to the one they had under discussion, where both bones of the jaw had been broken at the same time. Dr. Dengler then permanently set the broken jaw, an entire day being spent in the operation. The copper mask is kept tightly pressed to the animal's head, and its mouth is kept in a bucket of cold water to reduce the swelling of the jaw. The mare is kept in slings, which are securely attached to the roof of the stable, so as to guard against her lying down to go to sleep. The canvas slings will be kept about her body for four weeks, by which time Dr.

Dengler anticipates a marked improvement in the fracture. During that time it will be impossible for the animal to take ordinary nourishment, and will be kept on a diet of milk, eggs, oatmeal, butter, and gruel. The diet will be administered with a spoon, as the mouth is open but a little more than an inch. The animal is in a comfortable condition, and it is believed that by careful nursing and skillful surgical treatment it will recover. The mare is a beautiful specimen of horseflesh. It is of the purest white. It is one of a team which Mr. Wilson uses with his family carriage, and it has been admired with its mate, by hundreds of persons familiar with valuable horses.

"Vigilant" always writes pleasantly, and his notes under the above heading in the N. Y. Spirit of the Times are interesting and readable. As nearly candid, too, as a person can be who has race-horses for the subject. Try as we may it is difficult to overcome favoritism entirely, and any man having worn harness as long as the author of that department of the paper, who is always just in his conclusions, would be a shade more than human. That he is an admirer of Mr. Withers goes without saying, and with the characteristics which are displayed by that eminent turfman, who can fail to be an admirer?

Persistence, pluck, game—whatever may be the phrase used to exemplify the possession of qualities which Mr. Withers has demonstrated to be the chief points in his form will compel admiration, and there are few elements which we value more highly. Joined to the other traits possessed by the gentleman and a pattern is presented which younger men can take for a guide and be benefited. We write younger men, for though the example is worthy of imitation by men of any age, it is easier for those who can reasonably hope for years enough in the future to emulate his example, even if luck runs against them for as long as Mr. Withers had to stand the buffets of Dame Fortune and her frowns on his racing efforts.

We would like to see the man who would dispute the encomiums Vigilant bestows on Firenzi. Were it the other branch of sport and trotting horses the topic, it would not be necessary to go outside of California to find a brace of disponents. But this much to the credit of the supporters of "blue-bloods" there is not so much jealousy as exists in the trotting division, and few, indeed, of the breeders of race-horses who are unwilling to award a just measure of credit to celebrities outside of their own stable.

New YORK CITY, Oct. 17.—We give below a table showing the winners of Mr. D. D. Withers' Brookdale Stables for the season of 1888. While he has not led the "winning owners," his stable has completed its season, as he never sends his horses to Baltimore or Washington. The year will long be known as the "Withers Year," for, while he did not win much money as some owners, it was the first great break in a career which had been marked by ill luck, and when the current turned it did so with a vengeance. Mr. Withers began racing in 1869—near twenty years ago, as a partner of Mr. F. Parry, but two years later began his separate career under the "all black," with the fillies Elsie, Mimi and Miss Nellie, but although he paid high prices importing English yearlings his success was very moderate. In 1876 he secured a very fair horse, and Kinglike, Stonebuck and Duplex were good, as was Nonage, but Laggard was his first great winner, who in 1887 brought Mr. Withers for the first time prominently among the "winning owners," and pressed the break of 1888, when after bearing for years the "slings and arrows of outrageous fortune" the "all black" swept the two-year-old field like a cyclone.

There are two curious facts in Mr. Withers' triumphal year. The first is that every horse which he started was bred on his own farm; the second is that of the twelve two-year-olds in his stable he started eleven, of which ten were winners—a case without a parallel. We do not think Mr. Withers has started anything but homebreds since 1880. He is full of sentiment on the subject, and, like the old school of English gentlemen, scorns the victory gained by the purchased horse, preferring to breed them himself and feel a breeder's pride in their prowess. No doubt he has paid dearly for his firmness (ill-natured people call it obstinacy), as in the twenty years he has raced he paid a large fortune in forfeits. But fortunately he had the means to sustain his battle, in which a less tenacious man would long since have surrendered. He never purchased an expensive mare, most of them being fillies retired from his racing stable, and so of his stallions, as he did not embark in breeding but drifted into it. Suffice it to say, he is the highest ideal of a turfman this country or any other has produced. He never bets, the running of his horses has never been mixed up with anything unfair, and he has given racing his time and attention to a degree that the turf is better for his having lived.

It is Mr. Withers' practice to retain twelve yearlings out of his entire stud each season and sell the balance at auction. Of the twelve this season all have started but one, the brown colt by Tom Ochiltree, dam Sweet Home, who was too backward to train. Of the eleven which started, all won except the Tom Ochiltree-Cadence colt, who was so highly tried that he started (the only time) for the Sapling Stakes a hot favorite over all, including the Faverdale colt. His form was so high in private, that if he trains he ought to make a great three-year-old next season. It is another significant fact that none of Mr. Withers' two-year-olds have been severely campaigned, as nine times is the most any of them has been out. He is a very merciful owner and never starts a horse out of condition or ailing if aware of the fact. When the Faverdale colt was started for the Sequence, at Jerome in June, against French Park, he had a swollen throat and was full of fever, but he did not know it until the horse was going to the post. Mr. Withers attributes the success the past season to the fact that his experience has enabled him to learn how to develop two-year-olds. He has now the proper buildings for them to exercise in winter and pays personal attention to the treatment to their feet and shoeing. Below is the table which includes every horse he started, with its winnings, etc.:

Of the above the Faverdale colt, who leads, was not only the best, but probably the best colt of the year, bar Proctor Knott, who was the only one that defeated him on his merits. He won the Hopeful, Homestead, Carteret Handicap at Monmouth, and the Prospect and Algeria at Brooklyn (Autumn). His defeat for the Sequence is attributed to a terrible throat; his defeat for the Tyro was due to Fitzpatrick's disobeying orders and making the pace in 49 seconds the first half mile in the muddy track; in the Sapling, to "Fitz's" letting Tipstaff slip away from him at the post. He is one of the highest types of the blood horse ever seen in this country. Auricoma won the Lassie and Select Stakes at Monmouth, and lost the Colleen by being cut down. In the Futurity she had a sore mouth and was never in the race. In the Laurel she was beaten by Sbe, who got such a lead at the start she could not be reached. Minion won the Red Bank and Amboy Handicap at Monmouth. Many trainers say she was the best of the lot, but she collided with Salisbury in exercise and died from injuries received. Inverwick the three-year-old, won the Hunter Stakes at Jerome. The Mimi filly won the Nursery. The Cyclone colt won the Seabright Stakes and was second in the July and the Titan. Cascade won the West End. Fitzroy's success was in purses, and so was Stonecrop's. Sluggard won the Sapphire Stakes at the Coney Island Autumn Meeting. Salisbury and the King Ernest-Cyclone colt, four years, won purses, and so did Chemise, the Eccola filly, Anomaly, the Minority colt and the Majority colt.

The table below shows the running of the stable at the different meetings. As will be seen, Mr. Withers won most of his races at Monmouth and Jerome, the former because he is personally interested, and in the case of Jerome it is from love of old associations and because he considers the soil of Jerome Park the best in America for horses, he being opposed to the "hard tracks":

Firenzi's race for the Grand National Handicap was generally considered a good one, but it was hardly as good as we expected, and hardly so good as we think the mare could have run, say, at the beginning of the Autumn. There was the usual throwing up of hands and tearing of hair when she was allotted 131 lbs., and up to the last moment it was said Mr. Haggin would not start her. A great deal has been said of this 131 lbs. It is true no mare has taken up this weight and run in a first-class race in recent years, but it was scarcely more than her record merited. It was 16 lbs. over scale. Raceland had 110 lbs., or 6 lbs. over scale. Consequently Firenzi was called upon to concede him 10 lbs., and her recent efforts, as compared with his, would lead one to suppose she could do it. The little mare ran a game, true race, but she had all she could do to beat Kaloolah ahead for the place, Raceland being two lengths in front. From all we saw we do not think that Firenzi was as good as she was at the beginning of the Coney Island Meeting.

Mr. Haggin deserves the applause of all good racing men for starting Firenzi with the 131 lbs. up. There was the strongest pressure upon him among his friends to scratch her, but he stood out like a man. We would have been delighted to have seen the mare win the Grand National to reward Mr. Haggin's action. It was one of the grandest moves in the direction of racing reform made this season. It struck the light weight champions in the face. There are a lot of owners who roar with anguish if their horses are given over 120 lbs. in handicap, while the English, Australian and French horses are handling 135 lbs. with impunity. If there ever was need for reform it is in regard to weights. The distances have been cut down until there are not a dozen mile and a half races in the East, six furlong scrambles being the order. Yet while they have reduced the distances they have not increased the weights. They all say the scale is too low, but put a moderate weight on their horses and they howl, and by their opposition put a premium on incompetent riding. Bravo, Mr. Haggin!

It was said on Saturday that the Grand National was Firenzi's last race, and that she will be retired for the season at Monmouth Park. We are glad to learn it. The little mare has earned laurels enough to canonize her even should she never win another race. She is one of the best mares that has appeared during the generation. Some say the very best. On that point we are uncertain. It is difficult to gauge the merits of horses of different years. Miss Woodford was a lucky mare. She did not meet a good class of horses and the Dwyers would not start her in handicaps. Thora did and held her own, so did Girofle and Ruthless, Katie Pease, ditto. It cannot be said that Firenzi has ever been favored in escaping hot company. She had Hanover to fight as a three-year-old, and this season the Bard, Kingston, Terra Cotta and Elkwood have been perpetually in her path.

The New Straight Course at Monmouth Park.

For some time past it has been an open secret that the Monmouth Park Association intended making a straight track and have it in readiness for next season. In fact, the matter was virtually settled the day the Futurity was run at Sheepshead. The racing over the new straight course was watched with unusual interest by the Monmouth Park Authorities, and they could not do otherwise than vote the experiment a success. To keep up with the hand then they quickly decided to add a straight course to the Monmouth track. If there was any doubt about the future intention of the association in this matter it was settled a few days ago when the title to a farm adjoining the course was transferred to them.

From the fact that Mr. Withers refused to run his horses on the Futurity track, excepting for the big event, it was at first supposed that he did not appreciate a straight course. But it transpired that his real reason was that he considered the track in an unfit condition to run upon. What the proposed alterations at Monmouth Park will consist of it is impossible to say, as Mr. Withers declines to give any information on the subject; but it is probable that the straight will be extended to a mile, which should become very popular.

The Futurity track was an innovation, and like all other innovations, of course, found plenty of detractors. The main arguments advanced against it were, "that the start could not be seen," and "that the horses were too long out of sight." Both assertions are miserable. But what of it? It might be wished that the majority of people went to races for the sole sake of seeing the sport, and for nothing else. But do they? Do not the majority go for the sake of the excitement afforded? In time they, too, will be won over to the advantages of the straight run, when they find by experience that public form is vindicated, and that they are no longer doomed to lose their money by the mere accidents of being shut out at the turns, pocketed and so forth.—Sporting World.

"They make Books."

The above is the most prominent "head line" of the following article copied from a late number of the St. Louis Republic. The uninitiated reader would come to the conclusion that the history would be of authors, or failing in that guess might combine typesetters, pressmen, bookbinders, etc. Turf devotees would not be misled, and even tyros understand that it meant that potent brigade, the main business of which is "lay" against horses. The business is of recent date in America, though an old one in England. Not very long ago the only betting on race courses in this country was "out of hand," and a very awkward method it was. A man proposed to bet on the horse he fancied, and when his offer was accepted a stakeholder was called into requisition and the money deposited in his hands. Matches were the rule in these days, and by far the heaviest investments made when two of the cracks met. Seldom in stake races were there large fields. In the great Peyton Stakes, run at Nashville, Tenn., in 1843, there were thirty nominations at $5,000 each, $1,000 forfeit, there were four starters, and rarely, indeed, was that number exceeded in an important race. In these days the owner of Boston, James Long, of Baltimore, was the grand plunger, and not an unusual occurrence when his horse was running was for him to turn his back to the contestants and offer to bet "$1,000 to $300, and make it 19 times" if takers could be found. That was the era of big matches as well as big stakes, and quite a number from ten to twenty-five thousand dollars a side could be instanced.

Auction pools were a manifest improvement on the old system, and when the main part of the percentage goes to the "racing fund," in our opinion is the best method of speculating on races of any. Combined with mutuels, which give small bettors a chance, the only objection lies in the trouble to get "money on" in a limited time and without attracting attention. Dr. Underwood was the pioneer pool-seller, though we believe the idea was obtained from Price McGrath. The doctor had a monopoly of the business for several years, while now there are legions of auctioneers all over the country.

The Republic article is illustrated with portraits of six prominent bookmakers, Tom Riley, "Mush" Murray, Dave Johnson, Ike Thompson, Bill Shipsey, and J. Cridge. Judging from the portraitures they are what can be termed good-looking men, though scarcely up to the "form" of one or two of our California knights of the pencil. The climate has probably something to do with that, and good luck is an element which has no small share in beautifying the features. The article is interesting, and long as it is, will be appreciated by our readers who like to take the odds:

NEW YORK, Oct. 11.—Book making is a profession which furnishes a livelihood to perhaps a hundred men in this country, and provides more or less constant employment for several hundred more. The patrons of this form of betting might very likely be numbered by the hundreds of thousands. The bookmakers who have achieved competencies, or made fortunes, are in a majority in the ranks of their calling; the "outsiders" who have come out ahead of the books in the long run, might be counted without any great difficulty. Nevertheless, this variety of gambling on horse races comes to us with the indorsement of the entire English racing public, and beyond all doubt has come to stay.

Somehow or other about the time horse-racing came into vogue, men began to back their opinions as to the probable winners with their money. To-day it is a recognized fact, thoroughly supported by evidence, that horse-racing without betting would be a dismal failure. Various racing associations, legislative bodies and theorists have attempted to restrict, or do away with betting at the track. How successful these efforts have been is shown by the fact that to-day there is not a track in the country of which the bookmakers or pool-sellers are not a recognized feature. All sorts of laws prohibiting these forms of gambling have been enacted in various states, but the interested parties and the influential patrons have always managed to evade the law either by sharp practice or by open defiance. In fact, so firmly established are the men who give you a chance to lose your own money or win somebody else's at the great racing meetings that the various jockey clubs not only recognize their existence, but from them derive a considerable share of their incomes. The official character of the recognitions does much to eliminate the "crooked" element of the bookmakers and pool-sellers from the track. And it is a noticeable fact that in the ten or twelve years since systematized betting on horse-races was introduced, but very few of these temporary onlookers of the betting public's money have proved dishonest and "pulled up stakes." Viewed in some lights this semi-legalized betting is a good thing for the race-going public. A big percentage of those who attend the races want to bet with strangers—and strangers to both the bettors would probably have to be selected as stakeholders. In that event the disappearance of stakeholders—and the stakes of course—would be matters of frequent occurrence, and the wailings of the victims would be long and loud. Then again the present system is a great convenience to patrons of the turf. As it is those who desire to bet have more or less trouble in reaching the betting booths or in getting their messengers there in time to place their money. Were there no betting-boothes the general rush to secure bets would result in an indiscriminate scramble, and the comparative good order now preserved at the meetings of the several racing associations would be something to be desired but not realized.

The general method of making books in this country is much the same as that in vogue in England. Certain men of sporting proclivities and more or less capital who think they know enough about horses to lay their bets with the public as to win in a majority of races, pay a stipulated amount to the managers of the meeting, post the odds which they will give against each horse in each race, issue tickets to their customers stating the terms of the bet, pay if they lose and pocket their patron's money if they win. In England the bookmaker's first principle is to so lay his money as to win in any event. Otherwise put, he so scales his odds that whichever horse first runs under the wire he will be something in pocket. Herein America this excellent commercial principle is not so rigidly observed by the profession. Some adventurous spirits who flatter themselves that through underground information or their own judgment they can name the winner are in the habit of offering almost any odds against the other horses, or at least such odds as may be necessary to induce lively betting. If their judgment was right they are usually a good many thousands ahead at the end of that particular race. If their judgment was wrong and they had backed it to their limit there may very possibly be as many less bookmakers on the track for a time as there were adventurous spirits before this unfortunate race. Book-making is a good deal like operating on Wall Street. If you are a broker and simply handle other people's money on a commission you undergo no risk and are bound to be a winner, whatever way the market may turn. But if you will insist in backing your own opinions and doing a little gambling on your own account, you are apt to get your fingers burned. So in bookmaking; if you are clever enough and lucky enough to make a book that stands to win, however the race may result, you can't lose, and are assured of some remuneration for your trouble. But if you go to indorsing your own opinions with your money, and instead of assuring yourself of some profit by means of a hedged book, try to capture hundreds of thousands by a coup d'état, you are just as apt to be yourself cleaned out as you are to clean someone else out. If there is anyone alive who recognizes the truth of this fact it is the experienced bookmaker, and he keeps it in mind in almost all his transactions. So when we read about this bookmaker or that bookmaker laying $10,000, or some other big amount, on one or other of the Presidential candidates, we mustn't believe he is risking all that money; the chances are that he either has hedged, or will hedge, the bet so that whoever is elected he will be a richer man than he was before he made the bet.

As soon as bookmaking became popular with the public the jockey club began to make rules governing the admission of the bookmakers to the tracks and the prices to be paid by them for the privilege of admission. Of late years the average price for the privilege of making books on the track has been $100 per day. At times, and in certain instances, it has soared as high as $150, and again has been forced down as low as $65. The figure at which the cost of the privilege was fixed, and certain other matters, were unsatisfactory to a good many bookmakers, and last winter the Turf Alliance was formed by the Eastern members of the fraternity. About sixty of the best known of the persuasion joined the alliance, but a few others of equal prominence, who for some reason or other were unpopular with the sixty, were debarred. The alliance essayed to dictate to racing associations just what bookmakers should be accorded the betting privilege and what price should be paid for admission to the track. This attempted dictation was not favorably received by the turf magnates, and there has always been bad blood between them and the alliance. There was an outbreak at a meeting on one of the big Eastern tracks this summer when the management refused to recognize the organization, and for three days the alliance men stayed away from the field. In these three days the attendance at the meeting showed a marked falling off, and the management was compelled to abdicate its position and let the alliance run things. The Monmouth Park people effected a compromise arrangement with the alliance stipulating that they should receive $6,500 a day from the bookmakers, and allowing the organization to say whether its members should pay a sufficient price apiece to make up this sum, or should allow outsiders to come in and thus decrease the cost to each bookmaker. In the latter case the alliance was to have the privilege of saying how many, and what men should be admitted. The same course has been followed at the present meeting at Jerome Park, with fairly satisfactory results. But neither side is fully satisfied with the present order of things, and after the racing season closes a meeting of the leading jockey clubs will be held to take action upon the dispute with the bookmakers, and shape the policy to be pursued in the future.

The Turfman's Alliance of to-day is but a later edition of the old Alliance Club, which flourished for a brief season some ten or eleven years ago. Most of the well-known bookmakers now before the public were members of the old organization, but after the disruption of the club no attempt was made to form a new association of the kind. Since the old days methods of bookmaking in this country have not undergone many changes, and the operator of to-day risks his money and takes yours in about the same way that he or his predecessors did a decade ago. It isn't always his own money that the speculator on the box risks, but very often his large ventures are made with funds supplied by some wealthy patron of the turf, gambler or other capitalist of sporting tendencies. Quite naturally the owner of a promising horse entered for a certain race is averse to publicly staking large sums on the representative of his stable, either personally or through his commonly-recognized agents. For were it generally known that the proprietor was largely backing his stable's entry the odds against his horse would, of course, be scaled down, and in the event of a victory for him his hundreds or thousands would bring far less returns than they would had it been supposed that outsiders had chanced to pick his horse as a winner and had freely put up their money on their choice. Just here the bookmaker is a very handy functionary; $1,000, $10,000 or $100,000 may be placed in his hands to cover all bets offered against the slated winner, and the proprietor's hand cannot be seen. By transferring his backing from one bookmaker to another, a wealthy owner of first-class horse flesh may take advantage of all bets offered against his entries, and at the same time himself remain in the background and avoid decreasing his own winnings by publicly betraying his more or less well-founded confidence in his stable. This practice has been followed by many famous horsemen, and many a bookmaker of national fame has acquired the reputation of a bold operator by chancing money which was not his own, but had merely been intrusted to him for speculation.

A good many American bookmakers have more or less deservedly got the reputation of being "plungers." All sorts of wild stories about their tremendous winnings or losses are handed about by word of mouth or in the newspapers. Perhaps the majority of those who hear and read these stories believe them. But if those who do would stop a moment and consider that it is scarcely the policy of the members of the fraternity to talk about their personal business, and that nobody else can possibly know how much they made or lost on any particular event or day, they will very sensibly discredit all such nonsense. Doubtless bookmakers follow their trade to make money—and most of them do it. But they, or at least the more reckless operators, take big risks oftentimes, and it is only in the long run or by some big coup that they make fortunes. Lots of men in the business know very little about making a book, and start in by offering all sorts of fantastic odds, and then scale down in accordance with the example of the recognized expert bookmakers in the ring with them. Some of these fellows go so far as to stand on the box with an opera-glass at their eyes scanning the slate of some shrewd rival, and mark down their own odds as fast as their leader does his. Such men as these are of course, rather weak-backed, and a serious case of misplaced judgment and heavy betting may wreck them. "Plungers" very often find themselves unable to meet their obligations at the end of a day's race, but to their credit be it said they very rarely "wrench." Of course they are compelled to announce that they cannot pay all their tickets, but there are many cases on record of bookmakers who have been forced to the wall, afterwards paying up their debts in full as soon as they got on their feet again.

About all the prominent bookmakers of New York city are known throughout the country, and vice versa, the prominent bookmakers of the country at large are well known in the metropolis. There are certain haunts at which the gentry can always be found in force, especially at pool-rooms, billiard-rooms, cafes and hotel lobbies. Some of the hotels most patronized by these sporting gentlemen are the Hoffman House, St. James Hotel and Astor House. In fact, a man who knows the faces of the leading operators can't stroll into the Hoffman House of an evening during the racing season without recognizing a half dozen or more men who are prominent figures in every betting ring east of the Mississippi river. And the lobby and bar-room of the St. James Hotel fairly swarm with representative book-makers. The Astor House, being a downtown resort, is only patronized by this folk in the daytime. Somehow or other most any bookmaker is a prototype of his colleagues. As a rule they are well-dressed, dandified-looking men, who might by the inexperienced be taken for well-to-do professional or business men. They are decidedly disinclined to talk about their business, especially with strangers. A natural reticence born of their calling may partially account for this, and the police supervision and interference to which they are constantly subject is doubtless more or less responsible. What they are worth nobody but themselves know. So, what gossip may say they have put away is not worth talking about. To say that many of them are wealthy and that most of them are well-to-do pretty accurately sums up the situation.

James Kelly is probably as well known throughout the country as any man who ever made a book in America. When a boy he was apprenticed to a bricklayer, but ran away one day because his master wouldn't let him go to a picnic. For years he drifted about in one thing and another until he finally landed as a sporting man. When bookmaking was first introduced in the United States, now nearly twelve years ago, he entered the business and has been at it continuously until about two years ago, when he ceased to make books of his own. For several years he and "Archie" Bliss were partners, and were considered the best and heaviest men in the business. Kelly ran a stock room in New York City and sold auction pools before bookmaking came into vogue, and has had a better all around experience than any man in his line. When he retired he was said to be worth $250,000, and certainly has not decreased his pile since then. He has always had the reputation of being one of the squarest men in his trade, but through his opposition to certain men, who afterwards became prominent in the Turf Alliance, he was shut out when that organization was formed. This year he has been deputed by the managers of various Eastern tracks to the full charge of the betting arrangements. An unquestioned authority on horse-racing, and a cool-headed, conservative man, he has given complete satisfaction in this capacity to both sides, and will doubtless fill a similar position next season. He is about 55 years old, tall, good-looking and thoroughly gentlemanly in his manners.

"Dave" Johnson, as everybody knows him, is a youngster in years but an older in bookmaking. His father before him kept an auction pool-room in New York for many years, and his uncle "Bill" Johnson, was an old sport. The boy started in business with his father before he had reached his majority and a few years later struck up a partnership with Lucien Appleby, who was more than twice his age. Johnson was a born "plunger," and with the money which the wealthy Appleby put up straight away, he proceeded to make a reputation for himself as a hold operator. At times he lost heavily; again he won small fortunes on a single day's races. But in the long run he was fairly successful and the firm of Appleby & Johnson made a name for itself. Lately the firm dissolved and Johnson is now going it alone.

Lucien Appleby is probably something like 50 years old. Though he has been more or less actively interested in horse-racing and kindred ventures for many years, he has done little himself in the way of making books. He is a very careful sort of man, looks well before he leaps, and when he does generally wins. One of his chief sources of income is the famous gambling house at No. 318 Broadway in New York City, formerly owned and run by the ex-Congressman and ex-pugilist, John Morrissey.

"Bill" Lovell is an old fellow of 60 or 70 years, and is popularly believed to have been a sporting man ever since he was old enough to walk alone. In the old days he owned American Girl and other fast trotters, but afterwards drifted into bookmaking. In making his books he was as eccentric as in everything else, and often would post odds against one horse and none against the others entered in the same race. Of late years he has been more of a backer of bookmakers than a bookmaker himself. He is very well off and has always shown a good deal of pertinacity in sticking by his friends through thick and thin.

Another old timer is Joe Cotton, or "Papa Joe," the old New Orleans sport. His first ventures on the turf were quite humble, but were successful. Before long Joe owned horses of his own and backed 'em like a man. At times he fell to plunging, and has had, occasionally, relapses since he became a bookmaker. Still he is well fixed financially and, everybody says, will die in the harness.

John McDonald is a man of about 30 years, has clean cut features, a smooth face and always gets himself up in style. Five years ago he hadn't a dollar to his name, but a friend backed him for $5,000, and he went to New Orleans and cleared something like $20,000. The next spring he came East, picked up four or five horses, won on them and graduated as a "plunger." His plunging has been very successful, and he is now worth $100,000, and owns fifteen or twenty horses. One of the representatives of his stable is named after his original backer, Bob Furey. McDonald was educated for the priesthood at Mount St. Mary's College at Emmetsburg, Md., but got off the track. He is generally supposed to be one of the best posted men in the ring on the performances of American racing stock.

Dick Roche of St. Louis, is very generous in offering his odds. He never seems to care what other bookmakers are doing, and always posts the longest odds against both long and short horses. One of the biggest billiard rooms in the Mound City is owned by him, and he is well-known as the financial backer of that billiard wizzard, Jack Sehefer.

Robert DeLacey was formerly a well-known gambler and backer of gamblers, but some time ago branched out as a bookmaker. Despite his profession he has always borne the reputation of being a "white man," and has several times refunded the money of losers at his well-appointed gambling establishment who could not afford to lose. As a bookmaker he has been pretty successful, and his downtown room in New York City is probably the best patronized place of its kind in the country.

J. Cridge is on the shady side of 50; is a short, good-natured sort of man but somewhat eccentric. He came from England a good many years ago, and always bets more or less freely on the English races and makes books on some of them. Years ago he was one of the Alliance Club people and has stuck to the business ever since. Many wealthy patrons of the turf have intrusted large commissions to him and he has been pretty successful in his career. At present he does more in the way of backing fellow-bookmakers than in running a slate of his own. One of his hobbies has always been the establishment of an organization of turfmen in this country after the pattern of the famous Tattersall's in London.

Among other widely known bookmakers of the past and present are "Mush" Murray, A. Wheelock, Leon and Henry Stedeker, "Bob" Irving, John Ullman, Ike Thompson, Arthur Hakett, old Bill Shipsey and Tom Riley. Riley is a Chicago man, well known through the west and pretty well known through the east. Like so many of his colleagues he is a plunger, and is pretty apt to take anything or everything offered him in the way of a bet. In a single day he has lost as much as $15,000, but his winnings have bested his losings, and in his 32 or 33 years of life he has accumulated a very snug little competency.

It is somewhat cumbersome to use the recognized formula for editorial "matter" in any case, and the plural of the personal pronoun in many instances is an embarrassment which had better be avoided. Why we should have replaced I in editorial composition is not easily explained. When several persons are engaged in that department it may be taken that the opinions advanced are shared by collaborateurs, or it may be thought less egotistical than a repetition of the first person singular. But when it represents what only can be done by one person, there is an absurdity which had better be avoided. No matter, as "Dagonet" puts it in the Referee, if the I's are as numerous as in the tail of a peacock should the meaning be more clear, the apparent egotism will be forgiven.

In resuming the history of the Sprain of the Suspensory Ligament in Antevolo, and the treatment which resulted in a measure of success, I feel that the account will be of more than passing interest, and that the encumbrance of the heavier style had better be removed. It may be that a large majority of readers do not appreciate the seriousness of the injury, though there are few trainers who are unacquainted with the seriousness of strains of the "middle tendon." Veterinarians are well aware of the dangers which follow even a slight sprain, and unite in insisting that there shall be as complete relief from work as circumstances will permit. "The books" do not vary in telling what the treatment should be, and in order that readers who are not posted in regard to what professors teach, a few quotations are presented; Stonehenge's is as follows:

The suspensory ligament, which should be carefully studied on account of the numerous accidents to which it is liable, is attached to all four of the bones entering into this joint, and may be described as being composed of a strong band of white tissue. It is thin and comparatively weak towards the knee, but as it approaches the fetlock joint, it almost equals the back sinews in substance, and its volume and wiriness to the touch may be taken as some test of the power of any particular leg in resisting a "breakdown." Occupying the space between the two small metacarpal bones, and lying close against the large metacarpal, it arises from the posterior common ligament of the knee joint, from a projection on the back of the large metacarpal bone just below it, and from the inner sides of the heads of the small metacarpals. Descending thence close to the large metacarpal bones, it splits into two strong bands, each of which is attached to the upper edge of the corresponding sesamoid bone, a few fibres passing on to re-unite below the joint and become continuous with the tendon of the extensor pedis in front of the os coronæ.

The suspensory ligament not being elastic like the back sinews (which though not in themselves extensible, are the prolongations of muscles which have that property), is very liable to strains, especially in the hunter, and to a less degree in the racehorse. On reference to pages 472-3, the inferior connexions of this part will be seen to be the two sesamoid bones, by a bifurcation of its substance, and as these bones support the pastern joints by the inferior sesamoid ligaments, when the suspensory ligament is strained the whole apparatus is rendered useless, because the pain occasioned by the extension of the upper part prevents the horse from putting his weight upon the foot. The accident is readily made out, for there is local swelling and tenderness, and in the well-bred horse, which is alone likely to meet with a strain of this kind, the leg is rarely sufficiently gummy to prevent the finger from making out the condition of the ligaments and tendons. There is no giving way of the joints as in "break down," but on the contrary the leg is flexed, and if the case is a bad one, the toe only is allowed to touch the ground. In ordinary cases, however, there is merely slight swelling of the suspensory ligament in a limited spot usually near its bifurcation, or sometimes in one division only close above the sesamoid bone to which it is attached. The horse can stand readily on that leg, but on being trotted he limps a good deal. Sometimes, however, there is a swelling of the feet without lameness, but in this case the enlargement is generally due to an effusion of serum into the cellular covering of the ligament, and not an actual strain of its fibres. The treatment will depend greatly upon the extent of the mischief; if there is no great injury done, and the enlargement is chiefly from effusion of serum, rest and cold applications by means of bandages or otherwise, will in the course of two or three months effect a cure. Generally, however, the case will last six or eight months before the ligament recovers its tone, and in a valuable horse no attempt should be made to work him before that time. Where the swelling is small, as it generally is, bandages have no power over it, as the projection of the flexor tendons keeps the pressure off the injured part. Here, dipping the leg in a bucket of water every hour will be of far more service than a bandage, and the sudden shock of the cold water will be doubly efficacious. After the heat has disappeared the biniodide of mercury may be used as a blister two or three times, and then the horse may either be turned out, or put into a loose box for three or four months, after which walking exercise will complete the cure.

There is so little difference in the views of writers on veterinary science in describing the ailment and recommendations or how it should be treated, that further quotations are unnecessary. From the above it will be learned that slight injuries require "two or three months" to effect a cure, while that of a more serious nature "three or four months, after which walking exercise will complete the cure." Among all the works I have at command, that of Stonehenge is the most optimistic in predicting the consequences. In another it is claimed that even in slight sprains "a long rest from work is indispensable to recovery," and in addition to a blister of biniodide of mercury advise the application of the actual canterbury. In a conversation with Dr. Bowhill after he had made an examination of the injured leg, satisfying himself that there had been a sprain, he remarked, "there are exceptions to rules, and this is one of them." That the exception may prove the correctness of a rule I shall not dispute, but in this case it can be safely claimed that treatment, so contrary to all precedent, enabled Antevolo to take part in a race which would have been utterly impossible under orthodox methods. Should it prove in subsequent trials as effective as it has in this, I will feel that the tribulations are partially compensated by an increase of knowledge. Such a case is not very likely to be duplicated. Had the horse been engaged in a race which was of less importance than the National, or rather in one about which I had less anxiety, the trial would never have been made. When he "went wrong" last year work was suspended, and his exercise restricted to walking and jogging for nine months thereafter.

In resuming the history it may be well to repeat a part heretofore published so as to present a full case, though that part will be brief. Previous to August 21st, his fast work had been restricted to half miles. That which immediately preceded the injury was a half mile in 1:09 on a track which was very deep, the deep track, in my opinion, being the cause of the injury. The suspensory the following morning was considerably "bowed" and a good deal of swelling from ankle to hock. Diluted "Carbolized Alkaline Lotion" was used for nine days, after that "Royal Embrocation." After a few days that was replaced by bandaging, hot water and washing soda part of the time, cold water in which borax and alum were diluted the other part. For thirty days he was walked and jogged; on the 20th and 21st of September allowed a short brush at the finish of his exercise.

Saturday, the 22d, his first fast work over half a mile, was 2:28, 2:25; Tuesday, the 25th, 2:26, 2:19; Saturday, 29th, 2:23, 2:19; Tuesday, Oct. 1d, 2:22½, 2:20½. That much of his work has been given heretofore, and on Saturday, Oct. 6th, three heats were ventured upon, the time of which was 2:28, 2:19, 2:17. Tuesday, 9th, 2:29½, 2:21. Saturday, 13th, 2:24, 2:18, 2:19½. The intention was to restrict his work on Tuesday to two heats, but as he showed a disposition to break, another was given, the time 2:26, 2:19, 2:22. In all this work I thought he was going well within his rate, excepting in the last, though the only reasons I could see for falling off were that the work had been too much for the condition he was in, especially the second and third heats on Saturday. The object, however, of this article is to show the result of the treatment, and not to speculate on the effects of the work on his speed. The injured leg appeared to be growing stronger all the time, and so far as careful examination by eye and hand could prove it was better. But it was also evident that he was calling on the "well leg" for extra labor. He would throw himself in the airflight a good deal further when that was the propelling power, especially when first starting and the spacing between the footprints irregular. The main difficulty seemed to be in getting around the first turn as when fairly straightened on the backstretch the motion was truer. For instance the longest stride on starting was seventeen feet, on the backstretch they ran from 18 to 19 feet, and the space between the footprints was uniform. But on the Oakland track the start, and for some distance beyond the furlong mark, there is quite an up-grade, where's there is still greater declination on the backstretch. There was the same difficulty in the race and he could not "negotiate" the first semicircle anything nearly as well as he could make the rest of the circuit.

I am satisfied now that it was a mistake to delay his journey from my place in Oakland to the Bay District until the morning of the race. But he did so well in the Harry Wilkes race, under the same conditions, that the plan was again followed. He left his stall at 5:30 in the morning, and was put on the 6:15 creek boat. It is about three miles though for most of the way the streets are in good order. From the ferry landing to the course the distance must be about six miles, and a great part of it on cobble stone pavement. There are steep hills to climb, though the irregular foothold which the cobbles gave was, doubtless, the worst feature. But this was also a severe test of the treatment, and when the "bad leg" withstood the ordeal, it is an important factor in the review.

As has been stated before the object in presenting this account is to illustrate the value of the treatment followed and not for the purpose of extenuating his defeat. That does not enter into the description, as any person having the least knowledge of horses will agree that under the circumstances it was remarkable that he could make the showing he did. I hold that it was the best he ever made, and taking into consideration it was his first race for within a month of two years as well as the leg troubles others will share in that estimate. There is little necessity for rehearsing the features of the race, after the full accounts published. These reports, however, were made from the standpoint of a spectator, and my knowledge is more extensive from being a participant.

The race has a bearing on the value of the treatment, and cannot be ignored in the summing up. Contrary to his wont Antevolo could not "score" before the first heat. Not only unsteady but seeming to have lost his speed. This may have been caused by the excitement attended on his first race after a lapse of twenty-three months, it may have been owing to other causes. At all events something was wrong, and all that could be done in that heat was to quiet him as much as possible, and endeavor to overcome the tendency to unsteadiness. He trotted the mile without a break, coming in at his ease two seconds behind the winner. The second heat I essayed to go off with them, and he broke on the turn, losing so much ground that it was out of the question to expect to win. He was jogged from the distance in, and for the whole mile kept at an easy pace. The third heat he made a double break on the turn, losing still more ground, and he was driven as in the preceding. The fourth heat will be described in detail, as there has been a good deal of argument over it. He scored better in that than before, and when the word was given he was slightly in advance of Woodnut, which enabled him to lead that horse, the positions being Stamboul at the pole, Woodnut trailing immediately behind him, Antevolo occupying the second place from the pole. Apprehending a break I restrained him from going as fast as he could, and when I saw that Woodnut was out-trotting him, pulled enough away to let Woodnut through with as little loss of ground as possible.

The next best thing for me to win the heat was for Woodnut to get it, which would give another chance, and as Antevolo was manifestly improving it might be that a fifth heat would place him on an equality with the others. At that time I would cheerfully have given $500 for Woodnut to win that fourth heat, not wishing to be understood that the others would "come back" but that my horse would improve. He got around the turn without breaking, though so far behind at the quarter that he could not overcome the gap, though he did it in part being closer at the finish than he was at the quarter of a mile mark. In all of the heats he did not show any distress, and this induced me to offer a match at heats of two miles against any stallion, the race to come off two weeks from that day, but when he was cooled out it was evident that the well leg was giving him a great deal of pain. Part of the time he rested on the toe, and then he would hold it up. He would attempt to lie down to roll, as his habit is when brought in from work, but when partially down would rise again, and after he ate his evening feed, repeated that movement so often that the man who takes care of him was fearful that the was going to have an attack of colic. When I reached the track the next morning, and the bandages were removed, the bad leg was found to be all right, the well leg "filled" between ankle and hock, the most swelling being just below the hock. I anticipated that, and was gratified to see that so far as I could judge the tendons were not involved. This was also the opinion of Hickok and Goldsmith, who were requested to make an examination, and so he was started for home, reaching there at 1:30 P. M. Sunday.

At the time of writing, Wednesday, Oct. 31st, there was a good deal of swelling, though less than a week ago when it appeared at the worst, and I am nearly positive that it is merely an effusion of serum due to the extra exertion thrown on that leg. The leg that was first injured has not looked so well since it was first sprained. The bandages were removed from that leg on the Saturday following the race, since then bathed with diluted lotion. I expected that a good deal of swelling would return from the removal of the bandages, but was agreeably disappointed. The other leg has been kept in bandages with cotton batting next the leg, the cotton and inside bandage being saturated with warm water in which washing soda was dissolved. It is too early yet to form an authoritative opinion regarding the last injury, though that is of secondary importance, the question being what is the result in the case of a sprain of the suspensory ligament.

Antevolo with one exception has been only jogged since the race. When jogging everything has been removed excepting ankle boots, and though he jogs a trifle stiff on the other leg for about half a mile, I cannot detect anything like a wrong movement. Friday last I felt sure that if not permitted to have a brush on the track, he would play going home, and the latter being the most dangerous he was allowed to move about three furlongs. Not having loops on the wires I asked Mr. Downer to take the check up two holes further than it was in the race, shortening it 1½ inches, and he and A. L. Hinds said that they had not seen him move so well this season, ascribing the change to the shortened check. The probable cause was the removal of the pressure which had heretofore been applied, leaving his limbs free. The uses and abuses of "bearing" reins will be the subject of another article, and in this connection it will be sufficient to say that all who are competent to judge will agree with me that the higher the head is held by the check the more strain there will be on the hind legs.

The above sketch will show the work which has been given since the injury, and from that an estimate can be formed of the strain endured. As to the appearance the lower part of the ligament is still enlarged and forced slightly outward from its natural position. There is slight swelling below the hock on both sides of the leg, though on the inner the back tendon and suspensory are in a normal condition. There is not a particle of heat or tenderness, and were it not for the wrinkles caused by bandaging many people, and not incompetent judges by any means, would fail to note any thing being wrong. And now for the treatment which even a brief statement will show to have been entirely different from that recommended by Stonehenge, while that is mild when compared with what others recommend. In the first place, not a day's rest, walking and jogging, and when the lameness was so pronounced that it was painful to see him trot, however slow, he was taken on the road, walked up the grade and trotted on the decline. The diluted lotion I think was beneficial, and though the "Royal Embrocation" increased the swelling, and came very near blistering, I am not prepared to say that it was not an aid to recovery. That it retarded his fast work is sure, and that may have been a valuable element, but when the days wore away until there were only 37 left ere the race was to come off, I became somewhat nervous. On the 19th of September everything approaching an irritant was discarded, and as has been stated, warm water and soda, cold water and alum and borax were the dependence. From the 19th of September until the bandage was thrown aside these were the only applications, the cotton compress being adopted on the 22d, and that was continued during all his work, even when walking, and not dispensed with until his return home after the race.

I ascribe a great portion of the success to the use of cotton, though it may have increased the work of the well leg. Previous to the 22d the cotton was used in the stable under the bandage, though on that date it was applied both in the stable and when at exercise. In the latter case it was held in position by an ankle boot and long shin roll, and this obviated the difficulty mentioned by Stonehenge by bringing the pressure immediately on the suspensory ligament. Still it interfered with the action, hampering the leg which undoubtedly threw more of the work on the other. Had there been time to experiment a trial would have been made with springs, a sort of a truss held in place by the cannon bone, thus giving the pressure without binding the back tendon, but as long as there was favorable progress, and the time so short, the old adage "let well alone" was given due heed. The roll held it in place, and with less restraint to the back tendon than if an elastic bandage had been used. The roll was kept from moving by a small pad fitted so as to occupy the space between the back tendon and the cannon bone on the inside of the leg, being shaped something like the half of a small cigar so as not to press on the large vein which nearly crosses the leg diagonally above where the pad came. My reason for using soda dissolved in hot water was to correct the "hardness" of well water, and also to soften the skin. Applying it after fast work I thought it likely to remove soreness, the cotton and inside bandage being as thoroughly saturated as possible. "Derby" bandages were used, the outer being put on dry. Cold water, with as much alum and borax as it would hold in solution, was used when the work was slow, the purpose being to strengthen the tissues. Of course the astringent properties of alum were depended upon, but I have no reasons to give for the combination of that and borax further than to remark that I have heard borax recommended in analogous cases. Since removing the bandages on the "bad leg" diluted lotion has been applied twice each day, the leg hand-rubbed until thoroughly dry.

In the endeavor to be as brief as possible it has been necessary to omit details which might have given a clearer idea, though I deem that enough has been said to prove that in this case the treatment may be called highly successful.

Influence of Sire and Dam.

In the New York Sportsman of the 13th instant is a communication from L. J. Roae, Esq., the text being the above caption, and in the main the article is commendable. But some of his deductions are not warranted by the facts, and as a horse we think very highly of is pronounced a failure, will have to correct Mr. Rose on this point. More than that A. W. Richmond, the horse stigmatized as a failure, we brought to California, although he was sold a short time thereafter, and that is a further inducement to see that he has fair play. The following are the closing paragraphs of the article:

As to the influence of the stallion and mare, which has the most, I believe to be about equal. I believe that Gretchen, bred to any kind of a horse, the colt would have trotted with as much certainty as to breed Sultan to a mare of the same grade or breed. So also with Minnie Ha-ha, but both would have bred a much better trotter with much more certainty when bred to the trotting-bred stallion.

To show this by example I sold Gretchen and Barbara to H. M. Johnson, Esq. Both were bred to Richmond, and one produced Romero, 2:17½; the other produced Leu Rose, with a record of 2:27. Both of these mares could trot, and were trotting-bred, and were, no doubt, in these two respects, the best mares he ever covered, and are yet the only two of his get that have any records of 2:30 or better, or that have amounted to anything in the way of racehorses. Richmond has many colts, and many of them have been trained. All of them are very stylish and fine driving horses, and nearly all can trot as good as 3:00, but when the effort is made to make them go fast enough for race contests they are a failure.

It is true he is sire of Arrow, and there are others that now promise fast as pacers, but a horse may get a fast pacer; in fact pacers come frequently from partly running and some trotting breeding, but that circumstance does not seem to indicate that such breeding will bring trotters. In fact the reverse is often the fact. On the other hand The Moor got Tommy Gatea, record 2:24, out of a native mare. Sir Guy, record 2:29, out of a native and running-bred mare; Inez, record 2:30, out of a running-bred mare. Sultan got Big Frank, record 2:29½, out of a farm mare, thus showing that both Gretchen and The Moor could control action, and it may be taken that either could have produced a trotter without trotting breeding on either side. This is not proven with as much certainty on the part of Gretchen, but could not be, for mares with trotting pedigrees are not bred to horses without breeding. J. J. ROSE, Los Angeles, Cal.

It is not necessary to go outside of the communication to show that the conclusion is not sustained by the record, and that from the evidence presented A. W. Richmond is not a failure. Gretchen, when coupled with Woodford Mambrino produced Inca, 2:27; by the Moor Del Sur, 2:24½, and Neluska to Sultan which made a two-year-old record of 2:30½. These are all of her colts which have trotted in public, though she had others. Mr. Rose errs in giving the time of Romero at 2:19½, as it was a quarter second faster, so that from the same mare he has the best of the Moor by five seconds. No one will dispute that Sultan is one of the most remarkable of progenitors, and yet he has only one of his get with a faster record than Romero, and the fastest offspring of the Moor is 4½ seconds slower. The other mare, Barbara, sold to Mr. Johnston, which is given as an illustration, has never thrown a trotter to any other horse as we are informed by Mr. Durfee, and that gentleman further informs us that few of Richmond's colts have been trained, and no one is better posted on that point.

We do not intend to go outside of Mr. Rose's communication at this time to refute the charge. Accepting the position taken that The Moor was a great success as the getter of fast trotters, then a horse, which from the same mare, beats him five seconds, is still greater, especially when there is none others to come much closer.

The article was written some time ago, and, probably, in a hurry. Had proper consideration been given, the author would have seen that it was illogical, and we have too much respect for Mr. Rose to charge him with a want of candor.

Apart from a desire to see justice done, there is a strong feeling for horses we have owned, and may be pardoned for the pride in those brought to California. It is not often that one carload of horses makes such a good showing. There were five males, A. W. Richmond, Hock-Hocking, Three Cheers, Craigieburn and Double Cross. Hock-Hocking the sire of Beaconsfield, St. David and others, Three Cheers the sire of Applause and Almont, Craigieburn was sold to British Columbia and we learn that his get are highly valued, Double Cross kept for a family horse, doing little service in the stud. There were six females: Albatross sold to John Boggs, she and her only colt dying before they could show what they were; Lady Amanda who, after being kept in training and winning many races for several years, has two colts which have earned brackets; Marion, the dam of Emperor of Norfolk and the other members of that brilliant family; Triple Cross, killed the year she came here; Columbine, the dam of Anteeo and Antevolo, and Avola, a half-sister to Mavis and Anniversary, and the dam of Sotoyone and others which may yet be heard from.

Overland Park Races at Denver, Colorado.

Many people were deterred from attending the races at Overland Park on October 20th by the threatening clouds and cold, chilly winds that brought overcasts into demand, and made the teeth of the thinly clad spectators chatter. Notwithstanding these unfavorable conditions the grand stand and batting grounds were well filled. The first race run was seven furlongs for a purse of $200, $50 of which went to the second horse. The entries and starters were Estrella of the Baldwin stables, Luke Dubois, owned by Lew Carlisle of Pueblo; Viscount, the property of A. G. Gorham; Nantucket, owned by Thomas Atcheaon of Denver, and G. W. Cook, belonging to Carlisle & Shields of Pueblo. They carried 115, 109, 115, 115 and 110 pounds respectively.

In the send away Cook was a little slow in getting off, and lost an even chance with the others. Estrella held the pole, and through the good management of her rider, secured the lead, followed closely by Nantucket. Going up the back stretch, and after passing the half mile post Cook pulled up to second place and going around the back turn, ran the leader a neck and neck race to the quarter pole, when his pace was slackened and he fell back a length. Estrella urged on by the whip slowly drew away and finished two lengths ahead, Cook second, Nantucket third, Dubois fourth and Viscount last. Time, 1:33½.

The second race was the Silver Stakes, a three-quarter mile dash, for a purse of $500. The entries were Caliente and Alaho of the Baldwin string, and Leadville, the former at the pole. A conviction that Leadville stood no show had settled over the audience, when, to the astonishment of everybody, the gallant little dun rapidly closed the gap between himself and Alaho, passed the latter, pulled up on Caliente, and on the back turn wrested first place from the flying Californian. This wholly unexpected feat of the Colorado horse aroused great enthusiasm, but after holding a precarious lead for three hundred yards Leadville slackened his pace and was passed in rapid succession by Alaho and Caliente, who came in at an easy gate with Alaho two lengths in advance. The rider of Leadville was anxious to win, but his horse did not possess the endurance to outstrip his competitors to a finish. Time, 1:23.

In the third race, three-quarters of a mile, for a purse of $200, the entries were Sam Baker, Silent King, Echo, Dellwood, Mart Walden and Countess. The horses scored nicely and started well together. From the instant the flag dropped until rounding the last quarter it was a blanket race. They remained closely bunched to the point mentioned, with Walden slightly in the lead, a position he retained to the last turn, when Echo, who had crowded him from the start, moved up a peg, and by hard running forged to the front. At this time Silent King held fourth place, and the wildest imagination would have hesitated to name him as the winner. The leading horse was fully five lengths ahead and coming in at a rattling pace. King's rider had not urged his horse from the start, but knowing the noble little black to be a great finisher, he now leaned forward, tapped him and spoke sharply. The effect was electrical, and bringing all his reserve speed into play, Silent King started for the front. He had not more than 200 yards in which to win, but the pace he set brought him from fifth to second position as rapidly as one could count. The smile of assured triumph that mantled the face of Echo's rider, faded when he saw the nose of the flying black close to the flank of his own horse, and with whip and spur he urged the favorite onward. In a twinkling Silent King was running nose and nose with the leader, and when 200 feet from the wire he was leading a full length, and thundered by the judges' stand amid wild yells of delight, winner by two lengths, Echo second and Mart Walden third. Time, 1:19.

The next race, the Colorado St. Leger, one and a fourth mile for a purse of $500, was without question, one of the most closely contested it has been the pleasure of Denver people to witness for years. The entries were Fred B., Kismet, and Dan Meek, the former being favorite. After the start Dan Meek dropped back, while Fred B., and Kismet ran a close race to the finish. So evenly were they matched that it was impossible to determine which one had the lead going up the stretch. The uncertain race was continued until coming down the last quarter, Fred B., with evident difficulty pulled up a length. The horses held their respective positions for only a moment, when Kismet began to crawl up. Had his rider urged him, at this time, Kismet would have won the race, but for some singular reason he made no effort beyond allowing the horse to set his own pace, with the result that Fred B., won the race by six inches in a mile and a quarter dash. Time 2:19.

The fifth and last race, distance one mile and a furlong, for a purse of $300, was won by Mollie McCarty's Last. The little brown mare sold favorite, and it was a foregone conclusion that she would capture the prize, unless an unforeseen accident should intervene. The mare and Parnell ran close together for the first mile, when the latter went to the front and stayed there until within several hundred feet of the wire, when Mollie hid Pomeroy good-by, and setting down to a rapid race, once more resumed first position, and came in winner by a full length. Time, 2:02½.

The excellent weather of Monday, the second day, brought out a large and enthusiastic crowd.

For the first race the entries were Ganymede Signal, and Sympatetic's Last, the first named being the favorite. Ganymede secured the lead and retained it to the finish, coming in two lengths in advance of Sympatetic's Last, who had however, made a good showing. Time, 1:04½.

In the second race, the entries, for a purse of $250, were George W. Cook, Dan Meek, Kismet and Luke Dubois. By general consent this race was accorded George W. Cook, and the ease with which he won it showed that popular judgment was right. Kismet made a desperate effort to get a place, and though ridden for all he was worth, failed and came in a poor third, the distance being too much for his endurance. Time, 1:47.

The third was a sweepstakes race for all ages. The entries and starters were Fred B., Echo, Beaconsfield, Grisette, Viscount and Parnell. Beaconsfield sold favorite in the pools. The field went off well together, with Beaconsfield in the lead, a position he maintained from start to finish. Fred B., who had been named by many to capture first place pushed to second place, but on the back turn was crowded by Echo, who passed him on the home stretch and shot under the wire a close second, Fred B., third. Time, 2:19.

The fourth race was a sweepstakes three-quarters of a mile dash, with a silver cup valued at $100, added by the club, for half bred horses owned in Colorado or Wyoming, and ridden by members or guests of the Denver or Cheyenne clubs. The entries were Jack Dempsey, St. Halma, Nellie Bly and Dellwood. St. Halma obtained the lead, and set a rattling pace, but failed to keep it up, and was forced back to second by Dellwood, who forged ahead and came in an easy winner by three lengths, St. Halma second and Nellie Bly third. Time, 1:23.

The fifth and last race was for a purse of $250, seven furlongs. The starters were Mart Walden, Countess, Echo and Pomeroy. Walden led off, followed closely by Echo and Pomeroy, with Countess several lengths in the rear. Walden and Echo made a close race on the home stretch, but Walden won first place, Echo second, Pomeroy third. Time, 1:31.

On the third day the warm sunshine and cloudless sky, associated with the excellent trotting programme, induced many hundreds to visit the Park. The 2:28 class, first on the programme, was promptly called. On the second score the sulkies of Almo, driven by Robert Kneebec, and Louetta driven by Charles Dutt collided, and that of the latter careened violently to one side and the driver was hurled to the ground. He struck upon his head and shoulder, breaking his arm and collar-bone. Louetta, terribly frightened, ran away, but was caught nimbly on the backstretch. This accident necessarily delayed the start. Ollie, the favorite in the pools, got the lead in the send-off, and went away at a rattling gait, Spartan second, Belle J. third, with the field closely bunched in the rear. Spartan and Belle J. for a part of the race kept the leader at her best pace, but on the home atretch Ollie's driver gave the mare her head and she came home five good lengths ahead, Spartan second and Belle J. third. Time, 2:28.

The second heat was a good race from start to finish between Ollie and Spartan. From the three-quarters home they were head and head till within a hundred feet of the wire, where Ollie went off her feet, and Spartan won by a half a length in 2:26. Belle J. finished third. For the third heat Spartan, Ollie and Tramp S. went off even. Spartan broke and before he settled Ollie had gone well to the front. At the half she led by three lengths, and although Spartan made a splendid spurt swinging around from the turn toward home, the little mare kept her feet and shot under the wire an easy winner, Spartan second, Tramp S. third. Time, 2:25.

In the fourth and deciding heat Ollie forced the pace, and although Spartan laid himself out to beat her, but she came in five lengths ahead, Spartan second, Billy J. third. Time, 2:24.

The second event on the card was a stake for colts and fillies three years old and under, for $375.

The starters were Warrita, Fannie Bell and Magdalene. Warrita would outfoot his competitors, and though in the first two heats Warrita received decidedly the worst of the start, he won first place and the race in three straight heats, getting the last by ten lengths. Time, first heat, 3:15, second, 2:58, third, 2:27.

The third race for the day was the 2:50 class, but only one heat was trotted, owing to the lateness of the hour. This heat was won by George Mosier, Eli Almont second, Elector third and John M. fourth. Time, 2:36.

Considerable dissatisfaction and some excitement prevailed owing to a misunderstanding between the starters and driver, about getting off. The horses scored well together and would have received the word to go had not Elector passed the wire on his toes. Fearing a break Mr. Brown did not give the word. The drivers, though called back by the bell, failed to hear the sound and made the circuit in dead earnest, supposing they were trotting a heat. Elector and John M.

came in close together at the finish, and those who had money up on Elector howled themselves hoarse demanding that it be declared a heat. This the judges refused to do, and dense yells and groans went up in unison.

The advertised programme for Wednesday, October 24th, was all running except the postponed 2:30 class. This was first called up, and won by John M. in three heats, in 2:27½, 2:30½, 2:31½. Almost in each of these heats was second.

The first of the running races was a mile dash for a purse of $2.50. The starters were Dellwood, Echo, Nantucket and Bob Ingersoll, and the weight carried 153 pounds each. The speedy qualities of Dellwood combined with his staying powers nominated him as winner, though Echo was looked upon as a dangerous competitor.

Echo set the pace at a tremendous gait and captured first position, Nantucket second, Ingersoll third, and to the intense surprise of those who knew his record Dellwood dropped to the rear and trailed behind until nearing the homestretch, when Ingersoll dropped back and Dellwood advanced a peg to third place. Nantucket gave Echo a severe chase from start to finish, but failed to get better than second place after a splendid contest. Time, 1:49.

J. W. McKinley, trainer of Dellwood, and Ellis Jones, his rider, were fined $100 each, and suspended for one year from date on account of fraudulent practice in riding. This amounts to a plain declaration on the part of the judges that Dellwood was "pulled" and the race thrown.

The second race, seven furlongs, for the Mirage handiesp sweepstakes for two-year-old foals, for $500. Caliente and Ganymede, both of the Baldwin stable, were the entries. This was a close and pretty race, and Ganymede won by half a length only, but the fact that both were from the same stable modified the interest taken in the result.

For the third race, a mile and a furlong, the only starters were Countess and Molly McCarthy's Last. Countess took the lead, which she held to the half, when McCarthy drew up and ran her an even race to the upper turn, when Mollie poked her nose to the front. From the turn down the homestretch McCarthy was given her head and forged to the lead, coming in winner by two and a half lengths. Time, 1:59½.

The fourth race was a sweepstakes for three-year-olds, one mile and a furlong, for a purse of $600, $100 to second and $50 to third; entries, George W. Cook, Los Angeles and Kismet, Luke Dubois and Fred B. withdrawn. Los Angeles, being a Baldwin horse, was named for winner. Cook led off, with Los Angeles' nose at his flank. The two flyers maintained their relative positions to the three-quarter pole, when Los Angeles closed up and finished a throatlatch ahead. The race was so close and Cook held his own so sturdily it seemed probable he would finish winner by a narrow margin. Time, 2:00½.

The last contest for the day was a half-mile heat race for a purse of $250, the starters for which were Estrella, Kokomo Belle, Silent King and Paddy K. It was growing late and after seven attempts at a sendaway, Paddy K. was left standing on the score ground like a stump in a cornfield, and the flag dropped for a go. Kokomo Belle shot ahead, with King at her heels and Estrella trailguy. The former held her gait and won by a length, Silent King second and Estrella third. Time, 1:49. The finish was postponed until next day.

The weather for the fifth day's racing was chilly and discouraging. Nevertheless a good crowd gathered. The finish of the half-mile heat race was first in order and was won by Kokomo Belle, Silent King second and Estrella third. Time, 0:49.

On the regular programme the first event was the pacing race, 2:30 class, for a purse of $500. The entries were E. W. S., Danube, Pet Logan, Billy Scott and Clattewa, the last being favorite in the pools. Danube won, E. W. S. second, Clattewa third, Billy Scott fourth and Pet Logan fifth. Time 2:31½.

For the second heat they got an excellent start, and E. W. S. soon took the lead, followed hard by Danube. At the quarter Pet Logan began to struggle with the leader for first place, but broke. The field was all in a bunch at the third turn. On the stretch Danube and E. W. S. were side by side, but the latter broke and came in behind Danube, Clattewa being third. Time, 2:30½.

In the third heat these three were close together, and each struggling for the heat. At the head of the stretch the mare broke and lost her chance, and when close to the wire, and in the lead E. W. S. lost his feet, and Danube took the heat and race. Time, 2:26.

The second race was for a purse of $700, hung up for 2:20 trotters. The entries were Elmwood Chief, Superior, Carl and Captain, driven respectively by Kneehes, Splan, Perry Johnson and Beau. Captain drew the pole, and went away even with the field. At the first turn Elmwood Chief pulled around the gray and took the lead, heading the field three lengths at the quarter, and four when on the third turn. At the head of the stretch Superior began to close up and soon was at his shoulder. Both horses were now doing their best and coming home beautifully. Elmwood withstood the whip and held his feet, but Superior became excited and went up within fifty feet of the wire and came in a close second, Carl third, Captain fourth. Time, 2:24½.

In the second heat Elmwood Chief had the lead round the turn, when Superior crowded to the front. Going up to the back stretch the horses hunched closely and trotted a blanket race. At the three-quarters Captain, who had surprised everybody by his rapid gait, fell back to fourth place, while Elmwood drew up even with Superior. Down the homestretch they made a good race, first one and then the other seeming to have the advantage. Five hundred feet from the wire Superior broke, but one pull of the reins by Splan settled him, and with but one skip he settled and shot under the wire winner of the heat by a length, Elmwood Chief second, Carl third. Time, 2:24.

In the third heat Superior and Elmwood had a close struggle all the way to the homestretch, where the former broke and Elmwood Chief finished winner by five lengths, Carl third. Time 2:24.

In the third heat Elmwood and Superior went off even and trotted neck and neck to the homestretch, when Superior again broke and sacrificed the heat and race. The driving of Splan was superb, but it was obvious that Elmwood, while not able to outfoot him under equal conditions, would stand punishment and hold down, while Superior would lose his head and break. Two heats were lost by the chestnut on account of bad behavior at critical times. Elmwood first, Superior second, Carl third. Time 2:27.

The next race was a stake for colts and fillies, two years old and under, purse $375, best two in three. The entries were Glenwood, Belle Magnet and Our McGregor. Glenwood won hands down. In the first heat McGregor was distanced and dropped out. The following heat Glenwood went at once to the front and landed home an easy winner. Time for the two heats, 3:01 and 2:54½.

The 2:38 class, purse $500, was the next in order. The starters were Elector, Daisy H., Bertie M. and Monarch. Elector won the first heat, Daisy H. second and Monarch third. Time, 2:31½. The following heat Elector broke badly and came in fourth, while Daisy H. captured the heat, Bertie M. second and Monarch third. Time, 2:31½. The concluding heats were postponed until the next day, as it was growing late.

The next day the horses were called at 12:30 o'clock, for the unfinished race. The horses were sent away well together. In the first heat Daisy H. at once took the lead and won the heat, Bertie M. second and Elector third. Time, 2:33.

The second heat and race was also won by Daisy H. in 2:38.

The first running race was for maidens, three years old and upwards. Three-year-olds to carry 105 pounds, sex allowance; three-quarters of a mile, purse $200.

In the send off, Benton and Baker led away, Luke Dubois and Trump followed very close. Baker, who was not considered in the hooks, pulled up to the lead, followed closely by Benton, who crowded the leader hard. But Baker drew away, leading under the wire a safe winner by two lengths, Benton second. Time, 1:19.

The Rocky Mountain Handicap, a sweepstakes for all ages, for entrance money and a purse of $500 added by the society was next on the list. The weight carried was 115 pounds each. Grisetette was favorite, but behaved badly and refused to start. After a half dozen fruitless efforts to get the horses off, they were finally started. Beaconsfield held the lead and rushed away with a vim and energy that surprised the favorites. Coming around on the half Grisetette drew up and passed the premier in front of the grand stand, passing under the wire a good three lengths in advance. The horses retained their relative positions to the mile, when Beaconsfield closed up and passed to the lead. Grisetette, under the stimulus of whip and spur did her best, but the gait set was too fast and she fell back. Rounding in for the last quarter the California mare acted badly. A furlong from the post she attempted to bolt, and during the momentary hesitation Beaconsfield forged ahead and closed winner by ten lengths. Time, 1:28.

Third race—purse $300, for all ages, one and one-sixteenth miles. Half an hour was consumed in sending the horses away, Echo refusing to start. The consumption of time became aggravating, and as a last resort Mollie McCarthy's Last and Pomeroy were sent off together, leaving Echo standing stubbornly at the post. Pomeroy led nearly all the way, Mollie's Last holding back for the finish. Half to the mile post Pomeroy and McCarthy ran an even race, but coming home the California mare forged ahead and galloped under the wire, winner by three lengths.

The fourth race was seven furlongs, all ages, for a purse of $300. The starters were George W. Cook, Estrella and Kismet. In the send away Cook led off and held first place to the half, when the California mare closed up the gap, ran a neck and neck race with Cook for several hundred yards, then bid him good-bye and forced the pace, which she set at a lively gait. However, the great descendant of Longfellow refused to drop back, and it was only after a desperate effort that the Californian succeeded in drawing up a neck in advance, in which position they passed under the wire. Time, 1:32.

The fifth race was three-quarters of a mile, for horses that have run and not won at this meeting carry weight for age. The starters were Pomeroy, Countess, Caliente, Dan Meek and Sorrel John. The weights carried were 110, 115, 92, 113 and 110 pounds. Sorrel John showed up in the lead going off, but held first position only to the quarter, when Countess and Caliente, running an even race, forged to the lead. The California mare out-footed the Countess and rounded to the front. Sorrel John, upon whom great hopes had been placed to outstrip Caliente, showed up in poor form and trailed behind a half dozen lengths. Coming around the turn Caliente let herself out and increased her lead, followed very closely by Countess, who finished an easy second, Sorrel John third. Time, 1:24.

The sixth and last race was the handicap sweepstakes of $15 each, with $50 added by the club. The entries were: St. Halma, Patience, Viscount, Nellie Bly and Dellwood. Viscount headed the field in the send away and held her place to the half, when she was passed by the gallant Dellwood, who headed her to the finish by three lengths, Nellie Bly third. Time, 1:24.

For the last day the weather was all that could be desired, and three excellent races were provided. The first race was for trotters in the 2:33 class, for a purse of $500. The starters were Spartan, Scioto, Allen, Van Duke, Georgie Moshier, Bunyan, Ned Biddle and Rowdy. Spartan was the favorite in the pools, selling readily against the field, although in the race Ned Biddle proved himself by far the superior horse, winning the two first heats easily. In the third heat, however, he broke down completely and had to leave the track.

For the first heat the horses got off very well together. Ned Biddle had the pole and got a good lead, which he held well, in coming down the home stretch put considerable daylight between him and his followers, and finished an easy winner with Rowdy second and Allen third. Time, 2:27½.

In the second heat Scioto got off first, closely followed by Spartan. At the half-mile post Ned Biddle overtook and passed the two leaders, Scioto fell back to sixth place, while the others forged ahead. Ned Biddle kept his lead and finished an easy winner. Spartan came in second with Rowdy third. Time, 2:25.

Before the next heat Allen was withdrawn, leaving but seven horses in the race. When the horses got off Ned Biddle at once jumped to the lead, closely followed by Spartan and Rowdy. At the five-eighths pole Biddle made a dismal break. He could not withstand the strain and broke completely, his driver being forced to withdraw him from the track. This accident changed the entire complexion of the race, as Biddle was looked upon as a three-time winner. After Biddle's bad break the heat lay practically between Rowdy and Spartan. The two latter horses trotted together neck and neck for some time, but in coming down the home stretch Rowdy forged ahead and finished a winner, with Spartan a good second and Georgie Moshier third. Time, 2:27½.

In the fourth heat the horses got off together in good shape, Rowdy took the lead, with Spartan scarcely a neck behind, Bunyan and Van Duke trotting well together closely on the heels of the leaders. At the half mile post Rowdy broke, and although she settled quickly, it was sufficient to give Spartan the lead, who held it all the way home and finished a safe winner, with Rowdy second.

In the next heat Spartan took the lead, followed closely by Rowdy. At the half-mile post Spartan increased her lead to two lengths and finished an easy winner, with Rowdy second and Bunyan third. Rowdy, however, was sent to third place for running and crossing at the turn, and second place was awarded to Bunyan. Time 2:29½.

In the sixth and last heat the only starters were Rowdy and Spartan. Both horses got off well together and trotted neck and neck until the quarter-post was reached, when Spartan forged ahead, and keeping the lead, finished an easy winner. Time, 2:29.

Time, 2:27½, 2:25, 2:27½, 2:27½, 2:29½, 2:29.

The second event was a free-for-all pacing race, for a purse of $700. There were but two starters, L. C. Lee and Honesty. The former was by far the best horse of the two, and won with ease the entire three heats straight. Time, 2:21, 2:19½, 2:19.

The third race was for trotters in the 2:24 class, for a purse of $600. The starters were Belle J., Edgewood, Carl and Captain. Edgewood was a big favorite in the pools, but was unable to win a heat. George W. Cook's Carl was a surprise to most of the sports at the pool boxes, for, after losing the first heat by scarcely a head, he seemed to gain encouragement from the first defeat, and going in with a vengeance won the next three heats with apparent ease, and was declared the winner of the race. R. Bean, the owner, and owner of Captain, an Emporia, Kansas, horse, was fined $25 for trying to foul Carl and Belle J. while coming down the homestretch in the second heat.

In the fourth heat Edgewood led at the start, but broke badly and fell far behind, giving Captain the lead coming down the homestretch, when Carl and Captain were closely matched, the latter winning by a lead in 2:24½. Belle J. was third and Edgewood fourth.

In the pools before the second heat, Carl was a heavy favorite, on account of her close finish. All the horses got off well together. Captain led to the half, when Carl took the lead and won easily in 2:25. Belle J. second, Edgewood third, Captain fourth. Time, 2:25. At the conclusion of this heat the judges announced that the driver of Captain had been fined $25 for attempting to foul Carl and Belle J. in coming up the back stretch.

The third heat was simply a repetition of the preceding one, with the exception of Captain and Edgewood changed places. Time, 2:27½.

In the fourth heat Carl again took the lead and held it until the finish, with Belle J. close behind. Carl finished a winner by about two lengths, Belle J. second, Edgewood third and Captain fourth. Time, 2:27.

Same Day—Running, last race, five-eighths of a mile. Joe Hooker, Little Cap and Barney G., were started in the order named. Little Cap was hard chased, but won; no time reported.

It is reported that Secretary Fasig of the Cleveland driving park, with a Pennsylvania horseman as partner, proposes taking a shipload of American trotters to Buenos Ayres, Argentine Republic, and after a three or four days' trotting meeting in the great South American town to sell the horses at public auction. The trip will be enormously expensive, but it is expected that the profits will be similarly great.

Mr. Morrissey, the Montana man who came out with such a splurge a couple of years ago and made his advent on the running turf under sensational auspices, closed out at auction what was left of his venture in New York the other day, and will be heard of no more as an owner of thoroughbreds. Morrissey was reputed to be worth a vast amount of money, and his stable contained Montana Regent, Kaloolah, Banburg, and some others that have at times run well, but on the whole it was never a formidable one. During its first season "War Jig" Murphy was the trainer, and under his management there were some victories placed to the credit of the string, but when the bad luck came Murphy and Morrissey parted company, and this year the stable has been in other hands. At the beginning of the season Morrissey had one colt, French Park, that seemed likely to be the crack two-year-old of the year, winning all his early engagements with ease, and along in June it looked as though he had a cinch on the Futurity Stakes, which Proctor Knott won. But French Park, like many another wind splitter, went wrong, and although he brought $12,500 at the auction sale it is given out that he was bought in by a man to whom Morrissey owes a lot of money.—Ex.

San Diego Races.

The second day of the opening of the Pacific Beach Track, under the auspices of the Southern California Breeders' Association was, if possible, more of a success than the initial day. The unfinished races between Alto Rex and Pops Leo was of great interest, and all the betting was in favor of Alto Rex. F. R. Hall was put in behind Leo, but Rex had the heat all his own way and won easily.

The regular programme for this day was headed by a running race for $400, half mile heats, best 2 in 3. Gladstone had the first heat well in hand from the start and won, Sleepy Dick making a very good second, getting within half a length of winning. Susie S. came in a good third, with a length and a half against her.

In the second heat Gladstone took the lead from the start and maintained it in spite of Sleepy Dick's effort to overhaul him, and passed under the wire an easy winner. The rest of the horses were pretty well bunched and finished in a "ruck."

In the third race only Jack Brady, ridden by B. C. Bernard; Four Aces, ridden by Benny Stewart; Hermes, with Tom Hazlett up, and John Treat, faced the starters.

This race was a surprise party to everybody on the course. John Treat, who was at a discount in the pools, came in an easy winner. The other horses hunched closely up to the stretch, but they could not get away with what was very literally the dark horse, under the wire.

Captain W. H. Crawford, Captain James Stone and George A. Johnson were in the judge's stand for the fourth day. It was essentially a day for the "talent," as the favorites won in every event, and the professional bettors and race followers were accordingly happy.

The first race on the card was a three-minute trotting race for $1,000. But one horse, Dick Johnson, owned by Chas. Duffie & Company of Los Angeles, appeared on the track in answer to the bell, all the other entries having been withdrawn. Johnson was driven over this course in a jog having a walk-over for this race and fifty per cent. of this purse.

This next race was a match event between E. B. Gifford's trotting horse Jim Blaine, driven by Frank Treanor and M. Comstock's pacer Patchen T., driven by Tom Burke. Patchen T. got the pole and they were given a very pretty send off on the first score. Jim Blaine broke before he had gone six lengths, and Patchen opened up a gap which he had increased to six lengths at the half-mile post. Blaine then steadied down to some very pretty trotting, and at the three-quarter post was at Patchen's wheel. Just as he entered the head of the stretch he again broke, but recovered very quickly, and came along with such a stride that he carried Patchen off his feet, and passed under the wire with two lengths to spare in 2:36.

Second Heat—They were given the send-off on the second score, Blaine immediately taking the lead by a length, which he held to the five furlong post when Patchen T. made a bad break, allowing Blaine to open a tremendous gap. At the three-quarter post it looked as though Patchen would be distanced, but he came down the stretch with a good burst of speed, closing up to within six lengths of this winner. Time, 2:33.

Third Heat—Complaints were made to the judges before starting this heat that Burke was not driving Patchen to win, and he was removed and Cad Register placed in to handle the ribbons. It made no difference, however, as Blaine had too much speed, and with a repetition of the second heat came in winner by four lengths in 2:36½. Pools on this race sold at $25 on Blaine and $20 on Patchen.

SUMMARY.

Match Race, for $200.
E. B. Gifford's blk g Jim Blaine..... 1 1 1
W. Comstock's b g Patchen T..... 2 2 2
Time, 2:36, 2:33, 2:36½.

The next race was for the 2:38 class, trotting, for a purse of $200, given by E. B. Gifford. Only two horses appeared in answer to the call, the others having been withdrawn. Those were Phoenix, driven by Cad Register, and Prentice Boy, driven by Frank Treanor, both owned by E. Burns. They were given the send-off immediately, Prentice Boy at the pole. At the first furlong the Boy had a lead of a length, but Phoenix closed up until he lapped him at the three furlongs, and these positions were maintained until the finish, Prentice Boy winning by half a length in 2:47.

Second heat—Phoenix took the lead after the word and held it to the first quarter, when Prentice Boy forged ahead by half a length. This pace was too hot for him, however, and Phoenix led the way to the finish in 2:51.

Third Heat—There were more complaints to the judges from bettors about drivers not trying to win, and this time it was Treanor whom they accused. He was accordingly removed and Mr. Walsh substituted in his place. The race was pretty much as the second heat, only that Phoenix took a greater lead, Prentice Boy just saving his distance. Time, 2:49. After this heat it was seen that Prentice Boy was lame, and officials of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals protested against his being started again. Accordingly Phoenix made the circuit of the track alone, winning the race and stakes. Pools, Phoenix, $20; Prentice Boy, $7.

Following this came the extra running race, being a match at three-quarters of a mile between H. Stover's bay stallion Jack Brady, five years, and W. J. Patterson's brown colt Corduroy, 3 years, for $100 a side. Brady carried 150 pounds and Corduroy 111. They were given an excellent send off at the quarter pole, and for three furlongs ran so closely together that a blanket would have covered both. Then Jack Brady began to slowly pull ahead, and passed under the wire under a strong pull in 1:19½, a winner by two lengths. Considering the weight carried it was a very fine performance. Pools, Jack Brady, $10, Corduroy, $3.

For the last day Messrs. Stone, Crawford and Johnson occupied the judges' stand again, with Covarrubias, Register and B. F. Woods as starters, and Marcus Foster and C. C. Woodmansee as timers.

The first race was the three-quarter mile dash for three-year-olds, with the following entries: B. P. Hill's Adam, Mikado and Johnny Gray, and L. C. Sturgill's Susie S.

The horses were called out promptly at 2 o'clock and immediately sent to the quarter-pole for the start. Adam bucked badly and it required four times scoring before the starters were satisfied to drop the flag. They were given a fine send off, Johnny Gray a rifle in the lead, and thus they ran closely bunched to the half. Adam began to move up from the rear and took second place, but at the five furlong pole gave it up to Mikado, who was crowding Gray closely. In this position they continued to the head of the stretch, when Mikado forged ahead slightly, and it was whip and spur to the finish, Mikado landing under the wire first by half a length, with Susie S. and Adam almost a tie for third place, both lapped upon Gray. Time, 1:15½. Pools opened at $20 on Mikado, $14 for Susie S., and the field $13. Just before the start, however, the field was selling at $20, Susie S. $12 and Johnny Gray $11.

SUMMARY.

Three-quarter mile dash for three-year-olds; $450; second to save entrance.
B. P. Hill's c g Mikado by Shiloh, dam Margery, 115, Stewart 1
L. C. Sturgill's b m Susie S. by Ironwood, dam Jennie Mc, 115 Newell 2

There were complaints made of fouling by Mikado's rider and it was sometime before the result was announced, the judges waiting until they could hear the statements of all interested, and of the starters and track patrolers. In the meantime several hundred dollars' worth of pool checks were cashed, but as no change was made from the position of the horses at the finish, no bad effect resulted. The two mile dash was the liveliest race of the day and one of the most exciting of the meet. Betting opened up lively, John Treat selling at $60, Four Aces $23 and Galgo $17. It proved one of those races in which this favorite didn't win, and the short end buyers were correspondingly happy. The horses were given a good send off together at the first score, Four Aces having the pole with Galgo and John Treat in the order named. They sped away to the first-quarter in 26 seconds as though they were only in for a quarter race instead of a long distance run. At the half mile John Treat had opened up daylight between himself and Four Aces, while Galgo was lapped on the latter. These positions were maintained to the third quarter, all apparently running quite easily. Mikado began to pull up in the stretch, and at the end of the first mile was on Treat's flank. Galgo dropped back several lengths at the first quarter of the second mile, and at the half Treat and Four Aces occupied almost the same positions as in the first mile. At the three-quarter pole Four Aces had again crawled up to Treat's flank, and as they swung into the stretch head and head it ended in a whipping race from the seven furlong pole, with the prettiest finish ever seen on the track, Four Aces landing the winner by a head, Galgo three lengths in the rear. Time, 3:37.

SUMMARY.

Two mile dash for all ages. Purse, $700.

Time by quarters—26; 51; 1:18½; 1:45½; 2:14; 2:42½; 3:09½; 3:37.

Following these two running events came the county stallion race for a purse of $400. There were four entries as follows:

Joe W. drew the pole with Glen Morgan, Alto Rex and Pope Leo next in the order named. They were given a good start on the second score, Alto Rex immediately taking the lead, and at the quarter he was two lengths ahead of Pope Leo, the others about the same distance behind Leo. At the half the same relative positions were held, only that Rex was increasing the gap, and by the time he reached the head of the stretch he had eight lengths to spare, and came in in a jog in 2:34, Pope Leo two lengths behind and the others out of sight. The distance was waived, or both Joe W. and Glen Morgan would have been shut out.

The second and third heats were but repetitions of the first, Rex having such a lead at the three-quarter post that he only jogged on. Pools, Alto Rex, $20, field, $5.

SUMMARY.

E. B. Gifford's Alto Rex, by Attorney, dam Roxie. Burke..... 1 1 1

C. J. Coit's b. h. Glen Morgan, by Sacramento, dam Mary Morgan. Hall..... 4 4 3
Time, 2:34, 2:36, 2:37½.

Otto Rex, the winner, is a dark bay colt, four years old, owned by E. B. Gifford, who only purchased him ten days ago of Mr. Lightner, for $1,010. Rex is by Attorney, son of Harold. His dam is Roxie a Hambletonian mare. Mr. Gifford told the Bee man to-day that $5,000 would not buy this horse now.

Between the heats of the trotting race occurred two match running races, the first a quarter-mile dash for $500 between Cyclous, owned by Sturgill, and Amazon, owned by Dunn, both carrying 115 pounds. Cyclous won by half a length in 23½ seconds.

The other was a three-furlong dash between P. B. Hill's Eve, two-year-old, and W. J. Patterson's Claud Roy, aged, for $100, catch weights. Eve won by a length and a half in 36½ seconds.

Taken altogether the meeting has been a grand success, and the Pacific Beach Company, as well as the citizens of San Diego, may well be proud of this meeting. The track is new, but some of the performances show that it will after more use be one of the fastest in America. The performance of the two-year-old Four Aces to-day in running two miles in 3:37 is one of the best on record, while that of Gladstone last Tuesday in running both heats of the half-mile heat race in 48½ seconds heats the best record at that distance, so that already the San Diego track is famous.

Fair at Colfax, W. T.

COLFAX, W. T., Oct. 12.—The day opened misty, but cleared off, and the afternoon was fine.

The postponed race, half mile and repeat, handicap, was won by Ida Glenn, she winning second and third heats; time, 0:53, 0:53½. This race surprised the pool box, the winner selling in the field at $2 against $30.

Running for 2-year-olds, five eighths of a mile; $25 each, $250 added. Pat Curran came in first, but Kitty Van's rider was accused of throwing the race, and the judges declared the race and pools off.

Running, quarter mile dash; purse $150, with four starters, as follows: Weazel, White Cloud, Greeley and Aleck. Weazel was an easy winner.

Trotting, mile heats, 3 in 5; purse $350. Entries—Sam Scott's Fantasia, J. H. Bntler's Col. Bradshaw, Hugh Kirkendall's Contractor, C. B. Jeffries' Lady Don. Bradshaw was favorite in the pools, and won in three straight heats, Fantasia second, Contractor third and Lady Don last; time, 2:29½, 2:33, 2:35.

Oct. 13.—The last day of the fair was clear, and the attendance the largest of the week. The fair has been a success in everything, although the fruit display was small, owing to the unfavorable weather in the early spring.

The free-for-all trot for a purse of $600 was won by Col. Bradshaw in three straight heats, Charles Hilton second, Conde third, Contractor fourth; time, 2:31, 2:35, 2:31½.

The novelty free-for-all running race, one mile, won by Jack Frost in 1:51½.—N. P. Rural Spirit.

The latest young trotter to create a sensation in the blue grass region is a yearling colt by Cyclous, dam by Monroe Chief, that was driven a public mile not long ago in 2:49½. The youngster had been in training but six weeks, and is not a large colt. Like most of the baby trotters this one is trotting-brsd on all sides, his sirs having a record of 2:23½, made in 1885, while Monroe Chief, the sire of his dam, has a record of 2:18½, and a mark of 4:46 at two miles, which was the best until Fanny Witherspoon took a crack at it. It is not much wonder that a colt by Cyclous, dam by Monroe Chief, trots in 2:49½ as a yearling, and chances are that unless he is injured by early training he will beat 2:20 by the time he reaches maturity.

The pacers are busy building up a table of age records for their own benefit, and while only a few of them equal those made by the trotters, they promise to pass them in time. The following are the best for two, three, four and five-year-olds, as far as I can learn to date:

Five-year-old stallion Roy Wilkes..... 2:14½
Five-year-old gelding Arrow..... 2:14½
Four-year-old stallion Bessemer..... 2:15
Four-year-old gelding Arrow..... 2:14
Four-year-old filly Lillian..... 2:12½
Three-year-old stallion Dodd Peel..... 2:22½
Three-year-old gelding Adonis..... 2:14½
Three-year-old filly Yolo Maid..... 2:14
Two-year-old filly Irma..... 2:24½

The corresponding records for the trotters are:

Five-year-old stallion Patron..... 2:14½
Five-year-old gelding Jay-Eye-See..... 2:10
Five-year-old filly Rosalind Wilkes..... 2:14½
Four-year-old stallion Brown..... 2:18½
Four-year-old gelding Jay-Eye-See..... 2:19
Four-year-old filly Manzanita..... 2:16
Three-year-old stallion Sabie Wilkes..... 2:18
Three-year-old g. filly Phil Thompson..... 2:21
Three-year-old filly Hinda Rose..... 2:19½
Two-year-old stallion Axtell..... 2:23
Two-year-old gelding Fred Crocker..... 2:25½
Two-year-old filly Sunol..... 2:18
One-year-old stallion Hambrino Bismarck..... 2:40½
One-year-old filly Norlane..... 2:31½

Scale of Points For Milking Cows.

The following from the London Farmer, of August 3d, will be of interest to many of our readers who desire to know how good milkers are judged:

"I cannot forbear to notice the exceedingly ingenious system which was adopted in the recent milking trials in the Edinburgh show by Mr. James McQueen, the judge, in order to ascertain which of the animals were entitled to the prizes. To some extent the scale of points was based upon the system adopted by the British Farmers' Association, but there is an additional value attaching to it by the ingenious method of totaling the points. It will be remembered that the prize for the best milking cow is not given to the animal giving the largest quantity of milk nor to the one giving milk of the best quality, but that, in London, the two milkings are weighed and the quantity of milk set down, a certain number of points being allowed. The total solids are then ascertained, and two points for every one per cent. allowed. The time since calving in days is then given, for which one-tenth per cent. is allowed. These points are then totaled, and if the fat has then failed to reach a certain standard, a deduction is made which tells against the cow. Thus, for example, taking one of the prize cows, at the London Dairy show, giving 40 pounds 7 ounces of milk, or about sixteen quarts, she is allowed one per cent., thus giving her 40.44 points. Her solids weigh 12.41, and for these she got 24.62 points. She had calved 70 days, and was allowed 7 points, or in all 72.06. Now if we take a case showing the system adopted in Edinburgh, the first prize cow received 80.56 points as follows:

Weight of milk in twenty-four hours.....	32.00	32.00
Total solids.....	13.76	13.76
Butter fat.....	6.25
Three per cent. of the fat is standard. Add or deduct 10 per cent. for every 1 per cent. above or below—consequently add.....		22.50
Time since calving 123 days. Add one point for every ten days.....		12.30
Total.....		80.56

I have carefully looked through the scales of points as applied to every individual cow of which particulars are published, and it appears to me that the system adopted is as near perfect as possible. The big milker does not gain in consequence of having recently calved, unless she is an equally good butter-maker, and an example may be given of a cow which yielded 47.25 pounds of milk. She had calved only twenty-eight days, and her milk was very poor; consequently her great excess of milk was of no avail against the rich quality of the first cow. One of the most important features in this, as in English trials—and it is one that Americans ought to notice—is that the cows in every individual case fell so far below the standard of American big milkers as to give one the impression either that English cattle, or at all events those which are exhibited, are of little value at all for the dairy, or else that the American yields are vastly over-estimated. Mr. Simpson, who is one of the best authorities upon the Jersey in Great Britain, and who has probably had more good cows pass through his hands than any one in the country, declared, the other day, at a meeting of the Jersey society, that he did not believe a word with regard to the American trials; and in spite of the fact that American stock breeders are exceedingly clever, and that they pay a vast sight more attention to results than we do in England, I am afraid I shall not credit the big things which American Jerseys have done until I am able to see these trials conducted with my own eyes."

To What Age Will Cows Breed.

In a former number, in answer to the inquiries of a correspondent, we stated that the most remarkable case that we were then able to record was that of the Shorthorn cow Cherry by Waterloo (2816), bred by Mr. John Stephenson, of Wolviston, England. This cow was calved December 20, 1821, dropped her first calf January 16, 1825, and continued to breed regularly every year up to February, 1840, when she dropped her sixteenth calf, being then in her 19th year. Another very remarkable case was that of Red Rose by Windsor (698). This cow was calved in 1812, and produced sixteen calves; the last birth being twin heifers, dropped when she was 16 years old.

Since writing the foregoing we find in the North British Agriculturist a statement by a correspondent, that a certain Hereford cow had "produced 31 calves, and continued to breed until she was 33 years old;" and another correspondent states that "the Kellor Old Grannie lived still longer," and that "Mr. R. Colling's Young Strawberry, and Mr. Lakin's cow of the same name, bred till 27 years old." The same correspondent adds that "Mr. Hutchinson mentions one which, besides bulls, bred 19 cow calves;" and that "there is (or was recently) a pedigree Shorthorn cow in the fine herd at Kimbolton considerably over 20, and breeding regularly."

These are very remarkable cases, and we will take the liberty of calling upon our contemporary for a more specific statement of the facts in all the above instances, if they can be obtained.

But we have in our own country remarkable case than any of those given by us in our November number. In 1834, the Ohio Company imported the cow that afterwards became famous as the founder of the Young Mary tribe of Shorthorns. She was a roan, calved 1832, bred by Mr. J. Clark, and tracing through Jupiter (2170), Saladin (1417) and Meek's Bull (2280), to a cow bred by Mr. Holmes, of Otterington. This cow was named Young Mary, and with her first calf, Pocahontas by imp. Comet Halley (1856), was bought at the Ohio Company's sale in Oct., 1836, by Mr. Vanmeter and Capt. Cunningham, and taken to Kentucky. She lived to the age of 21 years, and died in giving birth to her 16th calf, which survived her a day or two. Among her most noted produce were Hannah More, Judith Clark, and Lilace, all by Goldfinder (2066), and her descendants are to-day among the most popular as well as the most numerous of all well-bred Shorthorns.—National Live Stock Journal.

Status of the Cow.

Pedigree, more than any other one thing, determines the status of the cow. Individual merit comes in to qualify the status—to raise or lower it. A cow may be above or below the average of her breed. If above, she may have the power in some degree, to transmit this excellence. Hence it is that by selection and breeding from the best, comes improvement. If we get excellence from both the sire and dam, improvement is almost certain to follow in the offspring. Intelligent breeders take advantage of this fact to secure an improved type, and to it are we indebted for the superiority of all the breeds in their particular line of development—milk or beef.

Yet failure often follows, when two superior individual types are coupled. The fact that their progenitors, in the beginning, were inferior, causes a tendency to strike back to the original type. Hence, even the most improved sire and dam may occasionally produce offspring below, instead of above, their own status. Much depends on the length of time the breed has been in developing, and the care and skill exercised in selecting and breeding. If of recent origin, avism, or striking back, will be much more frequent, and render breeding more uncertain in its results. But a long-established breed, like the Devons, with almost absolute certainty produces an average type. Hence, the importance of selecting sire and dam, not only with a good pedigree, but with a long one of excellence. With such, breeding is much more certain and satisfactory, and in breeding up a herd by introducing improved blood of well-established excellence, improvement is both much more certain and much more rapid.

It is a mistaken idea that it will pay to start with inferior animals and breed up. If successful, the progress would be too slow to make it pay, so long as advantage may be taken of improvement already secured. Common sense dictates the selection of the best possible available type. If the beginning is with inferior animals, the breeding may be down instead of up. This is a most important fact to be observed in selecting and breeding, and many make failures by not paying attention to it. From this comes the chief danger of in-breeding. Both sides are likely to have the same bad as well as the same good qualities, and had qualities are transmitted and intensified, as well as good ones. But if all the points are right, then in-breeding strengthens them and goes to insure their transmission.

We often hear the remark made, that if our common stock were treated the same as the blooded, the result would be the same. This is true only in a limited sense. By better care and keep, and by careful selection in breeding, undoubtedly improvement would follow. But it would take a great many years—more than one man's lifetime—to start with nothing but our native stock, and breed up to the status of our already established breeds of improved stock.

A New Breed.

Mr. J. F. Begert, of Minneapolis, is travelling in Switzerland, and writes from Wimmis to the Cultivator as follows:

My attention having been called recently to that excellent breed of cattle known as the Simmenthal Fleckvieh (spotted cattle), at the annual cattle fair at Erlenbach, in this canton of Switzerland, I thought it of interest to acquaint you with some of my observations, although I am not myself in that line of business.

Combining, as they undoubtedly do, first-rate dairy quality with a magnificent build for beef, they would certainly seem to be the ideal breed for an American farmer to cultivate. How well their worth is appreciated in Europe is shown by the fact that experienced stockmen from nearly all European countries were present at the sale—French, German, Italian and Hungarian traders buying the choicest specimens at, what is here considered a fair valuation, 1,000 to 1,500 francs. Some of the points which the buyers claim give this special breed the preference are: That the cows stand very high both for quantity and quality of milk; that stall-fed bulls weigh from 1,900 to 2,200 pounds; that the meat is famous for its fine grain and superior quality; that the dairy and stockmen have an enviable reputation for preserving the purity of the breed, and that they are exceptionally handsome cattle, of a powerful yet supple make-up, and a clean huff and white spotted color.

In my judgment, however, to do the cattle justice, they would have to fall into the hands of such farmers and breeders as are fully alive to their needs and requirements, as the Swiss stockmen give the care of their cattle every possible attention, it being their pride, and self-interest as well, that prompt them to do this. That the Simmenthal breed is suitable for acclimatization in America, has been demonstrated by the few shipments made to South America, which are reported as doing well there.

Distribute the Calving Season.

Mr. John M. Stable, of Quincy, Ill., in writing about the advantage of having part of a dairy herd calve in the fall and part in the spring, says, through the Cultivator and Country Gentleman, some pertinent things. His experience is great, and he is an observant man, so that readers may well weigh his words when he remarks:

"In my case, at least, I have found it better to have only a part of the cows calve in the fall, for the further reason that I get the best prices by contracting to furnish each week a quantity of butter. This butter goes to certain consumers who can depend, therefore, upon getting what butter they need each week, of the same quality, of the same make. Now, if all my cows calved at the same season, I would find it very difficult to fill my contract. At one season I would have too much butter, and at another season not enough. But by having part of the cows calve in the fall and part in the spring, I can have about the same quantity of butter to dispose of at all seasons of the year. Here I may note that while a cow that calves in the spring may give more milk for a time after calving than if she calves in the fall, yet there will not be much difference in her butter product, as it will require more of her spring than of her fall milk to make a pound of butter. If you will cut the clover early enough, not allow the sun to burn and brown it through the mistaken notion that it is not properly cured till it is dried and brittle, and store it where it will not be damaged, you will find that pasture is not so very much superior to hay as a butter producer.

Fall calving does not necessarily include any injury to the calves to offset the advantages named above. I have read recently that an experienced cattle grower said that, other things being equal, a fall calf made a better animal than a spring calf made; it made by spring such growth that it could make the most of pasture, whereas by the time the spring calf was able to eat grass to any amount, the pastures had begun to fail, and by the time it was ready to make the most of pasture, the latter was used up for months. I do not know who this experienced cattle-raiser is, but I think he is correct about fall calves. He might have said further, that on the farm at least, where the cow department is only one or several, and likely not the most important of the departments, the calf dropped in the fall needed the most attention at a season when farm work was less pressing, and therefore the calf would be more apt to get all the attention it needed, and with less inconvenience to the working force. The calf dropped in the spring, when farm work is sure to be hurrying all hands, stands a better chance of being neglected, and if it gets all the care it should have, it is at a greater expense."

Facts About Texas Fever.

The test to determine the contagious nature of Texas fever has been vigorously prosecuted until the present time, and it has just been conclusively proven that natives will contract the disease through contact with Texan cattle, says the Stockman. About a month ago a number of healthy natives were placed in a pen at the stock yards with cattle from Texas which had the fever, and while the opinion was soon voiced that the disease had become contagious, the fever in the afflicted natives was allowed to progress until Friday of last week. They were then slaughtered and carefully examined by several veterinarians, who state that they found unmistakable evidences of the fever. The bladder of each animal contained unhealthy secretions, inflammation was apparent in the kidneys in a high degree, gangrene had set in, and both spleen and stomach were enlarged and diseased. This explodes the theory held by some that a period of at least forty days must ensue, for exposure, before the fever is manifested. In conversation with old-time cattlemen the belief is stated that the disease is generally contracted by eating from the same pens or hay racks with Texans, or perhaps on the same pasturage, holding that the virus is contained in the secretions of the mouth. An actual experience was reported: Two droves of natives in transit from one point to another were treated in exactly the same manner with a single exception; one lot was unloaded at a feeding station and temporarily placed in a pen and given a portion of hay where Texas cattle had been recently fed. The animals in this drove took the fever, with the subsequent death of a number thereof, while the other hunch, which were practically the same cattle, escaped unscathed. There is a grain of comfort in knowing that with the advent of frost the disease disappears each year.

Dehorning.

Hoar's Dairyman, which from the start has most stoutly antagonized the practice of "dehorning" cattle, declares that "it neither raises the question whether cattle look better or worse with horns off, whether God made a mistake either in putting the horns on, or a success in making moose, whether it hurts or don't hurt to saw them off—but the sole question is the result of butter production in the animal dehorned, and the butter potency of the dehorned breeding animal; and that these points are not, so far, settled in favor of dehorning that we are ready to run the risk of indiscriminate dehorning of all cattle. The horns of steers, scrub bulls, and 'three-pound' cows, we would like to see 'go,' and have the meat in such animals soon interview the beef barrel." This latter declaration, which will, we fancy, be considered quite a concession by the advocates of the hand-saw operation who have come to look upon the Dairyman as the most powerful and persistent opponent of their practice, is about in line with the position of the Breeders Gazette, which some time since expressed a willingness to see the scrubs' horns go now in hopes that their heads may go next. As the Dairyman apparently concedes the advantages of "dehorning" steers, and encamps squarely on its position that there is at least a danger of injuring the "butter potency" by removing horns by the hand-saw, and demands proof to the contrary of its supposition, it would seem that those who so warmly advocate this practice might do well to take up the gauntlet thus thrown down and by actual experiment, carefully and thoroughly performed, throw some light on this mooted question. Does "dehorning" decrease the flow of milk and lessen the quantity of butter and fat? Hoar's Dairyman asserts the latter, at least, and expresses the fear that sawing the horns off huffs of the highly specialized butter breeds will militate against their potency in the transmission of the butter-making ability. Have the advocates of "dehorning" anything other than ridicule to offer in reply to this oft-asserted theory?

Packing Butter in Brine—How the Brine is Made.

Last season we packed our surplus butter on the following plan and found when we sold in December, when the butter was unpacked for sale, it came out just as fresh and well tasted as it was when packed, says the Dairyman. We adopted the following method:

Bought new pork barrels, scalded them out thoroughly with boiling water three different times, the last time covered the barrel with a cloth to keep in the steam. Let stand until the water cools, then rinse out the barrel with cold water, and the barrel is ready for use. We made a strong brine, by boiling, that would float an egg, skimmed off any scum that was on top, and let stand over night. In the morning the brine would be as clear as crystal. Butter was salted in the usual way, one ounce to the pound. Made into five to six-pound rolls, wrapped carefully up in cheese cloth and tied with cotton wrapping twine to keep the cloth in place. The rolls were then placed into the barrels and covered with the brine and kept covered. The air is not allowed to come in contact with it again until unpacked. And my opinion is, right here is where the secret lays in keeping the air excluded, no foul odors can get to it. Some might think the butter would get too salty in such strong brine. Not one bit of danger, if the butter has been properly handled before going in the barrel. We make our butter on the granular plan and press it solidly together. As I informed you in my letter last season, we packed several barrels in this way, and it was in the brine four or five months, and not a fault found to a pound of it. I have no doubt that butter packed in this way can be shipped to any market in the United States or Europe, if ordinary care is taken not to let it lay outside exposed to the hot sun. Butter can be packed in this way in bins or in any vessel that will hold the brine.

In selecting a dairy cow, the question is generally asked, how much milk does she give per day; but the more important one, "how long does she continue to give that amount," is not always added. How many cows are there which do not give milk longer than about six months per year. They will give a large flow, but it does not last any length of time. Such an animal is not wanted in the dairy and should go to the butcher. An animal averaging say 50 pounds—equal to about 25 quarts—per pay, for seven months will give during that year in round numbers about 10,500 pounds. Another giving but 40 pounds per day—or 1½ gallons less—for ten months will during the year give 12,000 pounds, a difference 1,500 pounds in favor of the cow giving the 1½ less per day. Considering the milk worth 3 cents per quart, will make a difference of $22.50 per year. The same is true of the quality. In comparing two animals, the one may give a third more milk during a certain period than the other, but the difference in the quality may be such that the second will yield a third more butter than the first. These are questions which interest every farmer more or less, and a careful test of every animal upon the place may save much in the end.

27, 1888.

Long before this paper will be issued the intelligence has been flashed all over the country that a two-year-old filly had reduced the records for that age to 2:18.

Few will question the right of Sunol to rank as the most wonderful trotter which has yet appeared, and that without restriction to age or other conditions. Granting that Mand S. stands first by the unquestioned title of having made the fastest time, there is such a difference between two years and ten, and still further by comparing the gap which divides the first and second in the juvenile class, a simple statement is all that is required to fix the pride of place.

There is nothing left for conjecture, no prognostications of which the future will reveal, 2:18 is a recorded fact, although we are firm in the belief that a slight change in the condition of the last hundred yards of the track would have taken a quarter of a second from the time. Neither do we consider that the whole track was at its very best, being a trifle soft for a supreme display of trotting speed. We took our favorite position, viz, the center of the press stand, immediately over the wires.
There are two wires to guide the eye, so that from exactly the same position there can be no mistake in marking the full circuit. We made the first quarter 35 seconds, the half 1:09, three-quarters 1:43½, mile 2:18.
The official timers, all having split second watches, made the quarter 35, half 1:09½, three-quarters 1:42½, and the mile 2:18. Undoubtedly their fractions were the most correct, and these give the last half 1:08¾.

At this season of the year one of the grand stands shades the last hundred yards of the track for a great portion of the day, and this was so soft that the feet of the filly sank fully an inch in the yielding clay.

Her picture will be presented before long, it would have been in this number but Mr. Marvin requested that the visit of our artist be delayed until she had recovered from the "drawing" incidental to training.

Sprains of the Suspensory Ligament.

We have no apology to offer for occupying so much space with the disquisition under the above heading. That the subject is of general interest is proved by the former article having been copied in a number of our exchanges, and in addition to that we have received many requests to complete the history. The disappointment which followed the injury to Antevolo has been, in a measure, overcome by the lesson that misfortune presented. As we have stated many times before, the fascination in breeding, rearing and training horses mainly lies in the opportunities afforded for experiment. Could race-horses, "sure enough" racehorses, and fast trotters be turned out with the certainty of a piece of machinery, or it will be better to say with the assurance that a coiner has when he places the metal under the die that a perfect coin would result, the charm would be broken. The "glorious uncertainty" would no longer exist, and when
"big fields" of starters kept coming to the winning score in a parallel line, time and time again, there would be no one to attend the races.

That it was a grievous disappointment, goes without saying. The National had been a pet project. When people prophesied that the stake would not fill, never a doubt in our mind. When nine nominations were received the cry was that not a third of them would make the second payment, due on the 1st of September. Still never a doubt until the 22d of August, when in the early morning the bowed tendon came in view. On the completion of the brush mentioned elsewhere, there was a stagger, "propping" himself on that leg; when turned around to jog back there was no mistaking the "dot-and-go-one" method of progression. He shook his head when chirruped to go faster and the home journey was at a walk. We could not endure the thought of listening to the "I told you so's", and determined to keep him at work at all hazards, the road chosen when at the worst so as to escape observation. His second payment was made on the 1st of September, when it appeared a hopeless case, and on the 7th the entry in the journal stands; "Drove Antevolo; after walking and jogging four miles, quite lame and I brought him home." After awhile reports came from Sacramento that Guy Wilkes had gone irremediably lame, and from Stockton the unwelcome news that Director had succumbed. Of the five which made second payment, only two were left. The pessimists had the call. Still there were hopes, even if doubts existed. There was a chance that Guy and Director would recover so that they could start;
we told a friend that if Antevolo could be got in shape so as to respond to the hell call without being absolutely lame, he should take part if I knew he could not trot more than one heat. Plenty of the glorious. Room enough for the fascinations of uncertainty. No longer buoyed with the hope of winning, absorbed with the one idea, is it possible that he can be got in any kind of order? Certainly not if the teachings are correct. If Dr. Bowhill were summoned, if every competent member of the profession within reach were called to consult, there could only be one verdict, "no chance to start in the National." Easier to go our way without argument and though, as our good friend Mc— says, it may have been the d—d Scotch obstinacy which prevailed, the desire was gratified.

My countrymen have a right to be persistent. What Scotch hoy has not heard hundreds of times of Robert Bruce lying in the barn after six defeats, hopeless and disheartened. Six times a spider essayed to spin his web, six times it was broken, the seventh successful, and the Bruce won Bannockburn. When writing this, long after the hour when the curfew toll sounded in Oakland, a big brown spider came scurrying over the papers which littered the desk. We never killed a spider knowingly, though not fancying his too near presence rustled a paper and back he went at a pace which was decidedly hot for one of his size. Several times he came to the score and was turned back. It may have been the seventh as no count was taken, when he darted from under a pile of proofs within a few inches of our left hand and dropped off the edge on the side he had tried so often to reach.
Brave fellow! you have taught a second lesson, set an example which is not "bad form" to follow.

Now a pertinent query is presented. If so far successful in this instance, why not in others? None more competent than Dr. Bowhill to answer, and as he says it is an exception to the rule, he will gratify our readers by showing wherein the exception lies.

E. J. Baldwin's horses have arrived at the Bay District

Eureka Jockey Club.

It must be kept in mind that a week from next Thursday, November 15th, the entries to the purses of the Eureka Jockey Club will close. There have been wrong announcements, though fortunately the erroneous dates have been so long prior to the time fixed for closing that the correction will make amends.

In addition to the letter received from the Secretary, published last week, we learn from several visitors that many improvements have been made since the former meeting, stabling added and course put in first rate condition. The particulars will be learned from the advertisement, and also that the purses are liberal. As the opening day will be November 27th, there is ample time for horses engaged at the Blood Horse meeting to reach there. The free for all trotting purse, $750, should attract enough harness flyers to ensure a good race.

"Hidalgo" in the Antipodes.

In addition to the articles copied from the Melbourne Sportsman we have received letters from Hidalgo, in the first of which he says: "My wife is very well but dreadfully homesick. No end of attentions and hospitalities, but she and I love the grand old Oregon woods and silvery trout streams; and may God send us both safely back there."

The following, written a month after, gives evidence that the home-sickness has vanished under the load of hospitalities, and we shall not be at all surprised to learn that our old friend will extend his stay on the other side of the world until he has seen some of the many marvels in that land. In that case there will be many pleasant letters which in a measure will make amends for his absence from this slope. There are a few errors in the copied articles due to a dependence on memory and without records to refer to.

One of these is in reference to the record of four-year-old stallions, which he gives to Palo Alto. Previous to this year Antevolo held the place, and was the first of that age to beat 2:20, which was also done in a race.
There is an error, too, in relation to Jay-Eye-See, his four-year-old record being 2:19. Hidalgo's many friends on the coast will be pleased to learn of his success in selecting winners. A capital judge of racing form and condition, he is liable to make shrewd guesses, and we sincerely hope that he will come back loaded with so many pounds sterling that he will be bothered to carry them.

DEAR SIMPSON:—I wrote the letter which accompanies this just a month ago, I was going home to put some other stuff in the envelope before mailing when I met with a railway accident which came near costing me a loss of a foot. I was laid up 17 days, and then took a trip over to Sydney, where I saw the get of Darebin for the first time. Australian Peer is a big brown colt about the size of Joe Daniels at the same age, and, like Darebin, a very lazy horse. He and Abercorn have beaten one another several times, but no other horse can beat either of them save with great allowances of weight.
Every time the Peer starts out to make the pace he gets beat, but let him come with a rash and no horse can beat him: Power rode three winners that day, but the Peer was not one of them. I like Abercorn better for a campaigner than the Peer. He is a smaller and more wiry horse, with loins that remind me of Arab, the trotter.

I do not think Mr. White will start Volley for the Derby, and I think either Melos or Cartrine will run it. I won a little money on Lanoud in the Metropolitan, but will never back him again. He is the horse "of an hour," like Ed Corrigan or C. H. Todd. I regard the three-year-old Ensign as the most dangerous horse in the Melbourne cup, and have backed him, Metador and the Peer, each to win me £100.
I have Metador at 8's Peer at 14 and Ensign 17. I shall wait till the Derby is run, and then back the winner, unless Ensign wins it, in which event I will put a "saver" on the second horse in that race.

Old St. Albans died at McCrozier's farm about ten days ago. Stratford Strettle and myself were to have gone over there on Thursday to see the horses, but Strettle got a dispatch from Crozier saying the old horse was dead, so we did not go. I think we ought to have a son of St. Albans in California, and as Mr. Inglis will not sell Malua at any price, the best horse next in order is Sheet Anchor. He is a brown horse about the size of Grinstead, and won the Melbourne cup in 34 starters, the largest that ever run. He carried 118 in 3:31, which proves him a race horse quite equal to Grinstead, Wildidle or Duke Carter, and superior at that distance to Hubbard, Rutherford or Warwick. No horse can win this race without running considerably over the distance, the fields are so large. Mr. Ganor has not any horse much more faithful than Melvo, who has won 4 races in 5 starts, but I have no idea he can beat Volley when she is right, which she was not at Sydney, nor do I think she can "win too" as the weather is growing very hot and mares are apt to get "off" at such seasons.

It would do your old heart good to see Commotion. He is as blocky a horse as Luke Blackburn, and considerably taller. I am very doubtful if we ever had a better race horse in America than he; and as Musket and St. Albans are both dead, he is certain to become one of the most favored stallions.

The first for the Sydney handicap on Thursday, was the greatest race I ever saw. There were 15 starters, and 8 of them finished under the whip, the race being won by Invader, a 7 to 1 chance. I backed Elsie at 5 to 1 and Lyndhurst at 3 to 1 for a few pounds, and had one on Invader. He beat Lyndhurst less than two feet, and Elsie, who was 5th, was at Invader's flank. It was the most desperate finish I ever beheld, and the whips cut the air like so many firecrackers.

Mr. Miller's horses arrived all right and have gone to his farm. Kind regards to all at home.

Yours truly,

HIDALGO.

Trotting Horse Breeders.

Four or five years since the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN advanced the thought that the breeders of trotting horses on the Pacific should organize an association. This journal at once fell into line, and for a time it looked as though the organization was a certainty. Why so grand and so practical an undertaking was lost sight of we cannot understand. Certainly there is need of such an association. We now suggest that the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN take up the subject, call a meeting and appoint delegates to meet such a delegation as may be appointed by other sections of the Pacific at some specified point, say on January 1, 1889. If such could be done at the trotting meeting referred to, we will guarantee that the North Pacific will send delegates.—North Pacific Rural Spirit.

The day that the National was trotted we spoke to several gentlemen interested in breeding trotters, in relation to the organization of a Pacific Coast Trotting Horse Breeders Association. Not one at that time or since but are in favor of the project, and from the above it will be learned that the breeders of Oregon will join in the scheme. Nevada, Idaho, Montana and Utah will in all probability send delegates, so that there can be no question of a successful result.

The idea met with favor at the time it was agitated, but for some unremembered cause it was lost sight of. Our attention was again directed to it from the work thrown on Captain N. T. Smith in connection with the National and other stakes of which he has taken the management. We doubt if there is another man in the country which could have been induced to accept so onerous a position, and who had anywhere near the business to attend to which Captain Smith is called upon to look after. The Treasurer of the Southern Pacific Company is not only fully occupied with the duties which are imperatively demanded, but it is asking too much of a man who has that important position, and bringing cares of such magnitude to take the extra trouble on his hands. The Stanford Stake since its first inception has been under his charge, but that was little work in comparison with that involved in the National. A horde of applications, letters without end, advertising solicitors, petitions for positions, requests for complimentaries, etc., etc.

The only interest Captain Smith has in trotters in his desire to aid in sustaining the sport on a right basis, and his willingness to do all that he can in that direction is worthy of recognition.

This work has been cheerfully done without remuneration of any kind, and with little thanks from those interested, though, that has come from a want of knowledge of what has been done. With an Association organized there will be no necessity for throwing such a burden on an individual, and in addition to that there are other features pertaining to trotting horses which will be benefited. After consultation with those who are likely to take a prominent part in the proposed organization the time for holding the convention will be fixed and a call issued. There must be a general response to ensure the best results, and in the meantime we will be pleased to receive suggestions for publication.

The Pacers at Sacramento.

As will have been learned from an ad. in the paper of last week the trio of great pacers, with the addition of Creole, are named in the stake for three-year-old pacers and should they come together all right it would be worth a journey to Chicago to witness the contest.

The Coming Race Meeting.

Saturday next, the 10th instant, will be the opening day of the fall meeting of the Pacific Coast Blood Horse Association. The list of nominations and entries, published two weeks ago, sustain the averment that it will be one of the most successful on this coast.

It was a wise move on the part of the managers to postpone the time until after the turmoil of the presidential election had in a measure subsided. Now that telegraph wires form a net work of instant communication in nearly every part of the country, the result will be known on Thursday, unless the contest should prove as close as when Tilden and Hayes ran their memorable race. Friday the seething cauldron will have become approximately quiet, and on Saturday winners will throng the course in their exuberance of spirits, losers seek the excitement to drive away the recollections of defeat. Without disparaging the genealogy of the eminent men, who are so prominently before the public, it is safe to assert that the candidates for hippic honors can trace their pedigree through a greater number of generations than either, and even if that of the hipeds can be carried as far as "the contest," the quadrupeds hark back to the time of Mahomet at least, and though printed stud books are modern inventions, we are assured that Arab and Barb, and it may be Turkish and Spanish, horses of the highest class are undoubtedly descendants of those which carried the prophets. At all events there are no richer strains recorded than flow in the veins of many of those which will show their mettle on the Bay District court. The prospects are favorable for good weather, though rain any time previous to Thursday next would be a valuable adjunct in preparing the course.

The Whirlwind Pacers.

It is too early in the year yet to present an account of the trio of three-year-old pacers. After the almost incredible flights of speed exhibited by Yolo Maid, Adonis and Gold Leaf, we are prepared to record something still more remarkable than a mile in 2:14. We saw Yolo Maid move a quarter Saturday last, which timers made in from 29¾ to 30¼ seconds, and that done with apparent ease. In the second heat of the pacing race on Thursday, Adonis came around the upper turn so fast that it appeared as if Belmont Boy had suddenly quit, and though the heat was made in 2:16½, there could not have been more than a furlong of it made anywhere near the mark that Adonis could have shown. A fourth heat in 2:14½, and the last 100 yards scarcely more than a jog brings Adonis so close to the champions that there is only a shade between them. The blood of "Old Belmont" which carried Thad Stevens through a second heat of four miles at each a fearful clip, is a potent mixture in the make-up of the youngster. Yolo Maid is backed by that of another great four-miler St. Louis, with a further reinforcement from the best son of Sir Archy, and that enables their descendants to struggle to the bitter end. A grand trio of youngsters truly, when will they stop?

Awaiting further developments, for the present we will not venture on vaticinations. After the Blood Horse meeting, when the track has had time to settle, it will be faster than it has been lately, and on one of the bright days of California Winter time we hope to see them come together again. Should that happen, we have no hesitation in saying that whichever shall prove the victor, Father Tempus will be "downed" again.

CORRESPONDENCE.

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN:—I have every reason to believe my pacing mare Kate Allen is with foal, by Amadis, the four-mile runner. I also have every reason to believe that should the foal live I will own the fastest pacer the world ever saw. Mr. Wallace thinks I am an old fool to breed that way, he is all right, however. They got a Flora Temple, a Pocahontas, an Oneda Chief, a Richban, an Arrow, a Scotland, a Smuggler, a Slow-go, a Romero, a Molsey, a Jennie, a George Palmer, a Longfellow Whip, a Col. Lewis, a Dan Donaldson and many other trotters and pacers. I presume to say not a mother's son that bred this way ever asked the advice of Mr. Wallace, still they got some good horses. I would like to ask if the breeding of Rysdyk's Hambletonian is correct as Mr. Wallace gives it? What was he? a trotting-bred horse or a running-bred horse? I have never been able to solve that question. There is no question as to the breeding of the horse Amadis; he is a thoroughbred, a four-mile runner. He will be the father of Kate Allen's colt, and I am proud to say it. Should I get what I expect, Mr. Wallace cannot say "breeding unknown" in his report. If I can get the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN, Turf, Field and Farm to register the foal I will ask no favors of Mr. Wallace; he don't have to register my colt. It's a pleasant thing to know that if the colt has teeth he can eat his oats—register or no register—until he is four years old, by that time we will have a place given us to drive our trotters and pacers. Should you visit your old camping ground for many years, it will afford me great pleasure to take you out behind a thoroughbred (running-blood) trotter or pacer. I will give you a fine, dandy ride. Next year I shall breed Kate Allen to a son of Malcolm, dam a Clay mare, if I can get service. A very fine five-year-old, owned by Mr. Stinson, of our city, cannot get that foal registered I suppose. Well, it's all the same, he may make a good street-car horse when he gets old enough.

The weather here is fine, everybody seems happy. Lots of the old timers have passed away since your day at Riverside, still a good many are left. Peter Benedict is still here, the youngest man of his age in the city, and wanted to make a wager with me a few days ago that he could out-run any man of his age in the city. He still talks about good blood! Says you cannot pick strawberries from the stramonium plant, and I guess he is right. Yours truly,

ON THE ROAD.

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN:—A small but enthusiastic crowd of turfites assembled at Agricultural Park to witness the trot for the Sacramento Yearling Stake on Monday, October 29th. It was a delightful day, and the track was in very good condition, and if it had been desired the winner might have equaled her previous record of 2:36. As it transpired, however, the flying filly went away from her competitors and won at ease, coming the last half in 1:17. The second filly trotted in 3:07, official time. The following is the SUMMARY.

Mr. W. J. Hayr, a resident of Auckland, N. Y., who has been in San Francisco for some weeks in search of health has so far recovered as to appear at resorts frequented by prominent horsemen. Mr. Hayr is a son of Mr. J. H. Hayr, owner of Leicester Farm, Three Kings, Auckland, and a notable breeder of Leicester sheep and cattle. Mr. J. H. Hayr is widely known as a successful breeder and owner of race horses. At a recent race-meeting out of seven races his entries won six. Mr. W. J. Hayr brings with him a wide reputation as a gentleman rider, having been beaten but once, and then by a fluke.

Sacramento, Cal.

You will oblige many readers of your valuable paper by answering the following questions: First—Can splints on young horses be removed by blistering? Second—What in your opinion is the most effective remedy?

Answer.—Splints can sometimes be removed by blistering, but firing with the pointed iron is the most effective remedy.

Jack, San Luis Obispo.

Three horses start in a race and trot as follows:

"A".....	3	1	1	1
"C".....	1	3	3	3

Who gets second money?

Answer.

C. gets second money. A horse that wins a heat takes precedence of one who does not.

Fresno, Cal.

Please give best way of laying out half-mile track?

Answer.

Draw two parallel lines 600 feet long and 452 feet five inches apart. Half way between the extreme ends of the two parallel lines drive a stake, then loop a wire around the stake, long enough to reach to either side. Then make a true curve with the wire, putting down a stake as often as a fence post is needed. When this operation is finished at both ends of the 600 foot parallel lines, the track is laid out. The inside fence will rest exactly on the line drawn, but the track must measure a half mile three feet from the fence. The turns be thrown up an inch to the foot. The stretches may be anywhere from 45 to 60 feet wide.

Reader, San Francisco.

Please give me the breeding of Argyle, that stood in Los Angeles?

Answer.

This horse was called Owen Glendower until the death of his sire, after which time he was called Young Argyle. He was bred by Thos. Ballard in Arkansas, and was foaled in May of 1849. His sire, Argyle, was by Monsieur Tonson, from Thistle by Otis Oscar.

Arrival of Clydesdale Horses.

Messrs. Killip & Co.'s shipment of Clyde horses, annual importation of Mr. John Scott, from Melbourne, Australia, arrived per "Alameda" on Saturday last. It consists of three stallions and three mares, thoroughbred Clydes. The animals came though in fine condition and were taken to their quarters at Bay District Track, where they are on exhibition and sale.

The Proper Mode of Shoeing.

We have cuts of shoes, found in England, France and Switzerland, supposed to be from nineteen hundred to two thousand years old. They are plain flat shoes, without any calks. Osmer, an old writer of good standing, in 1751 says: "I believe there are many horses that might travel their whole life-time unshod on any road, if they were rasped round, and short on toe, because all feet exposed to hard objects become thereby more obdurate."

I contend, Mr. Editor, that a knife should never touch the foot of a horse. The sole or frog should be left as nature made it—then should your horse lose a shoe he can travel with ease and safety to the end of the journey, though unshod. The same rule works with the horse that works with man. We always find ourselves more active and more nimble when we wear easy shoes. A wide, long, thick shoe will do for the horse what clogs to do for us. Treat your horse as you would like your father to treat you. If it would afford you pleasure to have your father pound and thrash you about, encase your feet in a shoe or boot, that you could not step in without feeling it to the top of your head, why of course you will have to give your horse the same treatment. You are one of the plebeian fools that cannot and will not learn anything.

Why the tip, or thin heel shoes, is better by far than any other. It allows the heels to rest upon the ground; the shorter the shoe is the less the horse slips. The frog has the same influence in preventing this that an old hat placed under our own shoes would have in protecting us from slipping on the ice. Make the shoe as light as you can according to the size of your horse because heavy shoes spoil his sinews, and weary the horse. It was never intended to shoe all horses. Our ancestors, the original shoers, proposed using them on feet that were unsound or crippled and nothing more, the same as you would put a cot on your finger to protect a sore. Experience has taught us that 19 horses out of every 20 go lame from shoeing—let anybody prove to the contrary if he can. If any man thinks I have made one assertion which I cannot substantiate let him go out on the street and count the poor crippled horses that pass any point for an hour. Let him take notice of those who wear tips on their feet, and see how many he can find that go lame with that style of shoe.

In Asia there is no such custom of shoeing horses at all! They would not know what to do with one after he was shod. They would think his shoes were for the same use as the skate would be for the foot of man. All the preparation on any kind of a foot requires for a shoe may be summed up in a few words: Leveling the crest in conformity with the limb and foot (this can be done with the rasp), rounding the outer edge at the same time, and leaving the sole, bars, frogs and heels in all their natural integrity. Mr. Deyo, of Michigan, told me this very morning that a tip was the most proper shoe a horse could wear. Name some man who has bought and sold more fine horses than Mr. Deyo, of Jackson, Mich. I said to him, "Mr. Deyo, some people claim a horse cannot travel our boulevards with a tip, and here is one that has worked on them from ten to twenty miles a day for many months. Did you ever see a better foot?" "No, they cannot produce better; it is simply perfect. I tell you right here any man who says a horse cannot travel as well, if not better, with tips than shoes has no idea what he is talking about." Let me say, Mr. Editor, that he who holds out to burn one hundred years from now will never hear of such a thing as the style of shoe they are wearing on horses feet now.—"On the Road" in Dunton's Spirit of the Turf.

Mr. David Bonner's Views on Trotting Records Made in Harness and Wagons.

Thirty-three years ago the chestnut mare Pocahontas, by Cadmus, dam by Shakespeare, lowered all records for driving horses by pacing a mile over the Union Course, Long Island, in 2:17½. She went to wagon, and was driven by J. D. McMahon. This record was not beaten until 1867, when Dexter trotted the Buffalo track in 2:17½, in harness, and it has been beaten, to wagon, so rarely since that her name has become one of the most famous among harness horses. Records to wagon have always been regarded as of exceptional excellence, and as several seconds better than the same speed in harness.

Yesterday Mr. David Bonner favored The Sporting World with some of his views on the comparative merits of performances to wagon and in harness. As one of the closest and most intelligent observers of such matters, Mr. Bonner's utterances cannot fail to interest those who drive good horses. "There are many good horses, said he, that will show more speed to wagon than in harness. We constantly see them at Fleetwood that give a faster clip at the former way of going than they ever do at the latter. The reason for this does not seem to be generally understood, even among experienced horsemen. I remember that Mr. Knox, who at the time owned Nutwood, wrote me that that great trotter showed this peculiarity, and he could not understand why a trotter or pacer, drawing the greater weight of a wagon, and overcoming the friction of four wheels, should outspeed his performance when hitched to a sulky. Examining the matter I found that this was especially true of double gaited horses. But I have satisfied myself that the reason lies in the application of the strain upon the horse. While drawing a wagon the horse has a certain weight to pull, and if properly harnessed this pull comes across the chest, but he has no strain across the back. Once fairly in motion the force of inertia exactly equals the pull against the chest, and the horse has only the friction and effect of wind to overcome. But the sulky applies a different strain upon the horse. Suppose the shafts are so arranged that the sulky is balanced accurately and the horse naturally would have only its weight to draw. As the driver, with his feet braced, is compelled to pull, a force more or less severe is applied across the back of the horse. The greater the pull the greater is this force, and this amounts to far more than the difference in weight between the two vehicles, with the difference in friction added.

"Moreover, the added weight of a wagon has a tendency to steady a double gaited horse. These are, I think, the reasons why so many trotters and pacers, especially young ones can show higher speed to wagon on the road than in harness on the track, and why so frequently owners are disappointed with the early trials in harness of their favorites.

"As an instance of this, I remember my own experience with a brother to Nutbourne. The first time he was asked to go a mile in harness, he trotted in 2:41. Half an hour after he turned the same track, to wagon, in 2:37."

Mr. A. A. Bonner has returned to New York from a two weeks' visit to Kentucky. He is impressed with the speed and promise of Astell, the great two-year-old from Iowa, that recently made a record of 2:23. This was done, Mr. Bonner says, late in the afternoon of a raw, unfavorable day, and over a track by no means in condition for speed. He thinks that with weather and track just right, Astell can trot his mile better than 2:20, this fall. "The Californians have no more speed than those bred East of the Rocky Mountains," said he, "but there are more precocious youngsters on the Pacific slope than elsewhere."

The system of dash races for trotters is to have a further trial this fall, at Beacon Park, Boston. Mr. George H. Hicks, the proprietor, has determined to devote an early day to a test of the plan, the card including dashes at distances from one-half mile to three miles, under the National Association rules, and with the modifications observed at Fleetwood Park. There will also be a dash race, free for all, trotters or pacers, entries to be made and horses to be driven by members of the press, and for this event a purse of $1,000 will be hung up. This special event will be at one mile. The general desire for the trial of the dash system will undoubtedly result in other experiments before snow flies, and next season the question can be tried on its merits.—Sporting World.

Pig Sticking.

Apropos of pig sticking in India, says Rapier, "R. T." kindly sends me the following interesting description: "There are two ways of pig sticking. In Bengal a short spear is used, something over five feet in length, weighted at the top end with lead. The steel spear head is not large but very sharp, and with scarcely any shoulder. The spear is thrown as the riders get near enough to the pig, and he that wounds it and draws blood claims first spear, and gets the tusks. On the Bombay side the spear is quite seven feet long, with the same shaped spear head; it is not thrown but 'delivered' by the rider, and with the impetus of the pace added to the weight of the horse a well-directed spear will go nearly through a pig. This shows why the spear head should be without any shoulder, for if it went between the ribs it would prevent its being pulled out, and the spear would be wrenched out of your hand. You must have a handy horse for pig sticking. Some Arabs seem to delight in the sport. I remember one named Monarch, belonging to an officer of the 4th Dragoons. This horse when he got near the pig would get his head down, put back his ears, and go open mouthed at the quarry. The country one had to ride over, that is on Bombay side (the two best places in the early thirties were Poona and Nagger), was nearly all sheet rock and rolling stones, and very often on the slope; it required good nerve, a good eye, and a steady hand to get first spear. One of our best men in those old days was Captain Tower Smith, son of Sir Lionel Smith, our commander of the forces. One day after very hard riding over horrible ground at Nagger, someone said to him at dinner, 'I don't know how you can manage to ride as you did to-day over that sloping sheet rock.' He replied (he had a drawing way of speaking), 'Well I don't know, but I think where a pig can go a horse can, and if the horse can go why should not I be on his back?' I could mention the names of many good men after a pig in those days. My dear old friend, Sir Bartle Frere, was a long way from a bad one. To interfere with a first-class hunter in England generally means a bad fall. It is almost worse in pig-sticking, the ground is so bad. I had one horse, a high-caste black Arab (rather an unusual colour), with a cast-iron mouth. He took me one day from the top of a steep hill to the bottom as hard as he could gallop. I had not the slightest control over him, the ground was covered with small bushes and rolling stones, but he never made a blunder, and heartily glad I was to get a pull at and stop him. It takes a very fast horse to get alongside of a pig in the first three hundred yards, and an active one to taway from a wounded pig, for the animal's tusks rip horribly, and sometimes fatally.

CANOEING.

Oakland Canoe Club.

There is no lack of enthusiasm in canoeing circles. On several days during last week there were canoes out on the creek in the afternoon, and on Saturday quite a fleet were making the best of a light breeze, mostly with lady passengers on board. Sunday morning saw quite a gathering at the club house, all hoping that some kind of a breeze might come up; the wind, however, was light and variable all day. The new canoe Frolic managed to secure nearly all the honors. Her small sails had been altered, bringing the boom down closer along the deck and the light breeze suited her exactly. She was early down in the basin and got in well ahead in a brush back to the float. About 12 o'clock a scrub race was called with a fair entry, namely: Mystic, Frolic, Pirate, Whisper, Sampler, Water Lily, Luck, Agnes, etc. Mystic took the lead, closely followed by Frolic, Pirate third, which order was kept to the turn, in the windward work Frolic almost immediately took the lead, and though closely pressed by the Mystic came in first. This is creditable, as most of the canoes carried large racing sails, while she used a small rig. For a light canoe the small sails seem to answer best. Later, another race around the "Wm. Tabor" and return proved a pleasant novelty, the chances in getting becalmed behind her big hull giving those behind a show to come up. The Pirate hoisted the Flirts big racing sail, and the Bonita appeared in time to enter. Frolic got the lead and held it to the Tabor, and when she went about just cleared her bow, though only by considerable pinching. The Mystic who was second failed to make it and had to make another hitch, Pirate getting round before. Frolic came in first, Mystic, Pirate and Bonita in order named. The wind got very light before the boat house was reached.

TRAP.

The Championship of England.

EDITOR BREEDER & SPORTSMAN.—Some time ago we were startled by seeing in the Forest & Stream, Greener Gun advertisement that the championship cup of England for pigeon shooting had been won by Captain J. L. Brewer, using a Greener Gun.

Being a careful reader of two London papers, Field and Shooting, I was greatly surprised that so important an event as the Championship of England should have been shot for and won by an American, and no mention made of it in either these or any of the home sporting papers.

I therefore wrote to Shooting to endeavor to ascertain just what this cup represented, and here is what the editor of that highly interesting and valuable paper says:

THE PIGEON SHOOTING CHAMPIONSHIP.

A short time since, Ganchio, an American correspondent of this paper, inquired concerning a pigeon shooting championship which Dr. Brewer, the American shot, stated he had won. We have discovered that the competition referred to was for a cup presented by a sporting paper, the donor being responsible for the appellation of "Championship Cup" that was attached to it. The event is not recognized by the Hurlingham Club or the Gun Club, and besides lacks the patronage of our best shots.

It will therefore be seen by these interested in such matters, on this side of the water, that this cup is merely a prize such as any other held up for competition, but that it in reality is not emblematic of the Championship of England—much less of the world, as Captain Brewer signs himself in American Field of Sept. 1, 1888.

As an advertisement for the Greener Gun, however, it is made to fit, the purpose most admirably—though as may be seen by the quotation from Shooting—the appellation of said cup is quite misleading, not to say questionable.

When a bona fide championship of the world cup is offered it will be heralded in the sporting papers of the country, and advertised far and near in order to give all a chance to compete for it. In the meantime cups or mugs with high sounding names so christened by their donors, should not be foisted upon the American public.

Captain Brewer is undoubtedly a very fine pigeon shot, his scores in this country stamp him as such, most unmistakably, and yet in a long article in Forest & Stream he declares his defeat at the hands of the famous French shot Mr. Jorru is solely attributable to his using in the match with that gentleman, a powder he knew nothing about, which is a remarkable confession for a man of his experience to make, as even a novice when shooting for big stakes, is generally accredited with enough judgment to prevent trying experiments at critical junctures.

THE KENNEL.

Dog owners are requested to send for publication the earliest possible notices of whelps, sales, names claimed, presentations and deaths in their kennels, in all instances writing plainly names of sire and dam, and of grandparents, colors, dates and breed.

From the N. D. C.

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN:

At the Executive meeting of the National Dog Club, held in New York, Oct. 15th, among other business transacted, it was voted:

"That the American Kennel Club be formally notified that the National Dog Club of America is ready, and will be pleased to aid it in advancing the interest of breeders and exhibitors of this country.

"That should the American Kennel Club desire to confer with the National Dog Club, the latter, on receiving such expression, will meet it in the person of Dr. J. Frank Perry, the chosen representative of the Executive Committee.

"That hereafter at all Bench shows there shall be appointees of the Executive Committee of the National Dog Club to take charge of the dogs of those of the Club's members who are unable to attend; to see that such dogs are properly benched, fed, watered, groomed, brought before the judges, etc., and at the end of the show to superintend their reshipping. The expense of such service to be borne by the National Dog Club."

Twenty new members were admitted to the Club.

Mr. A. B. Elford has sold to Mr. W. H. Wallace, Tulare, the Irish water spaniel bitch Irish Girl, whelped March 17, 1885, by Whirlpool—Irish Queen. Irish Girl won second at P. K. C. Show, 1888.

Mr. W. D. Howe has sold to Mr. W. H. Wallace, Tulare, the white and lemon flecked pointer bitch Belle H., whelped July 1, 1887, by Rex—Prairie Flower. Belle H. won second in bitch puppies, P. K. C. Show, 1888.

Proposed Changes in A. K. C. Constitution.

Secretary H. F. Schellhass of the American Kennel Club sends some amendments to the Constitution of the American Kennel Club, which have been offered by Mr. Francis R. Hitchcock, of the Westminster Kennel Club. The changes are as follows:

CONSTITUTION.

Amend Article V, Section I, by adding: "and no delegate shall represent more than one club."

RULES.

Amend proposed new Rule III by changing in Section numbered 3d, the words, "Kennel Club Show"—"Show recognized by the American Kennel Club."

Proposed Rule XVI: "unit of weight," should read "limit of weight."

Add to proposed Rule XVII, to list of classes "Kennel Classes"—8; and add the rule "8th: The Kennel Class shall be for kennels of dogs of the same breed to compete as a kennel. The number of dogs to comprise a kennel must be fixed by Show the Committee."

Amend proposed Rule XVII, Section 6th, by changing the word "four" on second line to "five."

Amend proposed Rule XVII by adding to Section 5th "and for dogs for which no challenge class has been provided."

Amend last section of proposed Rule XVII so as to read: "All dogs qualified to compete in a Champion Class previous to January 1st, 1889, shall compete in the Challenge Class. The winnings referred to in these rules apply only to shows recognized by the American Kennel Club, a list of which, together with these rules, must be published in the Premium List and Catalogue of each Show."

American Coursing Club.

The third annual meeting of the American Coursing Club was held at Great Bend, Kansas, beginning on Oct. 15th and ending on the 20th. The club is an outcome of the desire of a few persons living on the broad prairies of Kansas, to see the royal sport to be had with good hounds. In its incipency the club was without advisers who were au fait in coursing, and as a consequence the two preceding meetings were rather calculated to make veterans smile, but the recent effort was of a somewhat different character, and there seems no reason to doubt that coursing will become popular even among residents of states east of the Missouri. Whether the sport will ever attain its proper recognition except in actions so favored that owners may at slight expense in time and money have a day out with the long tails is to be doubted. The meeting under description attracted a fair attendance, some of the spectators coming from a considerable distance. An eye witness, of what experience is unknown, says of the quality of the dogs, "The quality of the greyhounds, all round, was good, and a great improvement over those of last year, much more care having been taken in rearing puppies and in getting the greyhounds in condition to run. Owners are beginning to see that to run a fast trial with a good hare, a greyhound must be as muscular and as clean inside as a race horse. We noticed that old, cunning dogs have made room for young, honest ones, and instead of seeing one dog doing all the work, and the cunning one looking on, this year each dog did his best, and some grand trials were witnessed."

A peculiarity of the meeting was that only two judges were had, and those of indeterminate qualifications. What would have been done if a difference of opinion had occurred does not appear. Possibly a Board of Stewards who had seen the course only from a distance, might have been called upon to arbitrate. The club in future should select a good man, and let him do the work. In the hands of a man physically able, and of experience enough to fit him, always provided he is fearless and honest, judging is safer than when three judges. Two men may serve so long as they agree, but there can be no referee if they do not agree, and no one can be competent to decide because none but the judges can be in a position most favorable for seeing all of the work. That no difference of opinion arose, rather argues to the coursing mind, inexperience on the part of the judges or else marked inequality in the dogs.

The coursing was done on the famous Cheyenne Bottoms, the scene of last year's trials. Messrs. Uhl and Carney, in a sportsmanlike manner, gave the club the free use of their 10,000 acre ranch. Mr. Carney takes a lively interest in promoting the welfare of coursing, and gives every assistance in his power to make the meeting a success. The hares are never shot, but strictly preserved for the coursing meeting, and Mr. Carney is justly proud of the quality of his hares; they are right good ones, and try the merits of the greyhounds. He is especially pleased when a good hare saves his life. No better grounds could be chosen for the sport; where most of the trials take place is over about 2,000 acres, quite flat, and shut in by hills all around, the soil is sandy, but in places it is very hard and very trying to dogs' feet, some dogs feeling the effects so much as to upset any chance they may have had, as in the case of the final for the American Field Cup, White Lips was too lame to show her fine speed, and grand working qualities; it was a pity the committee compelled so game a bitch to be placed in the slips a third time in one day. We think two courses, as the English rules allow, quite sufficient to ask any greyhound to do in a day.

Thirty-four qualified for the Free for All, and seventeen for the Sapling Stake. The winner of the Free for All, Bessie Lee, is a small bitch, 45 pounds, well bodied and quartered, and very fast from slips.

The runner up, White Lips, by Hotspur out of Kiss, a daughter of Miaterton, is a recently imported bitch, of much quality, very racy, and finely conditioned. She cut out the work in her courses up to the final, when her feet were torn and sore, and the bitch was beaten solely by these facts.

The Derby was won by Master Rare, a rather likely, large sapling, rather quick to his hare and a close worker. The Derby runner up is of the type of the winner, a bit suggestive of the deer-hound, but a strong boned and honest.

A Plate Stake was won by an old bitch, Thorn, which ran cunning.

The annual meeting of the club was held on the evening of October 19th, and the gentlemen named elected officers for the ensuing year. President, David Taylor; vice-President,

D. W. Heizer, Secretary, F. K. Doan, St. Louis; Treasurer, V. Prinkman; Executive Committee, D. V. Heizer; H. C. Lowe, W. W. Carney. The judges were, Messrs. R. D. Williams, of Lexington, Ky., and A. F. Nash, of Detroit, Mich. Slipper, Arthur Massey. Lack of space prohibits giving more than a summary of each stake:

THE RIFLE

Choice of a Rifle.

A person is impressed with the idea that he would like to own and learn to shoot a rifle, and he begins to investigate, say Sporting and Fishing. Perhaps he repairs to a gun store and says he would like to look at a rifle. "What kind of a rifle do you want?" replies the salesman. That is the first setback the investigator receives, and he falteringly replies, "I don't know;" then, rallying in grand style, he continues: "Oh, I want a rifle for a little target shooting, one to hunt squirrels with, and I think of going out West, so I would like a sort of an all-around rifle, don't you know." If the supply of rifles in the store is large and the salesman accommodating, several makes are shown and the merits of each arm are pointed out. In vain does the would-be rifleman look for a make containing all the desirable points; he finds it not. It is more than likely that he is considerably dazed by the time five or six rifles have been shown him, and he concludes to take the various catalogues home for perusal, and from this time our friend talks glibly of the various makes and those who use them, but he finds it no easy task to decide which is best, for he sees that rifle men of prominence secure equal work out of various makes.

If our friend has steered clear of an old rifleman up to this point he is in something of a quandary; but if, perchance, he has sought the advice of a friend who has had some experience, more than likely he has become impressed with the idea that there is but one make of rifle in the world fit to use, and that is the one his friend is using. He would, doubtless, remain satisfied that he had found the proper arm if he did not run across some other rifleman who ridiculed the ideas of his first friend, pointed out in a most convincing manner certain defects in the chosen arm of his first friend, and concluding his argument with allusion to scores made and records broken by a person using a different make of rifle.

About this time our young rifleman begins to wonder what he does want, and as the time draws near for his departure for his hunting trip, perhaps he concludes to purchase a hunting rifle, and as he thinks of a friend who has had considerable experience he calls upon him and gathers from him that he formerly used a repeater, but now uses a single-shot rifle; he had all of the small calibres he wanted, having shot a deer clean through the body, which ran off, and he would not think of using anything less than a .50-calibre with certainly 90 grains of powder and a light bullet, for when he shot an animal he wanted to get it; and, don't you know, when you hit an animal with that bullet it paralyzes him, the bullet mushrooms and, why you make a hole big enough, tears the flesh, arteries, crushes him; and our friend starts off evolving in his mind the express principle, trajectory of various charges and, why, what makes him keep drawing something from his pocket and looking at it so intently? As I live! it is one of his friend's shells and bullets. He thinks the whole problem has been solved, not in a nut-shell, but in that cartridge shell, and he dreams of the rifle he is hurrying to order, when he meets another friend who has for years visited hunting resorts and killed much large game.

That excellent exchange, Shooting and Fishing is conducted by a rifleman pure and simple, and naturally he gathers much that is of interest to those whose preference is for weapons of extreme accuracy. Recent he has been publishing a series of articles on rifle principles of value. Some remarks on leads and twists we excerpt:

"The opinion of many excellent foreign marksmen is, that the best general maxim with respect to the proportion that the bearings left should have to the channels cut away, should be half and half, but as they did not assign any further reason than that such was their opinion, we are free to confess that we should, from all that has been said on the subject, prefer less bearings and broader channels.

But, as rifles, like all other military weapons, should be constructed so as to allow for wear and tear and rough usage, there might, to be sure, be this disadvantage in making the bearings too narrow, namely, that the ramrod would be liable to chip and notch a narrow edge when a broader would escape uninjured. Now, as these notches are not less injurious to the effect of the barrel, than a want of parallelism in the spirals, it becomes a matter of consequence to be put in possession of an accurate and certain method of detecting an irregularity of the kind in their construction. To effect this, the inside of the barrel should be first of all well smoked over a lamp, and the breech-pin removed; you then pour in as much melted lead as will fill it equal to about two or three diameters; when cool it is to be passed backwards and forwards, by pushing it gently with the ramrod. If it pass easily, and without any shake or irregular catchings, with barely more than the weight of the ramrod, the barrel may be deemed perfect; but should it, on the contrary, stick anywhere in its passage, there can be little doubt but that it is defective in some part of its construction. For how can a ball pass smoothly and properly if there be any crossing or irregularities in the spirals? For the lead is precisely to the barrel what the male is to the female screw; and every workman knows that the former will not work through the latter unless they both correspond in the number and inclination of their threads.

This trial is thought of such consequence among the Swiss, that no one will (if he be at all particular) purchase a gun or receive it, until it has been subjected to this test; and they know the value of the discovery too well to fail of insisting on it. But as it may very likely happen, that although the grooves are well cut the metal itself is defective, by being what is called honeycombed, and which may, very possibly escape the test of the cylinder, it is necessary to examine the inside the inside of the barrel minutely, by looking through it when held up against a strong light. We have repeatedly seen guns thus circumstanced, when first sent home from the gun-maker's shop, and therefore it is highly necessary not to trust too much to their accuracy.

If, however, an endless variety of opinions exist, as to the best depth, number, shape, etc., to be adopted for the grooves we find it no less the case in what it relates to the requisite degree of twist, or spiral; some makers patronizing the one-fourth, some the one-third, others, again, the one-half; while, on the contrary, many advocate just as strongly the three-fourths, the whole, and the one and one-half turn, that is, of course, implying the same length of barrel in each case.

But as we cannot suppose that these makers work on the variety of principles enumerated as above, without each of them endeavoring to substantiate the grounds of his opinions, by reasoning in favor of his particular theory, we shall state the principal argument used pro and con, or for and against the great and small twists.

The chief objection urged against the large is the difference of range being so much in favor of the smaller twist, taking then, with equal quantities of powder, and at an equal degree of elevation. That it should be so was to be expected, from the theory before laid down; for, supposing two balls fired under the same circumstances, if there be any honeycombs in the interior of a barrel, the nitrous liquid produced by the ignition of the powder, lodges itself in them, and is found to eat deeper and deeper, until at length the gun will be totally spoiled; but one from a whole turn, and the other from a half, that ball with the least obliquity of groove will, by having the air act less diagonally on its ends during its flight, make fewer revolutions in any given distance than the ball whose indentations are so much more sloped, and where the resistance of the air will, of course, be so much greater. If, then, in flying the same distance, the impulse given by the powder being the same, and the air resisting the passage of the ball so much more in one distance than in the other, must it not follow that the time required to travel over the same chord be relatively greater? And (as gravity is constantly acting) must not the ball which consumes the greater space of time in flying the distance required, be made to describe a larger arc, lest it should fall short of the object? It appears, then, on the very face of the matter, that balls fired from rifles of different degrees of twist, will be shortened by the chord of their range in proportion as the spiral is increased in obliquity, and that in an increased, and not in a proportionate ratio, according to the increase of the distance; because, as gravity does not always act the same but is constantly increasing in proportion as the time in which the ball is suspended in the air is greater, if the ball be one second in the air it may only fall two feet, but it may fall five during the second and so ten in the third, and so on, so that the larger the twist the greater the resistance; the greater resistance of the air the slower the direct motion; the slower the direct motion the greater the time required to pass over a certain chord; the greater the time required, the more powerful the effect of gravity; to counteract which, a greater arc must be described to enable the ball to reach the object.

The next objection urged against the great twist is, that although in calm weather they may certainly have the advantage, yet if there be much wind the balls, with a less obliquity of spiral, will deviate less from the direct line of flight (owing to their being driven to leeward of the object by the wind) than the greater, and this disadvantage is certainly proved to exist. For however extraordinary it may appear to persons unused to rifle shooting, it is nevertheless an established and an acknowledged fact among practitioners, that in windy weather the ball will be driven considerably in the direction of the wind, so that to avoid missing the object it is necessary to aim to windward of the point to be hit. When it is considered that the wind is uniformly acting with a considerable pressure on the ball during its passage through the air, it follows that whichever ball is longest exposed to the wind must be more effected by it; to which must be added that, as the greater the distance flown by the ball, the longer it is in performing it, so the impulse communicated by the gun-powder decreases rapidly, in proportion as the time or distance is prolonged. As, however, any calculation on the subject would possibly lead us into erroneous conclusions, we shall rest satisfied with stating that such is the fact, and those who doubt it may easily be convinced by trying the experiment themselves.

As this inconvenience, then, may be thought of sufficient consequence by many to condemn the great and adopt the smaller twists, it is only fair to state that, in our opinion, the number of advantages materially surpass the imperfections to which such rifles are subject as are made with their grooves considerably inclined; for it has been found that, although the smaller twists certainly answer as well as can be required, at the 100 or 150 yards, yet they are not able to enter into competition with the whole or three-quarter turns (under certain modifications to their application for military purposes or amusement). Why it should be that the same rifles which answer so well at one distance should not be equally good at all others, is not so easily determined; and, in short, at best any opinion on the subject must be considered as arbitrary and not as founded on the solid basis of actual experiment. We have frequently fired at 300 yards when it was found absolutely impossible to put the shots in the target without aiming from three to six feet to windward; the wind will, of course, act with most violence when it blows in a direction at right angles with the chord of the ball's flight. If we adopt the theory of spinning, held out by the gunmakers, namely, that the rotatory motion is acquired by the ball's being obliged to follow the sweep of the grooves, the matter could be easily explained: "that the rotatory motion communicated by the small twists was not sufficiently violent to last during the extension of the longer ranges." But as we have objected to this system, let us try whether we can account for the phenomenon, according to reasoning deducible from our own theory. We allow that unless the ball spins it will not fly true to its mark; if so, a question naturally follows: how often is it necessary that the ball should revolve within a given time and space, to insure its rectilinear direction? We suppose, then, that a ball fired from a barrel of thirty inches long, and taking half a turn will revolve once (after leaving the barrel) in every five feet of space that it passes through, and that the impulse given by the powder is equal (during the first second) to two thousand feet per second. The ball then would, of course, during the first second, make four hundred revolutions; but as we know that the initial power of the powder is very soon lost during the next second, it might not have a velocity of more than five hundred feet per second, and therefore it would then only make one hundred revolutions per second. And, therefore, it does not seem improbable that although one revolution in five feet may do very well as long as the ball has a great initial velocity; yet, that when the said velocity becomes reduced, the aforesaid number of whirls may be performed in too slow a space of time to have the desired effect of correcting the ball's tendency to deviation, and therefore that the irregularity of the small turns at very long distances are as might have been expected. But, on the other hand, in the case of a whole turn, the ball being then constrained to turn once in two feet and a half instead of once in five, perhaps the additional velocity with which it spins may more than compensate for the loss of velocity in the rectilinear direction. In short, what we mean to say is, that it is not so much the number of turns in proportion to the distance as the number of turns in proportion to the velocity which affects the accuracy of the rifle. But as the analysis of the respective turns and properties of time, as above, would not only be uninteresting to the reader, but also somewhat foreign to the subject, we shall merely observe that the only way of ascertaining the point would be to get by experiment the different degrees of relative resistance of the air to the ball, in proportion to the several obliquities of the spiral.

Should Not Australia Breed Fast Trotters?

(By Hidalgo.)

A man asked me the other day if I intended going back to America at the close of the Exhibition, and on my replying in the affirmative, asked further: "Into what business would you go if you elected to remain in the Colonies?"

I astonished him by telling him that I should at once begin breeding trotting horses—that I thought the climate quite as well adapted for it as that of California (where I resided over sixteen years), and that I thought Australia possessed two signal advantages over the Golden State. These were:

1. Better roads, upon which gentlemen after the business of the day was ended could drive for recreation and amusement.

2. A large number of mares sired by thoroughbred stallions, to which trotting-bred sires could be mated, thus carrying out the principle embodied in the breeding of Maud S., Jay Eye See, and Palo Alto, respectively the fastest four-year-old mare, gelding and stallion in the world.

Before going any further I will state that Maud S. trotted in 2min. 14sec. at that age, beating the famous Trinket and others; that Jay Eye See, the fastest gelding in the world, trotted three heats inside of 2min. 18sec. at that age in different races; and that although other stallions had trotted heats lower as exhibitions, Palo Alto was the first stallion of that age to trot inside of 2min. 21sec. in a bona-fide contest with other horses. This he did twice in one month, and on both occasions against well-tried campaigners. One of these was a fourth and the other a fifth heat. Maud S. and Jay Eye See were bred from mares which had from five-eighths to three-quarters of thoroughbred blood, but the dam of Palo Alto was of pure lineage as the dam of Malua Abercorn, Grand Flaneur or any other horse you now have in Australia. His dam was Dame Winnie, by Planet, second dam Liz Mardis, by Glencoe; third dam Fanny G., by Mergrove, winner of the Doncaster St Leger. There is no richer pedigree in all America Stud Book than that of Dame Winnie. Palo Alto's sire was Electioneer, son of Rysdyk's Hambletonian and Green Mountain Maid. The latter mare had six sons and daughters with records of 2min. 30sec. or better, and the fact that Electioneer never got any record whatever is the best evidence of the prepotency of that strain of blood. A glance at Electioneer's progeny will show what a breeder he is, but I will separate those foaled from cold-blood mares: Manzsbits, five-years, 2min. 15sec. Wildflower, three-years, 2min. 21sec. (own sisters from a pacing mare by St Clair), Hinda Rose, four-years, 2min 17sec, Bonita, four-years 2min 19sec. His performers from thoroughbred mares are as follow: Palo Alto, from Dame Winnie, 2min 20sec, Whips, from Lizzie Whips, by Enquirer, 2min 24sec.

Whips is a large bay horse, about 16½ hands, and at two-year-old showed wonderful speed. At three-years he was crippled and never had harness on him for nearly four years. My belief is that but for his injury he would have got a lower record than either of the above named. The fastest colt on Governor Stanford's farm is by Electioneer out of a mare by Lodi, a thoroughbred sire, brought to California in 1864 by Judge C. H. Bryan. He is three years old and has already beaten 2min 20sec. in his private trials.

Governor Stanford has spent over a million dollars in demonstrating to the world the necessity of having thoroughbred blood in the trotter, or it would be impossible for him to sustain the efforts of so long a brushing as would be required to make a mile in 2min 10sec., or better. The first horse from a blooded mare of which I have any positive knowledge was John Morgan, who trotted in 2min 26sec. to a wagon in 1864. He was out of a mare by Medoc, a son of American Eclipse. The next of which I am aware was Scotland, a son of Bonnie Scotland, he by Lago, and he by Don John, St. Leger winner. Scotland trotted in 2min. 22sec. Lady Palmer, got by Glencoe, winner of the Two Thousand Guineas of 1834, trotted two miles in 5min. 0.4 sec. to a wagon, weighing 160 pounds. In California the thoroughbred stallion Venture, own brother to Leonora and Madrona, both successful runners, trotted a second heat in 2min. 27sec.

In Kentucky they never breed a thoroughbred mare to a thoroughbred sire after she is twelve years old, except she has produced a notable runner. Just as soon as a thoroughbred mare fails to throw runners to the cover of such sires as Glenelg, Longfellow, Enquirer or Falsotto, they breed her to trotting sires, knowing that colts from thoroughbred mares by approved trotting sires will always command ready sale. Hence, I have no hesitation in saying that Australia, having already five times as many good mares of approved racing blood as we have in America, ought to produce as good trotters as either California or Oregon. Just now there is a scarcity of trotting sires in Australia, but there is plenty of money here to buy them; and there is no end of desirable young stallions to be purchased in California and Oregon at prices ranging from $300 to $1500, according to the size, speed and quality of the horse.

Therefore, I would suggest the formation of a company to commence the breeding of trotting and road horses while mares of good racing blood are comparatively cheap. I can furnish them with a sire who has a record of 2:25½ at six years old, for $1000. He is eight years old, and sound as a Jarrak log. I can also give them a still larger sire five years old, 16½ hands high, capable of doing his mile in 2:42. You must remember that neither Electioneer, nor Hambletonian Mambrino (who has six in the 2:30 list), have any records whatever, and they are the best exponents of the Hambletonian blood on the Pacific coast. Therefore, the above figures are not at all extravagant.

The proposed substitution of India rubber for metal in the manufacture of horseshoes is based upon various supposed advantages, one of these being that the former enables a horse to go easier over all kinds of roads and rough or slippery ground without slipping. The contrivance brought forward for this purpose is such as to obviate in one instance the necessity of using an iron shoe which can be moved momentarily when the horse is shod with an iron shoe. According to this design the shoe consists of an India rubber bottom piece moulded to fit over or around the frog of the hoof, with a ledge or protecting rim rising up the front and around the level where the nails are clamped, the projection having an edge under which a steel band or other appliance can be drawn and nipped tight to retain the rubber shoe. The band is connected by studs, which pass through the heel part of the hoof, this being cut away from the inner side for the purpose, and the stud or studs may work eccentrically to obtain grip or fixing. If the rubber shoe is used with an iron shoe, the frog portion or pad has a front plate and two side wings partially imbedded in it to hold the rubber shoe in place. If the rubber shoe be divided or made thin in the center, a swivel or other bar can be contracted from the rear to reduce the width of the pad so that it enters easily and also expands so as to fix the rubber shoe in position.—Mechanical News.

The Australian Thoroughbred in America.

By Hidalgo.

In 1840, after Crucifix had won the Oaks, and her sire, Priam, had been exported to America, at a price hitherto deemed fabulous, an agent was sent out to re-purchase old Priam, and told not to let money stop him. Old Colonel Merritt's answer was, "A principality should not buy Priam," and the agent returned to England without the horse. For my own part I wish he had got him for, aside from Monarch and Cassandra, the get of Priam were a very leggy lot, and did not make very good campaigners.

From careful observation I should be prepared to say that the tree planted under such adverse criticism is already beginning to bear fruit. Mr. Haggin's first sale of yearlings has already taken place, and while Darebin cannot be said to have been represented, yet Sir Modred was; and all his yearlings not only brought very high prices for the get of an untitled sire, but they generally commanded the admiration of connoisseurs, as much for their symmetry of proportion as for their uniform good size, great bone and fine muscular development. The success of these colts, all now heavily engaged (for our American events close entries in August), will have a great effect upon future purchasers of Australian horses for stud purposes; and should the get of Darebin and Sir Modred be lucky enough to win during their first two seasons, there will not only be a rush to Australia for more covering stallions, but it would not surprise me to hear that an attempt had been made to re-purchase Darebin, and that the would-be buyer had been met with the stolid answer, "A principality shall not buy him."

These two horses compare favorably in size and symmetry with any in the world. Of all horses yet foaled in America, Iroquois is unquestionably the foremost when you come to couple beauty and bloodlike appearance with power and ability to carry weight. His sire, Leamington, was not a winner of any of the English "classic events," but he was one of England's grandest Cnp horses, well able to stay over a distance of ground, and a winner under the severest of weights; He won the Chester Cup in 1857 and again in 1859—a double performance accomplished by no other race-horse in all of England's long and eventful turf history. Iroquois is a trifle more bloodlike appearing horse than Darebin, but manifestly inferior to him in size and power. With Iroquois once out of the way, no other stallion in America, either native or imported, can compare with Darebin. The owner of Iroquois has also two noted sires, Enquirer and Great Tom, the latter an own brother to Kingcraft, winner of the Derby, who died on his way to America. Both these horses are over sixteen hands high, and decidedly coarse about the head and neck in comparison with the sire of the Australian Peer.

Among those mares bred to Darebin last year was the famous Miss Woodford, the best mare at 115 pounds weight that has ever run in America. She carried that weight when she beat Drake Carter and Modesty, at heats of two miles in 3:31½, 3:33, and that is the best record at heats of that distance. She won 29 races out of 37 starts, and was never unplaced in any race she ran. She foaled a bay filly to Darebin late in April, and no more abapely youngster was ever seen in any American paddock. At the same time Miss Woodford is far from being a fashionably bred mare on the dam's side. She is by Billet, a son of Voltigeur, the best exponent of the Blacklock strain of blood. Billet has sired two winners of the Kentucky Derby, two of the Monmouth Cup, and may be regarded in every way as a fashionable sire. But Miss Woodford is far from being fashionable on her dam's side, being out of Fancy Jane, a mare that never won a race. Fancy Jane was by Neil Robinson, he by Wagner out of Fanny Campbell by Glencoe. If I were asked what was the best daughter of Glencoe I should name over a dozen before thinking of Fanny Campbell, and as for Neil Robinson, he was only a second-rate horse in an era that produced such cracker as Daniel Boone, Planet, Panic, Congaree, Lightning and Idlewild. Nevertheless, Miss Woodford is quoted to-day as the Queen of the American turf, and fills the same niche in Yankee racing lore as Blink Bonny and Beeswing occupy in the hearts of English men. Mr. Haggin gave £2,400 for her after she had but three legs to stand on. I am in nowise asinine as how she will breed, but believe Darebin ought to cross well upon her. She is very abapely, and so is he when you consider that he is over 16½ hands in height, and outweighs Longfellow, who is just 17 hands finish.

Besides Sir Modred and Darebin there are two other scions of Australian blood doing service in California. One of these is Cheviot, own brother to Sir Modred, owned by Hon. George Hearst, United States Senator from the Golden State, who is a man of great wealth, and abundantly able to purchase good mares to mate with the son of Traducer. The other is Mariner, which raced here in Australia under the name of Oatcake. He is now the property of Col. Harry I. Thornton, who resides about six miles north of Oakland, which is directly across the bay from San Francisco. Col. Thornton's mares are not as good as those of Mr. Haggin and Senator Hearst, but he is a man of wealth and will probably do something to create a stud reputation for Mariner by the purchase of some "Belgravian matrons" for his paddocks.

When a large class of steamships are upon the route between here and San Francisco, it would not astonish me to see more frequent shipments of valuable horses to California, both for sporting and turf purposes. The trip should be done in 19 days, which can be easily accomplished whenever ships like the Aresdia and Orizata are put upon that route. As there is less heavy sea and stormy weather on the Pacific route: 19 days on such a trip would not distress a horse any more than 10 days' trip across the Atlantic on the average passenger ships. Both Lodi and Norfolk were brought to California from New York by steamship, involving a 26 days' voyage, and both of them raced successfully within a few weeks after landing.

Should the get of Sir Modred perform well next year, I shall expect to see a rush made to Australia, and then it will require some self-denial to refuse such prices as your breeders will be offered for Sheet Anchor, Commotion, Abercorn and Malna.

In the 90-class it won the 1st, 2nd and 4th moneys; in the 80-class it took the 1st, 3rd, 4th and 5th; in the 70 class it took the 1st and 2nd, with the 1st and 6th in the 60-class, making a total winning nearly four times greater than any other gun, of either foreign or home manufacture.

We think this a most excellent showing, as there was seven different makes of guns used by the nineteen contestants in the ninety class.

FIVE DOLLARS A YEAR.

General Topics.

In these days, with the two-year-old record in 2:18, three-year-old in the same notch, four-year-old two seconds faster, and a yearling with 2:31½ to its credit, it hardly seems possible that less than forty years ago 2:28 was the top mark for trotters of any age. "Great excitement" followed, and according to the report, "The announcement of the time by the judges appeared to electrify the spectators. The race was on the Centerville Course, L. I., the date July 2, 1849. The contestants were Lady Suffolk, Pelham and Jack Rossiter, and it took five heats to decide it. Lady Suffolk won the first, second and fifth heats in 2:32, 2:32½, 2:34½. Pelham the third and fourth in 2:28, 2:29½. Pelham was an uncertain horse, and all of his victories were at heats of two and three miles. It was the era of longer distances for trotting, however, and the winner, Lady Suffolk, in her long list of winning starts, a large proportion of them were also at heats of two and three miles.

2:28 measured the time in harness. Previous to that, viz.: June 14th of the same year, Lady Suffolk won a second heat over Mac in 2:26 under saddle, which was the best record for her in her long and triumphant career. Mac won the first in 2:31, the third in 2:27 and the fourth in 2:29. The head-line to the account, in prominent capitals, was "The fastest time ever made in the world by any trotting horse!" There are plenty of exclamation points in the description, of which the following is a copy: "Second heat—After seven false starts Grey Eagle was drawn, and Mac and the Lady got off first 'pop,' Lady taking the lead and keeping it, winning the heat in the fastest time on record ever made by any trotting horse in the world, she carrying ten pounds over weight! as after the heat we saw Mr. Bryan and his saddle on the scales weigh one hundred and fifty-five pounds! Time, 2:26! The time of the half was 1:11.

The horses Lady Suffolk and Mac were engaged to trot a race of heats of two miles in harness, but the owner of Mac claimed that he had strained one of the small tendons of the off fore leg; and he could not start him. The papers stated that "he went off with a rag round his leg," and "Acorn" in some notes sent to the "Old Spirit," writes: "There cannot be a doubt but Mac is a flyer, but rest assured if the Lady can have a chance at him once a week he will be sure to have a rag on all his legs." He furthermore writes, "After the trot on Monday, about the only articles the writer had left was a pair of pegged boots and a few old clothes, and a two-dollar and a half white hat." An editorial on dit is, "Thus Mac (the Albany flier) and Lady Suffolk are to contend in a few days for a purse, under the saddle, on the Union Course, and if the old mare is beaten the New Yorkers will get a higher fall than Peytono gained them when she beat Kachion."

The year 1849 marked a new era in trotting affairs. The year before Trustee succeeded in going twenty miles within the hour, and as has been shown, saddle and harness records were lowered in 1849. Two years previously Dutchman had made the top notch at three miles in 7:32½, and this stood as the best until Huntress covered it to 7:21½ in 1872. That it should stand so long when runs at that distance were of frequent occurrence is proof of the great superiority of that famous horse over his contemporaries and those of the next decade, and a remarkable feature of the champion performance is that one-third of the total is the fastest mile ever made by Dutchman. Huntress had a record of 2:20½, made, however, four years after his grand showing, and this is contrary to the argument oftentimes advanced that heats of more than one mile are inimical to speed at a shorter distance. It may be that a few horses will not endure the strain, though those which are stoutly bred do not suffer.

Apart from the interest taken in the doings of the early trotters as a pleasant interlude from those of the present time there are valuable lessons embodied in the records. Nearly twenty seconds advance in speed from 1849 to 1885 and the reasons for that are many. Quite a number of them problematical or at best governed by various differences of opinion. Breeding, rearing and training are not the only causes. There is what may be termed a wonderful improvement in tracks, still more in vehicles with numerous other adjuncts of great importance to be considered. "A rag around the leg" has been replaced by hoots, contrived with skill, and fashioned by accomplished workmen. In this division of trotting paraphernalia there has been constant advances. When Dutchman, Lady Suffolk, Pelham and other celebrities of the thirties and forties trotted they were practically unknown. The fifties showed crude specimens of these guards, even in the sixties the best were rough affairs, and even those which were thought to quite the thing would not pass muster in this ninth decade of the nineteenth century.

Hickory has had an important bearing in the development of fast trotters. There was plenty of second growth hickory in 1849, when Pelham hauled a sulky in 2:28, but taking patterns from the heavy European models, hick was thought to be an absolute necessity in a vehicle which had to carry a full grown man. Not many years preceding the time when 2:30 was beaten, the editor of the Old Spirit described a sulky of ninety pounds weight as a fragile, spiderweb concern which no sane man would trust his life upon when going at the rate of better than 20 miles an hour. Extra weight was not the only drawback. Long shafts, rough axles and boxes, so much "gather" and "dish" in the wheels that a sulky of that time of the lightest weight known would "draw harder" than a breaking cart of the present day. In a race between Trustee and Lady Suffolk, heats of three miles, it was thought worthy of "special mention" that her wagon weighed only 115 pounds and Trustee's sulky 80 pounds.

It might be that if hickory were not available, inventive genius would have furnished a substitute. In fact it is nearly certain that there will be a further reduction of weight in trotting vehicles though when a forty-two pound sulky is now made stiff enough to carry a man without showing undue vibrations, and that man considerably over weight and making the mile several seconds below 2:20 it does not appear necessary to have one still more gossamer-like in its proportions. Bamboo aluminum may enter into the construction of the sulky of the future, but when it comes to spokes and fellows it is difficult to think of material which will take the place of hickory. When an examination is made of the track vehicles of the present, it will be manifest that little improvement in that quarter can be looked for. Those who are old enough to recall the best and lightest of half a century back, will say that quite a number of the seconds deducted are due to that difference.

The wonderful time made in 1849, 2:23 in harness, was evidently a great stimulus to the sport. In that year 142 races were reported in the Old Spirit, eleven heats in 2:30 or better. The next year there were 366 returned to the only turf paper published in America, and it is worthy of note that the first from California was a match for $1,000 Nov. 5, 1851, to market wagon weighing 760 pounds each, which was won by Mr. Wilson's Kate, distancing her competitor Mr. Tyler's Sugarhead in 4:07. The first regular affair reported came off June 26, 1852, being for a purse of $1,000, the contestants New York and Marysville. The time is not given, though it is stated that bets were made that 3 minutes would be beaten. It was thought worthy of mention, however, that the sulky of New York only weighed 80 pounds, while that of Marysville was ten pounds heavier. The driver of the latter was "Moscow Pat," probably Pat Hunt, who had driven Moscow for General Dunkans, the driver of New York, the winner is not given.

In looking over the old-time records to obtain some information about the pioneer trotters of California, some queer notes are run across. In noting the sale of Murdoch, the Spirit copies from the Mobile Register: "We regret that Murdoch will not be with us at the trotting meeting, as we should be glad to behold him, as often we have heretofore, hush down the homestretch, like a quarter horse, bestrode by his owner or Eoff, while his trainer, Welsh, waited his coming in pride." This might have been passed without attracting notice had I forgotten a remark that Henry Walsh made about Murdoch many years ago, and gave the cue that his knowledge of trotters was legitimately obtained. But it will be news to a large majority of our readers that the man who deservedly ranks at the head of the profession on this coast, as the trainer of race-horses, should in the early fifties, 1852, have a crack trotter in charge. But in the days when trotting "under saddle" was so much in vogue, there was not a great deal of difference, and ordering the work, feed and attention much alike whether race-horses or trotters were pupils.

There are some things which give a person thoroughly conversant with the training of race-horses a decided advantage over those who are without experience in that line. That racing requires the condition to be "higher" few will deny, and that a horse could perform creditably at the slower pace when "order" would be lacking for the requirements of the course. Still it is evident that fast trotters, horses which are called upon to trot heats low down in the teens, must approximate the form which is needed to run a mile in the neighborhood of 1:40 or a mile and a half in 2:34. But the trainer of race-horses would be puzzled with problems which are not hard to solve by trotting-horse mentors, and how to secure proper action, change that which was false to true, teach the step as well as add to the faculty to keep it over a distance of ground, present features which demand study and practice in that particular line. No insurmountable difficulties in the way, however, and there is little doubt that a man who was proficient in one line could handle the other.

There are so many novelties outside of trotting topics in connection with the early history of California, of which in all probability there is a greater variety in the columns of the Spirit than any eastern journal of the date, that the task of selection is a slow job. Turning over the pages for light on one point, everything pertaining to the "Wonderland" forces itself into place, and letters, sketches and reports are so interesting that hours pass with a minimum of quotations. Shooting deer and one elk on Angel Island, fishing in the bay, rivers, and quite a long account of a man angling in a hot spring in Napa Valley, truth and fiction mixed so deftly that even a residence of fifteen years is unequal to the task of separating the real from the imaginary, when the scenes are laid in the dim and misty past, twenty-five years before a domicile was obtained. The Spirit had some of its cleverest correspondents attracted to the Golden Coast, and to those it was a labor of love to keep it posted.

Among these correspondents were Stephen Massitt, "Jeems Pipes of Pipesville." "The Corinthian" T. K. Battelle, the owner of New York, one of, if not the very first eastern trotters which had a fling for fame and fortune on this slope. He trotted three victorious races in 1852, and lost one to the pacer Dominick Burnett. In 1853 he was beaten three times by the side-wheeler, and won five, four of which his conqueror took part in. From the accounts it is evident that the interest did not slacken from the often times the same horse met; large crowds attended, and the betting was always spirited. While The Corinthian, the Alta California, San Francisco Herald gave most of the horse reports, Jeems Pipes the greatest share of theatrical matter, there were many other "occasional" who sent readable communications afloat the land and the scenes transpiring therein. I read them at the time with a goul which is well remembered, and now after a lapse of so many years there is a fascination in re-reading which interferes with the work of collating notes from them.

Very distinctly comes the recollection of reading to a noted short horse man the following match when the paper was received, and which induced him to start across the plains with a cavalcade of quarter horses a few years after. He was in a committee of the Corinthians, date San Francisco April 30, 1853. "Two weeks since a grand running match race was closed between two large operators in cattle, to come off between the 27th of May and the 10th of June, the distance is nine miles without stopping, catch weights, over a level country in the vicinity of Monterey. The horses named are Black Swan (from Sydney) and Red Coy, a bay horse from Kentucky, well known in the States as a very fast mile horse. The amount of the match is as follows: $10,000 in cash a side, one thousand head of cattle, valued at $25,000, and five hundred young mares, valued at $5,000, making in all $80,000 or $40,000 a mile. The horses are so equally matched in speed, and doing so well in their training that at present there is very little betting. I shall endeavor to be on the ground to witness the race, and will with much pleasure give you a full and correct report of the same."

As the report did not come the race probably was not run, though I have heard of a race between Black Swan and a horse belonging to Governor Pico, which was run at Los Angeles, and on which droves of cattle and bands of horses were ventured as well as big loads of gold dust. Our friend who left Illinois with several of the best short horses obtainable in that country on the strength of such heavy betting, had no difficulty in striking the betters, but he also struck some of the up country flyers, and his Printers and Bonanerges had to succumb to the Lnmux, and Georges from the valleys of Oregon. Like many others he underrated horses which were far away, and also did not make sufficient allowance for the long journey between the Mississippi and Sacramento. He had one horse which was the accredited champion of Northwestern Illinois. Bulger Dick he called him, but he was nowhere when Comet, Big Gun and Amanda were on hand, and his bulging propensities of no avail on this side of the mountains.

1854 was a big year in the annals of harness sport in California. That was the year that James L. Geoff came, and he and others brought quite a string of fast ones. The horse which had assisted so often in swkening a fondness for the sport, New York, won six races, and lost four, and as the Corinthian went "back home" in 1855 he did not see his favorite beat Lady Vertun heats of two miles in 5:16, 5:15 in that year, and as he kept at track work until 1858, he certainly "trained on" especially as he put his fastest record 2:32½ in a fifth heat in 1857. He is fully entitled to the very foremost place among the trotters of the real olden time, as none which came soon after the "days of old, the days of gold, the days of '49" can present as good claims to the title.

Another Plunger.

"Pittsburg Phil" has dropped out of sight and the "Ghost" has taken up the running. This Brooklyn plunger is the most material apparition that ever was seen, and the luckiest. His name is Moore and the more he gets the more he wants. He beat the ring at Monmouth Park, Sheephead Bay, Gravesend and Jerome Park for many weeks before the bookmakers discovered his identity. No less modest and unassuming than the gentlemanly "Phil," his methods are totally different in every way. "Phil" is a shrewd follower of public form. His judgment is his only guide. "Tips," no matter how straight, are his aversion. The "Ghost" knows no more about public form than a camel knows about the eye of a needle. He is not even familiar with the names of the horses in training, to say nothing of their records. He is a player of "tips," he their origin straight or crooked, and frequently backs four or five horses in a single race.

"It is better to be born lucky than rich," said he on Friday at the close of the Pimlico races, which he played with astonishing success, taking more money from the track than all other speculators combined. "But," he added, "I don't mean to say that I was born poor, for I was not. My family was wealthy, and I was reared in the lap of luxury. However, I inherited little of the world's goods. Every dollar that I own to-day was earned by me. There is a great deal of satisfaction in earning one's money. Of course I have been lucky, wonderfully lucky. My luck often surprises me. Look at this"—showing a ticket on Glory, $1,000 to $200, which he was waiting to cash—"I don't think Glory had a chance of beating Holiday, but strolling through the paddock I picked up the tip and played it."

On Thursday he stood to win $5,000 on Specialty in the last race, and when Volta won, remarked to a companion that his luck was deserting him. But he kept his Specialty tickets. The race was run a second time, the best horses were left at the post, Specialty was favored with a long lead and won hands down. The "Ghost" congratulated himself and gave "Father Billy" Daly $500.

On Friday, hearing that Walter Gratz had bet $50 on his gelding Pocatello, the "Ghost" slipped into the ring and put on $500 at 10 to 1. He watch the race from a seat in the press stand, holding the $5,000 to $500 ticket in his left hand. Swinging into the homestretch Pocatello looked all over a winner. The favorites were under punishment while he was running well within himself.

"Pocatello in a walk! Pocatello in a walk! You get all the money!" shouted an excitable admirer, shaking the "Apparition" by the hand.

"He hasn't won yet," said the "Ghost," quietly.

"I tell you he has! He's got 'em all beaten. He wins in a walk, in a walk!"

"He hasn't won yet," repeated the "Ghost." "Wait till he passes the post."

"But don't you see he can't lose? He's leavin' 'em at every stride! Pocatello! Pocatello! Pocatello in a walk!" Pocatello won by three lengths. The "Ghost" glanced fondly at his ticket and smiled. "Well, by George, if he didn't get there; and a ten-to-one-shot, too!"—New York Tribune.

Loco.

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN:—Again I find an article about the loco disease, written by a horseman, and as usual, such articles mean good, practical sense, but are full of absurd and false statements whenever the author transgresses upon scientific matters. I fully appreciate Mr. Holloway's good intention, and even acknowledge his great and useful experience with loco horses; but I find no excuse for the gentleman's endeavoring to explain the disease scientifically, because he enters upon a field of which he knows very little. He is in the position of the shoemaker who, having built a little cottage, undertakes to explain to an architect plans of the State capitol.

It is to be regretted that this same subject, after having been carefully treated by myself before the last meeting of the Veterinary Association, has been reported in the various papers more to satisfy the ambition of non-members than to the credit of such practitioners as have studied the disease, like Prof. Stalker, Dr. Schwartzkopf, and myself. So I will, for the benefit of the readers of your valuable paper, respectfully ask you to publish the following points concerning this affection. I will leave out the symptoms, and will treat only those points that have always been erroneously explained.

J. P. KLENCH.

CAUSATION.

There is no doubt that the disease is caused by the Loco-plant or Rattleweed. Prof. Sayre, of the Kansas State University of Pharmacy, gives a full description of the plant and says that the crazy weed means only two plants—lestray allus Mollissimus and Oxytropis Lambertii; both belonging to the natural order of Leguminosae. They grow on high ground or rather dry soil, which is always gravelly and sandy. They can be found especially on uncultivated lands, alongside public roads and railroads. Every few years the weed makes its appearance again on cultivated lands, where it is cut with the crop, threshed and mixed with feed and straw. That explains how the disease is in some years absent and in other years very violent. But in large pastures that are never plowed up, and where the plant is growing year in, year out, the stock is liable to eat it in the summer when the food is short.

Prof. Sayre has made several chemical analyses of the dried plant and the result gave him fat, chlorophyl and soft resin. No trace of alkaloid was detected.

In order to ascertain the effect of this plant on animals, Prof. Stalker of Iowa, made some experimental tests with it. He prepared a strong infusion from about ten pounds of the plant and administered it by means of a stomach-pump. In twenty minutes stupor began to ensue and all the symptoms were clearly defined. At the end of six hours the stupor disappeared and the horse went to eat. The following day, when he had apparently recovered from its effects, he was given half the quantity of the drug as on the previous day. Now the symptoms were developed much quicker and death arrived in one and a half hours. The post-mortem examination revealed the characteristic lesions of the loco-disease. He now resolved to make a second experiment upon another horse which received daily an infusion obtained from about one quart of the pods of the plant. On the fifth day the characteristic stupor came on and grew more marked until the thirteenth day when the animal died. The post-mortem examination gave also the regular result.

Dr. Harding, a veterinary surgeon in Dodge City, Kansas, made the following experiment with the same plant. One test was made in the pasture with two horses, both having fed on loco. One of these horses found a great deal of the plant in his field, while the other had none, because the plant had been carefully removed. The first horse died in the pasture, the second one recovered from the previous feeding.

For the second experiment he placed two horses similarly affected in the barn; one was fed with dried loco, the other horse received clean hay. That one died; the last one recovered.

These experiments leave no doubt as to the cause of the Rattleweed disease. Let us now pass on to the pathological lesions after death.

As I never had myself an opportunity to make a post mortem examination of such diseased horses, I cannot give my direct opinion of the nature of the lesions; but I refer to the result obtained by two very competent veterinary surgeons. Prof. Stalker made the after-death examination of five subjects with the most perfect uniformity as to lesions presented. In every instance there was a marked effusion into the fourth ventricle. The liver and spleen were abnormally dense, the walls of the intestines almost destitute of blood, and the stomach enormously distended with undigested food; the stomach with its contents weighed as much as 75 pounds.

Dr. Olaf Schwartzkopf, Vet. D. U. S. Army, Texas, found the large sinuses filled with straw-colored fluid; vessels of the pia mater injected; the grey brain substance reddened and oedematous, and the cut surface glistening and moist. On the base of the brain, inside the arachnoidia, about a teaspoonful of pinkish fluid. The medulla oblongata and parts of spinal cord, taken from the cervical and lumbar regions, oedematous in appearance and moist in cut surface. Thoracic cavity normal; heart-endocardium a slight degree, stomach partially filled with ingesta, no sign of irritation in small intestines; liver, kidneys and bladder normal.

Physical remarks about the nature of the disease. I think full credit can be given to two reports as to the lesions found in animals that have died of loco disease. They are clear and distinct. In all the affection is located in the nervous centers—cerebrum and spinal-marrow. All diseases in the digestive organs, in the circulation and general nutrition, are consecutive and entirely depending from the functional disturbance in the nervous system, and more especially from the effusion of blood in the ventricles and the oedematous condition of the medulla oblongata and spinal-marrow.

The serous oxidation in the substance of the spinal-marrow will explain the pains manifested by the animal when urged to move, and expressed by grunting, stretching of head, uncertain gait, unwillingness to turn, to back up or to step forward when being pulled astern. When we consider that from the medulla oblongata emanate the 7th, 8th, 9th, 10th, 11th, 12th, and especially the 5th pairs of nerves, we can easily account for the symptoms, as the perversion of sight as to distance, size and nature of objects, the trembling of facial and cervical muscles, and sensitiveness manifested on pinching the base of the ears and occipital region, the inactivity of masseter muscles, the loss of taste, the diminished action of the heart and lungs, and the directly following effects on the general nutrition.

No doubt can exist as to the effect of the loco poison on the animals; the first effect is on the brain and spinal-marrow, all the other symptoms are the consequence of the functional disturbance in the nervous system.

But effusions of blood in the cerebral cavities can be found in other diseases of horses as well as in rattleweed, such as sleepy staggers or immobility and Encephalitis. Truly, they will produce different effects according to their degree, and can be expressed by convulsion and various degrees of violence, frenzy, stupor, coma or paralysis. So we can presume, with a good deal of probability that the differential, pathognomonic symptoms of the rattleweed disease are mainly due to the cedematous condition of the medulla oblongata and the spinal marrow.

But of what nature is the irritating element that directly causes the disease? Prof. Sayre has proven by repeated analysis complete absence of any kind of alkaloid in the loco plant, and gives an indication to the true essence of the irritating element. This irritation of the nervous system is clearly visible on all animals that have taken a small quantity of the poisonous plant, and when this last enters the system in large doses, it appears to cause congestion, or hemorrhage, or mere stagnation of blood, but whatever it may be, at the end a coagulation forms in the ventricles, exudation in the arachnoidal cavity, and in the spinal substance and cerebrum, which produces coma; hallucination, and all the functional disorders. The true nature of this irritating element, remains unknown until more perfect analysis can be made of the plant.

TREATMENT.

It is difficult, if not impossible, to prescribe a positive treatment for the disease. For animals affected in large pastures, the only advice to give would be to remove the stock to another pasture, and destroy the weed by cultivating the land. For working horses it is not only impassable, but even dangerous to attend to such affected horses. Those that are only lightly affected or over-excited should be kept moving, or set to work, and fed on clean, green feed and receive a dose of bromide of potassium in the feed every evening. A few doses of Belladonna might answer as well. A good dose of physic and abstraction of 2 or 3 quarts of blood will always have good effects; a blister behind the ear is practically not advisable. In the course of five or six months the animals thus treated and properly fed will become more quiet, and regain their old temper. When coma has set in I consider the horses beyond redemption, as expenses will exceed the value of the animal.

Before closing this article I wish to call attention to the use of leguminosae in general, which contain a great quantity of nitrogenous matter that is very rich and nourishing, and disposes to the formation of adipose tissue. But they are also accused of containing a specific poison that causes immobility, a sub-acute inflammation of the brain or other nervous affection, like restlessness, paralysis, roaring, sleepiness and even congestions. Ordinary peas even would occasion nervous disorders if given in large quantities. Special mention is made of hop-clover, medicus lupinus and lathyrus cicera or chick vetch. Very similar symptoms may be caused by English ray-grass. Horses pasturing on sandy land are often over-loaded with sand and become sick, and some often die of its effects; but it is not correct to say that they show symptoms of rattleweed.

The Belmont-Pilot Jr. Cross.

Pilot Jr.'s daughters have thrown more 2:30 trotters to Belmont than to any other horse, and Belmont counts more of his 2:30 progeny from the daughters of Pilot Jr. than from the daughters of any other horse; therefore, as Belmont is the most propotent living sire (mathematically proven), and Pilot Jr.'s daughters are considered the choicest brood-mares, it is any wonder that his cross is so high in public estimation.

The following is a list of Belmont-Pilot Jr. horses:

Nutwood, 2:18½ (sire of nineteen in 2:30), by Belmont; dam Miss Russell, by Pilot Jr. Sold for $22,000 at auction when sixteen years old, and stand at $500 for season of 1889, which sum has never been surpassed.

Vicking, 2:20½, by Belmont, dam Waterwich, by Pilot Jr. Corn Belmont, 2:24½, by Belmont, dam Miss Russell, by Pilot Jr.

Meander (5 yrs), 2:26½ (on one-half mile track), by Belmont; dam Minerva, by Pilot Jr.

Lady Kelso, 2:29, by Belmont; dam Diana, by Pilot Jr.

Nugget, 2:26½ (sire of two four-year-olds in the 2:30 list) by Wedgewood, son of Belmont, dam Minerva by Pilot Jr.

Trousseau, 2:28½, by Nutwood (son of Belmont), dam Molly Trussel by Pilot Jr.

Do not the prices paid for the first two show appreciation? These horses are race-horses.

Of these horses, Meander, 2:26½, is the most strongly trotting-bred, and he is famed as a natural trotter.

Nugget, 2:26½, is thought more of by many intelligent horsemen than his stable companion, Patron, 2:14½, because of his breeding.

There is no cross possible to make at present which has been more fruitful in results.

Nuthorne is a full brother to Nutwood, and he is another to trot in 2:30, as he has shown a trial in 2:26½.

To my mind this is the gilt-edged cross, and the one that is commanding itself to the intelligent breeder.—Vermont, in Wallace's Monthly.

Four Thousand Horses Exported from England.

During the five months ending May 31st there were exported from this country 4006 horses, compared with 2873 in the same period of last year and 2004 in 1886, the value having been £226,334 against £156,756 in 1887, and £115,797 in 1886. Of the horses exported 752 were stallions, value at £81,902; 14 went to Holland, 45 to Belgium, 16 to France, 410 to the United States, 117 to British North America and 150 to other countries. There were 1732 mares exported, of the value of £87,570; 291 going to Holland, 273 to Belgium, 248 to France, 422 to the United States, 60 to British North America and 438 to other countries. One thousand five hundred and twenty-two geldings were exported, of the value of £56,862; Holland took 396, Belgium 458, France 274, United States 112, British North America 1, and other countries 278. We imported in the five months 4538 horses (259 stallions, 542 mares and 3737 geldings), against 4493 in 1887, the value having been £84,917 against £66,051. As regards the term "gelding," it is explained that this includes horses the gender of which was not particularized previous to the month of April, 1888. Of other animals exported the value was £60,103 against £43,229 in the same five months of 1887.—London Live Stock Reporter.

The new race-course at Westchester, which is about completed, is considered by lovers of the turf to surpass anything of the kind in this country, if not in the world.

A Remarkable Race.

Boston, Mass., October 22d.—The 2:20 pacing race, which was concluded at Mystic Park this morning, will go on record as one of the greatest contests ever seen on any track. It was what is known to the fraternity as a "blood" race, and every heat was fought out in a way which told more than the coldness of the atmosphere of the coming winter. Every driver was after the price of the winter oats, and they continued that way to the end.

The winner was found in Billy T., a flea-bitten gray, who is inbred Hambletonian, his sire being Aberdeen and his dam Clayanna. The second-money winner was Dirigo Maid, who has now a record of 2:26½. This speedy little mare is by Dirigo; he by Hiram Drew, out of a Knox mare. The third was Doctor M., and the fourth was Ned Hanlan, who was sired by Kimball Morgan, dam an unknown mare. He is the speediest of the five, but a bad breaker. The fifth horse was John S., a handsome gray, by General Withers, he by Almont, his dam an Abdallah mare. These five horses will be long remembered as making the grandest race in the history of the turf, and one which was the most complete surprise ever seen. It probably is the first event on record where a horse got a heat and then, without being distanced, failed to get a piece of the money. John S. is the instance. He won the first heat and was well up in every heat, but failed to again reach the wire. Billy T. won the fourth, eighth and tenth heats; Dirigo Maid got the fifth and ninth; Doctor M. the third and sixth, and Ned Hanlan the second and seventh, John S. getting the first. Lexington Chief, the class winner at Beacon, reached the wire first in the fourth and fifth heats, but was set back for missing his gait, while Banks and he were ruled out of the race for failing to get one heat in five. Jessie was the only other starter, and was drawn in the third heat.

The race was started on Friday afternoon, and John S. got the first verdict. He worked hard for the second, and was headed by Ned Hanlan. In this heat there was an accident, Banks getting his sulky in the way of Dirigo Maid, and setting the little mare back into seventh place. Her speed in this heat made her the favorite, for she closed up a gap of six lengths, and did well. Doctor M. showed some of the speed of the Beacon meeting in the third heat, and placed the mark to his credit. In the fourth, Lexington Chief, who won at Beacon, went a good clip, but mixed his gait and was set back for it. He trotted all down the stretch. This heat was opened on Saturday afternoon.

In the fifth he ran a good deal of the way, and was set back, the heat being given to Dirigo Maid. This sent Lexington Chief and Banks to the stable. There are now only five horses eligible to start, and the fraternity were sorely puzzled to pick a winner. Doctor M. opened out and won the sixth heat, pacing his mile in 2:32½. The seventh was half a second slower, and fell to Ned Hanlan. The eighth was paced in the failing light, and this alone saved Doctor M. from being distanced, for he ran all the way from the head of the backstretch to the wire. The heat was given to Billy T., and the judges declared a postponement till this morning.

Early as was the hour, "the ring" were all out to see the finish, and the excitement ran high. Dirigo Maid was in grand form, and she was up close to the leaders at the half-pole, which was reached in 1:11½, and she landed a winner in 2:26½, the fastest time of the race, and her future mark. This was a new feature in the race, and was a grand clip for such a cold morning and the heavy track. She was strongly fancied for the next heat, but the clip had told on her, and she could not stay with them. The final heat was a horse race, if ever there was one, and every inch of the road was fought with an earnestness which showed how eager they were after the money. Billy T. carried the field to the quarter in 38 seconds, to the half in 1:15, and now Ned Hanlan and Doctor M. took a hand in, John S. being with them. At the head of the homestretch it was anybody's race, but Billy T. was the best finisher, and just managed to beat out the black son of Kimball Morgan by a head, winning the money.

Irma, 2:24 1-2.

Dr. S. C. Swartz of Dayton, O., owner of the fine pacing filly Irma, holder of the two-year-old record, has sent her to California in charge of Knap McCarthy. She will go to Los Angeles first, and will probably be bred in the spring to one of the leading California stallions. Mike Bowerman drove Irma a half mile not long since in 1:03, and the Doctor says she can show quarters in 30 seconds. With such speed we do not see why she should not capture the pacing record, 2:14, if sent for it.

Dr. Schwartz is now in San Francisco, and will spend the winter on this coast in search of health. He is a prominent business man of Dayton, Ohio, and has a number of good brood mares which he has been for some years selecting, and breeding to the best stallions in Kentucky.

Strange Racing.

Eolo and Eleve, two sons of Eolus were in the same race at Washington the other day, and the public made the latter a warm favorite, while the former was neglected at 5 to 1. Eolo won in the easiest possible manner, the favorite was never dangerous. Commenting on this, one of the owners of Eleve said to a reporter: "Strange things happen on a race-course. Now here are two colts that were bred by Major Doawell, and sold by him, Eolo to Mr. Cassatt for $6,000, and Eleve to us for $3,000. It is commonly known among racing men that Eolo always beat Eleve in the their trails, and beat him badly, yet no sooner do the colts come together in a race than the public plunge on our horse and let Eolo run loose. Of course Eolo won. He should have won. We hadn't the slightest hope in the world of beating him. There are some things about racing that nobody can understand."—Republic.

Sacramento Races.

The attendance at Agricultural Park November 5th to witness the renewal of the Sacramento Colt Stake Association's sweepstakes for two-year-old and three-year-old pacers was small, but considering that the day was immediately preceding the Presidential election and not many from abroad came to witness the contest, the crowd was good. Those who were in attendance saw one of the finest pacing races ever seen on any track, and between two of the world's champion three-year-old pacers.

The first event of the day was for the two-year-old pacers, foals of 1886, and the starters were N. N. Craig's Acrobat, by Sterling, and Captin B. E. Harris' Storm by Tempest. Storm won the first heat in 2:52½ both colts acting very badly. In the second heat Goldsmith appeared behind Acrobat, and that colt changed his calling under the change of management, for he settled down to business and putting his best first won the heat and race in 2:37 distancing Storm.

The second race was the event of the day and the starters were Yolo Maid (2:14), and Adonis (2:14½). The first named has the world's record for three-year-old pacers, and until yesterday had never lost a heat nor a race. Her race with Adonis yesterday was also her first with that colt.

In the pools the Maid was the choice at $25 to $7, but she was not at herself and the gelding won the race in three straight heats in 2:15½, 2:16½, 2:17½.

In the first heat Adonis made a disastrous break in the first half and by many it was thought would be distanced, but when he got squared away again he exhibited speed that made the spectators present open their eyes in astonishment. When half mile pole was reached he had closed some of the gap, but it was thought he could never overtake the Maid, as she had shown halves in her races in 1:04 and a quarter in her work in 29½ seconds. The mare however here showed conclusively that she was not herself, for Adonis overtook her about 50 yards from home and won the heat by a neck in 2:15½. He paced the last half in 1:02½ and the last quarter in 30 seconds—a two-minute gait. The second and third heats were easy victories for the son of Sidney. Below are the summaries:

Thanksgiving Day Races at Stockton.

The match running race to come off at Agricultural Park on Thanksgiving Day will have five starters. The race will be a half mile and repeat for a stake made up of the entrance money, which is $25 for each horse. The race will be under the rules of the State Agricultural Society, but no admission fee will be charged.

The entries are: W. R. Ruggles' ch. g. Steinman (4), by Joe Hooker, dam Puss; D. McAfee's ch. s. Rackety Jake, aged, by Ramidan; Frank Brown's Willy (2), by Kelpic, dam by Jo Daniels; Walter Hersom's h. f. Lulu H. Sale at San Mateo.

Mr. W. H. Howard, of San Mateo, has decided to sell his large herd of Durham cattle and on Tuesday, Dec. 11, these will be disposed of to the highest bidder, under the auspices of Messrs. Killip & Co., of this city. These are registered cattle, selected and bred for dairy purposes, are still further to be desired by Californian Dairymen as being already accustomed to the climate.

Woodland Sale.

Mr. D. J. Murphy, owner of Woodland Stock Farm, near Milpitas, advertises in another column a great sale of desirable roadsters, draught horses, horses of all work, brood mares, colts, fillies and some young dairy stock. The sale is made because of limited accommodation, and to prevent overstocking. The roadsters trace to Geo. M. Patchen, Jr., Nutwood, Ethan Allen, Jr., Belmont, John Nelson and other notable sires.

The draught horses are of Clyde, Sidney, Percheron, Norman, Sire and Suffolk ancestry. Catalogues are ready and may be had on application to the auctioneer, Mr. Jaa. A. Clayton, No. 16 West Santa Clara street, San Jose.

Mr. Matt Storn.

On Wednesday last, Mr. Matt Storn reached San Francisco, having come on from New Jersey as soon as able to travel after the fearful injuries received in the railroad smash up at Port Jervia, N. J., when so many valuable horses belonging to Mr. Fred Gebhardt and others were destroyed. Mr. Storn pulled through after having all the ribs on one side broken, his skull fractured, legs badly bruised and being used up in other ways. He looks thin and weak, but is game as ever, and when strength returns will be ready to shoulder his way to the front again. Matt says that but for the kindness and assiduous care of Mrs. Lily Langtry, his life could not have been saved. We shall present a fuller account of his experience at another time, simply improving this opportunity to say that his friends are very glad to see him, and hope for the best of luck as to his health and prospects.

Horse Dentistry.

St. Louis, October 26.—Dr. W. E. Murray, a veterinary surgeon, and formerly a dentist, to-day filled three decayed teeth of a valuable horse, the third case of equine teeth-filling on record. The animal had suffered terribly from toothache, and was unable at times to eat or drink. The operation lasted about an hour, and the horse bore the pain without wincing, and did not have to be tied or given gas. The operation was successful, and was witnessed by a number of dentists.

E. E. Browne, a merchant of Los Angeles, Cal., writing to a friend speaks of a wonderful three-year-old pacing colt he owns. He is by Del Sur, dam Newry (a full sister to Norfolk), and never had a harness on till June of this year. On September 1st Mr. Browne, a non-professional, drove him a quarter in 31½ seconds, going the first eighth in 15 seconds flat, and the quarter was 3½ feet long at that. C. A. Durfee, the owner of Del Sur, who gave the great Arrow his record of 2:14 as a four-year-old, thinks this youngster will make the fastest pacer ever foaled if he is properly handled and don't get too much speeding this year.—Ky. Stock Farm.

The attendance at the Bay District Track on Saturday, Nov. 3d, was not unusually large, and the races though not very important, were very exciting and aroused the interest of the spectators to an extent that more important races have failed to do.

The first race of the day was a pacing race for a purse of $300, with Racquet, Mink and Little Hope entered as contestants. Racquet was withdrawn early in the day. In the first heat the horses were sent off on a good start. Mink took the lead and maintained it to the half, where she broke, thus giving Little Hope a good lead and also the heat. Time 2:26.

The first pool sold on the race was in the second heat. Mink was the favorite at $25, against Little Hope $11. Mink got the pole at the start, and kept it a length to the wire. Time 2:41½.

The third heat was a repetition of the second heat, Mink winning easily in 2:24.

THE FOURTH HEAT.

In the fourth heat Mink was the prime favorite at $30, against Little Hope $10. At the start, Mink as before, took the pole and lead; and kept it to the half, when he made a bad break and again gave Little Hope the heat through accident.

The pools in the fifth heat were: Mink $55, Hope $20. This was the deciding heat, and a prettier race has not been seen on the track this season. The horses started well together and kept neck and neck to the three-quarters. Mink then took the lead for a short distance when Little Hope came away and won by a length. Time 2:25.

SUMMARY.

Mink, b g, owned by H. G. Agnew, driven by Lee Shaner. 2 1 1 2 2
Little Hope, ch g, owned by T. H. Griffin, driven by owner. 1 2 2 1 1

THE SECOND RACE.

The second race was the most interesting. The entries were Gracie S. Melrose, Budd, Allie Whipple and Hugh Patrick.

No pools were sold on the first heat. The horses got away in good order on the second attempt, and Allie Whipple drew away and was leading by three lengths at the quarter, closely followed by Gracie S. At the half Gracie S. was at the head and going well. Under a strong pull Whipple closed up on the stretch, but failed by a neck; Gracie S. first, Whipple second, Melrose third. Time 2:35½.

Before the second heat Gracie S. sold favorite in the pools at $55 against the field $12 and Whipple $5.

Gracie S. took the pole and lead from the start, and was closely followed by Whipple and Patrick. Whipple broke and Patrick came up in grand style and crossed the wire with Gracie, making a dead heat. Time 2:28.

Pools sold in the third heat with Gracie S. as the prime favorite. She again took the lead at the start, with Patrick on the wheels, Melrose third. Patrick broke at the half and fell back to fourth place.

At the three-quarters Gracie was slightly in the lead, with Whipple gaining. Whipple broke on the stretch and Gracie won easily, Melrose second, Whipple third. Time 2:30.

On the fourth heat there were no pools sold, as it was generally acknowledged that the chestnut mare was far ahead of her opponent. She took the lead at once and kept it, with Melrose a close pursuer up to the three-quarters, when Patrick made a good spurt and closed on the leader.

He failed to pass and Gracie won the heat and race, Patrick second, Melrose third. Time 2:29.

SUMMARY.

Gracie S., cb m, owned by A. Spreckels, driven by O. A. Hickok. 1 1 1 1 1 Melrose, bay stud, owned by J. Hunter, driven by J. Green. 3 2 3
Budd, bay g, owned by Charles Davis, driven by Charles Davis. 4 5 5 5 5
Allie Whipple, b g, owned by Charles Kingsley, driven by J. A. Goldsmith. 2 4 3 4
Hugh Patrick, bay g, owned by Patrick Farrell, driven by owner. 5 1 4 2

Time, 2:35½, 2:28, 2:30, 2:29.

The next event on the programme was an attempt by Sable Wilke to beat Brown's four-year-old stallion record, 2:18½. Johnny Goldsmith drove Wilkes and lowered the record, making 2:18.

A Sixty-Three Thousand Acre Estate.

It is no uncommon thing to find in this country large farms which consist of several thousand acres, but these do not embrace villages and manufacturing establishments, and in course of time are divided up into smaller farms, the ownership passing into other hands, instead of being installed as in Great Britain.

An interesting description is given of the estates of the Duke of Abercorn, in Ireland, embracing 63,000 acres, on which are nearly 2,000 tenants, as follows:

The British public hears of little but fighting between landlord and tenant in Ireland, and it may be of interest to them to have some account of a great estate which is well managed, and on which—though this is by no means the exception in this country—the most friendly relations subsist between the owner and tiller of the soil. Such an estate is that of the Duke of Abercorn, situated in North Tyrone and the adjoining part of Donegal, and comprising 63,000 acres in a ring fence. The property was granted by James I., at the time of the plantation of Ulster, to Lord James Hamilton, whom he created Earl of Abercorn, on condition that he kept up three castles and three hundred men all armed. At the siege of Derry two of the family fought on opposite sides, Claude, the fourth earl, being with the forces of James II., while Captain Hamilton, who afterward succeeded as sixth earl, took part with the defenders inside the walls; and close to the house at Baron's Court is to be seen a huge anchor, said to have belonged to the French war vessel Lauson, on which James II. embarked in Waterford Harbor after the battle of the Boyne, "accompanied by his aide-de-camp and kinsman, Claude, fourth Earl of Abercorn." They departed in such a hurry that the cable was cut, and the anchor was dragged up and presented to the late Duke, when Lord Lieutenant, by the harbor commissioners "as a mark of their respect for his Grace, and as a memento of the period in which his ancestors bore a gallant and devoted part."

The demesne, or park, as it would be called in England, includes 5,000 acres of undulating ground, the greater part of which is beautifully wooded, while some 1,500 acres are devoted to the maintenance of two home farms. The house is a very fine one, and stands on a broad plateau, with terraces and Italian gardens leading down to the lake. From the top of a hill known as Bessy Bell, which rises from the demesne to a height of over 1,300 feet, a splendid panorama of the estate and surrounding country is obtained. The distant view is fringed with mountains on every side, and no fewer than three hundred boudoirs were counted from this point on the night of the jubilee celebration. To the east lies the Montelone range, the Clara mountains and Lough Erne to the west, and to the north the Donegal mountains, with the peaks of Muckish and Errigal. At the foot of the hill on the eastern side is situated the village of Newtownstewart, where James II. slept the night after the raising of the siege of Derry, and which he burnt next morning. The house which he occupied has never been rebuilt, and its ruined walls form a conspicuous feature in the town. Further north on the banks of the Mourne are the Sion flax spinning mills, where Mr. Herdman, a tenant of the Duke's, employs 1,400 hands, for whose accommodation he has built a village of houses. A few miles further on is the town of Strabane, which forms the center of the property, and almost within a stone's throw of it, on the other side of the river Foyle, is Lifford, in Donegal, probably the smallest county town in the United Kingdom, the population numbering only about five hundred. Ardstraw, in another part of the property, is the site of one of the oldest ecclesiastical establishments in Ireland, having been the seat of the bishopric of Derry, which was moved in the sixth century to Loughrea, and thence to Derry; and St. Eugene, a disciple of St. Patrick, is said to have died there. The Derg Valley in which it is situated is famous for its large race of men, and was one of the great battle grounds between O'Neils and O'Donnells.

The estate lies in a fine undulating country, with good sized farms and comfortable homesteads, the baggards filled with neat and well thatched stacks of oats and hay, and showing unmistakable signs of industry. The farmers are the descendants of the Scotch planters, being mostly Presbyterians, and are a sturdy, hard-headed, independent race of men. The crops they chiefly depend on are flax, oats, turnips and grass, and if they could get a good price for flax and cattle they would be well enough off. The price of the former was a little better last year than in 1886, being from 50s. to 55s. per cwt. In the time of the American war, when it was as high as £6, they made money freely, but they also lived up to it, and built houses in many cases altogether out of proportion to the size of their holdings. They are generally low about the prospects of farming, and see no hope of a change for the better without protection, which they seem to be in favor of to a man. Some of them, on the other hand, say they have been doing well enough; that though they have to sell their cattle low they can also buy them low; and that the price of feeding stuffs and cost of living are both much less than they were; though they complain that labor has not fallen, and indeed, that it is difficult to get laborers at all, as most of the able-bodied men from the district are emigrating to America, Australia and New Zealand. "If we had the land they have in the south," said one man, "I think we'd do, rent and all. They have splendid land, and don't work it. I've been down there," he added, "and I don't like them. They're a different people, and I wouldn't live there for anything." They also complain that the long-continued agitation has affected the circulation of money, and thereby added largely to the general depression.

The uncertainty of the future makes them shy of land purchase, and they do not like the prospect of the hard and fast rules which they anticipate would have to be adhered to under the estate; whereas the Duke's office is open for rent receiving every Tuesday in the year, and they can suit their convenience as to the time of payment. One townland on the property was, however, sold to the tenants last June for twenty years' purchase of the present, or judicial rents, and some further sales have since been arranged. It was suggested to me that they would prefer to pay a smaller yearly installment than that provided for under Lord Ashbourne's act, and let it be a contingent charge, as they think that posterity should bear some share in the burden, and that it would be an advantage to have some control kept over the land, with the view of preventing subdivision. Of one thing I was assured on all sides, that there is no danger of the Protestant farmers of the north going over to home rule. They do not believe the country could prosper under a Parnellite parliament in Dublin; they fear increased taxation, and above all they have the dread of being ruled by Rome. Tyrone is not a great Orange county, but I am told the Orangemen have increased considerably in numbers since Mr. Gladstone's home rule proposals. "They have increased," said a big, broad-shouldered man of six feet four inches, with a twinkle in his clear, blue eye, "for I have a way of knowing." "And they'll never be ruled by Parnell," he declared, adding with another twinkle, "for I have a way of knowing." Ninety per cent., I was told, of the property in the district belongs to loyalists, but they are in danger of being swamped by the lower orders, who are nearly all Roman Catholics, but few of whom hold any land. The proclivities of the farmers are liberal, but in the face of a common foe they sank all differences to return a unionist, and are at present represented by Lord Ernest Hamilton.

There are 1,315 tenants on the Duke's property, about half of whom have had judicial rents fixed, chiefly by agreement, only one hundred and forty-one having gone into court. There were a number of leases made in 1834, no doubt with the object of creating votes, and of these a considerable proportion are still subsisting. About one hundred expired in 1882, and there has been as yet no change in these rents, though the tenants are now seeking an abatement. There are also some leases made since 1870, but the Duke voluntarily reduced the rents in these cases two or three years ago, thereby anticipating the new land act. The tenant-right on the estate has always commanded high sums, rising to as much as sixty years' purchase, a farm of twenty-eight statute acres rented at £15, 4s., 5d., having sold in 1878 for £915. Thirty, forty and fifty years' purchase having been frequently given, anything under twenty years being the exception, and the average sale of tenant right in 1886 came to twenty-two years' purchase. The best feeling appears to subsist between the Duke and his tenants, though with so large a number it would probably be too much to say that there is no disaffection whatever.

There are eighty laborer's cottages at Baron's Court, all well-built slated houses with two rooms and offices. The most of them have gardens in front, and ivy or creepers on the walls, presenting a pleasing contrast to the bare white-washed wall of the ordinary Irish cabin. A hundred and eighty hands are employed all the year round, the annual labor bill coming to £6,000, or if estate management be added, over £7,000 expended in wages. There is a clothing club for the laborers, who have any money they put in doubled by the Duke. An old man is still living on the estate who remembers when "the peace was proclaimed after '98." The whole country was illuminated, and whisky was 3d. a pint, and there were "no gaugers." He also remembers "the old Marquis," who used to gallop for miles through the rides and drives of Baron's Court, but never go outside, and "always wore his sash," or ribbon of the Garter.

For the benefit of the poorer classes outside the estate, who are not so well off, a knitting industry, known as the Baron's Court Cottage Industry, was established three or four years ago, and has now, thanks to the unremitting energy of the Duchess of Abercorn, attained extensive dimensions. Several regiments, both of regulars and militia, are supplied with socks, and there are different patterns for the guards, rifle brigade, hussars, etc. Any orders, large or small, are gladly received. Mrs. Dickson, the steward's wife, weighs the yarn and gives it out, and the goods are brought back the following week, weighed again, and paid for. It is an immense boon to the people during the winter months, and they come in from a radius of ten miles to get the work, which makes an addition to the earnings of a family varying from 6s. to 12s. a week. They also knit gloves, shawls, knickerbocker stockings, etc., and are very clever at embroidery. Oddly enough, they can not work from patterns, but if they are told to do a shamrock, rose, or so forth, they bring back the device beautifully done. The Baron's Court Cottage Industry obtained a diploma and medals at the Edinburgh exhibition, and the Duchess organized the collection of Irish women's work of all kinds for the Glasgow Industrial Exhibition.

If such a place as Baron's Court were broken up, or the means of expenditure seriously reduced, it is obvious that it would be an immense loss to the whole district. The Duke resides on the estate during a great part of the year, and takes an active interest in all that concerns its management and the welfare of the people.

The Coming Horse Show.

During the last few years the Annual Horse Show at Madison Square Garden has been one of the most interesting and successful events of each season, and its omission last year was a matter of general regret throughout the noble army of horse lovers in New York. There may have been special reasons that made the last show, that of 1886, less of a success than its predecessors; but the causes are now old stories that are best forgotten. The show this year is certain to be worthy the city where it is to be held and the great interest which supports it.

The list of entries far exceeds, in all respects, anything ever before obtained. Each one of the numerous classes has filled handsomely, and in many of them the competition will be remarkably strong. A blue ribbon taken at these shows has always been a very highly prized honor, and stamps its winner with first class excellence in his grade, but those that are so decorated this year must be of very exalted merit, judging from the quality of the entries. This remark applies to all the classes, from the bluest blooded thoroughbred to the most elephantine draught horses, but it is especially true of the trotters.

Among these last the competition for stallions, to be shown with four of their get, has almost been the foremost in interest, and thirty good ones will be shown at the trial. There will be Don Coasack, the famous Illinois sire and the winner of innumerable prizes in this class, who will support the claims of the Caton Stock Farm. The Village Farm will send Mambrino King, almost invincible in such contests, and Hamlin's Almont Jr., the sire of Belle Hamlin, 2:13½. From the stud of that veteran breeder Robert Steel of Philadelphia will come Epaullet, 2:19, whose blind eyes will never again look upon the track where he once promised to reign supreme. Mr. A. B. Darling's fine horse Starlight, that has achieved greatness in the last few years through the performances of his fleet footed offspring, will be there. There will be Macy, a splendid son of George Wilkes, and last, but by no means least, there will be Mr. R. Cadogan's noble horse Bayonne Prince, himself a great race horse. Each of these grand stallions will be shown with four of his get, presumably of the best of his get, and this exhibition alone should crowd the garden to its uttermost.

All these animals will also contest in the class for stallions, 4 years old and over, and in addition there will be Mr. A. A. Bonner's recent purchase, Volmer, by Gamhetta, dam Ulster Queen, by Hambletonian, and that good horse Tariff, by Clarion Chief, dam Lillian, by Favorite.

Among the young stallion classes are entered Chimes, by Electioneer, out of Beautiful Bells, by The Moor. The astute horseman, Mr. C. J. Hamlin, paid a great price for this fellow when he was a baby, and he will be inspected with uncommon interest as one of the most promising sons of the great Electioneer and of the famous mare that produced Hindoo Rose, St. Bel and Bell Boy.

Among the three-year-old colts will be Nominee, whose breeding merits special attention. He is by Stranger, out of Sapphire, by Jay Gould, and Sapphire's dam was Lucy, 2:18½, by George M. Patchen. Stranger is a son of General Washington, dam Goldsmith Maid, 2:14, the most successful trotter the world has ever seen. General Washington is by General Knox, dam Lady Thorn, 2:18½, by Mambrino Chief. If there is any such thing as hereditary speed, surely Nominee should be a world heater; and there are few people interested in the breeding of trotters that will miss this opportunity of examining him.

The class for standard bred trotters is very strong and includes such notable performers on the turf as J. B. Thomas, 2:18½; Spofford, winner of the great $10,000 purse at Hartford last month; Clara, by Leland, a stable companion of Spofford; the beautiful and speedy mares Queen Wilkes and Corona and a number of others.

The class for brood mares with foal at the foot has seven fine entries, and the roadster class, rig and appointments to be considered, will also be a spirited contest. Among the entries in this last class are Mr. Alfred de Cordova's fine mare Sentress, Mr. A. B. Darling's Starletta and a Kentucky Prince, entered by Mr. Frank Ferguson, who has twice carried off the blue ribbon in this competition.

The judges for the trotting classes will be Messrs. Albert C. Hall, J. W. Ogden and Cortland D. Moss. They are all deeply versed in horse lore, and no owner need fear to trust his pretensions or those of his horse to their judgment.

A Track Reminiscence.

The Canadian Sportsman tells the following reminiscence of how Black Cloud defeated Jerome Eddy at Buffalo in 1882. It says: "Black Cloud figured in one of the greatest races I ever saw," said a Detroit patron of the turf at the Cadillac recently. "I remember when the old horse was brought here. He was shipped to George Voorhis for training, and I was down at the depot when he landed. I never saw a more thoroughly disgusted man in my life. The horse was one of the most disreputable specimens of the equine family I ever saw. His tail was rubbed bare, his hoofs were grown all out of shape and his hair was long enough to shear. You'd no more take him for a trotter than you'd take a turkey gobbler for a singing bird. George's first idea was to ship him back, but the owner was a personal friend and he concluded to find out what there was in the old horse. Everybody who knows anything about turf matters will remember the old fellow as a corker and a bonanza."

"His great race, in my estimation, was over the Buffalo course in 1882. I was down there with a lot of other Detroiters, and naturally disposed to back the horse that failed from Detroit. Jerome Eddy was pitted against Black Cloud, and hooked to win, if it lay in his power. The reputation of the Owosso Stable was at stake, and so anxious were the friends of the Michigan stallion to carry off the honors, that they tried hard to fix Voorhis. He could have had as much as the money at stake and draw on the pool box, but George vowed that a well-stocked farm would be no temptation, and that he'd show them blood on the moon before the deciding heat was trotted."

"Excitement ran high, and when Eddy was selling at 100 to 80 against Black Cloud, I made some investments on the Cloud. I told Voorhis about it, and he told me in good stiff Anglo-Saxon that I was a blanked fool. Eddy was a great horse, and Black Cloud had been trotting some very hard races that left him with bad feet and legs. That put me to my stumps, but I was just stubborn enough not to hedge."

"The first heat came off, and it was a guarantee that the race would be a great one. Black Cloud had everything his own way clear around to the draw gates, and then he went into the air, nobody can tell why, you know. George may have loosened the reins on him too suddenly, drawn them in with too much force, or the horse may have stepped into a hole. As it was, Eddy was driven out in 2:16½, and the crowd went wild."

"I walked down to the stall and George looked like a thunder cloud. He was ordering the rubbers around like an overseer, and telling them just what to do for the old fellow's legs. I wanted to talk to him, but had to hit him just right, so I proposed a walk up to the club house and a mild indulgence. He accepted, and then I asked:

"George, what about this race?"

"I don't know. That Eddy's a screamer. I want to get along side of him again before I make up my mind."

"They trotted the second heat, and old Black Cloud gathered it in. I walked down to the stall again. There was George, looking as big as four acres, and having the horse put in shape to trot for a man's life."

"What do you think now, George?"

"Can't tell yet. There's a blauked sight more in the old fellow than I thought there was. But don't bet yet."

"I kept my roll in my pocket; but it hurt me. The Eddy men were doing some tall chinning, and I was itching to call them down."

"When they warmed up for the third heat, even the judges were excited, and pool buyers didn't know which way to jump. They got off together, and you never saw a double team stay closer together. Black Cloud stayed like a shadow and they shot under the wire together. It was a dead heat. Then the backers of the Owosso horse got dead crazy. They were satisfied that he could outstay the old horse and were giving odds of $100 to $15. Did I take them? Well, ask George. I went to the stable again and told him what was going on. His eyes were snapping and he was beginning to think that nobody's horse could beat his. He was advanced in years, but he was bred up in 'g,' and was acting like a stayer. George pulled out the nucleus of a national bank and told me to go the pile. I did, and put as much more for myself, with a sinking of the heart that I didn't have more."

The fourth heat, like all the others, was for blood, and so evenly was it contested that the judges could only declare it a dead heat."

"The Eddy forces were more jubilant than ever, counting on the lasting qualities of their horse, and I was just confident enough to draw for more boodle and accept the odds as fast as they came. Before it was time to ring up another heat it came on dark and the race was postponed. Next morning old Black Cloud was limbered up, had more life than a three-year-old and took three straight heats without turning a hair."

"We took home an ordinary wagon load of money, and I've always said Voorhis made the finest display of judgment in that contest that I ever saw on a horse track."

From present indications it would seem that the project to hold the forthcoming turf congress at the St. James Hotel, in New York City, will fizzle out and the Westerners will go to New Orleans to hold their conclave instead. The president of the Kentucky Association and the Latonia Jockey club object to going to New York unless the Eastern association show a disposition to confer with the Western clubs.

CATTLE.

Trite Remarks on making the Dairy Profitable.

While there is very little new in dairy literature, there is a great deal of what has been said that could be put to profitable use by thousands of dairymen all over the country. Dairymen, like thousands of others, get into common ways of doing things, and if they can make things come out even, they continue along in the same old way and expect to until they die. Why men will milk cows year after year that only return them $30 per head, when other men near them will get $60 per head from apparently no better cows, passes all comprehension. Men will stand about on one foot, and argue by the hour against co-operative creameries and sell butter at 8 to 10 cents per pound less than the cream would bring if sent to Mr. Talbot's creamery, and no work about it. I know it is human nature to fight progress, and denounce all improvement in stock or crops as "blasted lying," but it don't always pay to indulge in very much of it.

It would seem as though everybody would be on the lookout for every dollar he could lay his hands on honestly. What sin is it for a dairyman to get better cows, feed them more intelligently, and to a specific purpose, and make a little better butter and sell it at first market prices? and if he does so, why should the average dairymen all set their tongues wagging, and besides doubting his words as to income, point him out as a candidate for bankruptcy? Why should they not see that the expenditure of thought, and a better cow, with an intelligent system of feeding, doubles the income of the dairy with only a fraction additional cost in outlay? Why will men in Portage county stand and dispute facts, when before their eyes they see Frank Blair of Mantua, with the same farm, adding a silo each year; and yet another 30 cows, until now he furnishes more milk to the Cleveland shipping trade than his neighbors combined. Does it pay him, and if it does not, why does he launch out larger each year and continue to pay all demands upon him promptly?

The Ten Commandments were given to the people some thousand years ago for their moral advancement, and the Sermon on the Mount is nearly 2,000 years old; and still it is hard work for nearly more than half of the people of civilization to give them more than casual observance. If the passage of the oleomargarine law, two years ago, has not worked a revolution in dairying, the total abolition of the one, and the elevation of the dairy and its methods to perfection at the same time, the advice to repeal the oleo laws because the realization of perfect work has not been accomplished, would find a parallel in asking for a suspension of the Ten Commandments, and the Sermon on the Mount, because perfect obedience has not been secured in regard to them. That better farm butter should be made in many instances is very true, but that neglect and ignorance on the part of the dairymen are excuses why we should allow a return of the wholesale and retail swindling in bogus dairy goods, is far from good logic. The only true course is to insist upon education, and a plan of instruction for the one to develop better things, and the holding of the other class in strict obedience to the law. The dairyman is obliged to sell his butter for what its merits stamp it. The hog dealer should have no superior right, and should sell his product for just what it is, as rendered refuse grease, which never was and never can be made into butter.—Sam, in Ohio Farmer.

Water in Butter.

Some buyers of very good-looking and well-flavored butter complain that it is too salt, while the maker insists that it has not been oversalted. The same buyers say that a slice or print of the butter left exposed in a warm room will in two or three days become thickly incrustated with salt, which may be scaled off, leaving the butter still quite salt enough. That is true, too, and yet the maker may not have spoken falsely in regard to oversalting—that is, if the old standard of an ounce to the pound is not so regarded. But let the purchaser weigh the print or slice carefully before exposing to the air, and then after a few days, without removing the salt coating which has appeared, weigh it again. He will find that it has decreased ten or even fifteen per cent. in weight. How is this? Simply a dairyman's trick of adulterating his butter with water. To this adulterated or extended butter he adds the usual weight of salt per pound, making it perceptibly too salt, even to those who are accustomed to salt butter. In the warm room the water comes to the surface and is evaporated, leaving the objectionable incrustation.—Rural New Yorker.

The Pure-Bred Sire.

One thing that stands in the way of a rapid improvement of our cattle is the difficulty of owners of very small herds getting a thorough-bred bull. The difficulty is more imaginary than real, but that makes no difference. The result is the same. The small farmer with a few cows cannot see his way clear always to purchase a thoroughbred bull, and so he goes on, year after year, breeding poor stock to his financial injury. There is only one way to look at this matter and that is to consider whether cattle that are worth a hundred dollars a head are not much better than those that are worth not more than half that amount; whether a cow that will produce two or three times more milk and butter than the one we have it not very desirable; and if these questions are answered in the affirmative, and of course they must be, the question arises, whether a thoroughbred bull will not soon pay for himself, and leave a handsome profit, by producing such stock. It often seems to be forgotten that there are low priced thoroughbreds. It would seem as if many never got it into their heads that there are bulls sold under the thousands, and indeed young bulls under the hundreds. They may not be and are not as desirable as some famous bull whose reputation is sufficiently established to make him a very desirable sire. But they are good bulls, and when we cannot get the very best, we had better take what we can get. Then there is still another view of the matter. A bull of great reputation might not be able to pay for himself on a small farm, while a bull of less reputation, though perhaps equally as good, would. The reputation of the animal often makes him exceedingly valuable at the head of a professional breeder's herd, though really he may not be any better than a lower priced animal. The owner of a few cows may not want, and probably would not want, to advertise himself through the possession of a noted bull. He probably would simply desire to improve his stock for his own use. Now such a man will ordinarily find no difficulty in securing a bull within his means, and would find the purchase very profitable. At almost every sale animals are knocked off at prices which even the opponents of high prices would call reasonable.

But it is the duty of the farmer, his duty to himself, to improve his cattle by some means. The farmer is conducting his business to make money, and if he does the best he can he does not make more than he can conveniently take care of. But if he neglects the profits from stock raising, he throws away the most profitable branch of his business. There is money in good stock. People who go into the business intelligently and conduct it intelligently do well. Therefore the first thing that a farmer whose stock is below standard should do is to breed it up. If he has the means to buy a thoroughbred bull, buy it. If he cannot buy a thoroughbred, get a grade. That will likely prove to be a great improvement upon common stock. But a very simple and easy way by which a thoroughbred bull can be procured is for the farmers of a neighborhood to club together and get one. A good animal could thus be got at very small individual expense, and the results would be grand. If men can be brought to consider this matter as its importance demands, we shall not be so slow in breeding up our cattle; and as rapidly as we seem to be doing this, taking the entire country together, we are progressing slowly. In some sections of the country nothing is found but scrub stock, though there may be abundant evidence of general enterprise and thrift in other directions.

Stilton Cheese.

A description of the method followed by Mr. Thomas Nuttall, a celebrated maker of prime Stilton cheese, is given in English exchanges as follows:

The milk is emptied into a large strainer, from which it passes into the cheese tub, fourteen feet long by four feet wide, made of wood lined with tin and capable of holding 6,000 gallons. By means of steam or cold water the temperature of the milk is brought to 70 deg. Fahrenheit, space having been left between the wood and tin to admit either. Then the rennet made from green cured skin, eleven ounces to ten gallons of water, is added and thoroughly mixed with the milk, which curdles in about one hour and thirty minutes. Next four persons remove the mass of curd with shallow tin bowls, into cloths, which are placed in tin drainers six by two by one-half feet. Iron bars are fastened across these at intervals of one end and one-half feet to hold the sides of the cloths. Two of these drainers are placed in a frame two feet apart, one above the other, when the full frame is removed to make room for an empty one, the whole tub being emptied in about twenty-five minutes. The cleaning of the tub and utensils is done chiefly with steam, obtained from a boiler which works a five horse power steam engine, used to pump the water from a well to a reservoir on the top of the building, and to heat the rooms, grind the curd, etc. The cloths containing the curd are loosely tied by the four corners allowing the whey to separate partially for one hour, when the taps of the drainers are turned and the whey is drained off altogether. Then the cloths are tightened and placed close together on a large drainer of about the same size as the cheese tub, in which they remain twelve hours.

The cloths are again tightened and the curd placed in other coolers. After a while the cloths are removed, the curd is cut up, and in eighteen hours it is coarsely ground. The morning's and evening's curd are thoroughly mixed with one another, and with fine salt in a proportion of one to sixty. The mass is then put into tin hoops with perforated sides, twelve inches deep by eight inches in diameter, and the filled hoops are arranged on shelves in a brick-floored room of 65 deg. Fahrenheit. In six days the whey will have run off and the cheeses are then removed from the hoops and taken to the binding-room. Here they are shaped with a knife and strong calico bandages pinned around them daily for twelve days, when they get firm and are removed to drying-rooms of 65 deg. Fahrenheit. The cooling is effected by means of water trickling from a perforated pipe, and the heating by steam-pipes. Ten pounds of curd placed in the hoops produce five pounds of cheese. Stilton cheese is made twice a day from new sweet milk from the cow, but without the addition of extra cream, as some people seem to think. If one thing requires greater care than another, it is the constant and precise regulation of the temperature, and the avoidance of waste during the various stages of manufacture.

Ayrshire Cattle.

Somewhat similar to the improved Shorthorn, considerable obscurity rests on the origin of Ayrshire cattle. They came to be recognized as a distinct breed in the country that bears their name about the year 1750, and continued to be gradually improved. They seem to have been developed from the natural cattle of Ayrshire by being crossed with other breeds, supposed to be the Alderney Teeswater, but Shorthorn and West Highland are also mentioned as having tended to their improvement. The Ayrshire cattle have been long celebrated for their milking properties, and they are not excelled in that respect by any other breed of cattle in the British Isles, though the quality may not be so rich as that of some other breeds, as the Jersey and the West Highland. They have a hardy constitution adapted to a poor soil, thriving where some of the other breeds would scarcely live. The average milk yield may be considered to be about 550 gallons, but where forced feeding is given and the milk sold sweet, the average may be put at 600 gallons, but in cows grazed on poor hard land the yield may amount to barely 400 gallons. On the average the annual yield of butter may be put at 220 to 240 pounds depending on the feeding.—Farming World.

The Highway Cow.

Few objects are more to be pitied than the highway cow. Her fare is scanty, and her lot hardship and abuse. She must steal or starve, and her look shows that she is conscious of being a thief. Her owner cares little for her, and by all others she is hated. Her food and treatment being what they are, she cannot be profitable to any one, and to the owners of land in her vicinity she is a source of vexation and loss. Why she exists no one can tell, for if it were not for her three-fourths of the fencing now required would not be needed; this saving would pay for good pasture for her, not to speak of the cessation of damage to crops. The principle which allows her to exist is wrong; it is contrary to that which once prevailed in the English law; it requires all landholders to fence all other men's cattle out, instead of his own in. The law is wrong, not the highway cow. Hence do not abuse her, though she is exasperating. When she has eaten off all your cabbage, destroyed bushels of your ripening wheat, do not put the dog on her, and club her unmercifully when you get her in a corner, but make a sturdy resolve that you will vote against animals running at large. Here as elsewhere prevention is better than cure.—American Agriculturist.

Cure for a Bad Habit.

To prevent cows from jumping, says Mr. J. M. Stanbrough, cut the lower eye-lashes off close and turn your cow loose, and see if she will attempt to jump. I have had some little experience; it seems that long hair immediately above and below the eye regulates the sight, hence with the lower lashes cut close a low fence looks high, and vice versa with the upper ones cut close a high fence looks low. There is an old adage that good fences make good stock, and good stock makes good neighbors, and the reverse, bad fences make bad stock, had neighbors.

Notes.

Great Britain is the heaviest purchaser of American beef and cattle among foreign buyers. This year to August 31st, she took $5,156,750 worth of fresh beef, an increase of almost $2,000,000 over 1887 for the same time. Of cattle on the hoof she bought in the same period of the United States of the value of $9,194,222, which exceeds last year's purchases by $3,296,398. These figures indicate that our export trade in beef and cattle is rapidly increasing, and if continued will no doubt have an important bearing upon cattle prices, affecting them for the better, provided the huge monopoly that fattens at Chicago can be checked in its career of absorption of all the vitality belonging to the live stock industry of the country.

The many facts which have come to light recently showing how shameless and unscrupulous are the dressed beef men in running into their abattoirs diseased cattle which subsequently are sent over the country as refrigerated beef to be eaten by the people as healthy food, has caused the live stock commissioners of Illinois to take the most stringent measures to prevent the iniquitous practices in connection with the slaughtering of cattle, sheep and hogs by the great beef operators. The horrors of the packeries of Chicago in particular will be set forth at the St. Louis meeting of cattlemen and butchers, and the most efficient laws to correct the evils now attached to the killing of diseased animals and sale of the meat thereof must result, when the people understand how largely the dressed beef houses have sold diseased meats which have been consumed as a healthy product.

The consumption of beef in the United States is rapidly increasing, it taking precedence over all other kinds of meat foods. The necessity, then, was never more urgent than at present to see that only healthy beef goes to the consumers' tables. In the revulsion which has come to so many people the past six months over the revelations made as to the quality of beef which the meat concerns allow to be sent out from their refrigerators, the most strenuous endeavors should be made by cattle growers in particular, to correct the evils which are hurting their industry, and they should see to it that nothing but sound and healthy beef can be offered for sale in the retail markets. Once let it be known that unscrupulous dealers have not the power to offer diseased beef for sale, the consumption of meat will be greatly increased and the golden days of profit to the cattle producer will return.

Those editors, papers and writers who assume that the oleomargarine law should be repealed because its passage and execution has not induced ignorant farmers, and farmer's wives, who make the bulk of the butter of the country to make it better, and as good as gilt-edged creamery, are asking too much—asking an impossibility at the hands of the people who cannot progress fast enough to produce the finest article of all they make. It would be just as consistent for the above-named writers to call for the abrogation of the whole scheme of salvation through good works and faith, because so many people of the world do not believe in the theories of the Christian religion. They assume the law was passed to induce poor butter makers to make better butter; whereas it was passed to arrest men in black-hearted swindling; and to compel them to sell their products for just what they are. There is no law that can compel a fool man or woman to know more; but they can be slowly educated to do better, by seeing what poor returns they get for just as good milk as their neighbors make. Because they do not learn faster is no reason why a rascal should be allowed to swindle us.—Hoard's Dairyman.

The advice that a cow has seen her best days at about eight years I think a mistake, i. e., a dairy cow; but a combined cow must go sooner than that, or else her beef is not sold at profit. The profitable cow is one that grows better by using as a dairy animal. A good cow continually increases her capacity for milk-giving. The milk glands and the mechanism of milk elaboration grows stronger for years, and many of my most profitable cows have been more than a dozen years old. "Old Blue," 18 years old this summer, has been going as high as 45 pounds of milk per day, and a known 10 pounds of butter per week besides the cream for coffee. These vigorous cows, if mated with a sire from a milking strain, can be depended upon to transmit their qualities to their heifers, and if the dairyman knows how to feed and care for these heifers, and will feed them in the direction of cows, instead of steers, each generation of such stock will show improvement, and soon come to have fixity of type, and power of transmittal that will make dairying a profitable industry, instead of a sort of make-shift between poverty and fair compensation.—Ex.

Johnson grass (sorghum halapense) is one of the best, if not the best, hay grasses in the southern states on rich, well-drained land. Cut at the right time it is eaten greedily by cattle, horses and mules, and will rank with good timothy hay in value. This grass does not thrive on poor or wet land, nor will it stand close grazing. It will continue to produce heavy crops of hay on good land if fertilized and the surface soil partially broken or sacrificed sufficiently to cut the roots of the grass every other year. This grass spreads readily and grows from either seed or root cuttings. Stock eating the ripened heads will spread the grass wherever they leave their droppings. After getting a foothold it grows with such luxuriance and vigor that it is not possible to exterminate it with ordinary cultivation, or to keep it from spreading; hence the cotton planter considers it one of the worst pests he can have on his place. The writer has not found it difficult to subdue this grass, even when well set, sufficiently to grow corn, nor does it interfere with the grain crops. In the Gulf States, on land adapted to it, Johnson grass will yield three and four tons of hay per annum per acre in two cuttings. It is doubtful, however, if this grass will be found of high value outside of the southern tier of states. Prof. Shelton, of Kansas agricultural college, reports it of no value at Manhattan.—Breeder's Gazette.

Trotting Association, Pacific Coast.

Too soon, perhaps, while the smoke of the big battle is still hanging dense in the air for men to consider things of minor importance, and still no harm will be done by keeping in sight what to many is of great monetary interest. That the government will be properly conducted, whichever of the great parties has control of the executive and houses of Congress, is beyond question, especially when the line dividing them is so attenuated that only partisans magnify it into a big cable.

The horse interest of this coast is already one of magnitude, and is increasing with a rapidity which gives promise of startling proportions in the not distant future.
Trotting interests are more general than that pertaining to the turf proper, as in addition to the large breeding establishments there are hundreds, it may reasonably be said thousands, who are engaged in breeding horses for harness work, and with an eye to form and speed the best adapted for use on the track and road. As a rule the breeding of race-horses is confined to stud farms which are expressly arranged for that branch of equine culture and development.

At a rough estimate Rancho Del Paso, Rancho Del Rio, Palo Alto and Santa Anita produce nine-tenths of all the thoroughbred foals dropped in California, whereas in the trotting division a large majority must be credited to the smaller places. For instance, in the Occident stakes, which closed the first of last January, there are nineteen subscribers and a very small proportion of breeders make engagements for their colts at so early an age. With what may be termed a community of interests, extending from San Diego to British Columbia, and from the Pacific Ocean to the Rocky Mountains, it seems that there should be no lack of appreciation of the importance of the object. There is far more to do than the establishment of a society with kindred powers to the American and National Trotting Association.

Should the American adopt a rule which will be acted upon at the coming convention, granting the Pacific

Board full power to act without appeal from its decisions, a great deal of trouble will be saved. And at less expense as in that case the cost of membership would be smaller than if the whole machinery had to be obtained.
In that case the government of races would be provided for without further work, but the scheme we have in view will reach beyond track management and cognate affairs. A co-operation society in which individual interests are better taken care of than would be possible to accomplish by individual effort.

Dr. Bowhill's Answer.

We fully realized the hardness of the stent when Dr.
Bowhill was asked to explain why the "exception to the rule" in the case of Antevolo, should be accepted as precluding like treatment being also successful hereafter? We are much gratified by the Doctor's prompt return to the request; and also well pleased to learn that the same, or nearly the same course resulted favorably in the case instanced. Professor William's smile must have been significant, and as he pronounced "that this was the best cure he ever effected," neither "luck" or "obstinacy" could be credited with "coming to the rescue."

The counter exception which Dr. Bowhill calls our attention to, instanced by Lillie Stanley, is not so hard to answer, that being that the tendon recovered its tone from the long rest which the firing-iron and blistering rendered imperative. Were the actual cautery a specific for sprains of tendons and ligaments there should be cases of cures effected without long periods of rest. The burning, if not done on purpose could be cured in a comparatively short time, but the trouble is that there are two ailments to conquer in place of one. We will not attempt to dispute the dogma that two violent inflammations cannot exist in such close proximity as the tendon and outer skin bear to each other, but in order to be logical we should not wait "until all signs of fever disappeared from the limb," but rather apply "a blister or actual cautery" at once. The old theory that cauterization formed a permanent bandage, we understand does not prevail at the present time, therefore there must be other reasons for employing the "most potential remedy known to veterinary science." But it is not our purpose to enter into a discussion in regard to the propriety of firing for sprains of tendons and ligaments, the intention being to attract attention to a milder course.

That the milder has been marvellously effective in the case of Antevolo every person who realizes the magnitude of the injury must admit, and now that a somewhat analogous case is presented in that which Dr. Bowhill noted, it seems as though due weight must be accorded the simpler plan. While Prof. Williams may have been so firmly wedded to the potentiality of the heated iron as to ascribe to Dame Fortune the "best cure" he ever effected, and though it may be nearly as difficult for his pupils to eradicate impressions imbibed from listening to lectures delivered by the ablest professor of the Royal College, still with two such examples heterodoxy may be condoned.

We tender our sincere thanks to Dr. Bowhill for the answer returned, and the obligation is greatly heightened by the information that Antevolo was not the only example. As has been stated before, the disappointment following the injury has been partially overcome by the knowledge obtained, and the further proof will add to the value of the lesson. If our understanding be correct the treatment of the flexor tendon in the illustration presented by Prof. Williams was nearly similar to that described heretofore. Taking for granted that the "cotton wool" was held in place by a bandage, and that the diluted methylated spirit had something of the same effect as the lotion, embrocation soda, borax and alum, and the two may be termed identical.

EDITOR BREEDER & SPORTSMAN.—In your issue of Nov. 3d, on Sprain of Suspensory Ligament, you call upon me to state why I consider your success in trotting Antevolo in the National an exception to the rule, considering the injury to his limb. You have set a very difficult problem for me to solve, and one I do not expect to explain satisfactorily, because, as you are well aware, you took desperate chances when you started your horse.

It is first necessary to consider the function of the superior sesamoid or suspensory ligament, which is to keep the sesamoids (or small bones situated at the back of the fet-lock joint) in their position and to prevent their descent in the same way as the inferior suspensory ligament prevents their ascent, during the movement of the tendons, and also by keeping the sesamoids firmly pressed against the fetlock joints it forms a brace or stay, which prevents over-extension of the fetlock and elevation of the toe, to which there is always a tendency from the pressure of the animal's weight. Having enlarged sufficiently upon the function of this ligament, it is now necessary to consider the lesions of this ligament. They are of two kinds:

First—An inflamed condition arising from slight causes, and second Rupture—partial or complete—from violent ones. To the first form of this classification belongs the lesion on Antevolo's near hind leg. In referring to my class not is I find that Principal Williams says: "When occurring in the hind limbs it may be merely an injury to one of the bursae."
This injury to Antevolo occurred at the external bifurcation;
the bifurcation being the weakest part of the ligament.
The marks of the lesion remain in the shape of a thickening, which may be felt close to the cannon bone or upon any part of the course of the ligament.

Concerning the treatment of the lesion: any veterinary surgeon would recommend rest, with hot or cold applications until all signs of fever disappeared from the limb, and then a blister or actual cautery, and at least six months rest. I would prefer twelve months.

On referring to my class notes I find Williams records a case somewhat analogous to Antevolo's, but the lesion was in the flexor tendons and treated as follows: put on a high heeled shoe to bring parts in a state of repose, and used the following lotion, one part of Methylated spirits to four of water, applied with cotton wool; and I distinctly remember the old gentleman stating, with a smile, that this was the best cure he ever effected. The smile, no doubt, was at the simplicity of the treatment, the Professor being a strong supporter of actual cautery. Now it is well known that Ante-volo was carefully nursed and handled like a child, and I think that this has a good deal to do with your success. In a like manner the success of Lily Stanley, doing such good work, is due to the careful nursing and handling of Orrin Hickok, because when I fired her a year ago I never expected to see her trot six heats as she did two weeks ago; but it only shows that in careful hands great results may sometimes be obtained; and as you are antagonistic to the use of the actual cautery, having many times told me you never saw any good come of it, I have only to ask you to note this exception which can only be explained by the fact that the limb was carefully handled, as was also that of Antevolo, but in Antevolo's case there is not the slightest doubt but that luck and your Scotch obstinacy came to the rescue.

THOS. BOWHILL, V. R. C. S.

Pool Selling.

We are gratified to learn that there has been a consolidation of the pooling interests of J. N. Killip and S.
B. Whitehead & Co., under the latter title. Heretofore there has been a good deal of bitter feeling which had its origin in rival claimants for pooling privileges, and estrangements which were of no benefit to anyone followed, causing a deal of trouble. Both are well known, and as it is the intention to give liberal terms to those who desire their services, the consumation will meet the approval of all who are interested. Thoroughly posted in everything pertaining to the business, competent, strictly honest, no better auctioneers in any country, we feel more than pleased over the arrangement. This feeling will be shared by all who have general interests depending at heart.

The Two Peacocks.

There have been inquiries at various times regarding the blood of Peacock and we have been puzzled at the answers received from old-timers who were questioned in relation to the horse. One respondent would reply that he was thoroughbred, or at least highly-bred, while another would be equally confident that he was a coach-horse, another that he was of heavy draft breeding.
The explanation of these contradictory statements we have found in a list of premiums of the California State Agricultural Society, held at the Mission Dolores on the 7th of October, 1854, published in the Spirit of that year.

Fall Race Meeting.

To-day, Saturday, November 10th, the Fall meeting of the Pacific Coast Blood Horse Association will be inaugurated. Everything points to a grand success.
The stalls are filled with the foremost horses of the Coast, and the stables of Messrs. Haggin, Wieters, Baldwin, Appleby, W. H. Babb, W. L. Whitmore, W. M.
Murry, T. G. Jones, W. T. Kelly, Frank De Poister Starkey and Allison, and Smith & Howard will participate. "No end to the horses" we heard an enthusiastic devotee of the turf exclaim. "Far too many" was the response of another who claimed that he did not know where to place his money when there were so many chances to upset his best laid schemes. He has a penchant for backing favorites, but when there were so many outsiders he was fearful that knowledge was of little avail. That which means tribulation from his point of view is a token of good sport for spectators, and even those who like to have something at issue to intensify the enjoyment in witnessing a hotly contested race will be better pleased that "picking the winner" is more difficult to accomplish. Four races on the opening day with such a long list of names as were published in this paper of the 20th ult., insure large fields in all of them, and as we were never emulous of obtaining the honor of a turf prophet, prefer to let others do the vaticinations.

With plenty of contestants and these of a high class the weather and course favorable, and what more can be desired? So far as can be foretold the weather for the opening at least, will be all that can be desired. The north wind which prevailed on Wednesday was met by a genial breeze from the south, and Thursday was as lovely as the most fastidious could ask the climatic conditions to be. "Gloomy November" may apply to countries where cold rains, snow and mist are the features of the eleventh month, but in this place it is one of the most glorious months of the year.

It may be that ere the meeting comes to an end that rain may fall, though in that case it is long odds that there will be no chilliness. Weather sharps, however, predict that the moon will full, and be well on the wane before anything like a rainfall will be seen, and that will give time to bring the whole meeting to a close. The Bay District course is so easily put in condition for racing that a good track is assured, unless there is a surplus of moisture, so that without being unduly optimistical there is little hazard in asserting that the fall meeting P. C. B. H. A. will fully equal any which has preceded it.

Windsor, Cal.

Would you please state through the columns of your paper the breeding of the dam of the mare known as Rosie Mc which trotted through the circuit.

Write to George Woodward, Yolo, Yolo Co., Cal., for information.

Tuscarora, Nev.

Would you please inform a subscriber, through your valuable paper, the date of the four-mile and repeat race, or possibly it may be a three in five heat race that I refer to, in which the horse Foster was the winner?

Foster won a four mile and repeat in Feb. 22, 1876, at the Bay District Track, San Francisco. The purse was $30,000, in shares of $15,000, $6,000, $5,000 and $4,000. There were seven starters, all of which, except Rutherford, were distanced in the first heat.

Lady Blanche.

It will not be far wrong to class Lady Blanche among the first celebrities of the tracks, and she was recalled to mind by a sketch of her history in the Spirit of the Times, May 7th, 1858. She was foaled in the spring of 1829, by Abdallah her dam "a spotted Indian mare" which in all probability meant an Opelousas. She was bred by Mr. Tredwell, who also bred Abdallah, and she was the first of the noted horses get. In 1834 she was matched for $5,000, $1,000 forfeit, heats of a mile under saddle, recurring forfeit. In 1848 she was owned in Ohio and in April 1850, a party was sent from New York to purchase her. The sketch states "Ten days after her arrival she was driven to the Centerville course, put to a sulky, and started within 50 yards of the stand, which she passed at not faster than a three-minute gait and spread herself—went to the quarter pole in 35 seconds, half mile in 1:15 and to the stand in 2:34, being held back from the first turn to the half mile pole and with a big pot-belly on." She was sold to Wm. Madden, and in 1851 raffled off for $1,000, Tom Ryan the champion pnglist becoming her owner. Sim Hoagland was her last owner and on April 28th, 1853, she beat Hiram Woodruff's Snowdrop and D. Pfeifer's Beppo to wagon and driver weighing 300 pounds in 2:45, 2:46, 2:47½, Snowdrop having the second heat in 2:47½, and on May 11th of the same year she beat Beppo in 2:46, 2:43, 2:43, Beppo winning the second heat in 2:41. Pretty good for A. D. 1853 and for a twenty-four-year-old.

Wilkes, dam Colon by Strathmore; second dam Coral by Clark Chief; third dam Cassia by C. M. Clay. The purchaser was Robt. J. McCombs, Cincinnati, Ohio. The price was $500.

Senator Hearst's Yearlings.

"Blue Rnin" in the Sporting World gives the following account of the yearlings belonging to Senator Hearst which will be wintered at Monmouth Park. He also states that Matt Allen will soon make the trip to California to add those which are now here to the "string." With a fair share of good luck the stable should take a prominent place in the racing calendar of 1889. Gorgo is reported to be doing well and though the injury will leave a permanent scar, as it appears now there will be little risk in putting her in training.

The most important event at Sheepshead during the week was the arrival of Senator Hearst's yearlings from Kentucky. Matt Allen went down to bring them along and he reports the weather as having been very bad at Lexington. The Senator's horses were sent to Mr. Joe Swigert's from near Lexington, where they were broken and put through their facings. Eleven head were at Mr. Swigert's and Allen brought them all with him except three, viz: The Sir Modred—Playing colt, the Kyrle Daly—Loveknot colt, and the Kyrle Daly—Melita filly. The eight that he brought with him are:

King Thomas, b c by imp. King Ban—Mand Hamptom by Hunter's Lexington.

Bay colt by imp. Sir Modred—La Favorita, by imp. Glenelg.

Chestnut filly by imp. Sir Modred—Twilight, by Norfolk.

Brown colt by Warwick—Sister to Jim Douglass, by Wild-ide.

Chestnut colt by Hock Hocking—Maid of the Mist, by Norfolk.

Brown colt by imp. Sir Modred—Faustina, by imp. Glenelg.

Black foal by Iroquois—imp. Agenoria, by Adventurer.

Chestnut foal by Warwick—Cinderella, by Catesby.

I am glad to be able to state that they all arrived in the best possible condition and health, and Matt Allen kindly offered me an inspection of them. In a later issue a full description and notice of them will be given, but sufficient of them was seen to-day to enable one to give our readers an idea of the way they have gone on. Allan is, with good reason, very much impressed with the fine looks, promise and improvement of the phenomenally high-priced King Thomas, and he was kind enough to have him led out for me to look at. When he was knocked down at auction by Mr. Easton he was a very big youngster for his age, but since then he has grown still more, and now stands only a trifle under 15.3. His trainer says he is in every way one of the most satisfactory horses he has ever had to train, since he seems to have an old head on young shoulders. Whether he is on the cars, in the stable or on the track, it is all the same to him, because nothing seems to upset him, and he does not do more than is asked of him when out at exercise.

All of the above lot were well worked along after they had been broken and were brushed up by the middle of August, after which they were let up. King Thomas was not put to the utmost extent of his ability when he was tried, but he showed sufficiently well to warrant the idea that he will follow in the footsteps of his two illustrious brothers, Bon Ton and King Fox. The training he has had has improved his looks, the green coltish appearance having disappeared, and he now looks more like the race-horse in training. Another result brought about by training is that the colt has more muscles and at the same time has firmed down. His forehead seems to have lengthened and in his conformation in front he is lighter than King Fox. The animal is in faultless condition for a yearling; but he is a rare doer which will render lots of exercise necessary to prevent him from getting gross. This he will be able to stand, and it will do him good, because better legs and feet were never seen. A better lot of yearlings, judging from a casual inspection would be hard to find.

Without wishing to single out any individual animal, a few preliminary remarks on them may prove of interest. Sir Modred has imparted rare quality to his daughter, out of Twilight, and a similar remark applies to the youngster by Warwick, out of the Sister to Jim Douglass. Sir Modred's two colts, out of Faustina and La Favorite are both good specimens and take after Glenelg, which speaks for itself. One of them closely resembles Little Minch about the head and rump, where he is very high. Hock Hocking's representative, out of the Maid of the Mist, in a grand looking, shortly legged, old fashioned customer, who already appears to be a matured horse in every way, both for his fine development and level headedness. The filly, by Iroquois, out of Agenoria, was one of the very fine animals that was not in good condition at Mr. Haggin's sale. She, however, has filled up wonderfully since her sojourn in Kentucky and has filled out and developed in a most satisfactory manner. The filly by Warwick, out of Cinderella, is the last of the lot, and although rather small she shows good quality and length and is just the sort to come to hand early. The filly by Spendthrift, out of Constantinople, who was not sent to Kentucky, has done as well as could be wished. She was hog fat when sold, but has lost all her superfluous flesh by steady and careful work, leaving her a grand specimen of a yearling, with size, length and quality to recommend her.

Lotions and Liniments.

To these might be added oils, embrocations, washes and all the mixtures which are pronounced the very best in the world for "man and beast." That very many of them are good is beyond dispute, that some are superior to others goes with out saying. That the old recipes are usually too harsh there is also little doubt in our mind, and rarely indeed, are "potent remedies" the equal of those which are milder. Fisherman's, Carbolyzed Alkaline lotion we have used for over a year, and have no hesitation in recommending it for the class of ailments it has proved beneficial. Diluted with three or more times its bulk of water it forms an excellen' wash to remove soreness of muscles, a stronger application will reduce enlargements, and applied in its full strength is a "counter-irritant" which is likely to be efficacious when that kind of treatment is desirable.

Occidental Coursing Club.

The regular monthly meeting of the club will be held on Tuesday the 13th day of November 1888, at 539 California street.

JEROME B. LINCOLN, Secretary.

Hark Comstock on Sunol.

The following letter appeared in the N. Y. Spirit of the Times, and as will be learned from the date, was written the day following the performance of the filly. Like all of Mr. Kellogg's articles on the trotting-horse, it is pleasantly written and strong in argument, and it will not be long until every candid writer will join in the conclusions he reaches.

New York City, Oct. 28th.—The high-bred trotting filly Sunol, two years old, has again lowered the record for that age from her former 2:20½ to 2:18. As I predicted in my letter of last week, the 2:20½ record was something of a disappointment, for I know that those who ought to know best thought her safely capable of beating 2:19. As reports say that on the day of the earlier performance a raw fog prevailed and the wind blew a perfect hurricane, her 2:20½ was proof that her admirers had not been too sanguine.

It was immediately announced that she would start again against her own record, and on Saturday, Oct. 27th, Marvin brought her before the public at the Bay District Track and took the world. I am informed by telegraph that she took a record of 2:18, and that the quarters were successfully done in 35 seconds, 34½ seconds, 34½ seconds and 34½ seconds, showing a very even rate of speed from start to finish.

Sunol is one of the grandest-looking two-year-old mares to be found anywhere, and if she matures at all in proportion to her present powers is more likely to make the future world better than anything I have ever seen. What makes her chances still better is the fact that, although trained young and quickly brought to a rate of speed that is in itself dangerous to the tendons, her legs are clear and smooth, without a threatening spot, and her feet capital. She trots in light shoes without toe weights, and it goes without saying that her actions are very telling. She is not a spurter nor quick starter, but settles into her stroke gradually and lengthens and quickens it so imperceptibly that it is hard to detect at just what point the extra steam is turned on. The reports say that Orrin Hickok, who drove a runner hitched to sulky as a foil for her first race, said that had he not noticed the efforts of his runner to keep up with her he would have thought to look at her that she was only going a 2:50 gait.

Sunol is by Electioneer, the great son of Rysdyk's Hambletonian. Her dam, Waxana, is by Gen. Benton, while the 2d dam, Waxy, by Lexington, was the dam of the good race-mare Alpha. Here we have again the two trotting crosses on the thoroughbred foundation—the formula that gave us the two fastest trotters in the world by the records. Men who breed running horses place a great value upon the blood of Lexington, and regard it as one of the most valuable, perhaps the most valuable, element in the American Stud book. When we consider that the 2d dam of Maud S., 2:08½, was a thoroughbred mare by Boston, sire of Lexington; also that the 2d dam of Jay-Eye-See, 2:10, was a thoroughbred mare by Lexington, and now that the fastest two-year-old has a 2d dam by Lexington; add to this the right good trotter Clingstone, 2:14, whose sire's dam was by Lexington, and does it not look as though the perfect physical organism that enables Lexington's blood to run to the very front is convertible to the improvement of the trotter, enabling him to trot extreme limit? Not much of such thoroughbred blood has been used in conjunction with trotting strains, and no formula of breeding can be devised that will not bring a great number of failures, but when out of the mass of all kinds of breeding a few of this kind rise so conspicuously superior, and for so many years stand invincible, as has been the case with Maud S. and Jay-Eye-See, is it not time to pause in the ridicule and sneering that has been directed towards those who advocated and practiced the use of thoroughbred crosses, and consider whether it is not the scoffer who has blundered, rather than that the Almighty broke His own laws when, through nature's bandiwork, He fashioned such superior animals out of such material? The Palo Alto establishment has had the courage of its convictions, and it has met with many successes in support of its course, but to my mind the greatest yet is Sunol. In the progress of events Maud S. and Jay-Eye-See will be surpassed by many horses. For years predictions have been freely indulged in that this or that horse was destined to seize the crown. Yet years have come and years have gone and they still lead. The position they occupy is a dizzy height. Each second multiplies in difficulty as you move down towards them.

To predict that any specific horse will do the deed is to prophesy against tremendous odds. A while ago I half suspected that Clingstone might do it because he was clearly a great horse, and his breeding was good enough to warrant the doubt. But he seems to have passed his prime. A little later the believers in Harry Wilkes were confident. Trials of 2:09 with no great effort were very easily talked about. He has yet to accomplish the feat. And now comes Guy with his 2:12½ over Fleetwood, and later, 2:12 at Cleveland. The driving fraternity seem to agree with one accord that he has more speed than any horse in the world. Both the Kentucky Prince and American Star blood are very game, and the latter, if not thoroughbred, bears the closest resemblance to it in quality and capacity of anything recognized as a trotting strain. Guy may do it, and his friends think his chances amount to a probability. Patron was at one time expected to see how the front side looked, but obstacles still cut off his line of vision. When and how is it to be done? It is a long, long road between the 2:18 of a two-year-old and the 2:08½ of a matured trotter. Nine and a quarter seconds and from 2:18 down! Out of thousands on thousands that have been trained only one trotter has ever closed that gap. The one that closed it was a high bred one, and until purely trotting lines (so-called) have absorbed from thoroughbred blood or developed from selection as perfect physical organism as the blood of Lexington can impart, something with thorough blood close up will be likely to hold the leading record. Many contend that such perfection in trotting lines is already reached. Had this been truly so I believe that the two trotters named would not have remained so long in possession of the lead, when thousands of purely trotting bred were trying to wrest it from them. The two-year-old mare that has just cut the record to 2:18 is bred well enough to challenge the front at maturity. To predict that she will succeed to that honor would be folly, for the mishaps of training, the chances of health, the thousand and one set-backs that happen to a horse in training from two years on are odds like a thousand to one against such a consummation. But in considering her chances as against those of any other one animal of like age that has appeared within the past two years, who can name one that, upon breeding, form and evident capacity, offers a better prospect than Sunol?

Yours,

HARK COMSTOCK.

Southern California Championship.

On October 28th and 29th, at Riverside, San Luis Obispo county, a tournament at Blue Rock Targets was shot off, one of the matches being for the Championship of Southern California, and the Selby medal representing that honor. The attendance was good and the efforts of the Riverside sportsmen to entertain their visitors were favorably commented upon and highly appreciated.

The first shoot on the programme was a sweepstake at 15 "blue rocks." The entrance fee was $2.50, and was divided into four moneys: 40, 30, 20, and 10 per cent. of the entrance fees.

There were 17 contestants, and the first money was won by M. Chick of San Diego, with a clean score of 15; M. E. Taber scored 13, and took second money; Gus. Knight third, with a score of 12; fourth money was divided between W. A. Hamilton and D. T. Hayes, each having scored 11.

In the afternoon the medal contest was commenced, for which there were also seventeen contestants, and the entrance fee was placed at $5. The match was arranged to shoot at 50 single birds and 25 pair, and was very exciting. The single score was completed last night, and three pairs were shot on the doubles, when the contest was postponed until this morning. On the singles the following scores were made out of a possible 50: M. Chick, 46; W. A. Hamilton 46; Gus. Knight 45; M. E. Taber 41; B. Willey 39; C. F. Packard 37; C. B. Hall 36; F. S. Ecker 35; A. D. Frantz 35; S. R. Smith 32; D. F. Hayes 41; P. K. Klinefelter 31; A. K. Holt 30; J. H. Wright 28; D. Blakewell 25; R. J. Jones 24; E. H. Morse 18.

The tournament was well attended on the second day, and those present witnessed some very fine shooting. The medal contest was continued on the doubles where it was stopped by darkness on the previous evening. M. Chick of San Diego, the former holder of the Selby medal, again won the prize with the score of 88 out of a possible 100. The score on the 25 pair was as follows: M. Chick, 42; W. A. Hamilton, 36; Gus. Knight, 41; M. E. Taber, 33; C. F. Packard, 32; C. B. Hall, 34; F. S. Ecker, 29; A. D. Frantz, 30; S. R. Smith, 36; D. F. Hayes, 20; P. K. Klinefelter, 26; A. K. Holt, 23; D. D. Bakewell, 22; D. H. Morse, 17.

Shoot No. 1 on the programme was commenced in the afternoon with eighteen contestants, and the first prize was won by M. Chick, with a score of a straight 12. The score was as follows: M. Chick, 12; W. A. Hamilton, 11; B. Willey, 10; C. F. Packard, 10; D. T. Hayes, 10; Gus. Knight, 10; A. B. Frantz, 9; C. B. Hall, 9; P. K. Klinefelter, 9; A. K. Holt, 8; J. N. Cundiff, 8; M. E. Taber, 8; E. T. Benner, 8; H. Melit, 8; E. H. Morse, 6; W. H. Backus, 6; T. S. Ecker, 5; H. G. Williams, 3.

Shoot No. 2 was called at the close of No. 1, and the contest was at 15 single Blue Rocks. In this contest M. Chick won first money, breaking 15 Blue Rocks straight, W. A. Hamilton second with a score of 14. Third money was divided between Ecker and Benner, each having scored 12.

Shoot No. 3 was called, and was on the programme to be at 12 singles and 6 pairs, but on account of the lateness was reduced to 18 birds instead of 24. The first money in this shoot was also won by Chick with a clean score of 18. Hamilton second, Packard and Frantz dividing third and Ecker taking fourth.

The last shoot on the programme, the consolidation shoot, was postponed until the next tournament, which will be held at Colton, probably about December 1st.

The Origin of the Gun.

The first principal of life is destruction, and from the most remote ages the weapons of offence and defence have occupied a prominent position in the history of the world. The origin of the gun dates back to the sling, being a means of hurling a projectile through the air with accuracy at a given point. Antecedent to this was the throwing of a stone with the arm, but the sling may be given as the first step towards the choke-bored, hammerless, patent automatic safety and generally perfect guns of the present day. Next in order came the javelin, a sharp-pointed instrument propelled from the hand. Then a junction of the sling and javelin produced the bow and arrow, which formed the most effective weapon known up to that time. As the subject is to be sporting guns this will be the objective point.

In the poetical and other effusions handed down through successive ages, the bow forms a leading feature of the chronicle of feats of arms. Homer in the Iliad tells of Aeneas, who, noticing the havoc made in the Trojan ranks by Diomedes, seeks Pandarus, the archer, and with one of the marvelous shots which in this age seem incredible, put an end to the mighty deeds of his opponent. The bow remained unimproved till the Norman conquest, and up to that time the implement was used more for sporting purposes than in warfare. The long bow was a weapon with which wonderful work was done, and splitting a willow wand at 40 paces was a feat ascribed to the famous Robert Fitzurs, better known as Robin Hood, who figures as the Yeoman Locksley in Scott's tales of the games promoted by Prince John in "Ivanhoe."

In the reign of bluff King Hal (Henry VIII.) there were passed three acts for the promotion of shooting with the long bow. One prohibited the use of the cross bow and hand gun, and was promoted by those interested in the arrow trade on the ground that many unlawful games were practised in the open fields to the detriment of public morals and the decay of archery.

The cross bow, though steadily resisted by the Saxons, was the next improvement in arms, and gradually the projectile became smaller and heavier, till at last the better appreciation of the art of making gunpowder came into force. This was really the starting point of the guns and the present excellence of implements for hunting.

To give an idea of the introduction of gunpowder would be to go many years beyond the limits of investigation, and the story has long been half an established one that Alexander the Great met firearms in India. The writings of Quintus Curtius seem to hint at this, while heathen mythology is full of words signifying weapons of fire and other kindred expressions. Be this as it may, the introduction of powder into Europe dates from the early portion of the Christian era. There is a Spanish treatise upon it in the Escorial collection dated 1249, and it was supposed that from this Roger Bacon derived his knowledge of the explosive. The heavier grades of firearms were the first, and at Seville in 1247 the city was defended by cannons throwing stones. The first attempt at breechloading is read of in the sixteenth century. As early as the fourteenth century there were hand guns, but the matchlock was the first used on game.

At a date very little anterior to 1700 can be found researches for fulmination or detonating powders, but nothing of importance was discovered till towards the close of that century, when Bayen, chief army physician to Louis XV., discovered fulminate of mercury. This was not applied to firearms till 10 years later, when amongst the studies of the fulminates he discovered fulminate of silver. The explosives being known it was tried for pyrotechnic displays, but owing to the difficulty of handling, it dropped out of use. Further experiments developed a substitute, and the percussion cap was the result.

All this time the projectile used was in one solid mass or ball, and except for the larger kinds of game, the guns of those days were used purely in warfare. The introduction of shot-making gave a wider scope to the use of firearms, and the muzzle-loading sporting gun has played an important part, and to this day finds a place in the hands of hunters, who find its cost and care less than that of the breech-loader, and the average cost to work accomplished lower than with more approved patterns.

It is now many years since the breech-loading system firmly established itself in the sporting guns of the country. It was first seen in a very crude form, the advance guard of the countless styles in use being the Lefauchaux. This action was weak and imperfectly developed, but the great achievement was the introduction of a shell or cartridge to fit the chamber of the gun. The escape of gas through the breech was the great drawback. A happy thought was that of making the cartridge carry its own primer, which in the early stages was on the pin-fire system. These have, of course, been greatly improved on by central and rim-fire cartridges, but they are only modifications and improvements on the old Lefauchaux idea.

There are many plans for opening the breech, both as regards drop and snap. The first of these is represented by the general idea of the drop down, while the snap comprises the top, side and under grip. For a much-used gun the latter is the strongest and surest, but highly-finished guns all have the top action nowadays.

The next vital improvement was the system of choke boring. This is not by any means a new idea, but has only reached perfection in the last decade. The principle is that in order to concentrate the charge of shot and make a gun shoot more closely the barrels must measure less in diameter at the muzzle than at some other point in the barrel other than the chamber. Any barrel contracted at the muzzle to the extent of five-thousandths of an inch may be termed a modified choke, while thirty to forty-thousandths of an inch contraction means a full choked barrel. There are two distinct plans of choke boring. The first, and probably the original idea, is to bore the barrel cylinder for nearly the whole length, contracting it from two and one-half to three inches from the muzzle. The other system is to enlarge the bore immediately behind the muzzle. Thus two main principles and their modifications comprise all the chokes in guns of the present day. In the accuracy of the work done in this department lies the difference between the makers.

It has now come to a settled fact that the sportsman's gun of the present day must have a choked barrel and one with a modified choke, or cylinder. Opinion is and will be divided on the question of hammer and hammerless guns. The day will come when the former will be as scarce as the muzzle loader and the gun of twenty years from now will be vast improvement.

What a long stretch it seems from the sling to the patent gun of the present day! Yet the end is not reached, and if one is to be guided by the hundreds of novelties daily coming on the market, the ideal gun of the future is, like the detective camera, something to carry as a finger ring, or at largest, a pencil case, with which birds will be brought down on the wing.

Miss Annie Oakley.

Miss Annie Oakley, the crack female wing shot of the world, on October 30th defeated Fred Kell, a well known butcher of Baltimore, at Frank Starr's Driving Park, by a score of 25 to 21 birds. When Miss Oakley was at Kernan's Theater recently she issued a challenge to shoot a match, glass balls or pigeons, with any man, terms to be agreed upon when the match was settled. Mr. Kell (or Bull, the name he took in the match) was the only one who had confidence enough in his skill to accept. The spectators numbered over one hundred, among whom were many crack shots and sportsmen. It was agreed that the match should be for a purse of $100, fifty birds each, the one who shot the most birds to take the pot. At the park, however, the birds were reduced to twenty-five. Miss Oakley was to shoot at twenty-five yards and Mr. Kell at thirty. Miss Oakley came from New York yesterday morning. She was attired in a close-fitting skirt of seal brown cloth, with a braided panel that reached to her ankles. She wore a loose sailor waist of the same material as the dress, to give her arms and body free action.

On her head was pinned a light brown, wide-brimmed hat, that sat coquettishly on her dark, braided hair. Dark-brown ostrich tips, a brown band and a steel star made the trimming. At the word of the referee, Mr. Peacock, of New York, Miss Oakley stepped to the stake and called for her bird. The trap flew open and she fired. She missed with her first barrel, but soon had the bird fluttering on the ground with the second. Kell also brought his first bird down with the second barrel. Out of the twenty-five birds, Miss Oakley killed twenty-one with the first shot, while Kell killed only fifteen. The match lasted about an hour and a half. It must be said in Mr. Kell's favor that he did some very good shooting. All his birds acted badly. Many of them were caught in the traps and had to be forced to fly. Miss Oakley was very modest about winning the contest, and hoped she would have another opportunity to give Mr. Kell a chance to win a match from her.

The Forest and Stream Publishing Company, New York, announce "Bird Portraits for the Young," the text by Dr. W. Van Fleet and the photogravure plates by H. H. Darnell.

On Thanksgiving Day there will be a shooting tournament at San Jose, for which the local sportsmen are making ample preparation. Mr. Austin B. Sperry of Stockton is to shoot a match with Dr. O. F. Britton of Los Angeles during the tournament and it is probable that Mr. Coykendall, Mr. Delmas, Captain Portal and other cracks will enter. San Jose is so easily reached and so charming a city as to insure a large attendance. Most of the shooting will be at Blue Rock targets, but several live bird matches will be listed. Santa Clara County is in the lead, for interest in trap shooting.

Rifles for Deer Hunting.

About the best rifle for deer shooting, I think it will be best for me to give my experience with each sort I have tried and then each can judge what would suit him best, as often a rifle which just suits one man's way of shooting is comparatively useless to another. When I first began deer shooting, in 1870, I asked what was the usual rifle used for deer in Scotland, and was told a 5-calibre "express," with hollow-pointed bullets. So I got one, a double-barrel, shooting 120 grains powder. My first few shots were at tame "fallow deer" in a fenced-in park. These are not shot for sport, only for venison, and to thin them out when getting too numerous; as they were intended for venison I did not shoot except when I was pretty close and could make sure of hitting them right, but I found that the express bullet by breaking up, spoiled the fore-quarters of the deer. My next try was at a roe deer (they are about as large as goats) which was galloping past me; I caught it in the middle of the back blowing the spine in half, and making a cavity as large as my two fists, out of which its intestines were hanging. I thought to myself this is not a very workmanlike tool. I have since heard that in most German forests hollow bullets are not allowed, as being unsportsmanlike. I shot several more roe deer, in each case killing them dead enough, but blowing them to pieces almost; in one case the bullet went in with a small hole and came out on the fore side, with most of the deer's interior with it. When I tried it on stags I found that either it made a great mess of the meat, the flesh from some six inches round the bullet wound being unfit to eat, or else, if it hit a strong bone, like the point of the shoulder, or the strong part of the shoulder blade, it broke up without penetrating and the stag went off. On one occasion in particular I blew the bottom jaw of a stag to pieces and he went off. I tried my best to find him to put him out of his misery, but only saw him once, three days afterwards, too far off to get a shot at him. With my telescope I saw him trying to dip his mouth into a pool of water; he most likely died of starvation or thirst. This sickened me of the hollow bullet, and although my gun maker said he could make me a bullet with less of a hollow, so that it would penetrate deeper, I would not try it any more. I now use solid bullets with a sharper forward end than the hollow bullets have, so that the balance should be the same; of course if the solid bullet was as blunt it would weigh more than the hollow. With this bullet and the 120 grains of powder I can drive the bullet right through the stag, bones or no bones. Of course a hollow bullet is more certain to kill a stag if the heart is missed just a little too low or behind; but, the place I shoot at is the shoulder; that is a much bigger mark than the heart, and a solid bullet drops him there for a certainty, often with both shoulders smashed.

As to the best rifle to use, it depends for what purpose; for a deer drive I think the rifle I have described, .5-calibre, 120 grains powder, solid conical bullet; with this, if you shoot straight, one shot is enough for each stag; the 120 grs. is the largest charge, and I find shoots accurately enough. The objection to this rifle is the noise; in still hunting one shot frightens all the deer within miles, so for still hunting I recommend a .436, or even a .32-calibre, the calibre depending on how well you can shoot, the better the shooting the smaller the calibre used. With these small bores of course a stag must be hit just right; there is no use trying the shoulders, except perhaps with the .4-calibre, as even the solid ball might be stopped by a bone with the small charge I recommend; but when a stag is standing broadside, the heart or neck must be struck; when standing facing one, the spot where the neck joins the chest or throat; and if the deer is standing "tail on" the only thing to do is to try for the back of his neck. The .4 and .36 calibres are made with express charges, but I prefer using what Mr. C. F. Lowe, in a late number of Shooting and Fishing calls "useless gallery ammunition," as it makes so much less noise and does not disturb other deer which may be near; but of course there is the disadvantage of having to judge distance very accurately, as the small powder charge makes the bullet have a very high trajectory. I only recommend these small calibres for still hunting where one gets standing shots; for a deer drive it would be cruelty to use them, as in running shots one could not shoot accurately enough, or at least I cannot, to avoid wounding without killing.

I am sorry to notice American rifle makers are going in for big powder charges and express rifles; flat trajectory is very dearly bought at the price of a noise which sets all the deer on the move and nearly breaks one's collar bone, especially if one happens to be resting one's back against a rock; I once had both barrels go off together with my .5-calibre (240 grains powder this made) and it nearly knocked me down.—Shooting and Fishing.

THE KENNEL.

Dog owners are requested to send for publication the earliest possible notices of whelps, sales, names claimed, presentations and deaths in their kennels, in all instances writing plainly names of sire and dam and of grandparents, colors, dates and breed.

Discussion of field trial rules in all their vagaries has been the leading interest of sportsman's papers during the few last weeks passed and out of the multifarious views, it seems likely that a better code than at present exists, will be constructed. Many of the articles have come from persons evidently non-expert, but others from "Kingrail" the nom de plume of Mr. Bernard Waters, and such as he have been well worth close study.

A Kansas City correspondent of the American Field recently contributed to that invaluable journal some sensible notes which are well worth republication. He says: It is not a very pleasant task to try to please twenty or more handlers and owners who individually and collectively believe their favorites to be ill-used and ill-judged provided they are beaten. It is often a matter beyond the comprehension of the bored listener (whose ear the owner fills to overflowing with graphic accounts in detail of just where his dog beat the other) how such a good dog (whose work was without an error, according to the handler or owner's account) could be beaten. Or, perhaps, accepting defeat with philosophical equanimity, the handler tells of the wonderful work done in private, etc. Of course the old veteran handlers take defeat justly received in good spirit, knowing that all cannot win, and while they may be beaten by a dog whose work was far inferior to what their entry was capable of, can see they were defeated fairly and honestly. I believe that in all cases the gentlemen who accept this thankless, difficult position do their best to decide the heats honestly and without partiality to the best of their judgment, and it is of the latter I have endeavored to write.

A field trial judge should be more than an experienced, practical sportsman—whose experience consists of a few days' outing once or twice a year. He should be a man possessing the best judgment and fine discriminating powers, familiar with all characters of a dog's work on game. He should be in a measure a handler, competent to train a dog himself; otherwise he can never fully enough understand a dog's work to give accurate judgment on all occasions. The handler generally is a close observer, noting the character of work day by day. The class of work possible in different phases of the weather; the habits of quails; their wilderness in certain covers, there being a vast difference in the birds themselves, some being naturally wild and hard for a dog to do satisfactory work upon. Then the considering of the important part the wind plays in a dog's doing good work.

Most judges are strangers to the localities in which the trials are held, and though they may know the points of the compass at starting, in the various windings and twistings from one field to another they become so turned around that they would not be able to tell whether a dog flushed down wind or not.

Again, many judges, seeing a dog drop to wing to the flushing of a wild bird, penalize the dog for a flush, for they reason that the dropping of the dog was an indication of his offence. In other words, they first see the bird on wing and the dog in the act of dropping and draw the above conclusions. Many a time have I seen a dog go galloping along and a bird flush within a few feet of the dog, who neither saw the bird nor knew that a bird had flushed within a mile of it. I have seen the identical thing done in a field trial and have heard bystanders make the remark: "Did you see that? Wasn't that the rankest flush you ever saw," etc. Of course it would be undeniably a flush but no fault of the dog's, for perhaps a few moments later the same dog would show a superior nose on single birds and such rapid work that would win the admiration of all who saw him. Many a flush has been scored against dogs in field trials that never should have been, and many a dog has lost his heat and perhaps a place by the judges seeing just enough to imagine something else that had never been.

I view matters from a handler's standpoint and all must make due allowances on that account. I have run dogs under the judging of gentlemen whom I afterward shot in private with and found their knowledge of a dog's field work to run in a cast iron groove, and no matter under what circumstances, they always viewed matters from the same standpoint. I have often watched the judges direct the handlers hither and thither as likely places to find birds, while the handler, smiling in his sleeve at the judge's stupidity, was aware of the fact that his dog, ranging in a direction from which the judges had repeatedly commanded him to whistle his dog back, was drawing to a point on the heavy. Many a point thus made is never allowed because the pig-headed judge holds the handler disobedient, as he did not work his dog where he (the judge) told him, where perhaps there never had or never would be a quail unless flushed and driven there at that time of day.

For any judge to assume that he knows more about where to find quail than the average handler who spends every day among them, observing where they are on sunny days at different hours of the day, where they are on cloudy days, cold days, blustering days, etc., is ridiculous. Then often the judge pays his first visit to the South (where, from the greater abundance of quail fields, trials are generally held) and in some cases knows better where to find quails than the handler, who has spent year after year there; who has noted carefully at what season and time of the day the birds frequent the corn fields, rag-weeds, sedge and woods, thus prolonging the trials by making the handlers hunt places where birds are not likely to be, often causing a sensible, obedient dog, who knows where to look for birds, to disobey the continued blasts of the whistle to bring him back unto ground where he knows there are no birds. It requires an expert to umpire a professional base-ball game. Can every base-ball player umpire a game satisfactorily? I think not. Then how much more difficult is it to act in the capacity of a judge over a number of the best field dogs of the country, where the character of the work is often hard to determine; and to do so correctly often puzzles the most efficient. There is nothing, in my opinion, that needs an expert, a man competent in every sense of the word, more than field trial judging.

I would add, in conclusion, that there is nothing in this article intended as personal to any one; it is merely intended to draw forth the opinion of those of greater experience than myself, and more competent to do the subject justice; that judges may improve, as well as our rules, for all will admit, I think, that even field trial rules, though clear and concise, are less except to such judges as have the competency to apply them correctly.

American Coursing Club.

As of some interest to Californian Coursers, who may be pleased to know the personnel of the American Coursing Club, a list of members that organization is subjoined. It will be noted that one San Franciscan is a member, although he is not an owner of greyhounds nor has he ever coursed. But his spirit in helping so worthy an institution is commendable, and it may be that at a future meeting he will have an opportunity to course his foxterriers. The members are:

Reports for the recent days from the three or four training kennels are that the Derby entries for the Pacific Coast Field Trials are all well and doing well. Mr. Allender writes from Watsonville that he is camping out with his string and giving them all the running they need. He adds that "if hard work will enable him to bring well conditioned and well trained dogs to the starting point, his dogs will show up nicely." The Scotch dog, Nestor, belonging to Mr. Wm. Schreiber, is turning out a clinker in all respects, having a first rate nose, nice style, plenty of stamina and great pace. Laddie, also Mr. Schreiber's, is getting down to his work, and showing high quality. Mr. De Mott's dogs near Bakersfield are getting lots of work and are all in sound health, and similar news comes from Mr. Walter at Galt.

It should be a matter of pride with owners of good setters and pointers, as well as with all sportsmen of the superior sort to hold membership in the club styled the "Knights of the Trigger of Bakersfield." Ample reason for such affiliation can be found in the facilities thereby afforded for sport, Bakersfield being to our notion the best place on the continent for the sportsman. The town is not large and the number of resident sportsmen small, but such as do live there are of the genuine kind, and gladly do their utmost to maintain fine club rooms, but the burden of expense is quite too great. The club has secured elegant quarters, furnished them beautifully, and has also secured control of all the shooting about the town. It is little enough for the sportsmen of the State to do, all of whom share directly or indirectly in the benefits resulting from the running of field trials, to assist the Knights of the Trigger in carrying out their plans. Those who wish to join the club and participate in its rights and privileges can enclose their names, together with $5 to Mr. A. T. Lightner the Secretary, at Bakersfield. Many of the leading sportsmen of San Francisco have already joined, but the club needs at least a hundred members more.

Our occasional contributor, Mr. N. E. White, contributes to the current American Field an account of the rabbit drive instituted for the pleasure of the field trialers last year at Bakersfield. The article is of very great interest, even though the modest writer entirely omits to mention the great part which he took in the event. Always conservative, Mr. White began the drive with many mental reservations, and long after his companions had given way to excitement, he moved on, imperturbable. But when the rabbits began charging at him in squadrons our even minded friend warmed up and cracked away at them with as much abandon as any one. If he administered about as many thumps to the tibias of the bystanders as to the vermin, it was no fault of his. After the drive he was a picture of a warrior. Tibs of rabbit hair covered him. Gouts of rabbit blood showed his bloody determination. A fine fozz of rabbit fur concealed his corduroys. His eyes, rarely fiery, shone with a steady glint that boded no welfare to more rabbits. He looked awful.

The Pacific Coast F. T. Club has not yet selected its judges, but we learn from a director that they will be chosen very soon.

Any one having a well broken young pointer to sell may find a purchaser by addressing "J. D." this office, who advertises elsewhere.

There is a steady demand for young setters and pointers of good breeding, but it seems impossible to meet it at present. As fast as good litters come they are bought up.

ROD.

Communications relating to this department should be addressed to BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN.

Striking.

More fish are lost through inaccuracy and untimeliness in setting the steels in their jaws, than by use of inappropriate tackle, or lack of care in angling. No hard and fast rule as to striking can be laid down, because conditions and moods of trout differ so widely, but a resume of the opinions of notable fly fishermen may be of interest.

In most cases when trout rise freely and are in earnest, they will hook themselves, for the yielding of a pliant rod, as the fish takes the fly, allows him to hear off his prize; but when he attempts to cast it from his mouth, the spring of the rod fixes the hook in his mouth as he relaxes his hold. So it frequently happens that the rise is seen and the strain on the rod is felt at the same moment. A fish may even miss the fly and make another effort to seize it, if not drawn too hastily away. When a fish, therefore, takes the fly vigorously, it is only necessary to keep the line taut. A mers turn of the wrist may be given to fix the hook more firmly in its mouth.—Thaddeus Norris.

In striking, let it be with sufficient force to fasten the hook in his jaw.—Genio C. Scott.

If the strike be made with vigor or desperately, either the trout will be jerked high in the air, the tackle will be broken, the hook will tear out, or, what is more probable, the hook will miss altogether.—Charles Hallock.

The eyes must never for an instant stray from the fly, and at the slightest commotion of the water near where the fly is, or where it is supposed to be, strike at once, and strike hard.—Wells.

If a fish rises, a slight upward turn of the wrist will be sufficient to fix the hook; but beware of striking too hard—the lightest is not only sufficient, but far the best. As to giving any direct rules when to strike they would be of little avail, as sometimes fish rise quickly and take quickly; sometimes with more circumspection, and sometimes altogether falsely. Practice alone will teach the angler what to do and when to do it.—Francis.

When a trout takes your fly do not strike too hard; more fish are lost by anglers striking when using small flies than are secured by such means. The line tightened is sufficient in most cases, particularly in fishing streams.—Cummins.

I think that he who strikes too quickly labors under a greater disadvantage than he who strikes too slowly. The moment you see and then feel a rise, strike gently from the wrist. As a general rule strikes a little sideways. A fish frequently takes your fly under water, and then, feeling the rise, he somewhat quick, yet strike as gently as possible.—Ephemera.

Many strike too slowly, many too quickly, and a correct few at the critical moment. We have fished with many young hands who have struck the moment they saw a fish rise, and consequently, though the bait must have been risen at the mouth had never received it. The critical fish stroke is made by a very quick but very gentle wrist motion, by which the hand is cauted upwards, being displaced about two inches only. Such a stroke makes instantly the fish actually reaches the fly, which is learned by habit, at the moment he has closed his mouth on it, and before he has time to throw it out again, is sure to secure the entrance of the hook without causing alarm to the fish by unnecessary violence.—Blaine's Encyclopedia of Field Sports.

When a fish has risen throw into the curl occasioned by the rise, or a yard or two above it, allowing the fly to float down to the supposed place of the fish, when probably it will have risen at and be himself hooked, provided the angler has the knack of striking, which knack, like all others, is acquired only by practice. It must be done by a very sudden but not very strong strike; a twitch of the wrist is sufficient.—Ronalds.

Albany Fly-Casting Tournament.

Once a year the Albany Fly-Casters' Association holds a tournament, when split-bamboo rods, silk enameled lines, automatic reels and other fine fishing tackle are brought out both for an airing and wetting. On October 27th, the second annual tournament was held on the park lake, and a very successful one it was too, says the Albany Argus. The members of the association and their friends were the sole occupants of the lake between the hours of 10 A. M. and 4 P. M. The water was muddy, muddy, muddy, but the sky was mantled with blue and the sun shone brightly all day long. It was just such a day as fishermen like when they are upon the water, and in what striking contrast was the weather as compared with that of the day before, when occasional showers fell from early morn till late in the evening.

Now, then, as to the character of the Fly-Caster's Association. Some of our readers who have not the distinguished honor of being classed as expert anglers may ask what is a fly-caster? He is as a rule, a jolly good fellow, who takes a day off for trout or bass fishing whenever he gets a chance, and, best of all, the hooks he uses are not baited with worms, frogs, etc., but are neatly trimmed with feathers of various colors grouped to resemble flies, such as in certain seasons float upon the surface of a brook or river. With his fly attached to a delicate snell, which in turn is placed upon a "leader" from two to three yards long, with a strong but fine line and a rod with the right amount of stiffness, and with a reel that works with a spring the fly-caster starts upon a scientific fishing expedition as it were. He casts his flies upon the water, taking good care that they fall gracefully and before the line strikes. Further, if in the course of his casting he is favored with a "rise," he must keep the spot in view and cast upon it again. If he falls short of his imaginary mark, or goes beyond it, he is considered by a brother caster as deficient in accuracy. Then again, should a fish rise away off from where the caster is located, he must be prepared to stretch his line the necessary distance. With this little pen picture of a fly-caster and the skilled work required of him, the reader must have some idea as to what the members of the Albany Fly-Casters' Association were up to yesterday. They were not, after fish, but competed with one another as to distance in casting, and accuracy and delicacy.

Alongside of the float in front of the boat house a smaller one was placed, and upon this each contestant stood while giving an exhibition of his skill. There were fifteen entries; ten in what is known as the amateur class and five in the amateur second class. The latter is for those who have never previously taken part in a tournament in Albany or elsewhere.

Positions being drawn for, Mr. H. A. Goffe came to the front in the amateur second class. He displayed a rod of his own make. He occupied eight minutes of the ten allowed him for distance, and scored 57 ft. He was followed by B. F. Reese, of the amateur class, who, like Messrs. H. Paddock, W. G. Paddock, Frothingham, T. W. Olcott, Story, Vine, Whitbeck, H. M. Olcott, Stark and Speir, used a Spalding rod. Mr. Reese showed more science in his casting than at the first tournament, but evidently lacked strength in the wrist, and after reaching 67 ft. gracefully retired. Mr. Frothingham's casting was done with ease and grace, and the same may be said of Mr. T. W. Olcott. All eyes were turned upon the buoyed course when the name of Howard Paddock was announced, and he came forward amid the cheers of his admirers. Before his ten minutes were up he scored 78 ft., and that record made him the champion long distance caster of the tournament. No one scored more than 16 points out of a possible 25 for delicacy, nor more than 20 points out of a possible 25 for accuracy. For both delicacy and accuracy the gentlemen were carefully examined, and while a few did tolerably well, most of the number in striving for points in accuracy made great sacrifices in delicacy. The appended score tells its own story:

CANOEING.

Oakland Canoe Club.

Now that her skipper has got the sails of the Frolic to snit him, and has begun to get accustomed to her, and consequently more able to handle her to do her justice, she has developed great speed, in fact is quite a prodigy amongst the canoes. She carries small sails and barely holds her own in running, the Mystic with her racing sail leaving her considerably, but in the windward work she fairly discomfits the fleet. On Sunday there was a nice breeze, and 3 or 4 scrub races were sailed, all of which she won easily except one in which the Mystic secured a tremendous lead in the run, and was only caught by Frolic when close home. On Tuesday a very pleasant water party was held at the boat-house, and no less than ten canoes turned out with lady passengers. After a sail around the basin lunch was partaken of in the club room, and was a very enjoyable festivity. The breeze dropped entirely in the afternoon. Among the participants was Mr. J. Matthieu, a new member who brought his canoe over from town in the morning. She is a Peterboro model decked in and fitted with a large plate board. She is very small only 13 feet by 26 inches, but should sail well. Canoes out on Tuesday were Mystic, Frolic, Flirt, Pirate, Sampler, Dart, Mab, Agnes, Nip and Tuck.

How to Educate Yearlings.

"Why do you say our yearlings are not half broken?" was the question asked by a representative of the Sporting World one day of John Martin, a trainer, whose experience with young thoroughbreds in England had been very extensive.

"I say they're not, for the schoolboy's reason, because they're not. Any one who has experienced the rawness there is about an American thoroughbred, after his education is said to be completed, and compared it with the finished manners and amenity to the bit displayed by a broken colt on the other side will say, as I do, you don't half break your yearlings. You don't take trouble enough, nor time enough, about their education, but treat them too much after the fashion of a western cowboy. The cowboy puts a bridle on an unbroken pony, girths the saddle on his back, and then after jumping onto him and riding him for a while until he is so tired that he is ready to drop and docile, calls him broken. That's no breaking. He may have cowed the broncho into abject terror of him, but he has not taught him manners nor thorough obedience to the touch of a finger on the reins, nor yet leamed him to put confidence in his rider, and trust to him not to ride him up against anything which will harm him."

"What's the great difference then which you speak of between the way in which we handle young race horses, and the way you do it? Of course, I imagine you're exaggerating when you compare the breaking of a thoroughbred with the breaking in of a cow pony."

"Yes, of course I don't mean to say young thoroughbreds are broken like the Western bronchos. But the comparison is about the same between them as between the English thoroughbreds and yours. The main difference lies merely in the difference of time and trouble expended."

"How then are the youngsters broken on the other side differently to here?"

"To begin with, the breaking tackle is put on to them and a key bit is put into their mouths. This is kept on them all day, whether in their box or being led out, for a couple of weeks. Then comes the lunging of them, and they are lunged in a circle, first to the right, then to the left, alternately. The lunging rein being attached to a ring on the front of the nose band, so as not to interfere with the mouth. Each pace is gone through, walking, trotting and cantering, the breaker having a long whip in his hand to keep the colt moving as he desires."

"Well, we do that."

"Yes, but after that comes a part of the performance which you neglect. That's the teaching of the colt the proper use of the bit. The making of his mouth. This is done by attaching two lunging reins, one buckled to the bit on either side, the breaker walking behind and driving the colt. The bit, too, is adjusted by side lines, sometimes slack, sometimes tight, at the breaker's pleasure."

A saddle is put on, generally with a light bag of oats or other weight, strapped across it, to use the colt to feeling he has to carry something. Rubbers and things of that sort are tied on the tackle and reins, so as to flap about and make the animal so that he is accustomed to seeing and feeling things touch and tickle him in different parts of his body, and under his flanks, etc., without getting excited or scared. This process goes on for two or three weeks, the colt being driven about two or three weeks, the colt being driven about two or three hours daily, until he becomes perfectly accustomed to such usage. All this time, too, the making of his mouth is being progressed with, and he soon gets to obey the bit either right or left, or to be pulled up. When this part of the education is complete the colt is mounted by a man, not a boy. A rein is still kept on him, and also the key bit. He is never at any time permitted to think that he is master of the situation, and the breaker should be such a good rider that the colt finds any effort to dislodge him perfectly useless. It is a very bad precedent for a colt to throw his breaker; he will always think he can get rid of his rider again, having once done it if he wishes to do so. The education is, at this time, nearly completed. By degrees the lunging rein is done away with, and the colt ridden on the roads, in crowds, past locomotives, and any other objects which from his being unused to them might cause him fear. Next comes cantering, paces being taken always to make the horse start with the right leg first. All the above mentioned processes occupy a period of six weeks, and it is not until everything has been done in due order, and the horse has become quite docile, that he is permitted to have a boy on his back, and an ordinary snaffle bit, a thick one, in his mouth. After this he may be considered finished with, and the trainer may take him in hand to give any gentle work which he thinks requisite.

"I don't see much difference between that and our method."

"Not much, perhaps, but think of what I have said, and then think of your ordinary breaking system. You will find considerable difference, more especially in the length of time consumed and the trouble expended on mousing. This latter is, in reality, the one great secret. A colt well moused is three parts broken, and a colt poorly moused is a colt nearly ruined; therefore too much attention cannot be bestowed on that department. A bad mouth makes the horse partly master of the situation, and it is owing to that, in a great measure, which causes colts to cut at the post run out, and run cunning. Do you see it?"

I have frequently thought over what the trainer told me, and now that the season of breaking yearlings is in progress I think I cannot do better than communicate it to the racing public. I am inclined to think with him that we are in too much of a hurry to see what our yearlings can do, and for that reason are too apt to hurry over the mousing and making of them which he deems so essential to their future.

The Dash System.

The following are a few short opinions of some of our noted horsemen on the subject of dash racing. There was no attempt made at what might be termed interviewing, and these are expressions gathered during ordinary conversation, without any warning to prepare for an examination.

Mr. Mike Bowerman, in a little street chat, said: "I am desirous of seeing any experiment tried that promises to aid the trotting interest; but I do not believe that the dash is any test of a horse's merit. A trotter is not like a runner—he does not get off as easily—and if a trotter gets a bad send-off, he is not liable to show what is in him in a single dash. Take, for instance, the 2:25 stallion stake, trotted at the recent Breeders' Meeting. If it had been a dash I would have won it with Hinder Wilkes in a jog, and such horses as Baron Wilkes, Granby, Superior and the others would have, for the time being at least, been without the grand reputation they acquired in that race. But, I am in for anything that with interest the people and advance the trotter."

Mr. Madden said he was against the dash system; that it would only be a short time, if it was adopted, before substance and endurance were set aside and everything given up to speed, and the outcome would be a breed of horses with their bellies up against their backs, and such as could not pull a wagon with two men in it fourteen miles. Trotters of the Belle Hamlin type would compete with such horses as Oliver K., and endurance and stability would take a second place.

Mr. W. L. Simmons could see no objections to the system. Thoroughbreds, the gamest horses in the world, were raced almost altogether on that system, and if generally adopted by the trotting people would certainly make a great market for the youngsters.

Mr. A. Smith McCann: "The dash system might be an advantage in the way of attracting crowds to the courses in the East, but we do not need it in Kentucky, where the breeders trot their own horses and do not campaign them week after week. Our horses have the thoroughbred close up in their pedigrees, and can stay out a race of heats without detriment. I believe in dashes for colt stakes, but do not consider that mile heats of two in three is too much even for a two-year-old. I see no reason for a change, unless you throw in a dash of two miles now and then for variety."

The veteran breeder, Dr. L. Herr, said that he was opposed to the innovation. It was too much like the old time quarter-racing, when a horse went a quarter like a flash, but was not fit for a rod further. He wanted to see horses bred that had bottom and staying qualities—a horse that could go twenty miles from home and then return in equally good shape. He believed even in four-mile heats for runners; that these dashes for race horses of a few furlongs were a failure. We were not breeding trotters good for a quarter, or a single mile, but for all day, if necessary.

Col. B. J. Treacy was against the proposed system. It would result in the breeding of a lot of "fast weeds" that could reel off a quarter or a half and would not be worth a farthing for any greater distance and worthless for any other purpose. He was for breeding horses that could not only go a mile, but go there five or six times, or as many times as were necessary. He called attention to the many drawbacks in getting trotters off. In scoring they were sent half way up the stretch and generally went an eighth of a mile past the string before they were pulled up. It was no uncommon thing to repeat this seven or eight times before a start was had. Here were eight quarters trotted before the word was given, and it required a horse and not a weed to go a mile after such scoring, and repeat it several times in the twenties or better. He was of the opinion that it would bring the trotting down to where the thoroughbred people had now racing. In fact, without being informed of what those gentlemen had said, Mr. Treacy expressed himself, in his own forcible manner, in substance about as Mr. Madden, Mr. Bowerman and Dr. Herr are reported as doing.

As before stated, while the reported conversations give the gist of those gentlemen's opinions on the subject in question, they were had without any of the formality which usually accompanies all interviews, and are probably, for that reason, less artificial and more lacking in the usual dress and reservations generally noticeable in them.—Kentucky Stock Farm.

It is the opinion of Dr. L. Herr, Lexington, that "the turf horse requires to be let up a portion of every twelve months. He becomes muscle-sore, and nothing but absolute rest will completely cure this. After a run with his shoes off in the paddock he returns to the track a new animal. He is more buoyant in spirits, stronger in heart and more elastic in action. His muscles must be hardened again for turf contests, and this takes time; but when called upon for a supreme effort he is more liable to respond than when dulled by continuous labor through the absence of repose."

Moorland Stock Farm,
A Quarter Mile West of Milpitas, Cal., PROPERTY OF D. J. MURPHY.
Sale to Commence at 10 o'clock.
WEDNESDAY, Nov. 14, '88.

ROADSTERS, DRAUGHTS, HORSES of all Work, BROODMARES, COLTS and FILLIES, and some young Dairy Stock.

On account of limited accommodations I have to discontinue the above. THE ROADSTERS are descended from such horses as Geo. M. Patchen, Jr., Nutwood, Ethan Allen Jr., Belmont, Stockbridge Chief Jr., Herenton, Ben Franklin, Dick Patchen, John Nelson, Buccaneer and others, names that stand high, and some rank with the foremost producers of the day.
The DRAUGHTS are of Clyde, Sidney, Percheron, Norman, Ottawa Chief, Sires and Suffolk descent.
My Draughts took the first premium in every class they were entered in at the last County Fair.
That it is a sacrifice of good stock goes without saying, but as I have a large number of draughts and road horses, this sale is necessary to keep me from being overstocked.

If you want Good Stock attend this Sale.
Catalogues now ready.

The Starting Judge.

Col. E. S. Edwards, well known to all of the trotting horse fraternity, writes to the Kentucky Stock Farm as follows:

The position of starting judge is a very important as well as a very onerous one, and it is not every one that is capable of filling it. It is not enough that a starter should be a good horseman and have an accurate knowledge of the rules. He should also be a good judge of men—capable of seeing quick, thinking quick and acting quick. Drivers, as a rule, are not modeled after the pattern of perfect men. They are jealous as choir singers, and it is a singular fact that men who are the best of friends, and willing to concede anything to each other outside of the sulky, will seek to obtain every advantage fairly or unfairly, the moment they engage in a race. This has been remarked hundreds of times. They will often complain bitterly of each other at the conclusion of a heat, and importune the judges to punish for the most trivial offence. The driver is yet to be found who will admit that he ever did anything wrong during a race, or that any punishment was ever justly inflicted upon him. The disposition of a driver will almost invariably crop out in scoring and an experienced starter will detect in one or two trials the quality of men he has to deal with. Many instances have come under the personal observation of the writer where drivers have not only risked their own lives but imperiled the lives of others in a race to secure a slight advantage in position at the start. There are of course, exceptions, and some drivers could be named who are as gentlemanly in the sulky as out of it; but it is not unusual for drivers even in scoring to crowd each other and drive wide to keep others out of their rightful positions, or for two to drive so as to close out the third horse as soon as the word is given. To protect each driver as far as possible in his position and to see that no one has undue advantage over the other is the duty of the starter. A conscientious presiding judge will have no friends in a race whose faults he will condone when it becomes necessary to apply the rules. And here is where drivers frequently make a mistake. They think that for friendship's sake a little the best of the start will be permitted, or that they may indulge in a little more running than is permissible under the rules, and when they are checked they forswear friendship forever, and declare they "never will start a horse where that man is in the stand." It has been said that "a man can not start horses and keep his friends." Some owners and drivers have gone so far as to make their entry contingent upon a certain starter not being employed. It is needless to say that self-respecting managers in such cases either consign the entry to the waste basket, or receive it and suspend the nominator if he does not produce his horse or pay the entrance fee. An unjust or partial starter will make himself obnoxious to the public, and his services will not long be required. An inveterate pool-buyer should not be permitted to occupy the judges' stand in races where there is a pool-box. There is a stringent rule forbidding men who have any interest in the race serving as judges, but if Frank Herdic was to be put upon his oath it would be found that this rule is more violated than any other. It is true that there are men who can hold pools on a race and still be capable of a just decision adverse to their interests. It is equally true that drivers have very little confidence in a judge whose pool gambling proclivities they know to be in the ascendant. In cases of close decisions the loser by the judgment will, whether justly or not, attribute the decision to the influence of the pool box.

A peculiar feature which attends upon the position of the starter is the responsibility which attaches to him in the eyes of the owners and drivers. No other judge in the stand is held accountable for punishment or adverse decisions. To him alone attaches the blame of everything that occurs and he alone is damned. It sometimes happens that the starting judge will incur the animosity of a driver, who has been disciplined when the former was his sole defender, and was out-voted by the other two judges. A case in kind occurred not long ago where a foul was claimed by a driver; the decision was against him. He immediately inquired of the secretary of another association who was present, whether the same starting judge would act at their meeting, saying that he could not enter his horses if he did. The fact was that the starting judge was the only one of all in the stand that stood by him and voted to sustain his claim.

In some cases managers of trotting meetings will yield to the demand of a driver or owner, and in order to secure two or three entries will state that such and such a starter will not be in the stand. The instances are rare, however, where managers will be dictated to in this regard. There is another element to be considered besides drivers and owners in giving a racing meeting, and this must be catered to in order to achieve success. The public will not long patronize a race course where ignorant and partial judges attempt to administer to the law. A starting judge should be acquainted with the rules; he should be a judge of men as well as horses; he should be firm, yet courteous in his demeanor, and conscientious enough not to be influenced by the ties of friendship.

Stars of the Great Campaign.

When a young trotter promises exceptionally well, it is always the dream of his owner to wage a campaign of conquest down the great Circuit-line. There the prizes and the honors are greatest, for to campaign successfully through this grand series of hot contests requires the speed and the stamina of a race-horse. The horses that can hold their own from Detroit to New York are rare, indeed, and none but Wedgewood has ever won every race in his class in the Circuit. This year his daughter, Favonia, started out as though she were going to repeat the 1880 coup of her sire; but she dropped out of the line at Utica.

Although Detroit is not in the Grand Circuit this year, the campaign actually opened there, and to all practical purposes it was the beginning of the Circuit. The great event of the meeting was Guy's performance in the 3:00 class, where in the first heat he distanced a good field in 2:16½. This made the erratic son of Kentucky Prince the sensational horse of the year; and his peculiar ups and downs as he came down the line kept him and Millard Saunders, to use a stereotyped phrase, "the cynosure of all eyes." At the same meeting Prince Wilkes defeated Guy, and thus began a campaign that stamps him as beyond a doubt the best horse in training this year. He is a grand, level-headed horse, with speed enough to keep the fastest on their toes, and the stamina to wear down the stoutest-hearted opponent. With all this the Prince is a laboring-gaited horse; and when we saw him strive vainly against Patron at Hartford, a year ago, we could not believe that ever a horse that trotted with such apparent effort could overcome the pure, machine-like speed of Patron, whose gait is simply the poetry of trotting-action. At Cleveland, Ohio, Jack, the money-winner of the season, made his debut on the Circuit by winning in the 2:30 class over a good field. He won also at Buffalo, captured the $10,000 stake at Rochester, was placed at Hartford, and wound up the Circuit by winning the $5,000 stake for the 2:28 class at Springfield and the $5,000 stake for the 2:25 class. Jack was well and honestly managed, having that prince of all trotting-horse drivers, Budd Doble, behind him, and by fair and square means he won for Jack's owner more money than some of the turf highwaymen did with faster horses. These gentry would rather make a thousand dollars by a thievish "settlement" than win two thousand the way Budd Doble does it. Jack is trotting-bred from "away back," being by Pilot Medium, out of a daughter of Magna Charta. His sire, Pilot Medium, was by Happy Medium, out of Tackey, 2:26, by Pilot Jr., and it is worthy of note that both his sire and grandsire in the male line were re-enforced by the blood of dams that were famous on the turf.

Another horse that proved himself a sterling campaigner was the gelding without a name that is indicated in the summaries by the brand T. T. S. This chestnut son of Melrose, out of Ajax, by Vermont Hambletonian, came clear down from Cleveland to New York, and won a good substantial slice of the money in every race in his class in the circuit. The Melrose-Ajax gelding figures as the fourth largest winner in the campaign, and has certainly proven his right to a name. In view of his good campaigning qualities, trotting a race and sometimes two races a week, and always holding his own, his breeding is of interest.

He is deep in trotting-blood, his sire being a son of Victor von Bismarck (son of Hambletonian and Hattie Wood, by Harry Clay), out of Cinderella, by Mambrino Pilot, who was by Mambrino Chief, out of Juliet, by Pilot Jr. The dam of the famous gelding is a daughter of Vermont Hambletonian, son of Harris' Hambletonian. This is a strong and pure trotting-inheritance. Jack trotted his great campaign in tips instead of shoes.

Junemont, by Tremont, 2:28½, came to the front in impressive style at Cleveland, winning the race for the 2:20 class after a six-heat contest, and taking a record of 2:18½. Junemont has little breeding on his dam's side, she being by a horse called Jack Rosey (of remote Black Hawk descent), and out of a mare by a sire of unknown blood. But Junemont's sire, Tremont, is bred deep enough in trotting-blood to get trotters out of anything, and he was, moreover, a performer himself. Tremont is by Belmont, out of Virginia, by Alexander's Abdallah, and his grandam was the famous Grey Goose, the dam of Champagne, 2:30, by Nottingham's Norman.

The 2:27 class at this meeting was won by J. B. Richardson, and he lowered his record in the fourth heat to 2:19½. He is by George Wilkes, out of Tullahoma, by Almont, and his grandam was Lady Taylor, by Glencoe. Almont's unrivaled prepotency enabled him to get not only trotters but sires of trotters out of thoroughbred mares, and it is not surprising that a daughter of his bred to George Wilkes should throw a trotter of Richardson's caliber. In his immediate crosses he represents a trotting-combination of two strains as strong and prepotent in trotting-instinct as any on earth. Favonia is somewhat similarly bred, she being by the great trotter and trotting-sire Wedgewood, 2:19, out of Fadette, by Alexander's Abdallah, and Fadette was out of Lightsome, by Glencoe. Here the immediate crosses are two united strains of the blood of Alexander's Abdallah through Belmont and Fadette, and no strain of blood we have has equaled that of Alexander's Abdallah in power to breed on generation after generation, and to subdue to itself all counter-currents.

At Buffalo, Jack, Richardson and Favonia again won, the latter reducing her record to 2:15. Spofford, well-known on the turf before, won in the 2:20 class, and Guy trotted the best race of his life, beating Prince Wilkes and Rosalind Wilkes, in straight heats, in 2:20½, 2:14½, 2:16.

At Rochester, two good performers turned up as winners in Elda B. and Geneva S., the latter being one of the very best performers down the Circuit. Elda B. is by Wood's Hambletonian, out of a daughter of Dandy, son of Long Island Black Hawk, and Geneva S. is by Abdallah Mambrino, son of Almont. She is as game a mare as was seen this season, and McCarthy gave her a campaign calculated to break down an iron horse. This may be a wise way to use a five-year-old mare, but the true spirit of a turfman is not shown by working a horse for every dollar that is in him, until he joins the ranks of the young cripples that are suggestions of what they might have been in a sportsman's hands. As an example of the gruelling work this filly got, it may be noted that on September 12th, at Springfield, she trotted and won an eight-heat race in which the heats ranged from 2:18½ to 2:23½, and on September 14th trotted a four-heat race against Jack. There are few who will be ready to believe that Geneva S. will be as good a mare at full maturity as she would have been had reasonable tasks been asked of her as a five-year-old. Other first-class performers in the Circuit joined in prominently well "down the line." Golden Rod, Lucille's Baby and Cleon more than held their own in the last meetings. Golden Rod especially, made a sweep in his class from Utica to Springfield. He is by Alcione, out of Annie Eastin, by Morgan Rattler, and is bred for a star. Annie Eastin is also the dam of Endymion, 2:23½, and Dolly Davis, 2:29. Lucille's Baby, by Princeps, out of Lucille Goldust, 2:16½, seemed to improve as the campaign progressed, and Goldsmith had a good horse in Mr. Ogden's Cleon at Fleetwood.

In the subjoined table we have given the gross winnings of all that won $2,000 and upward from Detroit to New York, together with details of their performances, which may afford a gauge of their qualities as campaigners:

These are arranged in the order of their winnings. In a few instances these amounts are approximations, as performances in "specials," where conditions often vary, are involved. Among the heavy money winners all varieties of blood are found in all sorts of combinations, but, with only two exceptions, every one in the list carries a rich infusion of fashionable trotting blood.—Wallace's Monthly.

There is talk of a match between Favonia and Rosalind Wilkes before the season closes.

Alliance of Jockey Clubs.

From the Chicago Horseman we copy the following on a subject of general importance:

One of the most important reasons why the jockey clubs of the continent should enter into a friendly alliance has received but scant attention. It is the great and ever growing difficulty which responsible owners experience in collecting their forfeit orders. All our large stakes have forfeit conditions, and the Secretaries of the associations do their best to collect them, but as a rule when a stake is won, the winner, instead of receiving the full amount in cash, is compelled to take the added money and as much of the forfeit money as the Secretary has succeeded in collecting. In many instances the Secretary is powerless to collect from a certain class of owners. They are either imppecunious, or having won neither stake nor purse at the meeting, he has nothing on hand from which he can deduct the forfeits due to other owners. The winning owner has no redress but to take the forfeit orders and trust to a friendly Secretary or his own powers of collection to turn them into cash. We have known many instances of owners who have carried these orders in their pockets till they became worn out with age, when they have thrown them away in disgust. The crowning injustice of the system is that our rules of penalties for stakes winners are based upon the face value of the stake or stakes won. So that a horse is often penalized for winning a given amount, when as a matter of fact the owner has only received a certain proportion in cash, and the balance in paper which is not negotiable. It is true that as all suffer alike no special injustice is done, but it is a false and unsatisfactory state of affairs, and if a remedy can be devised it is the manifest duty of the clubs to the owners to put it into practice at the earliest opportunity. We know that many Secretaries loyally collect all the forfeits they can, and incur considerable unpopularity from a certain class of owners for so doing. A National Jockey Club is the only effectual cure for this evil. It would insure prompt collections, and relieve owners and Secretaries of the unpleasant responsibilities of personal collection. At the conclusion of a meeting the Secretary of an association would immediately send his lists of forfeits to the office of the National Club, the Secretary of which organization would at once send a copy to all the affiliated members. The defaulting owners would thus be completely cornered on all sides, and would be compelled to settle or leave the turf.

In discussing this and kindred topics relating to the forthcoming Turf Congress, that veteran turfman, B. G. Bruce writes as follows:

The annual meeting of the American Turf Congress has been called to meet at the St. James Hotel, New York City, Wednesday, November 14, to which the clubs East and West have been invited to send a delegate. Some of the clubs East will send delegates, some have declined and some have not expressed themselves. The rules of the American Turf Congress have for their object the improvement of the breed and the development of horses, through the promotion of the interest of the American running turf; the prevention, detection and the punishment of fraud thereon, and uniformity in the government of racing; and why every club in this country cannot meet on this common ground is a wonder to us. This rules do not propose to interfere with the dates or arrangements of the different meetings, and each association may be governed by its own by-laws. The scale of weights, east and west, is the same in stake races, and the only difference is in the scale for two and three-year-olds, and for all ages.

As a sport, racing has become the leading amusement of the people, and its business side should be kept steadily in view; and this can be best accomplished by the concurrent action of the different clubs. The better regulation of the betting and booking privileges of the clubs is one that requires attention. The forfeit list and forfeit order system have not been a success, and this department of the turf loudly demands reform. A horse wins a valuable sweepstake; the owner expects to receive the amount as it appears on the face, but generally only part is handed over to him, the remainder consisting of a list of forfeit orders or parties in the forfeit list. The owner's horse is penalized for winning a stake of a certain value, while he does not receive more than two-thirds or three-fourths of the amount. This is not right. In order to obviate this difference in the payment of stakes, which is more or less general east or west, an obvious mode presents itself, which is for an entrance fee to be paid at the time of entry, and the Secretary to receive no nomination unaccompanied by the money.

When a stake is for yearlings and to be run when three years old, an entrance fee should be required when the nomination is made, and another payment might be required at two years old, and so much more to start. If a party failed to make his second payment or did not start he would be out only the payments he had made. Such a rule would dispense with a forfeit list and forfeit orders, and parties winning a stake would know exactly what they are going to receive, and would willingly take up a penalty for such winning. This would save an immense amount of trouble to the clubs and their secretaries, and would enable them to settle up every day if they desired.

There are doubtless a number of other minor improvements that might be made in the rules, but those suggested strike me most forcible at this time. It is to be hoped that those clubs east which have declined to send a delegate to the American Turf Congress will reconsider the matter and send a representative, and see if a uniform set of rules cannot be adopted which will tend to the common advantage of all and the advancement of the American turf. If it cannot be accomplished, no harm will be done, and things will remain as they are; but if it can be arranged it must be to the benefit of the turf in general.

On the subject of unpaid forfeits the English Jockey Club is very strict, and as the rules regulating them are perfectly clear and explicit, we reproduce them. They are as follows:

An unpaid forfeit list shall be kept at the registry office, and shall be published in the "Sheet Calendar" after the Newmarket July meeting, and again at the conclusion of the racing season in every year. It shall include all due and unpaid entrances, stakes, fines and forfeits which have been notified as hereinafter mentioned, and shall state the real name or names, and also the assumed name or names (if any) of the persons from whom, and the horses (if any) in respect of which the same are due. Entrances, stakes, fines and forfeits which have been so published must be paid directly into the registry office, and until so paid they shall not be removed from the list.

Any person to whom any entrance, stake, fine, fee or forfeit is payable (whether as an official or otherwise) may (or shall, if he be an official, within a month of the publication of the next forfeit list) notify the same in writing, signed by him, to the registry office, or to the clerk of the course, and every such statement received by the clerk of the course shall be forthwith transmitted by him to the registry office.

So long as the name of a person is in the unpaid forfeit list he cannot subscribe to any sweepstakes, and no horse can be entered by him or under his subscription for any race, whether acting as an agent or otherwise, and no horse which has been entered by him, or in his name, or under his subscription, or of which he is wholly or partly the owner, or which, after his default has been twice published in the "Racing Calendar," shall be proved to the satisfaction of the steward to be under his care, training, management or superintendence, shall be qualified to run for any race; and so long as any horse is in the unpaid forfeit list, such horse shall not be entered or run for any race.

A correct alphabetical index of the horses and owners in the last forfeit list and Irish forfeit list shall be published in the first "Calendar" of every month during the racing season. Such monthly list shall commence not less than three years before the time at which it is published, and shall be carried down to and include the latest forfeit list which has been published in the "Sheet Calendar" as above mentioned.

The clerk of the course at every meeting shall put up in his office during such meeting two copies of the last monthly list for the time being.

If any horse, which, or the owner of which, is in any forfeit list be allowed to start, the clerk of the course shall be fined £10.

If a horse which, or the owner of which, is in any forfeit list be entered for any race, the owner of such horse shall be fined £50.

This system relieves good-natured owners of the unpleasant task of collecting their own forfeits, and places their prompt collection upon a practical and legal basis.

With regard to the regulation of the betting privileges, we believe that each association should have absolute control. It is a question of revenue, with which a central association has nothing to do. We hope the eastern clubs will realize that they have a grand opportunity of insuring the honor, prosperity and popularity of the turf by meeting their western brethren in convention and legislating upon the live questions which have been discussed in the pages of the Horseman. With a National Jockey Club the turf will have a uniform code of law; a license system for jockeys and trainers; a system for the prompt payment of forfeits; competent judges and starters, and a central authority which will insure obedience to the law because it will have the power to promptly punish the offenders.

Cross Breeding.

We copy from the National Live-Stock Journal the following:

Frequent instances are noted among herds and flocks where the use of cross-bred or grade sires has resulted in much disappointment to the owner. The offspring of two superior pure-bred animals of different breeds being a first class animal, perhaps better than either parent, it has been concluded that he could be advantageously used as a sire. This plan has been followed by some breeders of horses who have used crosses of draft breeds in the expectation of raising colts having the best qualities of both breeds, and many cross-bred hulls have been sold to western ranchmen and others. While a skillful breeder may be able to work improvement by using great care in the selection and mating of cross-bred animals, in a general way the result will not prove satisfactory, and it will be found safer to select a pure-bred sire. While there was some excuse for farmers using grade sires when pure-bred animals were not so numerous and commanded higher prices, there is no reason for this now when pure-bred animals are within the reach of all.

The following, written by Mr. Wm. Houseman in a contribution to the English Live-Stock Journal relates particularly to poultry, but has an application in the case of other kinds of stock as well:

Whether the reader's fancy be inclined towards pure-bred or cross-breeding, a glance at the latter subject can scarcely fail to strike upon some matter which he will find interesting. The writer is himself, as regards poultry, a breeder of pure stock only, and of only one breed, at the present time and for some years past, yet has gained more knowledge by observations of cross-breeding, and by his own experiments and the experiments of others in crossing breeds than by the narrow practice of perpetuating one pure breed, in which the choice is confined to a type with but comparatively slight variations, and the results are much more nearly uniform than those of the combination of different breeds. Yet, to a practiced eye, the variations within a distinct breed are many enough and wide enough to afford interesting studies and to tax the ingenuity to insure something like uniformity of the characteristics most desired.

Cross-breeding, nevertheless, gives a much larger range. Every breeder should know something of it, and if that something be of his own doing, his information will be all the surer and clearer.

No greater mistake, perhaps, upon the subject of breeding, than the mistake of supposing that the subsequent generations from cross-bred stock are good for nothing, is ever entertained. We constantly hear people say that the first cross is all very well and may give you some useful birds, but you must not attempt to breed from those birds. If that were so, where would be some of our most valuable breeds? The same applies to other kind of stock. Much of the improvement of old breeds, to say nothing of the manufacture of brand new breeds, has been effected by crossing and by going on from the results of the cross until selection established once more constancy of type. This has been done repeatedly, and may be done again and again. It is no argument, however, in favor of meddling with a distinct type already established and acknowledged to be valuable. Birds of such a type, of course, may be taken for purposes of experiment in crossing, but sources uncontaminated by alien blood should be retained. The crosses should be treated as crosses, and kept carefully apart from the principal sources, and those sources should be guarded with jealous vigilance, to prevent pollution. Some breeders are far too careless. If a bird suits, its antecedents are not thought much about. "Like produces like," is the axiom quoted in excuse of indifference; and the breeder sometimes finds to his cost that his docs produce likes, not always immediately, but intermittently and by reversion, and his very suitable bird becomes the parent of very unsuitable offspring, just because it happened to have very unsuitable birds among its ancestors.

To the remark already submitted, that it is possible to go on successfully from the offspring of a cross, should be added just this further remark; that a good deal of weeding will probably be found necessary. In pure-breeding we must weed out, often with a hold and snaring hand, if we will breed up something really choice and much in advance of the average of the breed we work with. In cross-breeding much more determined weeding must be done if we wish to present good evidence of a design skillfully carried out. Anybody can breed a mixed lot, which would puzzle the keenest observer to guess his object in breeding them at all, or force him to assume that the breeder had a desire for variety, nothing more, as a motive.

For really intelligent and intelligible practice, cross-breeding affords ample scope. The aim should be well defined, and then the exercise of good judgment will be needed at every step of the process. There is no reason why a poultry-keeper who prefers cross-breeding either from fancy or in the belief that it is the most profitable system of breeding, should necessarily change his stock and repeatedly start afresh, as we are sometimes told must be the case. He is a poor hand at the work if he can not keep up a cross-bred flock from his original foundation to a creditable standard as useful poultry. Hundreds of henwives are doing it successfully all over the country.

Lucy, 2:18 1-4.

The great trotting mare Lucy, record 2:18½, has passed away at the ripe age of thirty-one years. From the New York Sportsman we copy the following:

Lucy, one of the famous triumvirate of racemares that laid the foundation of the Fashion Farm stud, died at that establishment last week and was buried beside her two greatest rivals, near the judge's stand on the farm track. The ashes of the three queens, and in their day the greatest representatives of the Hambletonian, Mambrino Chief, and Clay families mingle with the soil of New Jersey, within the boundaries in which two of them were foaled.

When Lucy expired, died the last member of the band of performers that entertained the public two decades ago, before the Grand Circuit was thought of, and when the names of 2:20 trotters could be counted on the fingers of one hand. She survived every horse that ever started against her in a race.

Lucy was bred by J. Butterworth of Burlington County, N. J., and was got by George M. Patchen, 2:23½, out of Lady Clifton, a daughter of May Day and Kate, a superior road mare, by Prizefighter. She was foaled in 1857, and was bred as a two-year-old to a son of George M. Patchen, producing a chestnut colt, afterwards gelded, and that had speed enough at maturity to show a mile in 2:28.

Some time after this event Lucy was taken up and soon began to show speed, but five years elapsed before she heard the bell ring. Her first victory was secured that year at Rockville, Conn., where she defeated Stonewall Jackson and a bay mare, the fastest heat being trotted in 2:43½. She also won two more races that year, closing the season with a harness record of 2:39 and wagon record of 2:45. In 1866 she appeared faster than ever, and won four races, making a record of 2:28 in the fourth heat of a race with Rosamond and Cora.

Four more victories were added to Lucy's chain of races before the close of 1867, when she defeated Lady Thorns for the first and last time, although they met in over a dozen races. Lucy inaugurated the following seasons by defeating General Butler in a race to saddle over the Fashion Course, trotting the deciding heat in 2:22½. Rollo Goldust was the next to finish behind her, and in her next winning race Goldsmith Maid and Fred Pence suffered defeat.

In 1869 Lucy defeated American Girl over the Fashion Course in straight heats, trotting the third in 2:25. The following season she lowered George Wilkes' colors four times, although beaten several times by Goldsmith Maid.

Lucy's only win in 1871 was at Providence, where she defeated George Palmer, as all of that year was spent in trotting races with Goldsmith Maid. During that and the following season the pair started in twenty-three races, and on two occasions the daughter of George M. Patchen had to go on and win in order to keep American Girl from securing the glory. On one of these occasions Lucy trotted the greatest race of her life, finishing her three winning heats in 2:18½, 2:19½ and 2:22. American Girl placing the second heat to her credit in 2:17½. Lucy was driven by Hickok in this race, and taken by him later in the season to California, where she defeated Occident, distancing him in the second heat of a race in 2:20.

Lucy's last victory was won in the free-for-all at Cleveland's first Grand Circuit meeting, with American Girl and Goldsmith Maid behind her. Three heats settled this race, the fastest being finished in 2:21½. During her career on the turf Lucy started in eighty-one races, of which she won twenty-five, was second in forty-two, third in nine, fourth in four and unplaced in one. She was defeated twenty-five times by Goldsmith Maid, twelve times by American Girl, eleven times by Lady Thorne and twice by George Wilkes.

When Lucy was retired after the close of 1873, she had a record of 2:18½, made the year before, and was sixteen years old. She was bred the following spring to Jay Gould, and in 1875 dropped the bay colt Inheritor. He died as a four-year-old leaving but four foals, one of which was Montgomery, 2:21½, sire of Cleveland S., 2:30. The following year she produced Lucia, also by Jay Gould, and who promises to be one of the greatest broodmares tracing to any line. She was never broken, but bred as a three-year old to Knox. Her first foal was a bay colt and that died as a four-year-old. She then threw Zoe, dam of Trapeze, 2:19½, and Zig Zag, a fast colt; Beniah, 2:19½; Lucetta, a broodmare and dam of Lucid. Lucia's next foals were got by Rumor, and are Lammermoor, 2:30; Edgardo, trial in 2:40½, as a two-year-old, Huily Barly and Hinrah. This spring Lucia foaled a chestnut filly, by Panscott, that was purchased recently and taken to Parkville Farm.

The spring Lucia was foaled Lucy was bred to Gen. Knox and produced Mikado, now in the stud in Kentucky. She was then mated with Lady Thorne's son, Gen. Washington, and Triumvir, who was harned when five years old in the Abdallah Park fire, was the result.

Sapphire and Sybil, both by Jay Gould, and both of which are broodmares, were Lucy's last foals. Sapphire is the dam of Nominee, who won the blue ribbon for Highlaw Farm at the Horse Show this year, and Nominator, both of which are by Stranger. She is now at Palo Alto in foal to Electioneer. Sybil has produced Sympathy, Syndie and Silvia, the last two being by Stranger, and the first by Gen. Washington.

In the early history of the trotting turf Lucy's name stands among those that will never be forgotten. Her great races speak volumes, and her record as well as her endurance, proves that she possessed a constitution that could only be sapped by the ravages of time. The record of the stud also shows that her descendants will in the near future be an important factor in trotting matters, and we look for her blood to breed on as successfully through her daughters as Lady Patriot's has through her sons.

Affection cannot be pounded into animals. Kind treatment insures the affection of an animal, while rough treatment is sure to cause its hatred.

The Erdenheim Sale.

The sale of the stallions and brood mares comprising the famous Erdenheim stud at Chestnut Hill, near Philadelphia, took place at the farm Nov. 8th. A special train from New York brought about sixty horsemen, and from Philadelphia a number of others arrived, so that when, shortly after 1 o'clock, Col. S. D. Bruce began the sale, there was an attendance of about one hundred and fifty people. The sale took place in the old training stables. The weather was bleak and raw, and it rained at intervals. The bidding was lively and the prices realized unusually good. All the lots offered were sold except La Rose and Waltz, who were not offered on account of their age, and Busy Bee, who had died before the sale. Maggie B. B. was bought up by Messrs. Kittson through sentiment, and the total realized was $49,800, an average of $996 for 50 head. Following is a summary.

George S. Farnsworth of North Bridgton, Me., has a team that is worthy of notice, says the Lewiston Journal. Mr. Farnsworth teams grain from South Paris to North Bridgton, a distance of fifteen miles, making several trips a week, besides doing other work with his team at home. The fact of interest about the team is this: The united ages of the three horses are eighty-two years; the leader is aged thirty-two, and he has been in the possession of the owner a great many years; the polo horses are each twenty-five, and Mr. Farnsworth has had them for the past seventeen years. They are of Morgan blood, and in the days of their youth few horses could out-road them. The three are in good condition, fat as work horses ought to be; are always free from blemishes, good eaters and seem good for many years of service yet. Where can there be found and equal for this team?

The Cambridgeshire Race.

LONDON, Oct. 25th.—Another of England's famous races has come and gone. Again large amounts of money have been staked and lost. Again the bookmakers are jubilant, and the majority of those who bet have sighed and swore, and proclaimed the great race to have been a fraud. The army of Frenchmen who again crossed the channel firm in the belief that Tenebreuse would again carry victory for the day have retired in disgust and with far emptier pockets than when they arrived on English shores. Veracity won! Yes, and she did it well. A few of the most prominent turfmen backed the winner and, of course, reaped a splendid benefit. I shall tell The Spirit something that has not been published in English papers, and simply for the reason: Ye editor is afraid to worry royalty. Nevertheless, I received the information from the most reliable source that His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales won over a quarter of a million of dollars on Veracity. A big sum; yes, and the Prince does not ever go into financial matters except on a big scale. I hope it is true, and I believe it is. It is no disputed fact that Lord Randolph Churchill won a clean £10,000 on Veracity. Good. He needs it and he will spend it where his tastes may be fully gratified. Bismark, the favorite, and who until the last few strides seemed to be the winner, dropped his speed and was a poor third. He was at once sold and is now on the water bound for Buenos Ayres. Cactus, of whom little was said before the meeting, but who came in second, has received more praise than any horse that I remember during my three years of English racing.

These great racing events are of no ordinary character. The Derby, Oaks, Ascot, Goodwin, Cesarewitch, Cambridgeshire, Liverpool, etc., are all associated with more or less of interesting historical associations. This last Cambridgeshire was the fiftieth in its calendar. The first race was in 1839, and Mr. Ramsey's Lanercost was the winner. He was a four-year-old, and was not by any means the favorite before the race. It was a severe blow for the English turfmen to see the first prize fall to a Scotch horse, and a Scotchman as its owner. In 1843, Nat was the first three-year-old to win a race in which thirty-one horses of the same age have been successful during the last forty-nine years.

In 1857 George Fordham rode David in the Cambridgeshire, and the ever popular horse carried five stone ten pounds on his back, and yet defeated a field of thirty-nine starters, running away with his little jockey into the town before he could be stopped. In 1871 this same jockey furnished one of the finest specimens of riding that has ever been seen. He rode Sabinas, and it is said he "upset one of the best-laid plots ever concocted by the astute owners and managers of Allbrook." It was said that Sir Frederick Johnson upset the nerves of Allbrook's rider at the last moment by putting him on five hundred to nothing, "but in Fordham, who followed the footpath that leads along the old Cambridgeshire track, the backers of other horses had perhaps the most formidable jockey that ever rode at Newmarket to encounter, with the exception of Jem Robinson."

Foxhall made one American victory, while France has carried off two prizes. The best horse that ever triumphed for the Cambridgeshire was old Isomy. And so I could write of great events. There is much in them, and I trust that ere long there will be the right kind of a record given the public, by which the story of those men and horses who have so prominently figured in these many struggles may be brought to light.

One or two words more of this race and I will turn to other matters. The day of the race was perfect as far as the weather was concerned. The attendance was exceedingly large, far outstripping many previous meetings. Of course the crowd was a mixed one—and all crowds at an English race are mixed, and very much mixed at that. There were a notable number of notable men in the paddock previous to the call for horses. Almost every one had his or her preference (for women in England are almost as fond of sports and pastimes as men). All of the horses looked charmingly well, with the exception of the French horse, Tenebreuse, which sweated, and the knowing ones said "Enough." Tenebreuse was doomed, and at that moment Cactus sprang into wild favoritism, and during the short time allowed for betting thousands of pounds were placed on the beauty to win, and especially for place. The finish tells the wisdom of these men. The Countess of Montrose was one of the fortunate. I shall in the near future speak more full of this remarkable woman, whose love for the turf seems most fascinating.

The largest field of horses in the Cambridgeshire was in 1862, when Bothild won, out of 43 starters. The value of the stakes in this race is not of great proportions. Veracity only won £1,330. In 1874 Pent Etre $2,450; in 1881 Foxhall won £2,017. The were the highest stakes, but who can tell of the private betting and winnings? Let any one watch this part of an English race, and they will wonder where all the ready cash comes from.

It is a well known fact that there is no nation in the world where there is so much miserable drunkenness as in England. And I do not believe that there can be found a place in the universe where such vile stuff that is called "pure spirits" equals this same London. For years temperance societies, the church, philanthropists, good men and good women have tried to solve a remedy for this rapidly increasing curse. The Excise Commission seems paralyzed, and the curse is as red in the West End as at Whitechapel, only the subjects of the curse stand in a different social relation. A few years since Parliament, undoubtedly with the best intentions, passed a law permitting retail grocers to sell spirits by the bottle. It was passed as a safeguard, but God only knows of the evil this law has caused. The intoxication of women of all grades has increased tenfold. Sly drinking has been the result, and the grocer who has a good customer in a female gin bibber reaps a good financial reward and plays havoc either in the mansion or the hovel, for every grade of the grocer grasps at this chance of money-getting. There is no question that is so fully occupying the minds of true reformers of this question of drink. I would not have mentioned it in my letter had I not seen for myself, since those terrible Whitechapel murders occurred, the awful condition of that people who are degraded by the spirit fiend.

After looking at such revolting sights it does the soul good to take a tramp into the interior of England, and at this season of the year nothing can be more attractive. Even if the farmers have a rough time of it to make both ends meet, they seem to be the most contented and hospitable people in the world. On my return to busy, smoky London I tarried at two or three country villages for the purpose of finding out the temper and prospects of the common English farmer. It is wonderful what an effect the atmosphere has on one's spirits and ambition. I found out that the fine weather we have enjoyed during the past month has cheered the farmer to a most gratifying pitch. In all quarters the cultivation of foul stubbles and leas has been carried on, and the smoke of burning rubbish has scented the air in almost every neighborhood. Mangolds and potatoes are now being stored at a minimum cost owing to the dryness of the soil. The stacks of barley are prodigious, and many corn growers are expecting to be saved by barley, though their wheat is sadly deficient. There is no use of disguising the matter. The English farmer, of whatever grade he may be, is to-day practically alive to the fact that they had better not sow only that corn which can be relied upon. England cannot raise wheat with any degree of regular success. She has, does and must rely upon foreign markets in this respect, and America will always hold the balance. But when you come to stock, fruit and the smaller grains England need not be ashamed.

UNCLE BEN.

Lord Randolph Churchill's Dream of the Cambridgeshire Winner.

"The late Chancellor of the Exchequer, Lord Randolph Churchill," says Rapier in the London Illustrated Sporting News, October 27th, "has taken to dreaming winners, and what is a very great deal more, dreaming them accurately. In a vision a few nights since his lordship dreamed that No. 22 (Veracity) on the card had won the Cambridgeshire, and being a practical dreamer with a belief in himself, he backed No. 22 to win him some £1,000. I have told many stories of winners being dreamed, and so far as I know my stories have been true, but there is no doubt about this most recent addition to the list. For one moment he may have doubted whether he was a flyer at dreams after all, for the first number put up by the judge was '2' (Tenebreuse), and we began to wonder how it was we had missed the white jacket and green cap, but '2' was speedily taken down. The judge had told his man to hoist '22,' but the chattering round his box made his voice inaudible and so caused the mistake. However, the '22' was soon put up and Lord Randolph awoke to the fact that he had developed a new accomplishment.

And in connection with the above the same writer says: "A good deal of the Tenebreuse Cesarewich winnings were put on the mare for the Cambridgeshire by French backers, and I am afraid that some of them who were eagerly waiting for the news had a peculiarly unpleasant disappointment on Tuesday afternoon. As just remarked No. 2 was put up by mistake, and the instant the number was hoisted there was a wild rush to the telegraph office and the joyful news was immediately speeding along the wires that Tenebreuse had won. Imagine the joy of Jules, sitting in his cafe eagerly waiting for the winner. With what rapture must he have embraced his friends and drank the health of the gallant mare, and what a horrible jar it must have been when the correction came over and it was found that Tenebreuse had not even run into a place?"

Made to Pay at Last.

A betting case which was in many respects peculiar came recently before Judge Greenhow in the Wakefield County Court, in England. Some time in June, 1882, two innkeepers named Freck and Child and a person named Bolton met, and after a discussion on turf matters came to the conclusion that to back Shotover (winner of the Two Thousand) for the forthcoming Leger would be a very good investment. According to Child's account of what took place, it was decided that the mare should be backed for £40, Freck and his friend Bolton having £25 on it, and Child £15. Freck said he would be answerable for the whole of the £25. As Child knew one Eli, a Manchester commission agent, it was settled that he should telegraph to him to put on the money. This was done, and Eli wired back: "Leger, book 160 to 40 Shotover." In due course the Leger was run, but Shotover did not win, and Child, who had to pay Eli, found himself unable to get any money from Freck. In order to save his reputation, Child sent Eli the whole of £40. From time to time Child asked Freck for the money, but was unable to obtain it, but Freck did not apparently at any time seek to deny that the sum was owing. Subsequently Bolton, who was a man of no means, died, and a subscription was raised to pay his debts. Freck continuing to leave the matter unsettled, Child ultimately took proceedings in the county court, and brought his action for money paid by the plaintiff to and for the use of the defendant. Freck, who gave evidence, in his defence, denied that he ever instructed Child to make the bet for him, and declared that the transaction was altogether with Bolton. Child's betting book, which was only produced after some delay, showed an entry "40 to 60 Shotover, J. Eli; 25 to 40 Freck;" but Freck's solicitor contended that the "I" in Bolton was partly visible under the word "Freck," and that the "F" was newer than the rest of the writing. Witnesses, were, however, called who stated that they had heard Child ask Freck for the money on several occasions, and that the latter had not denied his liability; and the case, which took considerable time in the hearing, concluded by the judge giving a verdict in favor of Childs, the plaintiff.

Nine Tiny Horseshoes.

William B. Logan, a Norristown silvershoeer, has just completed a case of nine miniature silver horseshoes that he made from a ten-cent piece. Each shoe has a hole drilled through it for the insertion of a nail, but, strange to say, the smallest needle that is ordinarily found about a lady's sewing room was too large to go through the holes. Each one was made with the same hammer, pincers and punch that is used in the construction of the heaviest horse-shoe.

A Sensational Young Pacer.

COUNCIL BLUFFS, Ia., November 4th.—The sensational two-year-old pacer, Ed Rosewater, started yesterday to beat 2:22, and after a mile in 2:27, lowered all pacing records for the age, making the mile in 2:20. He is of the purest trotting blood, being by Vasco, and from a mare by Vindex. Vasco is by Harold (the sire of Maud S.), dam Vassar, by Belmont. Vindex is by Blood's Black Hawk, dam by Mambrino Chief. From his breeding the youngster should be a trotter of high excellence, but at present he prefers to pace. The best judges believe that as he matures he will change his gait, and that he will develop into a very great trotter.

Though racing in Australia has grown to great proportions, it has by no means yet reached the importance of American racing, if judged by the amounts captured by winning owners. Hon. James White, of New South Wales, easily heads the list with thirty-three races, his winnings amounting to $84,640. Not only are Mr. White's winnings surpassed by several American stables, but no other Australian owner approaches him, the next on the list, W. Gannon, having only $17,750 opposite his name, won by two horses in six races.

CORRESPONDENCE.

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN:—I think if you will search a little more carefully the records of the day's racing at Bay District tract on November 3d, you will find that O. A. Hickok drove my br st Mortimer (four years old) by Electioneer, dam Marti by Whipple's Hambletonian, to beat his record (2:24), and that he trotted the mile in 2:27, placing another of his sire's get in the 2:30 list.

Respectfully yours,

WILFRED PAGE.

PENN'S GROVE, Sonoma Co., Cal., Nov. 10, 1888.

EDITOR BREEDER & SPORTSMAN:—Now that the great struggle for National supremacy is decided, I breathe easier. The public pulse feels more full and round, and beats slower.

After almost every leap of a mountain stream there is a calm pool in which the water gathers force for another headlong leap to some lower level.

Here we are the American people, as calm and quiet, the Presidential election over, as though Cleveland had never run against Harrison.

So at the consummation of events let us turn to our congenial theme the horse, of which those who love him never tire.

When Yolo Maid first beat Gold Leaf and Belmont Patchen in Oakland, 2:16, 2:16 and 2:18, the grandfather of this wonderful filly was shot at Petaluma to end his misery. That a prophet has no honor in his own country, nor much profit to his owner, was exemplified in the case of Alexander (the Great). The first year Mr. Unckless bought this horse from Alexander Ely of Petaluma, from whom he was named, Alexander served many mares, a few of high, the great majority of low degree.

The five good mares not extraordinary, judging from their performances, which Alexander served in his life time are Maud by Mambrino Rattler, her dam by Old Mambrino out of grey mare by Wisconsin Green Mountain Morgan, owned by Mr. Jas. Lesrued of Stockton, who says she has paced a half mile to saddle in one minute. Next, Countess, by Whipple's Hambletonian, dam unknown; Countess is the dam of the very fast stallion Dawn by Nutwood. Next, Lady Sheppard, by Cal. Belmont, dam's breeding unknown. Next, Ida Howe by Whipple's Hambletonian. Next, Lady Button by Biggart's Rattler, dam's breeding not known.

Let us see what Old Alex., as Mr. Unckless delighted to call the old veteran, did from these mares.

First Maud to his cover produced Reliance record 5 years, 2:21 1/2 trial 2:10. This horse would have been a wonderful race horse but for a spoiled temper. Reliance has bred and produced some great colts. Adrian 2:26 among the number.

Countess did not nick as well to Alexander as to Dance, the filly born from the union was Placida, owned by ex-Chief Burke of San Francisco, a mare which could trot in 2:35.

Next from Lady Sheppard, Alexander got Nellie Patchen, 2:27, seventh heat at Oakland, driven in the race by John Splan which she won; was sold for a big price and shipped to Austria. Next from Ida Howe, Capt. Ben Harris avers that he raised a yearling as good as the best. With but little work the Captain trotted this colt on the old Cliff Horse road in 2:36, in the night by the aid of a lantern to start the colt. Unfortunately, through an accident, the colt got killed and the promise and hopes of future years were broken in one fell moment of time.

Next comes Lady Button; she is the dam of Alexander Button who, but for an accident to a front leg in colthood, would have been a bright star in the trotting firmament. Three-year-old record 2:29 1/2, four-year-old 2:26 1/2. Well nigh invincible in his three-year-old form, the beauty of this colt is that he breeds right on. Alexander Button is the sire of Yolo Maid, three-year-old pacing record 2:14, sire of Rosie Mac, five-year-old trotting record 2:20 1/2, sire of a four-year-old pacer owned by Mr. Newton of Woodland, which he assures me can pace a quarter in 33 seconds. Besides these great youngsters of known speed, a large number of colts are growing up known to be of great promise.

Not long ago I had a talk in Petaluma about the old horse. "Here," said the old gentleman Unckless, "is a grandson of Lady Sheppard by Alexander out of Gazelle, she by old McClellan out of Lady Sheppard."

"Indeed," I said, "is this the young horse you call A. P. after our friend A. P. Whitney of honored memory?" "Yes! this is the horse, a grand fellow," he replied, "19 hands high, he fills all the market, how his colts look like his half brother Alex Button!" I said, in spotting a sturdy little fellow, short backed, well ribbed up, low in the withers, deep chested, muscled well down in the thighs and pasterns, he looked full of speed and capacity to stand work. "Well, old gentleman," said your correspondent, "the old comparison holds true here. You remember the image whose 'head was of gold, eyes of jewels, body of silver, thighs of brass, legs of tin, but whose whole being rested upon feet of clay.'"

How many of the great trotting horses of America rest upon a Clay foundation. Electioneer, St. Julian, Bodine, and last but not least, your old horse Alexander.

"Yee," said Mr. Unckless, "let us hope there will be no breeding for fashion and pedigree, forget form and performance. Herein A. P., is as good a stock horse as Alex Button, give him the mares, breed the Clays to the Hambletonians, or the opposite and you will get your form and constitution; what more do you want? Yolo Maid is made of Clay."

OLEMA, Nov. 7, 1888.

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN:—On November 3d, the Gonzales Bros. agreed with me to trot Junio against Jim L. over the Bay District Track, San Francisco. The race was advertised and everybody expected the race would come off. On the day mentioned the race was called. Jim L. was on the track ready for business, when Gonzales Bros. refused to trot Junio. Now I will trot Jim L. against Junio over the Salinas track any time within thirty days, rain or shine, for one-half the gate money, the horse that wins to take all the money in question. Truly yours,

J. A. LINSCOTT.

WATSONVILLE, November 12, 1888.

When a horse has to be destroyed, a painless death way to take his life should be adopted, if such a thing is possible. Here is a method recommended by the Humane Society: Use a sponge, six inches in diameter, thoroughly saturated with the chloroform, which is dropped into a bag large enough to be drawn over the horse's nose. It is not desirable to have the bag air tight, for if so suffocation is likely to ensue. In two or three minutes the horse is unconscious, and in eight or ten minutes dead without suffering. We should add to the above that the animal should not be exposed to the air as soon as life is thought to be extinct, as in such cases they have sometimes revived. A safer way, however, is to make assurance doubly sure by lancing before leaving the animal as dead.

Lung-Sick Horses.

Pulmonary diseases of all kinds are more contagious than even experienced observers are apt to suspect. They notice the capricious character of catarrhal affections, appearing to single out special members of a household and sparing the rest—sparing some privileged individual under all circumstances of domestic arrangement, as if in-door life had little or nothing to do with the development of lung complaints. Yet the truth is that consumption, catarrh, bronchitis, pneumonia and the equivalent affections of domestic animals, are exclusively horse diseases, caused either by the habitual breathing of vitiated air, or the direct inhalation of floating disease-germs, generated perhaps in the lungs of a transient visitor, and affecting a whole household with the penalties of a neighbor's sins.

But it is true that special individuals are more specially liable to the influence of that contagion. Perfectly sound lungs would rid themselves of catarrh germs as they get rid of irritating fumes or dust, while the same germs find a receptive soil in the tissue of more sensitive lungs, only half healed from the effects of former inflammation. The victims of such affections may contract a fresh catarrh in a five minutes' interview with a fellow-sufferer, while under less untoward circumstances years might elapse without a recurrence of the trouble.

If the genesis of pulmonary affections were more clearly understood, the supposed cause would in fact, be valued as the most effective cure, and that catarrhs and influenzas are more frequent in winter than in summer, is due exclusively to the circumstance that stables, as well as houses, are more outrageously stuffy at a time when cold weather furnishes a pretext for keeping doors and windows tightly closed. Intensely cold weather may disinfect the indoor atmosphere in spite of such precautions, as in the arctic regions, where the frosts of the polar nights lowered the temperature of the Esquimaux hovels below zero, and where consequently pulmonary diseases, according to the unanimous testimony of arctic travelers, are almost entirely unknown. But our latitude enjoys neither the advantages nor disadvantages of that arrangement. Our Northwest States experience polar waves that would make a Greenland feel quite at home; but such snaps alternate with days that would give a Cuban refugee no cause of complaint, and these warm spells are the harvest-times of catarrh seeds. After a week's rain, the sun may glare out in midwinter and make the air feel positively snitry; but, according to instructions, the groom of a crowded stable continues to keep the doors carefully closed; horses, "off their feed," for some cause or other, are kept in-doors day and night, and some fine morning the zymotic hot-house proves to have developed its fruit in the form of a malignant catarrh.

The hot stench of the foul miasma den has at last overcome the disease-resisting powers of creatures whose ancestors roamed the airy highlands of the American mountains; the cells of their lung-tissue have become clogged with the constant influx of atmospheric impurities, as river-beds would become choked with the deposit of an incessant mud-deluge, and under the combined influence of heat and moisture the festering accumulations have developed the germs of morbid organisms.

With the aid of pure out-door-air, the self-regulating tendency of the animal system would promptly eject each intruder; but that air is now excluded more carefully, however; the affected animals are kept in their stables; the resources of their vitality are still further reduced by bleeding and debilitating cathartics, and under each exquisite combination of favorable conditions the development of the disease here assumes the phase of a contagious influenza, or a similar "unaccountable plague." A plague so unaccountable, indeed, on the prevalent theories (especially if its outbreak should coincide with a period of more than usually pleasant weather) that a few centuries ago its ravages would probably have been avenged by the cremation of some poor red-eyed crone, while orthodox contemporaries have to content themselves with ascribing the trouble to those pathological scapegoats, the water and the "raw March wind."

But the providence that tempers each wind to the shorn lamb could relieve the influenza patient without a special miracle; without a grain of drugs of any kind; without bleeding, and with but a moderate change of diet, fresh air alone will effect a cure, and in all but the last stages of the affection the following plan of treatment has never yet failed to answer its purpose: Whenever the value of the afflicted animal justifies the expense, remove it to a new stable, a little frame structure, warm and dry enough to resist the vicissitudes of the season, but thoroughly ventilated by an open louver over the door and an aperture at least eighteen inches square above the manger, directly in front of and on a level with the horse's head. Frame that loophole with a grooved rim, holding a sliding board, that can be raised or lowered, according to the state of the weather; but never close it altogether, except during the most violent sleet storms.

The patient will drink in the pure air with instinct-prompted avidity, and often press his nose against the aperture, anxious to make the best of a long-desired chance, even if the weather should become cool enough to make a blanket a welcome addition to his natural coat. The rule, "stuff a cold and starve a fever," would here prove a rather ambiguous maxim, since in horses malignant "colds" are often attended with febrile symptoms; but instinct may be safely trusted in such cases, and without cloying the appetite with tidbits, the patient should be given a chance to sustain the sorely needed strength of the organism with a sufficient quantum of nutritious and digestible food, say five pounds of coarse oatmeal cakes or common corn bread, two quarts of oats, a wisp of hay and a pailful of pure cold water, three times a day. Reduce or moderately increase the quantum, according to symptoms of appetite. Just before sunset open the door for at least half an hour. After the third day the discharge from the nostrils will have perceptibly decreased, and before the end of a week the progress of recovery will announce itself by an increase of appetite and general vigor. In pneumonia, protracted friction with a coarse woolen rag will relieve the stitching pain, betraying itself by contortions of the neck, restless changes of position, etc.; but even in such cases bleeding should be tried only as a last resort, since the benefits of a momentary relief are too apt to be outweighed by the subsequent debilitating reaction. The febrile symptoms will generally subside in the course of the first night, or at least of the first cool night.

A timely application of that simple air-cure will be found equally efficacious in catarrh, influenza and equine pneumonia, but for the next three months contagion should be avoided by all possible precautions. In the headquarters of long epizootics, street-car companies for instance, would find a system of compartment stables in the long run by far the most economical plan.

The Produce of Two Mares.

In response to your request for particulars concerning the breeding of my two Percheron mares, purchased in 1874, I submit the following. I have carefully looked over my books, and have made out the details so that you may see that if I am not making a fair statement you can correct the error. The estimates of present value may be high and the expense account may be low, but it is according to my judgment.

I bought a stallion in the spring of 1886 which proved a failure for the first season, only getting me one full-blood colt, and only two the second, but the past season he has been all right. In June, 1887, I bought another stallion to help me out, which was recommended as a sure horse. He served nine pure-bred mares and did not get one of them in foal, so that my crop of colts has been very small for the past two seasons, or the showing would have been much larger than it is. I have my mares mostly in foal now by using several horses.

The following is the statement in detail:

October 23, 1888.—Statement of cost, cost of keep, horse service (other than of my own horses) and other expenses of Joanne 560 and Joan 562, imported May 26, 1874, and not in foal, with the returns from same to date. I have added to the price risk in transit (as I did not insure) to actual cost; keeping of mares at thirty dollars per annum; horse service amount actually paid:

Another Way to Start a Balky Horse.

Joseph A. Titus, Esq., of Worcester, Mass., writes to Our Dumb Animals:

"I have had to do with many balky horses, and I have never known the following simple expedient to fail, provided it was not a case where some other person had been tampering with the will of the horse before I had taken him in hand. It is another method of 'Diverting the horse's attention.'"

Whenever a horse driven by myself has balked, I have got out of my carriage and gone to his fore foot, lifted it from the ground and struck the shoe a few blows with a stone or with a wrench (which I always carry in my carriage.) I have never failed to start a horse in that very simple way, and I have on several occasions had balky horses which would exhaust the patience of all former owners.

I have undertaken to start balky horses, being handled by others, after other methods of starting them had failed. I request the driver generally to move out of the way, that his voice or presence may not be recognized by the horse. I then first inform the animal, by patting him and talking to him, that there is a new man at the helm, thereby partly diverting his attention. At soon as he begins to give me his attention, I take up his foot and tap it a few times, and never failed except in one instance to start the horse, and that exceptional case was one where the horse was overloaded and knew it.

The very worst method of attempting to start a balky horse, according to my experience and observation, is that of pulling the head of the animal by the bit, and it is a method almost universally adapted by inexperienced users of the horse. The stubbornness of the horse is only increased by that method.

I offer this suggestion in the interest of your cause.

Another writer offers the following suggestion in the Boston Post: I passed a considerable block of street-cars recently to come upon the cause of it, a balky horse, at the very moment when a bystander stepped out into the roadway and, after a moment's manipulation, set the animal going as if perfectly content with his work. The success of the operation was so immediate that I ventured to ask how it was done. The man did not have the horse's look which usually accompanies the possession of stable secrets, was evidently an amateur, and did not hesitate to tell me at once that he simply placed under the horse's tongue a chip of wood that he picked from the sidewalk. "Anything else would have done as well," he went on to explain, "for it is only necessary to divert the animal's attention for a moment from his fancied grievances. I only changed the current of his thoughts. You might have argued with him all day, and he would still have held to his opinion."—Boston Post.

The English betting-ring has at last got over the difficulty of pronouncing the name of the great French mare Tenebreuse. They call her Ten Hehrews.

What the Great Drivers Have Done.

John Splan, unquestionably the most noted driver of trotters in the country so far as the public is concerned, was in Chicago not many days ago on a flying visit to some friends here, and this fact, together with the further one that the season is at an end, leads to the reflection that this has been the most prosperous season that the knights of the sulky have known for years, nearly all of them having made what is technically called "good money," while a few have laid away small fortunes as the result of the season's work.

Foremost among the latter class must be placed "Knap-sack" McCarthy, and those who should be well posted on the matter say that "Knap" will go into winter quarters a good $20,000 richer than when he started in last spring, and when the data on which this estimate is based are looked up a little it is seen that the estimate cannot be far out of the way. Of course everybody knows that the bulk of the money that fell to McCarthy this year was gathered in by that wonderfully successful mare Geneva S., her winnings in stakes and purses amounting a trifle over $14,000. Of course not all this is clear profit, as there is enough entrance money to be reduced to make quite a hole in the pile, but with due allowance made for this feature of the case there is little doubt that the mare has placed $10,000 to her credit over and above expenses of all kinds, and horsemen are well aware that this is a phenomenal showing for any trotter to make at the end of a season, and especially is it a notable one in the case of Geneva S., because she has not been called upon to beat 2:18 in winning all this money, and more than that, she is but five years old. The daughter of Mambrino Abdallah is truly a remarkable mare. Last year she came out as a four-year-old, and in a race at St. Louis for horses of that age was second no less than five times in a six-beat contest, not getting any part of the purse at that. It was her performance in this race that attracted McCarthy's attention to the mare, and whatever may be said against "Knap" by those who do not like him, it cannot be truthfully asserted that he is a bad judge of a trotter. His many years of service with Dan Maoe, a natural horseman if ever there was one, trained the young Irishman in a practical school, and thus equipped he went forth for himself well fitted to make a success of his profession. For a long time McCarthy was very conservative, not caring to take a financial interest in any of the many horses sent to him for training, and the case of Geneva S. was about the first in which he took a part in the ownership of a trotter. Seeing her go so well at St. Louis decided McCarthy that she was of the improving kind, and with this idea in mind he persuaded Andy Welch to join him in buying the mare, the purchase price being $2,500. Welch was not particularly impressed with the trade, and early last spring he sold out his interest to McCarthy, being well satisfied with a profit of $500 on his investment. That Geneva S. improved even faster than McCarthy had anticipated there is little doubt, but that as it may she was capable of a mile in 2:20 as long ago as last June, and at the Minneapolis meeting in that month beat Jack, of whose capacity much was thought by Budd Doble, the gray fellow driving her out in 2:20½. They came together again when the Central Circuit meetings were under way, and at first Jack was the mare's master. Then he beat him, and after that it was nip and tuck between them in the big stakes that were so plentiful this season. Doble was very careful with Jack, not giving him any more races than he could easily stand, but McCarthy never lost an opportunity to give Geneva S. a race whenever there was big money in sight, and two contests in one week were not thought beyond her powers. She was first in some big events, second in others, and always managed, by her ability to fight out a race at top speed, to get a good slice of the money. The other horses in the McCarthy stable were not so good as the chestnut mare, but if one takes the trouble to look over the records he will find that every one of them kept paying expenses all the time, and as McCarthy had no interest in them beyond what he was paid for training, he must have laid away a tidy sum from this source alone.

Next to McCarthy in point of winnings comes Budd Doble, and the bulk of the money that went to his credit was also captured by a five-year-old, the gray gelding Jack being the one that did the trick. Jack is probably the best advertised horse of the year, the notoriety he obtained being mostly on account of the fact that he won the $10,000 stake at Rochester, in which Guy took part, and there was so much said and done in connection with that event that the general public became impressed with the idea that the horse that beat Guy much of necessity be a wind splitter in point of speed, when the facts are that in a match race he would have no chance at all to beat Guy. Jack's best mile in a race this season was 2:19½, but it was his wonderful rating capacity and great burst of speed when tackled by another horse that made him so hard to beat. He was successful all down the line, getting money at every place he started from Cleveland to Hartford, and the aggregate of his winnings in stakes and purses is about $11,000. But it was not alone upon Jack that Doble depended for purse winners, as he and several others in his string that got the money nearly every time they started for it, notably the pacers Arrow and Ed Annan. The first named came over from California last winter with a great reputation, having done a mile as a four-year-old in 2:14, and he was looked upon as certain to be the star in the free-to-all pacing races this year. That he was not overrated was shown when he started at Detroit, and from there went down the circuit line, winning every race in which he started until Hartford was reached, when Gossip Jr., who had been getting better all the time under Frank Van Ness' careful management, beat him after a hard fight. The truth seems to be that Arrow is troubled with a weakness in one of his legs, and for a couple of weeks before the Hartford race it was not possible to give him the amount of work necessary to stay him up for a bruising contest. This was why Gossip Jr. beat him at the insurance town, and as soon as Doble saw that the jig was up he turned the Californian over to his owner, a wealthy baker in Brooklyn, and that gentleman is now jogging him on the road, where he will stay until Doble sends for him in the spring to see if he will stand keying up again. Ed Annan, the other pacer in Doble's stable that stayed there until the season was over, is about as pretty a specimen of diminutive horseflesh as was ever seen on a track, and the way the little pony will keep fighting out the heats, being just as good at the end of the fifth mile as when the first was finished! In addition to this he is the pet of the stable, not even Jack being ahead of him in Doble's affections, and to tell the truth the little son of Dauntless is about as sick as they make 'em. A pacer named after himself was also a member of Doble's string during the fore part of the season. He was a five-year-old son of the trotter Indianapolis, and was named after the great driver because Doble was a guest at a Kentucky stock farm the morning he was foaled and took such a fancy to the colt that the owner at once returned the compliment to his stallion by naming the younger after Doble, and five years later the pacer and the driver met again. Budd Doble, the pacer, was a pretty fair sort of a horse in 1887, and last spring improved under Doble's handling to such an extent that by the time Cleveland was reached he could go a mile in 2:16, which he proceeded to do in the third heat of the 2:25 pacing race there, although the effort availed him nothing, as Bessemer a son of Voltire, was in the race, and he beat Budd Doble by doing the distance in 2:15, which is the best pacing record for a four-year-old stallion. Further along the line Budd Doble was taken in hand by his owner, and paced a few races in the west and south. The king of all the sidewheelers, Johnston, was likewise a member of the Doble string, but he was barred from the free-to-all class, and as exhibitions are not in fashion nowadays at many tracks it was about all he could do to win his traveling expenses.

Jimmy Goldsmith probably ranks third on the list of winning drivers, and he has certainly made a greater advance this year in his profession than any of the others. This sudden leap into the front rank may be deemed merely luck by some people, but those who know the facts in the case are well aware that until the elder Goldsmith died the son trained no horses save those owned or controlled by his father, and this meant that they must be handled as the old gentleman directed. Although a man of marked mental powers, Alden Goldsmith was of a determined and stubborn cast of mind, and his notions as to the training of trotters, obtained years ago from Hiram Woodruff and men of his day, were not at all in accord with modern views on the subject. In other words Mr. Goldsmith trained his horses far too much, and Jimmy was forced to follow the old gentleman's directions, the outcome being that the result was not always what had been anticipated. When the young man struck out for himself he soon found that his own ideas, which had been in a measure repressed, were good ones, and the result was that in the last two years he has gone right to the front, the season just closed having been for him an exceptionally fortunate one, as he has given fast records to Gean Smith, Company, Cleo, William, and the pacer Silver Threds, and won with them a lot of races, showing in the management of his string an ability with which few people have credited him. And while writing of Jimmy Goldsmith it is proper to make some mention of his brother John, who went to California five or six years ago when he was little more than a lad, and soon developed into the best driver of his age in the land. The present season has been an unfortunate one for John in one respect, a broken leg, caused by being kicked from a sulky in June, having laid him up at a time when his skill was most in demand, but in spite of this he took Guy Wilkes after that horse had made a full season in the stud, and on short notice shaped him up for some good races against Stamboul and the other cracks of the Far West. In addition to this he fitted the three-year-old colt Direct, a son of Director, so that he has beaten 2:30 in a winning heat, and gone better than 2:25 in a heat which he lost. There is no doubt about John Goldsmith's ability. When Gold Leaf the pacer came out six weeks ago and as a three-year-old began beating 2:20, finally winding up with 2:15 to her credit—by far the best performance for a pacer of that age—Johnny had a pacer, also a three-year-old, that he thought could beat even the mark made by Gold Leaf, and he proved his opinion to be correct by driving Yolo Maid three heats the other day in 2:18, 2:14, 2:14½, giving the young pacers of the future three heats to shoot at that it will bother them some to hit. The way in which young Goldsmith handled Director when that horse was on the turf was a revelation to the older heads in the business, but they passed it off by saying that all the credit was due to the horse; that he was the best ever seen, etc., but when Johnny came along a year later and brought out Guy Wilkes, finally sending him to the stud with a record of 2:15½, people saw that the boy was a genius in the sulky. Sister and other fast ones then went the best miles of their lives under his reinsmanship, and last year he lowered the trotting record for three-year-olds by driving Sable Wilkes a mile in 2:18. Had the accident referred to above not kept him from the sulky during the greater part of the present season there would have been a lot of additions to the 2:30 list from his string, and more than one of the get of Director and Guy Wilkes would have been in the lot.

None of the prominent drivers, aside from McCarthy, Doble, and Goldsmith, have been big winners this season, although John Turner, shrewdest of them all in some respects, placed a fair amount to his credit in that little Philadelphia bank that he has patronized for so many years, all of it being won by the black gelding Spofford, that was a good one in his class this season. It was at Detroit last season that Turner, after trying a great many remedies for a lameness that affected Spofford, resolved to give the son of Kentucky Prince a few hard races and see what effect such a course of action would have. "It will show me where the lameness is, any how," said the General to a friend, "and that is more than I can tell at the present time." Like many another lame horse Spofford got better when he was given plenty of work, and by the end of the season was so good that Turner could drive him half a mile in 1:06. It was too late, however, to take advantage of this, and Turner waited patiently until this season. At Pittsburg Spofford was a good horse, and won his race there easily. Then Turner was taken sick and the horse went to Cleveland, where Gus Wilson was to jog him for Turner. Wilson, by an ill-advised trial, showed the boys that Spofford was good for a mile in 2:17, and Turner is said to have groaned in agony when the news reached him in Philadelphia. Budd Doble drove the horse for Turner until Hartford was reached, and there "the general" took the black fellow in charge and astonished everybody by winning the great event of the year on the trotting turf, the $10,000 stake for 2:20 horses, with him, besting a lot that were supposed to out-class Spofford. As a matter of fact they did, but it was Turner's wonderful knowledge of pace that enabled him to win with a horse that was not by any means the best of the party. After the race Spofford won several other good ones, and the entire lot enabled him to make Turner a little winner on the season after being so sick that he did not train any other horse. Orrin Hickok, who has for many a year joined fortunes with Turner down the circuit line, did not cross the Rocky Mountains this season, and it is just as well that he stayed on the Pacific Coast, as the only one of any account in his string has been Arab, and one good horse will not win enough, even in the free-to-all class, to warrant a man in making a journey across the continent with him. John Splan, with a reference to whom this article was begun, had plenty of fast ones this year, but there was not one in the lot that was really first-class goods. Early in the season it was thought that Gov. Hill would be able to win in almost any company, but although he was capable of half a mile in 1:05 almost any day he proved himself a soft-hearted fellow at the finish, and it was only on two or three occasions that Splan was able to get his courage up to sticking point long enough for him to beat 2:20. A more disappointing horse than Gov. Hill it would be hard to find, and Splan, who is the embodiment of hopefulness, was finally forced to admit that the bay gelding would not do when it came to a struggle for the money. There were others in his string that were disappointments, and Jane L., a mare that was brought from California last winter, was conspicuous in this category. Her performance on the Pacific Coast had shown her to be a mare of great endurance, and when Splan began to move her out a little last June he was surprised to find how well she could rate her speed, being one of the Wedgewood sort of trotters. But Jane L. fell by the wayside, as Splan put it, very early in the game, a slight sickness setting her back so far in the matter of training that it was deemed best not to start her at all this season, and she is now being driven on the road in New York city by her owner, a Mr. Maynard. With Jane L. on the retired list, Splan's string was undoubtedly weakened, but he had plenty of material left to build upon, for at that time Gov. Hill was supposed to be a pearl of great price. The pacer Argyle was also looked upon as a fair article in the free-to-all for sidewheelers, but after his races in June at Milwaukee and Minneapolis, a lameness developed which sent the gray gelding out of harness for the balance of the year, and although he is now going sound on all his legs it is not certain that he will stand training next year. Protection, that was about the least thought of in the lot that Splan started out with, proved to be about the only race horse in the party, and his improvement was so steady that from being a 2:27 horse when the campaign began he was good for a mile in 2:21 when it ended, and ended his work by heating so good a one as J. B. Richardson in a hard race of five heats over one of the Philadelphia tracks, and that the contest was for blood will not be denied when it is stated that there was nothing but the purse in sight, pool selling having been stopped by the local authorities on the previous day. Fred Folger was another disappointment. The full brother to Guy was very fast during the early part of the season, and at the time he joined Splan's stable had a record of 2:20½, made in a race a few weeks previous. But instead of improving he got "off," and was never good enough to win back his entrance in any of the stakes to which he had been nominated, so that he may be classed as a failure.

To be successful in creating a demand for his stock, a breeder must have a reputation for honesty. No matter how valuable his stock may appear to be, unless reliance can be placed on his statements he need not expect to be able to secure the patronage he seeks and keep it. He may for a time impose upon some who have not learned that his representations are not to be trusted, but he cannot do this long. Integrity, however, is not all that is required. No matter how honest a breeder may be, if he is careless, this soon becomes known, and there is the suspicion that though he believes the statements he makes to be true, there is the chance that he is mistaken. Such a reputation is fatal to success in raising pedigreed stock. Skill, too, is required, for unless a man has the ability to breed a superior class of stock he cannot hope to have a demand for his animals. It is noticeable that some men, when holding a public sale, secure an attendance and realize prices that are a surprise. A case in point was when Leicester rams from the flock of Lord Polworth were offered at a public sale recently. It is stated that "the best rams of this noble breed that can be bought for love or money are regularly found at the Kelso sales, and for many years back the Merton rams have always been regarded as 'the cream of the cream.' When their turn came to be sold last week the other rings were comparatively deserted, and the ring at which they were exposed was as closely invested by a dense host of eager buyers as ever a fortress was by a hostile force. The estimation in which they were held by those who were thoroughly competent to judge, is seen from the fact that in half an hour the twenty-eight rams had been sold for a grand total of £1 021, or an average of £36 10s. One ram brought £165. And yet the rams in question had nothing extremely captivating in their external appearance. There were many other sheep in the same field which filled the eye quite as well, alike as regards style, symmetry and substance. Indeed, it is not too much to say that had these rams been in the hands of a newly-started breeder, they would have met with very little attention."

The buyers had tested the rams from this flock, and the improvement resulting from their use made the demand for more.

Strict honesty, scrupulous care and watchfulness, and marked skill in producing superior stock may confidently be expected to bring reputation and success.—Ex.

To Cure Nervous Horses.

Finely bred, intelligent horses are very often nervous. They are quick to notice, quick to take alarm, quick to do what seems to them, in moments of sudden terror, necessary to escape from possible harm from something they do not understand. That is what makes them shy, bolt, and run away. We cannot tell what awful suggestions strange things offer to their minds. For ought we can tell, a sheet of white paper in the road may seem to the nervous horse a yawning chasm, the open front of a baby carriage the jaws of a dragon ready to devour him, and a man on a bicycle some terrifying sort of a flying devil without wings. But we find that the moment he becomes familiar with those things or any others that frighten him, and knows what they are, he grows indifferent to them. Therefore, when your horse shies at anything, make him acquainted with it; let him smell it, touch it with his sensitive upper lip, and look closely at it. Remember, too, that you must familiarize both sides of him with the dreaded object. If he only examines it with the near nostril and eye, he will be very likely to scare at it when it appears on his off side. So then rattle your paper, beat your bass drum, flutter your umbrella, run your baby carriage and your bicycle, fire your pistol, and clatter your tinware on both sides of him and all around him until he comes to regard the noise simply as a nuisance, and the material objects as only trivial things liable to get hurt if they are in his way. He may not learn all that in one lesson, but continue the lessons and you will cure all his nervousness.

That old-time campaigner Deck Wright, record 2:19½, the hero of many hard fought battles, with Lew Scott, driver, and others of that class, five or six years ago, has been sold to Texas parties for $1,900. Deck will undoubtedly hob up serenely in the spring, under a new name, in the green horse class and paralyze the natives.

Professor Wayland, dean of the Yale law school, recently shot two venerable horses that had been in his service twelve years. The animals had passed their usefulness and held too high a place in his esteem to be given away or sold. While one was shot near an open grave the other watched the proceeding, and nothing would induce the animal to come to his grave when it was his turn. He was shot in his tracks.

English Racing Gossip.

LONDON, October 20.—Both backers and layers it would seem had a bad time of it over the Cesarewitch, and there is little doubt the bulk of the winnings went across the water to France. Several backers on Monday were compelled to ask their creditors for time, and the account of one layer of odds was unexpectedly among the missing. The amount of his indebtedness reaching nearly $12,000. The sum generally credited to backers of M. Anmont's mare across the water is $100,000, and should she win the Cambridgeshire we may expect them to have another equally good haul, as they continue to pour the money in upon her, and have backed her down to first favorite from being sixth or seventh choice. Next week commences the Houghton meeting, but taking the list as it stands, it is hardly suggestive of good sport.

No racing of the week, whether at Newcastle, Croydon or Sandown Park, has been of more than passing interest, overshadowed as it has been by the approaching big event at Newmarket. At the Curragh St. Kieran further added to his laurels, which include both Railway's and Angleseys, by giving any amount of weight away and gaining one verdict by a head for the National Produce Stakes, but all, as I say, minor races sink into insignificance in the face of the importance of the coming Cambridgeshire. There will be a big field, and betting has not been so fast and furious on any race for some time. There are thirty-five horses, all of them backed at various odds from 5 to 200 to 1, and the leaders in the betting are plunged upon heavily as if there had been no Cesarewitch race to impress caution with regard to reckless betting on handicaps.

This year's race will present a very different appearance to the eyes of certain old buffers who are wont to look upon this and other similar old established features as connecting links with the old times. It is to be run on a new course, which will not finish at the top of the town. The old Cambridgeshire course finished at the top of a steep incline, three hundred yards or so from the road which runs into and directly through the High street of Newmarket. The boundary line of the counties of Cambridgeshire and Suffolk crossed the course half way up the hill, near the finish, so that the race was run partly in Suffolk and partly in Cambridgeshire. Under the new arrangement the race will in reality be run on the same course, but the start will be from a point further away, so that the finish will come at the big stand, the same as the Cesarewitch, and the hill will be altogether avoided. Heretofore there has been no stand at the finish of the Cambridgeshire, only an apology of an erection, which was so small as to be utterly unsuited to accommodate more than a thousand people, and then only for standing purposes, with neither roof nor seats on it.

The wide spreading heath at Newmarket permits of so many and such various courses that to people not acquainted with the lay of the land it is a hard task to explain where many of the races are run and for what reason it is that the finishes are at so many different points instead of at one only. There are no less than thirty different courses, all in continual use and all apportioned for ages past to certain races. Many—in fact the majority of these thirty—finish at the grand stand or within a hundred yards of so of it. To reach the remainder, some little distance, say half a mile, has to be traversed. To do this with convenience to themselves, the visitors to the races have a hack held in readiness for them, whereas, those who cannot afford the luxury of hacks, or who are timid horsemen, betake themselves to cabs and other vehicles which wait at the rear of the stand in readiness. The July course is used only at the July meeting and is exceedingly popular, from its exceeding picturesque and particularly good going. That is situated on the far side of the Heath, three miles away from the stand. There a hack is not much of a necessity.

Many are the amateur races and much is the fun indulged in during the peregrinations from the stand to the finish and back again. Sir John Astley is always a conspicuous figure at Newmarket. More noticeably so probably from the fact that he is such a broad shouldered fellow, and looks so out of place on the back of a pony hack. Not though that the hack looks in any way unequal to the task of carrying him, for Sir John's Newmarket hacks have quite a renown as models of strength and pictures of weight carriers on a miniature scale, and no one looks more at home than he cantering along with his hat on one side and the invariable cigar stuck in the corner of his mouth. Fortune has not smiled much on him of late, and for that reason his name hasn't appeared as the owner of any of the principle winners.

Mat Dawson looked a widely different individual when I met him this week, to what he usually does with his bright eyed cherry appearance. The change was so noticeable that I felt constrained to ask him "Is anything the matter, Mat?" "No! Nothing's the matter," he replied, "but he's gone!" I hadn't heard of any of the racing fraternity having died, so inquired "who?" "The old horse," came the answer; "I sent him away yesterday, sent him home." I was pleased to find no friend was dead, so proceeded to elicit particulars as to the loss of his horse. The cause of Mat's trouble was it appeared, that he had just dispatched Minting to his owner's, Mr. R. C. Vynor's place, and it had been too much for him. "He's gone out of my hands altogether, and I tell you I feel pretty bad about it, for he was just as honest and good a horse as I ever had in my stable, and you know how many I have had." Minting will stand, so Mr. Vynor announces, for the coming season at the Fairfield stud. His fee will be 100 guineas, and his subscription of twenty mares at that price is already full. It might have been wished, as a matter of sentiment, that so good a horse should not have met with defeat in his final contest, but the son of Lord Lyon and Mint Sanco takes a splendid record with him into his retirement, and though he was not equal to coping, in his three old days, with the mighty Ormoude, his own prowess in several races will be remembered for many a year to come. I can fully sympathize with Mat, who had trained him throughout his career, upon losing his favorite.

If a man wants to make a name for himself I can suggest no surer method than that he should secure a first class string of horses and race them. Assuredly a man gains celebrity more quickly on the turf than by any other means. Take Capt. Macbell. It is true he has been for many years now before the public, not only as a remarkably shrewd owner but also as a manager and trainer of horses, so naturally was celebrated. It would have been supposed that his notoriety would have extended only to racing men. Still a small paper which is neatly gotten up, called The Man of the World, or something like that, published in its last edition a very good portrait with a short biography of Captain Macbell, and lo and behold, the 60,000 copies were immediately purchased in a lot by one firm, and another edition of 70,000 had to be at once prepared for sale. Such is fame! And such it is to be a light of the racing world. I doubt if priests, politicians or public benefactors even could readily obtain such national popularity.—Anglian in the Sporting World.

Heavy Gamblers.

NEW YORK, Nov. 1.—The betting mania which has been growing steadily during the last few years, has developed into wonderful proportions since the opening of the racing season last spring, and now that the election has kindled a fever heat, thousands of dollars are bet with a freedom that astonishes the oldest observer. New York is the great centre for betting men of all kinds, and though the West produces men able and willing to back their opinions for large sums, the generally seek the metropolis as the spot to place their money. Probably the greatest sensation ever produced in the betting world was caused by the exploits of famous Billy Deutsch, the King of Baccarat. His doings abroad in 1880 have been chronicled over and over again, but the exact facts are known to very few. Deutsch was then, as now, one of the most picturesque figures on Broadway and best known of the gay young men about town. He confesses now that when he went away he was so deeply in debt that he had very little hopes of ever getting out again. But he sailed for gay Paris, landing there with $42 in cash and not a friend nearer than America. Without wasting his time he invested his money where he could get the quickest returns. It was at baccarat, the game so popular at the capital of France. He staked his all and won. Good fortune was with him, and his winnings soon went from hundreds of dollars to thousands. With that wonderful nerve which has made him famous he continued to play, always for high stakes and with the utmost recklessness. From the small beginning his exchequer soon contained the gold of French gamblers, which ran high into the thousands. He was the talk of Paris. Nothing like it had ever been known. The adulation showered upon the young American's head had little effect other than to keep him where he found the most money. One night a party of gentlemen formed a pool in the Frauco-American club with the intention of "breaking" him. The play was getting decidedly interesting, although in Deutsch's favor, when the largest and most extraordinary bet ever known was made by the players. It was for 1,000,000 francs, or $200,000 on the single turn of a card. A four spot turned up, the American won and the other party was bankrupt. The waiter brought him a Paris Figaro to wrap the money in, but Billy threw it aside saying that nothing but an American newspaper would do to carry French money. He was now the sensation of Paris. The papers called him the "King of Baccarat," and stories were published and songs sung in his praise. He pushed his conquests further. Taking a country as well as a city residence he lived like a prince. Once a week he gave a breakfast that could not be equalled even in that gay city.

His equipages were magnificent. Men of high and low degree courted his friendship. In short all Paris was at his feet. It was rapid living, to be sure, but the handsome Deutsch was equal to the occasion. And all the while his wonderful luck did not desert him. After living a most extravagant life in Paris he returned to New York with $500,000. Deutsch has had many ups and downs since then. He is not a gambler, but is always willing to make a wager where he has an even chance to win. Another notable instance of his nerve and luck was shown in the winter of 1886. With $62 50 he went to a Wall street broker and invested in Reading (railroad) margins. Twenty five dollars went to the broker for commission. He soon doubled and trebled his money. Another rise put him in possession of a few thousand dollars. Then he went to work with an energy that never tired and in four weeks he was $96,000 ahead, the largest profit off a small sum on record in Wall street. Deutsch rarely bets on elections, but this year he backed Cleveland for a good round sum.

By far the heaviest better in America is Michael F. Dwyer, the younger of the famous racing firm of Dwyer Bros. He is a quiet man of medium size, brown mustache and hair, whose manner is so retiring that a stranger would never take him for a "plunger" in almost every line. The brothers are very much alike in their domestic tastes and habits, but Phil never bets a dollar. He leaves that all to Mike, but shares the winnings and stands half the losses, no matter how great or small, and never says a word. Mike Dwyer thinks nothing of betting $10,000 on a single race. He always bets according to his judgment, whether it is on his own entry or not. The Brooklyn stables always run to win, and some of his heaviest losses have been when he has bet on an outsider and his own horse won. One of the largest bets Dwyer ever made was $70,000 to $10,000 that his horse Joe Cotton would win in a race at Sheepshead Bay in 1887. It was terrible odds to give. After a desperate race Cotton won by a nose, and the credit of saving Dwyer's money was due to the magnificent riding of Jimmy McLaughlin. He is never seen near the betting stand, doing all his business through commissioners. The money furnished for some of the big bets on the presidential election came from Dwyer. He is an ardent Democrat and will probably stand to win or lose $60,000 on the result.

"Pittsburg Phil," whose proper name is George Smith, came into notoriety last year at Chicago. He is a quiet young fellow, about medium height, unassuming in manner, and looks anything but a sportsman. He is a first-class judge of horses and relies entirely on his own judgment. Whether he wins or loses, nobody is ever the wiser. Last year was his big season. Some of his winnings in a single day were enormous, and he cleared $78,000 on the season. His style of betting is peculiarly his own. He never bets on a horse unless he fancies him, sometimes going without making a bet during the day, while again he may make but one. As a rule he doesn't bet often, but when he does it is always a good round sum. The past season has been a disastrous one to many of the followers of the turf. Phil suffered with the rest, although it is now said that his account is once more on the winning side.

The phenomenon of the year, however, is a pale little fellow, slender and sickly looking, with turned-up nose and stubby, reddish mustache. The bookmakers named him "the Ghost." His proper name is Moore and he hails from Williamsburg, where he was a builder before he began following the races for fame and fortune. He has a penchant for "low shots," which is racing slang for horses against whom the bookmakers offer greatest odds. He is so quiet and unobtrusive that it was some time before he was noticed. The success that has crowned his judgment is really wonderful. An instance may be cited where he won four or five races in one day, clearing $30,000. Moore is a terror to bookmakers who offer big odds. Before they are aware of it, he slips up, tugs at the shouter's coat-sleeve, and he looks down to see the pale, calm face of "the Ghost." He may have a $1,000 bill in his hand, or probably more. It is a cash business with him, he hands up the money and must get it in return if he wins. No correct figure can be given of his winnings. Careful estimates place it at $100,000 for the season, and that is pretty nearly right.

The political excitement has brought a nervy man from the West in the person of Col. H. L. Swords of Iowa. He is sergeant-at arms of the Republican national committee, and whether right or wrong undoubtedly bets on the figures furnished him there. The Colonel is a dashing fellow and has stirred up betting circles to a fever-heat. He was almost alone in his battle for Harrison, but he would not be bluffed down, even if it took all his financial capital. Around that famous rendezvous of politicians and betting men, the Hoffman House, he startled everybody when he first appeared on the scene and in stentorian tones said he believed Harrison would be elected and was willing to back his opinions to the extent of $10,000. The money was quickly covered, but Swords was not yet through. He had friends with plenty of money and he got it by the thousand and put it up on his candidate. The Colonel is a good-looking well-built man and past 40, a lively campaigner, but withal amiable and genial on every occasion. He has made three or four $10,000 bets on Harrison.

Another of the heavy campaign betters is John Mullins, the head of a big Brooklyn Furniture Company. He is a sharp, shrewd Irishman, of good education and address, who has accumulated a fortune in business. Although a Democrat, he takes little interest in politics until the presidential year rolls around, and then he boils over with enthusiasm. Four years ago he won a mint of money on Cleveland's election, and this campaign he is betting heavier than ever. He is a good character in his way. All he cares for is to have somebody make a bluff about betting on election. He has made wagers at such ridiculous odds that it is said, half in jest, that he could be bluffed into betting $1,000 against nothing that Cleveland will be elected. Mullins has over $100,000 on the result of the presidential vote.

When Democratic money was going begging last week for want of somebody to come to the Hoffman House and take it up, a stout man with a ruddy face swooped down with a big bundle and fairly took things by storm. He was John L. Hill of Philadelphia, politician, sport and friend of Matt Quay, commander-in-chief of the Republican forces. While he wanted odds, he was a nice man to do business with. The money was not all Hill's, but that made no difference, and he was the center of Republican admiration as long as the boodle held out. When it vanished he quietly slipped away for more, and his friends intimate that he will make it red hot for all who wished to wager against Harrison when he returns to New York.

The center around whom all the moneyed men congregated is popular Billy Edwards of the Hoffman House cafe. Almost all forfeits are posted in his hands, and thousands upon thousands of dollars are given him by men of both parties to wager for them. While they all know that Billy is a Democrat, and has bet several thousand dollars on Cleveland, all parties select him as the intermediary to arrange their wagers. Edwards was at one time a prize fighter—the champion light weight—but he retired on his laurels with a goodly sum of money. Careful real estate investments have made him a rich man. He is to-day an important feature from a money point of view in the interest surrounding the last weeks of the political contest. Fully $75,000 have passed through his hands in the last ten days in the way of forfeits and minor bets.

One of the few men who came out of the racing season ahead was ex-Assemblyman David Gideon. He is a man who bets on a large scale, owns a stable of horses and mixes in politics a good deal. His winnings on the turf the season just past amount to $75,000 and he has almost that sum wagered on the election of Cleveland. Gideon is a good-looking, rather round-shouldered fellow, about 35, and one of the most popular men in New York.

Every evening there strolls into the Hoffman House a quiet little man with a full, greyish beard. His clothes are plain and the derby hat on his head is a trifle agog. He takes no part in the loud talk, but when there is any betting going on he is ready for all comers. It is Jimmy Kelly, the well-known ex-bookmaker formerly of Kelly & Bliss. Like most of the betting men of New York, he is a Democrat, but cares little for that when he wagers his money, always going according to his judgment. This year he is putting up a great many thousands on Cleveland's election, generally giving good odds. Kelly is very wealthy, having had a most successful career on the turf and in politics.

John Mahoney and George Dalton are both famous betters, and they left no opportunity slip by to put up a wager where they think it possible to win. Mahoney has $60,000 up on the election and Dalton but a few thousand less.

M. F. Coleman, a handsome young Californian, has awakened a good deal of interest in New York by some large bets at good odds. A number of the members of the Union League club formed a pool when they saw all the money Democrats were offering and gradually reduced the odds to an even thing. Nobody hesitates to bet when the subject is broached, but the average New Yorker beats all the world with the freedom and recklessness of his wagers.

French Agricultural Statistics.

The area of France is 130,610,033 acres, of which 124,934,195 acres are arable. The percentage devoted to wheat is 47 64 per cent., rye 11.55 per cent., and maize only 3.63 per cent. There are 47 acres of wheat cultivated per 100 head of population, the population being about 39,000,000 or a little more than that of the United Kingdom, where the area devoted to wheat is only 7 1/2 acres per 100 head of population. Except the United States, France is the greatest wheat-producing country in the world; but her production is only about two-thirds that of the United States. The French are large consumers of wheaten bread, and although France produces on an average nearly 300,000,000 bushels of wheat yearly, she finds it necessary to import on an average about 35,000,000 bushels yearly in order to meet her consumptive requirements.

Those of the race-going people who argue in favor of the retention of hurdle racing because, as they claim, it possesses certain elements of danger which greatly enhance the sport, were probably gratified to their hearts desire at the result of the recent meeting of the First City Troop. To begin, Mr. Rossmore, on the horse Zanbar, was thrown heavily and carried off insensible. The jockeys McPride and Allmark got all tangled up together, and went down in a heap, but in some miraculous manner managed to escape fatal injury; and to cap the climax the horse McLaughlin was riding fell and was trampled over by the following horses. McLaughlin however, was not seriously hurt, and pluckily remounted and continued in the contest. That no one was killed outright was wonderful. All these riders were skilled ones, which simply shows how dangerous this style of racing is. It would be quite an idea in future contests of this kind to have a surgeon stationed at each hurdle and an ambulance follow the racers around the track.

CATTLE.

Holstein Cattle for Butter.

Such records have been of so much interest in this country that the breeders have given much more attention to the production of quantity than to quality of milk. They have fed and cared for their cattle to produce quantity. In consequence many have inferred that this breed is an excellent one for the production of milk and cheese, but that it is not adapted to the production of butter. Notwithstanding this impression it has now entered into a contest for the highest place as a butter breed, and the rapidity with which it is gaining such a position is a public surprise. The first step towards this is the winning of the Challenge cup offered by the Breeder's Gazette, of Chicago, for the largest thirty days' record. The contest for this cup was open to the world and to all breeds until July 1, 1883. It was won by Mercedes, a cow of this breed, owned by Thomas B. Wales, of Iowa. Her record was 99 pounds 6½ ounces. This result awakened much controversy. Demands were made for further competitive trials. Several took place in the three years following, at cattle shows in the Western States, uniformly resulting in the success of this breed. Yet they were not considered conclusive, as the best cows of other breeds were not put in competition.

At this stage of public opinion the New York Dairy Show of 1887 was conceived. Long before its opening it was widely known that one of its most important features would be a contest for the championship in butter production. This was to be decided by a twenty-four hours' trial in the hands of an impartial committee. It was entered upon for the purpose of testing the claims of the different breeds. Cattle clubs and breeders' associations were deeply interested in it, and gave every possible encouragement to the bringing forward of the best representatives of the breeds they maintained. Probably no similar contest was ever arranged and conducted on more even terms. No criticisms were made against the management up to the hour of announcing the result. The championship was won for this breed, the cow Clothilde receiving the first prize, and the three-year-old heifer Clothilde 4th, the second prize, both owned by Messrs. Smiths, Powell, and Lamb. In other departments there were contests for quality of butter, where the breeds were indirectly pitted against one another. In these contests this breed also won more than its proportionate share or prizes.

It is only within the last five years that the breeders of these cattle have been specially testing the butter capacity of their cows. Messrs. T. G. Yeomans and Sons were pioneers in this work. In tests made of their herd of less than 40 cows, 29 were found to average a seven days' production of 17 pounds 7½ ounces. Aggie, 2d made 26 pounds 7 ounces in this length of time, 105 pounds 10½ ounces in thirty days, and 304 pounds 5½ ounces in ninety days. This was followed by tests of other breeders. Mr. Thomas B. Wales also found 29 cows owned by him that made an average of 17 pound 2 67 ounces. One of these, Tritonia, at four years of age made 25 pounds 3½ ounces. Messrs. Powell and Lamb find 100 cows by them that average 18 pounds 0.06 ounces in tests of the same length of time. Among these, Netherlands Princess 4th at twenty-eight months old made 21 pounds 10½ ounces; Albine 2d, at three years old, 25 pounds 13½ ounces, while in thirty days she produced 106 pounds 14 ounces. Their cow Clothilde, at full age made in seven days 28 pounds 2½ ounces. In the small herd of Mr. Eugene Smith of Nashville, Tennessee, 7 cows are reported with an average of 17 pounds 6.57 ounces in seven days. Among other noted tests is that of Florence Herbert, owned by Home Farm, Hamston, Iowa, at 27 pounds 13½ ounces in 7 days, and that of Neiltje Korndyke, the property of E. J. Burrell, Little Falls, New York, at 93 pounds 12 ounces in thirty days.—Harper's Magazine.

Guard against Diseased Meat.

One of the ablest chemists in the southwest who has been experimenting in the laboratory upon the flesh of animals afflicted with diseases that might render such flesh dangerous when eaten, admits that most diseases are propagated by germs, which transmitted through food to the human stomach are productive of sickness and death even, says the Stock Grower.

It is impossible, he says, for anybody except experienced microscopists or chemists to detect disease germs in the flesh of animals. Take for example the cells of cancers; in order to detect them pieces of the suspected meat have to be hardened by saturation for a long time with alcohol, then impacted in wax which has been previously melted, next by the aid of the microtome the thinnest possible shavings of the flesh are clipped off. These are prepared for the microscope by a tedious process of differential staining, after which they are laid on glass slides in balsam or glycerine, covered with a very thin plate of glass or mica and the edges sealed, then a microscope possessing a high magnifying power is brought in requisition and the trained eye of the analyst can pronounce the cancer cell present or absent, as the case may be.

The brief explanation of the method for testing the presence of cancer (which requires probably the least time and is the simplest process of any of the germ diseases) will show how utterly impossible it would be for an ordinary inspector of meat to determine whether or not any given specimen of meat is wholesome or filled with the germs of some horrible and deadly disease.

As to the utility of ice to arrest the decay of meat, he says that, while the decomposition of meat would be arrested by reducing it to the freezing point, the consumption of ice-box meat should be prohibited for the reason that when placed in contact with ice before the animal heat is passed off in a natural way, it retains worn out tissues which hasten decomposition. If meat is frozen it will not destroy certain germs which may either continue to multiply while lying in the ice boxes or remain dormant until taken out. Then the decay of the flesh is extraordinarily rapid, and the tissues during the early stages of the decay, form a most fertile soil for increase and development of the disease germs.

In the consideration of all questions concerning the public health, both from a scientific and philanthropic standpoint, it is a pleasure to note the general awakening to the danger of eating diseased meat as evidenced by the preparations for the great meeting of cattle raisers and butchers to be held at St. Louis, November 20th, for the purpose of inducing legislative proceedings to secure the enactment of State laws that will require the appointment of inspectors for all towns and cities, so that the corruption or inefficiency that might attach to government appointments will be entirely obviated by the direct control of the people benefited. These inspectors will be required to examine all cattle before slaughtered, and the butchers will not be allowed to sell any meat except that which has been pronounced sound and wholesome in the living animal. This is a question which concerns every man, woman and child in the United States, and the time is not far distant when we may eat our food and drink our beverages with the same assurance of perfect purity and cleanliness that is vouchsafed to the enviable inhabitants of the most enlightened European empires, by rigid and faultless food and drink inspections. We of the Western Hemisphere have delayed action in regard to the matter of impurities and adulterations in food for a wonderfully long time, but the time will come when the mercenary individual who attempts to disguise and palm off on his fellow-beings diseased meat or adulterated food will do so at his peril, and no longer will we consign to the mysteries of the veiled grave victims who met their death by eating the meat or drinking the milk from diseased animals.

Milk or Butter.

In these days it is not a wise dairyman who keeps a cow good for milk or beef. It must be milk or beef. "Why?" Because the cow that is equally good for beef or milk has never been produced. "Why, again?" because the cow cannot, or at least has not, been bred that is capable of profitably converting all her food into milk at one time and at another into beef. "Still why?" Because the milk and the beef traits, characteristics, temperaments and form of the animals are entirely distinct. Another reason why the beef cow will not pay as a milk cow is that even supposing she would give as much and as good milk as the milk cow the expense of feeding all the extra weight—the beef points—is too great to leave sufficient margin of profit to compete with the milk cow, with her frame built especially to make milk; and just enough meat on it to enable her to do good and economical work.

It will soon be a well settled fact, I think, that another distinction must be made; and that is, in dairying the cow must be selected for milk or butter. In making butter we want just a little water in the milk and just as much butter fat as possible; and to accomplish that a small cow will answer the purpose better than a large one. We want, in this business, a machine just large and strong enough to do our work; every extra pound over that is a pound carried and fed at a loss, and the longer the cow lives the greater the loss.

Take, for instance, Jason Jones' cow, "Old Blue," eighteen years old and still at work. Suppose she weighed only 100 pounds more than necessary to do her work; if she began work at two years of age she has been carrying, and he has been feeding, that 100 pounds of meat for sixteen years. Now that 100 pounds of beef will bring, perhaps, $2, what has it cost to feed it for sixteen years, and would Jason Jones think he was well paid if he sold it for $2? I think not. Suppose "Old Blue" weighed 500 pounds more than necessary to give her owner what he considered a fair yield of milk: he would be very "blue" himself when he came to balance the account—wouldn't he? Well, the same reasoning holds good as to butter or milk that rules in milk or beef.

I think the milk cow should be larger than the butter cow, and the beef cow larger than either. The dairy breeds confirm this, as the butter breeds are much smaller than the milk breeds. Take the two representative dairy breeds, the Jersey and the Holstein—butter and milk; are they interchangeable? It seems to be the idea of some of the breeders of each that they are. If they are then all the previous time, care, skill and intelligence of the makers of these breeds goes for nothing. Some Jersey breeders are trying to boom their favorites as milk cows, and we all know what the Holstein men are doing in booming the black and white for butter. I think both are working against the true interests of their respective breeds, and of their customers as well.

From a family cow or two it may not be amiss to get a considerable quantity of good milk, but when it comes to the cow for the butter dairy skim-milk is made at a loss. We want very little water in the butter cow's milk, and not near as much water in the milk cow's milk as some of the Holstein breeders have succeeded in putting there. Who would want to try to sell in any Pennsylvania city the milk of the Holstein cow that gave over 30,000 pounds of milk in one year? If I am correctly informed the Pennsylvania law prohibits the sale, in cities, of milk having less than thirteen per cent. of solids in it. Does any one believe that the 30,000 pounds-a-year Holstein cow's milk contains that per cent of solids in it? On the other hand it would be foolish for a Jersey man to sell his milk—if it was as rich as that of the Jersey cow Jason Jones mentions—unless he got four prices for it.

There are Holsteins that give milk in large quantities, and of such quality that there would be no danger of the inspector pouring it into the gutter; and such milk, from such cows, is sold at more profit than if the cream was taken from it and made into butter. It has more water in it than the butter cow puts into hers; and as it costs money—or feed, which is the same thing—to put even water into milk, the butter dairyman cannot afford to keep a milk cow to do his work.

For two reasons is this so: First, because as just said, the water element in milk costs money; and then the extra weight in the milk cow costs more money—therefore a double useless expense is incurred in trying to have two strings to the cow bow.

No, be sure and have one good milk or butter string, then you can draw the arrow back to the head and shoot strong, with a fair prospect of hitting the milk or butter target.

Tethering Stock.

By the tether millions of acres could be utilized which are now neglected—we mean the roadsides. In most states it is unlawful to allow stock to run at large in the highway, and, as a result, the grass and bushes grow rampant and do no one any good, except here and there a tidy farmer cleans up his roadside and makes a meadow of them. This is a capital idea, and if generally carried out would make a great improvement in the looks and condition of roadsides and the fronts of farms. When not cleaned up, they may be pastured, and this can be done with a tether. The more the bushes and weeds are eaten the better. There is a little secret about tethering stock. The oftener they are moved the more they will eat. In some countries tethering is universally practiced as an economic measure. It saves land and food. When tethered an animal will eat everything in reach and bite it off close to the earth. When running loose, or at will, animals trample down and thus waste a considerable portion of the grass. This is why stabling and soiling are urged, as the system saves food. There is more work about it than by tethering. Animals should always be hitched to a revolving arm, or if to a stationary fixture, there should be swivels, so that they will not get wound up.

Fighting Range Fire in North Texas.

Who first invented this novel method of extinguishing a grass fire on the plains, fame has not heralded. Old Texans declare that when Indians killed buffalo in quantity and feasted, their fires sometimes spread, and a freshly skinned buffalo hide was used by the squaws to smother the flames. Cow-boys (the Texan ones) claim the patent for this novel method of extinguishing fires. The buffalo bunch or mesquite grass, in certain seasons, rather smoulders than blazes, but when the dry spell is continuous the herbage becomes as inflammable as tinder. To lose the naturally cured grass is to weaken the cattle, and lank stock does not winter well. The fire starts, and the cowboy, ever on the alert, sees it. A cigarette has been dropped or a spark from a fire has done the business. It is not a section of country abounding with water, hose, or steam fire-engines. The apparatus for extinguishing the fire is peculiar, and near at hand. Crack! goes a cow-boy's revolver, and knowing exactly how to shoot, a steer falls, with scarce a struggle, and is dead. Instantly a half-dozen cow-boys gather around the dead animal, and they proceed to flay the steer in the most expeditious manner. It is not a skin for the tan-yard to be nicely taken off, but there is left adhering to the hide fully four inches of the meat. It is a very heavy hide. Now two cow-boys tie the ropes to the pendulous shanks of the hide, take a twist of the ropes around the horns of their saddles and spring on their ponies, and plunging spurs into their mounts, off they start at a mad gallop, dragging the hide over the fire and putting it out. Other cow-boys trail along and extinguish what little fire is left.

It is hard work for the wiry little horses that scorn the plain. Just as soon as the horses show signs of tire, the riders jump off and mount fresh animals. At breakneck speed many miles of fire are followed. The plucky little beasts are not spared, and what they may want in bottom is made up in gameness. A "civilized" American eastern horse could not do such work, for never could he be made to face the burning prairie. Mr. Remington, in his realistic sketch, shows how, when there is a strain on the rope, the cow-boy always throws himself on the opposite side, so as to counterbalance the pull. The public who have been so often treated to the picture of "a prairie on fire," will not be satisfied unless the artist depicts a scene lurid with flames, which bear a certain family resemblance to the burning of Moscow. Such, however is not the case. Actually it is a low, ugly, sinister fire, where the flames never are high, though the smoke is dense. Of course if there is timber, then there is a certain amount of grandeur about the conflagration. Mr. Remington pictorially puts exact conditions before readers, and supplements them by writing: "A prairie fire does not burn upon the air, as romantic people have long liked to think it does."—Harper's Weekly.

Getting all the Cream.

Comparative tests of cream raising are frequently published in which it is shown that more cream has been obtained by one method or apparatus than by another. Extravagant claims of manufacturers are made in their circulars, says F. W. Mosely in the Stockman. Where people are properly educated on the subject of cream raising, these absurd claims will go in one ear and out the other.

Milk set when first drawn, or at a temperature of 95 or 98 deg., will yield all its cream as soon as or very soon after its temperature has been reduced to 45 deg., if the reduction be quickly made. If there is any process, method, apparatus or device by which more than all the cream can be obtained, it is the duty of agricultural and dairy papers to ascertain what that process is, and let the world know it just as soon as they can.

A comparative test amounts to but little, if it does not show that the process or apparatus producing the most cream obtains it all. However, I do not remember ever to have seen in any published statement of comparative tests the additional statement that pains was taken to demonstrate that all the cream was obtained by the successful competitor. To demonstrate the value of any system of cream raising, a comparative test is not necessary, nor is it of any value unless the additional feature above mentioned is taken into consideration.

To determine whether all the cream has been obtained, especially where the cold deep setting or Swedish system has been used, the creamed milk should be heated up to a temperature of 98 degrees or 100 degrees, and reset—the temperature being quickly reduced to 45 degrees. If no cream comes to the surface it will be pretty good evidence that it was all obtained at first setting. There will nearly always be a slight scum that will come to the surface at such a time, but it will not be cream. There will be no butter in it.

A number of years ago Samuel E. Lewis, Oxford, N. Y., told me he set 400 pounds of milk in accordance with the cold deep setting system, and after taking off the cream decided to make a test to determine whether this scum he had always noticed at second setting contained any butter. With that quantity of milk he succeeded in getting enough so he could churn it. After exhausting all efforts with the churn he failed to obtain any butter. This was an opportunity to demonstrate a fact which could not be demonstrated where a small quantity of milk had been set. Mr. Lewis satisfied himself that there is no value whatever in the slight scum that rises at the second setting of milk, where milk has once been properly set, and the temperature quickly reduced to the proper point.

Any one who has experimented in this direction will readily notice the difference between real cream and the scum mentioned. Any one who is raising cream for butter or other purposes should never be satisfied until he has demonstrated to a certainty that he is obtaining all the cream there is in his milk.

The subject of pure water for stock has been fully discussed, and good air in the stables should be more talked about. A stable may be open to all the world, and yet be so filthy as to be a nuisance and a menace to health. A stable can be made close and yet have good, pure air by means of power ventilation. Then if the floors are made water-tight, absorbents used, a little land plaster sprinkled upon the floors every day, and the stable thoroughly cleaned every day, and half cleaned at night, there will be no trouble on this score. The close alliance of milk and blood shows that to get the former all right, the cow must have a full supply of good blood. The blood is purified in its passage through the lungs, and this requires pure air. The air of a stable charged with ammonia, and all sorts of villainous smells, cannot be a perfect purifier of the blood, although it may not vitiate it enough to cause the death of the animal by blood poison; but it will affect the milk, and this is "why" in addition to all this "preaching, praying and exhortation" we make the plea for better air, as well as intelligent care for the winter milk cow.

San Francisco, - Saturday, Nov. 17, 1888.

Fall Race Meeting.

While not up to the mark of many of the lovely November days peculiar to California, Saturday last was not on the whole unfavorable. A trifle chilly, perhaps, as the afternoon wore, and there were clouds which at intervals obscured the sun. The fog was drifting over the summits of the hills to the south of the course, though at times Mount Tamalpais was radiant with the sunbeams and the reflected glory went a good way in adding to the cheerfulness of the scene. And a truly cheerful scene was presented when the bell gave the signal for the horses to appear for the first race. Within the enclosure in the space allotted for carriages, there was an assemblage of people, horses and vehicles which could not fail to attract notice. From the Santa Anita Tally-ho, with its quartet of browns, gold-mounted harness, elegantly dressed ladies, wreaths and ribbons, to the trotting wagon and still lighter roadcart; nearly every style of equipage was represented. The tally-ho, four-in-hands, heavy carriages, dogcarts, etc., may be given the pride of place by those who are taken up with foreign adjuncts to a race meeting, but in our opinion the most beautiful by far of all turnouts are a pair of highly bred trotters and a road wagon constructed by one of our best makers.

Rather out of place, however, when a part of a show on the inside of a race course, the more gorgeous affairs overshadowing them in that position.

Beauty and splendor of attire was not confined to the occupants of the carriages. Beauty enough on the balconies and stand "to make the world to dote," and toilets which enhanced the loveliness; the most effective being those which gave face and form the first place in the picture, and a knot of flowers on the bodice a fitting accompaniment to the attractions of the wearer. There was a swaying multitude on the slope between post-sellers and betting stands. Long before the horses for the first race were put in the hands of the starters, considerable pushing had to be done to get a position to catch the eye of the auctioneer, or gain proximity to those who were shouting the rates.

There were eleven starters in the introductory, which is a large field for this country, though until the horses came on the track Santa Anita's Los Angeles was a big favorite with the heaviest betters. Up to October 1st she had run eighteen races, ten of which were victories, and as there is generally a disposition to underrate the powers of horses which have only taken part in home races, and then the long journey which Los Angeles had not time to fully recover from, was rated too lightly. Lively work for poolsellers and bookmakers and for $100 on Los Angeles, there was only $160 on all the others. Daisy D. was well thought of by shrewd observers, while there was a disposition to back the field which had the long number of seven to fall back upon.

The course was in good order, not quite so fast, perhaps, as it is at times but in such shape as to please the trainers.

"Preliminary canterers" are not so much in vogue here as in England, the "warming up" substitute being as a rule done at a faster pace than cantering. There were anxious people watching the preparatory work, eager to obtain a line for further investments, or to justify those already made.
What little difference there was from the rates heretofore given was a slight retrogression on the part of Los Angeles a corresponding appreciation in the stock of the others.

As the starting post was only 100 yards up the stretch from the judges' stand, a good view was obtained, and though it was a pretty spectacle when they were marshalled at the starting post, the delay caused by fractiousness of a few was doubly annoying to the spectators from being so close at hand.

Fully half an hour was wasted in the endeavor to get them in line, the start, however, being a tolerably fair one, Daisy
D. having a slight advantage.

THE RACE.

They were fairly in their stride as they came past the stand for the first time, Daisy D. being a length in the lead, the others a neck behind. Rounding the turn Canny Scot bad his head on the leaders' quarters, before reaching the quarter he was at her girth. The pace was very fast, 25 seconds from stand to quarter. Still faster along the back stretch, the colt having gained an inch or two on the straight work. Fifty seconds was the mark from stand to half, though this fast pace did not seem to tell on Daisy D., and she still held the lead without giving any evidence of coming back.

The favorite, Los Angeles, had been kept in the bunch until the half mile post was passed, when she bettered her pace, and so did Notidle, in fact, it was difficult to award the positions as they came around the further turn. Owing to the angle it always seems as if the rear horses were gaining at this point when the view is taken from the press stand, and when the homestretch is reached it is still more difficult to be exact. Still it was evident that Daisy D. had not surrendered, Canny Scot had dropped, and the contest laid between the leader Los Angeles and Notidle so far as could be told from the stand. Susie S. was coming and so was Laura Gardner, but the final struggle was between Los Angeles and Susie S. for second place. Although a close finish the first place was never in jeopardy, Daisy D. winning by a length over Susie S., who was a short neck in advance of Los Angeles. A fast race from start to finish, the last mile having been run in 1:42 according to a majority of those who "started and stopped" at the wire.

Paris Matrons paid $19.

The Ladies' stakes for two-year-old fillies found four starters, of which Palo Alto had in Faustine and Shannon Rose, L. U. Shippee's Picnic and Thomas' Lady Helen. Palo Alto was thought to have a sure grip on the stakes with Faustine and the stable brought $100, Picnic going at $17, and Lady Helen at $15. The distance was three-quarters.

Faustine got much the best of the start, while Shannon Rose got much the worst of it. Before they reached the half Picnic was running neck and neck with Faustine. Shannon and Helen coming together two lengths back. The leaders went together at a smart pace around the turn, and Helen closed up to them, Shannon falling back. After the three-quarters it was the same thing, but half way down the straight Picnic forged ahead and Lady Helen closed up to Faustine.
In these positions they finished, Picnic getting first by half a length, and Lady Helen snatching the place from Faustine by a head. Time, 1:15. Again had the favorite lost, and the talent were wild.

SUMMARY.

ded; three-quarters of a mile,

By this time a cutting wind was coming over the hills and the sun was hidden behind the fog, making it decidedly chilly, but the crowd held on. The third event was the Bay City stakes, for all ages, one and one-half miles, with six starters—Carmen, Moses B., Welcome, Brutus, Mollie Mc-Carthy's Last and Notidle. Brutus was named to win with Mollie's Last for the place, and the pools were: Brutus $100, Mollie's Last $45, and the field $42.50. But there was another surprise. Finigan sent the horses off after some scoring to a good start, and Moses B. jumped to the lead, with Notidle after him and Brutus in third place. When they came down the straight the first time it was Moses B., No-idle, Brutus and Mollie's Last, and the first time under the wire Moses still lead with Mollie's Last in second place. As they went around the upper turn Notidle got to second place again, Brutus third and Mollie's Last in a pocket. The run up the backstretch was lively, Moses holding his lead, No-idle staying well with him for second place, Brutus and Mollie's Last running together in third place, Carmen fourth and the other trailing away back. These positions were unchanged on the turn and into the straight. Half way down Brutus made his play under the whip, but quit. Then almost at the pole Monahan, on Mollie's Last, gathered the filly together and shot her under the string a head winner from Moses B., Notidle finishing third. It was the best race of the day. Moses B., set the pace from start to finish and set it much faster than anybody had an idea he could go for that distance. It was the best thing he ever did. Monahan did a clever piece of riding on Mollie's Last, and gauged his finish in a way that would have done credit to Fred Archer.

The time was 2:37.

SUMMARY.

Carmen, Welcome and Brutus ran unplaced.

With still another favorite beaten the talent were all at sea. A first day and a winning field do not often go together and the three races were a succession of surprises. As a last resort the boys plunged heavily on the closing event, the Record stakes for three-year-olds and upwards, five furlongs.
Geraldine, Grisette, Applause, White Cloud, Susie S., Sleepy
Dick, Al Farrow, and J. M. R. were the starters. Geraldine sold for $220, Grisette for $100, Susie S. for $55, and the field for $55. By the time the horses got to the post on the backstretch their colors were hardly distinguishable from the grand stand. When the flag went down after a lot of tedious scoring, Sleepy Dick showed in front, while Grisette was left at the post. Sleepy led to the straight, with the others bunched at his heels and going fast. Well into the straight Geraldine broke from the pack and began her running, overhauling Dick in a few strides and finishing first with a rush, Al Farrow second.

Finigan, starter.

Thursday, the second day of the Blood Horse Association meeting was murky and gloomy, and everything but a good racing day, but there was a good crowd out nevertheless, and some good racing was given them. Every event was an interesting one.

The initial performance was the selling purse, $350, for all ages, three-quarter mile heats, in which the starters were L. A. Blasingame's oh Oro, 4, carrying 93 pounds, with Hazlett up; F. E. De Poister's ch Blackstone, 4, 94, Hitchcock up; Elmwood Stables' ch m Nerva, 5, 108, Hill up;
B. C. Holly's ch m Nancy, 3, 105, Winchell up; Thos. G.
Jones' ch g Kildare, 3, 92, Clay up; D. J. McCarthy & Bros., ch g Tom Daly, 5, 95, Cooper up; A. Y. Stephenson's ch m Avondale, 6, 107, Hennessey up, and G. N. Trahern's oh m Blue Bonnet, 4, 97, Dennison up.

mento, and the crowd favored her to win and liked Kildare for the place. The bookies offered 7 to 5 against her to win, and 2 to 1 against Kildare, the others going low down, 30 to 1 being offered against Oro, 6 to 1 Nancy, 8 to 1 Nerva, 40 to 1 Blackstone, 15 to 1 Tom Daly, and 6 to 1 Avondale. A quiet tip named Nancy to win, and she found a few backers at long odds. She was an unknown, but report said she was going well and was in for it. When the horses came to the post, hardly anybody noticed a long, rangy bay who was down on the entry list as Oro, but as they saw Winchell on Nancy, the tip gained strength and the talent began to back it.

Henry Welsh and Thos. Meagher were at the starting post, and sent them away to a good go, Blue Bonnet getting a slight advantage. She did not hold her lead, and Nerva showed her colors in front, closely followed by Kildare, Nancy in third place, and Blue Bonnet at the head of the pack. At the half Kildare and Nerva were going together and setting a lively pace, Nancy a length back, and Blue Bonnet leading the herd two lengths away. The positions were hardly changed as they swept around the turn, but as they entered the straight the herd closed on the leaders and the hunch started for the run in with Nerva a length in the lead.
The pace was too fast for her and she quit. Then the pack scattered and the whips began to fly. Nancy responded gallantly to Winchell's efforts and broke away from the crowd coming home a length winner in 1:16, Kildare getting the place, Blue Bonnet third, Oro fourth, Blackstone fifth, Tom Daly sixth, Avondale seventh and Nerva eighth.

Everything was Nancy after the heat. When the auction pools opened she was selling for $60 with the whole crowd in the field at $25. The bookies offered 2 to 5 against her, Kildare going at 4 to 1, Avondale 6 to 1, Blue Bonnet 6 to 1, Nerva 15 to 1, Oro 40 to 1, Tom Daly 40 to 1, and Blackstone 60 to 1. The talent called it a "cinch" for the mare.

As they came out for the second heat Nancy was game in appearance and had cooled out well. They got a straggling dash after a lot of bad breaking away and Blue Bonnet showed in the lead, with Kildare and Nancy at her heels. At the half it was the same thing, except that the leaders had drawn away from the crowd two lengths or more. On the turn Nancy fell away slightly, and at the head of the straight Oro left the crowd and shot past her into third place. The clip for home began with Blue Bonnet in the lead. Kildare second, Oro at the pole in third place and Nancy a length behind him. When the whip began to play, Kildare ran up to Blue Bonnet's flank and Oro stayed with him. Nancy made her spurt for the lead under the lash, but she swerved in to the pole and quit. Oro laid at Kildare's flank until they got to the drawgate, when Hazlett leaned forward and with a gallant effort landed him under the wire a good length and a half in the lead. Blue Bonnet running second and Kildare third. When Nancy went to pieces the crowd rushed past her, and the best she could get was sixth place.
The time was 1:16. Oro won with such apparent ease that the crowd stared aghast, and the betters made a combined rush for the stands to hedge out. The short end men were jubilant.

This time in the pools it was Oro everything and Nancy nothing. The hedgers plunged heavily and bought Oro as fast as the tickets could be written, at $110 to $55 for Nancy.
Two to one against Nancy was offered in the books and even money on Oro. The decisive heat was interesting on account of the heavy money up. Henry Welsh held the red flag and tried hard to give them an even send-off. Oro took it into his head to snik, and commenced a quarter of an hour bucking and breaking away with his rider. Winchell was working for the start, but when the flag fully went down Nancy was left by a length. Oro cut out fast running from the start, and Nancy had a deal of trouble staying with him.
They got to the half almost together, and around the turn.
Nancy was at Oro's flank. In this position they got into the straight, but Nancy was already in trouble. Winchell sent her along at a sharp clip in an effort to catch the gelding but she was tired, and when Winchell gave her the whip, she quit dead tired, and Oro galloped in an easy winner of the heat and race. Time 1:17.

The winner was bid in by his owner for the entered price of $500.

The second event of the day was the Vestal stakes for three-year-old fillies (foals of 1885), one mile and a quarter, with J. B. Haggin's br f Loveknot, ridden by Winchell and Santa Anita Stables' ch f Los Angeles, ridden by Monahan, as starters. The weights were 115 pounds, and unusual interest was taken in the event on account of the prominence of the stables represented. In the betting Los Angeles was a decided favorite, $100 to 22 for Loveknot in the auction pools. The books opened and closed with 1-6 on Los Angeles, and 1-1 on Loveknot.

Walsh sent them off without trouble. For the first quarter they ran together at an easy pace, with Loveknot at the pole, but going into the turn Los Angeles put on a spurt and took the lead, leading by a length. In these positions they went up the backstretch and into the turn, when Loveknot crowded up and the fast running began. Los Angeles was never headed however, and won hands down in 2:11½, redeeming her performance of Saturday.

SUMMARY.

SAME DAY.—The Vestal Stakes, for three-year-old fillies; $25 each, with $50 added; $100 to second. One mile and a quarter. Santa Anita Stables' ch f Los Angeles, Glenelg-La Polka, 115 lbs. Monahan 1
J. B. Haggin's br f Loveknot, Kyrle-Myl Love, 115 lbs. Winchell 2

The Betting—Auction pools: Los Angeles $50, Loveknot $11. Book betting: Los Angeles 1-5, Loveknot 7-1.

Probably the best and most exciting event of the day was the Equity stakes, for two-year-olds, $400 added money, three-quarters of a mile. The starters were Thos. G. Jones' br g Jackpot 107 pounds, Hill up; Maltese Villa Stables' b c Flood Tide 115, Kelly up; Jas. Garland's b g Wanderer 107, Winchell up; Santa Anita Stables' b c Ganymede 115, Monahan up; same Stables' ch c Caliente 120, Lloyd up; and Theo. Winthers' ch c Czar 115, Carille up.

The Czar, from his excellent showing as a yearling and the fact that he was a full brother to the great Emperor of Norfolk, was made a favorite in the betting. He looked every bit a winner when he came to the post. Flood Tide and Ganymede were about equally fancied for the place. When they were sent off, Czar, Jack Pot and Caliente jumped away together, but half way up the backstretch the Czar began to draw away, and passed the half a good length in the lead with Jack Pot in second place and Caliente third. Around the turn the Czar made his lead two lengths, and as they got into the straight he looked a sure winner, with the crowd all in a bunch three lengths behind time. Ganymede and Jack Pot each made play for him and left the pack. With these two running in second place they came to the draw-gate, when Wanderer, a rank fielder, broke away from the herd and made a grand rush, passing Ganymede and Jack Pot, and sweeping up to the Czar. He crowded closer to the leader, gaining at every leap, and finished nose and nose with him at the hottest kind of pace amid the excited yells of the crowd. The time was 1:15½. Men on both sides were claiming the race, when the judges announced it a dead heat, giving third place to Flood Tide. There was a great hurrah from the crowd when the result was given out. It was announced that the run-off would be made immediately after the last race, which was a purse of $350, for all ages, Welter weights, one mile and an eighth.

For the event nine starters came to the post, Moses B., Jack Brady, Naicho B., Index, Black Pilot, Welcome, Elwood, Grisette and Notidle. Grisette and Moses B. had about an even thing in the betting as favorites, selling at $40 each to $35 for the field. Notidle was mentioned for the place. For the first eighth they ran in a bunch, with Naicho B. nose showing in front. Around the lower turn it was Naicho B., Welcome and Moses B., with the pack coming well together. Index made a spurt on the turn, and when they flashed past the quarter post he was leading by a length, Naicho second and Moses third. Up the backstretch Naicho closed up and ran with Index in the front, and Moses fell back with the pack. In this position they went into the upper turn where Grisette left the pack and established herself in third place. At the head of the straight Naicho had a good lead, Index and Grisette in second place, and Moses leading the crowd three lengths back. When well straightened for the fast pace home, Moses began his running, cutting out Index and Naicho B. in a few leaps. At the drawgate he was a head leader, and won by half a length, with Grisette second and Notidle third. Time, 1:58½.

By the time the Czar and Wanderer came out for their run-off, it was so dark that the horses could not be seen when they took their positions at the post, but there was a pile of money on the race and the crowd wanted it decided. The boys in the press stand were just able to see the flag go down but they could not get a glimpse of the horses until they were in the straight; then it was seen that the Czar was in the lead and he won easily by two lengths in 1:16. The Czar's rider said he took the lead at the jump, and held it all the way.

Trotting at Oakland.

The two races at the Oakland Trotting Park November 9, gave satisfaction to the small number in attendance and better satisfaction to the short-end pool-buyers, as the favorites were beaten in both races.

The first race was a trot, best three in five, for a purse of $500, between Hidalgo, Perihelion and Argent. Pools on the first heat sold as follows: Argent $20, Hidalgo $9, and Perihelion $4. Hidalgo took the lead and held it with ease. The drivers of the other two horses did not seem to care much for the heat, and made no attempt to push the leading horse until the stretch had been reached, where a little crowding was done, Hidalgo taking the heat in 2:29½.

Argent was still a big favorite, selling for $40 against $10 on each of the other two. In the second heat Hidalgo showed his breaking qualities, and had just got started with a good lead at the pole when he broke. Argent captured the lead, and just as he did Perihelion made a skip and lost his feet for a second or two, which gave Argent enough lead to carry him safely home, leading Perihelion four lengths at the finish and winning the heat in 2:27½.

A few pools were sold, Argent still favorite at $20, Perihelion $12 and Hidalgo $2.

Hidalgo had the best of it by long odds in starting in the third heat, but lost his feet at the quarter, and was quickly passed by Perihelion, and led the procession all the way home. When the leader got within winning distance he made a break that came within an ace of losing him the race, as the other two horses were close on his wheel. His break was catching, as the others took it up and came under the wire breaking. Time, 2:27½.

The bell rang for the go on the fourth heat, but before they had gone twenty yards Hidalgo and Argent fell all to pieces, and it looked as if they never would settle down to business. Perihelion in the meantime was opening up a gap that neither one of them could close, and won an easy heat in 2:27½, Hidalgo distanced.

The fifth and last heat was short and sweet, Perihelion rushing to the front and working ahead to the finish, winning the heat and race. Time, 2:30½.

SUMMARY.

Perihelion 3 2 1 1 1
Argent 2 1 2 2 2
Hidalgo 1 3 3 dis
Time—2:29½; 2:27½; 2:27½; 2:27½; 2:30½.

Another trot with three good starters—Junio, Bay Rose and Allo—came next on the programme. It was down on the books for Junio to win, and his friends backed him accordingly, paying $20, while the friends of Bay Rose and Allo paid $9 and $7 for the chance of winning the $20. The heat from start to finish was a very close one. Allo had the pole, but being slow in making the first turn, was cut out by Bay Rose. Junio lost his chances by making two bad breaks, one at the start and another near the three-quarter pole. Allo tried very hard to push ahead of Bay Rose, but his gain only being at the rate of an inch a mile, he had to be satisfied with being beaten by the Rose by not over two feet. Time, 2:24½.

Junio pools, before the second heat, were still in demand at $20, his backers expecting big things of him in the next heat. Allo and Bay Rose selling at $6 each. The start in this heat was a bad one, Bay Rose not coming up in time, the other horses getting away to the front before his driver realized that the bell had rung to go, and to make matters worse he made a break. Allo made the best of it and stuck to the pole, just keeping far enough ahead of Junio to be comfortable. Junio made one hard try on the stretch to get ahead, which cost him a break and a good whipping, Allo winning in 2:24.

No pools were sold on the third heat, the money seemingly having given out in the crowd. Allo had the lead to the turn, but made his usual break and lost the lead to Junio. Bay Rose taking second. These positions were held to the half, where Allo pushed to second but made a mistake, as Bay Rose crowded him against the fence and held him there just behind Junio, and so cooped in that there was no chance for him to win. The three horses came down the stretch in a bunch, Junio having only a half length the best of it, which he strove to hold, but Bay Rose wanted the heat, and as he had Allo boxed, only kept him there until he had got to where he could afford to take the chance on letting him out, and that was within fifty yards of the wire. He began letting out a few links, and when Junio got to the wire he was beaten by a neck. The heat is considered one of the best ever driven on the Pacific Coast. Time 2:25½.

The fourth and last heat was also a fine race, from start to finish, Bay Rose losing pole to Junio at the first turn, with Allo close on his wheel. Bay Rose taking the outside at the three-quarter turn, got up enough speed to get to the front. Allo tried to overtake him, but only succeeded in passing Junio, Bay Rose holding his position to the finish, winning heat and race in 2:25.

The races at Oakland Trotting Park, Wednesday, November 14, were poorly attended, the gloomy appearance of the weather having the effect of keeping many people away from the track. Betting was very dull and the races were without excitement.

The first race was for a purse and stakes of $300, best three heats in five. Of the three horses entered Bonanza was the favorite and won the last two heats easily.

The first heat was a close one, and Bonanza came in one length ahead of Cricket. The second was led from the start by Oneca, but Cricket came in a good second. Cricket's turn for first place came in the third heat, but the fourth and fifth heats showed Bonanza to be the best horse, he leading all the way. Appended is the summary of the race:

J. Beach's b s Oneca Beach 3 1 2 3 2
I. Ayers' b m Cricket Hines 2 2 1 2 3
Time, 2:31, 2:29½, 2:31½, 3:34½, 2:35½.

The second race was for a purse of $200, best three in five heats. Balkan and Princemont were entered for this match. Princemont won the first three heats, though he broke many times around the track in the first one. In the other two he pulled away from Balkan at the first quarter and held a position of about eight lengths ahead all the way round. These two horses are three years old each and they made a favorable impression by their actions in the race. Following is a summary of the race:

The Value of Catalogues.

To a breeder, the value of a good and carefully compiled catalogue of his stock can scarcely be over-estimated. It is a convenient method of declaring to the public the theories which he holds, and the degree of success that follows his practice. In no other way can he so readily inform possible buyers of the number and character of the stock he has for sale; in no other way can he so concisely set forth the facts that establish the value of their blood-lines.

It is not an easy task to compile a book which will properly exhibit the points of the stock or the value of their pedigrees. A wide acquaintance with the most prominent lines of blood is not enough. Whoever would compile a list of pedigrees in such shape as to be valuable both to the breeder and the owner of the stock in question, must keep fully abreast of record-makers and their histories, week by week, and know the benefits and disadvantages of the various forms of exhibition now in use.

Besides knowing how to display the facts, too, the catalogue must know how to ascertain facts. Many people regard this work as merely mechanical use of the accepted stud books and accepted records, but it is far more than that. Catalogue-making calls for intelligence, honesty, industry and patience.

Some owners of stock farms wait until all their colts are foaled before issuing their catalogues for the year. Others publish early in the spring, issuing a small supplementary list when the youngsters have all arrived. Others still prefer to have their catalogues out on or before the first of January so that they may attract the attention of the large and increasing class of buyers who prefer to make the additions to their stud before the opening of the breeding season and the rush of training work.

In the leisure days of winter catalogues are more carefully and intelligently studied, and the breeder who, at this season sends out an attractive pamphlet, will probably get a quick and profitable return.

The Haggin Sale.

The valuable mares which Mr. Haggin will sell next week, deserve the attention of buyers. Not only are they well bred and closely related to successful racers, but they have been stunted to the best stallions at Rancho Del Paso. The get of Sir Modred, Darebin, Hyder Ali, Longfield, Warwick or Milner, from such mares as those to be offered would be a valuable acquisition to any stock farm, and there should be a large attendance of those interested in running stock.

Thoroughbred Sale in Kentucky.

Messrs. Bruce and Kidd will sell at Lexington, Kentucky, on November 21st, the great Kinloch stud, and on December 14th and 15th they will sell a large number of exceedingly well bred animals, by Longfellow, Ten Broeck, King Ban, Hindoo, Billet, Glenelg and other noted sires, beside all the yearlings and stock in training belonging to the Fleetwood Farm.

The managers at Clifton, N. J., have decided to charge an entrance fee of $5 for the $250 purses and $10 for the $500 purses. By this means it is expected that the field of starters will be reduced.

At Council Bluffs, Iowa, on Saturday last, the two-year-old Edward Rosewater was driven in the 2:23 class to lower his own record of 2:22. He won the race in straight heats in 2:27, 2:20½ and 2:24.

In a recent interview at Nashville, Tenn., in regard to Eastern racing the past season, Starter J. F. Caldwell expressed himself as follows: "Firenze is the best piece of horse-flesh I ever laid my eyes on, barring nothing. I have seen her at times when she could have beaten Hindoo, Luke Blackburn, and any crack you could name. She is simply snperb; at her best she was invincible. This seems a broad assertion, but it is sincere. I have never seen her equal. As to jockeys, Shelby Barnes is the best light-weight I ever saw. The nerve and judgment of that little negro are wonderful, he never loses his head, no matter where you place him. Undoubtedly he is the best in his class. There's this about him, too, his habits are excellent. He never shoots craps, drinks or loafs about saloons or gambling dens, and his honesty is unimpeachable. When he finishes a race he goes to the stable, minds his own business, and is never found blustering around."

CHAPTER I.

In which may be found mention of some things unusual and of some things commonplace.

There was a period in the history of literature when a writer could unburden his mind and get on good terms with his readers, through the medium of an introductory chapter; but of late, whether because the writers lack wit, or the readers are wanting in time, no such cozy arrangement exists; and the poor scribe like myself, who would often delight in wandering into the realm of discussion must eschew lay aside his desires and conform to custom. For instance it is now in my mind to picture a rainy morning of the year 1883: one that did not come when its time was, but waited until Friday, the fourth of May, and then poured down as steady and drenching a set of showers as ever fell from the black clouds of January or December.

Now with this morning I am particularly in love, chiefly because it is out of the common and has strength to declare itself. Numerous comparisons, similes and lessons born of its erratic behavior crowd upon me and pray for expression; but resting perfectly assured as to how completely I lack the genius of a Taylor, or a St. Augustine to fire my thoughts, I dare not let them speak lest what seems sublime reflection might present itself as commonplace moralizing. To simple facts I pin my faith and will let them tell a tale after their own fashion. All this delightful morning, then, there might be heard in the redwood forest that bordered both sides of the San Lorenzo above Boulder Creek, the low murmur of rain drops as they fell continuously on the nourished and nourishing earth. And the stream itself, which only yesterday, had seemed to have exchanged its winter turbulence and thickness for the green clearness and musical ripple of springtime, was again swollen and rapid. Strongly it swept seaward, washing up over the round, gray boulders and oddly twisted roots of its banks, carrying twigs, leaves and broad, yellow bands of mud impetuously forward, and opening its arms wider and wider to the full, round drops that dimpled its broad pools, as though trying to express delight at their coming. Nor was the stream alone in its gladness; the weedy ferns curling so curiously above the thick mold, the dainty oxalis hiding where low boughs of the azaleas threw broken shadows, even the strong woody azaleas themselves and the harder forest trees all looked revived by the unexpected and freshening draught. And when, about two hours beyond noon, the clouds began to roll from the westward and the sun threw long shafts of light on dripping brown trunks and glistening green leaves the forest seemed suddenly enchanted.

And with what enchantment! Even that tiny, yellow wild cat in the Madroños near by seems conscious of it, and pours forth his merriest song; and the quaint, speckled bird, who turns herself from side to side and almost completely over in anxious search for some unlucky, crawling thing for her babies, twitters and pecks among the branches of the wild lilac as if to say that she, too, had time for outside matters and delighted in all this moisture and brightness. The two gray squirrels chasing one another regularly and persistently up and down the high redwoods are, with their ceaseless chatter seemingly most oblivious; but this may be only their way of expressing delight. Even a lower animal's intentions may be better than his efforts.

None of these happy foresters disappeared or materially altered their occupation when the sharp, sudden cracking of bits of dead wood announced the approach of some one, except that the saucy squirrels sat quite still on a fallen tree and peered curiously at a tall girl who pushed aside the dripping branches of the undergrowth and came toward them not quickly, or directly, these were too many yellow "Jump-ups" and the baby ferns, the tiger lilies (as yet but a promise) and the pretty wood pinks must each be caressed and tested for fragrance and beauty before anything like a straight course could be followed. Since babyhood her manner of going through the wood had been so, and by this time, I am sure all these lovely, wild things had come to know and love the long, brown hands that touched them so tenderly, just as the squirrels had learned that they need not scamper away when this young creature came among them.

The trout in the Lorenzo, I fear, were differently minded, for she carried a rod and a fish basket in the easy manner that betokened familiarity with their use. Her general appearance, too, bespoke readiness for fishing, else the very short blue calico gown, long, rubber boots and broad felt hat were donned in jest. When she reached the lilac where the speckled bird still pecked and twittered, she stood quite still and, turning her head aside seemed listening intently. A second after, she raised the small horn which hung at her belt and placed it to her lips as if about to call, but smiled instead and let it fall without a sound. Only the silver band that bound it clicked as it struck the buttons of her rounded bodice. On this band was inscribed her name, Erl Selden. There is often great significance in a name; the character and tastes of ancestors speak through it quite as readily as in the shape of the nose, or length of the upper lip. Erl was a somewhat uncommon, even fanciful name for a girl. Had the one who gave it connected her in any way with moist, green nooks among the streams of the mountains? If so she must have held a secret key to the girl's desires and fancies, for no sound was better loved by Erl than the dripping and murmuring of water. I am not quite sure, had she been born among the lower animals she would have cared to be a fish, but something wild and free she would surely have been. Perhaps a lovely, shy doe with a hiding place beside some mighty river in the wild heart of the mountains. As it was she was only a maiden on whom the bands of social custom would sooner or later be riveted. So far she stands free, and knows no deeper desire than to busy herself in the woods. How the color mounts into her cheeks, now, as she turns to the left bank of the Lorenzo and prepares to descend! easily she swings herself down, down through masses of tall ferns, and among creeping blackberry and wild rose vines. The moisture from the leaves dampens her hair and coaxes it into a myriad of curls about her face and neck, and leaves long streaks of wet on her gown as she creeps and slides along until her feet rest on the loose stones beside the stream. Here full of expectancy, and glowing with young life, she seated herself on a flat stone where the sun sent his strongest rays, took off her hat and detached from its rim three artificial flies—a blue dun spider, a sand fly and a red palmer. After examining them critically for a moment, she drew from her basket which lay against the butt of her rod, just behind her, a cup, filled it with water, pushed the flies in carefully and set it down by her side. The rod and leader were ready for use, so there was nothing for her at the moment, but to rest her shoulders against the young redwood that seemed to have grown there for some such purpose (human beings often wait a long time before finding the one particular thing for which they were created. Why not trees?) and enjoy all the sparkling beauty of the hidden spot.

Eighteen years of life among such scenes would either make them a nightmare to be dreaded, or a pleasant dream to be desired. For Erl, they were the latter, and it would have been impossible for her to have pictured a future without them. In San Francisco, which she occasionally visited, she seemed always stifled and oppressed, and its dirt and noise were such poor accompaniments for its scenes of meriment, that she found difficulty in believing what a famous Divins once told her about life in a city intensifying the character. I fear whoever trailed her mind had not paid the requisite attention to building up a desire for personal supremacy. In fact, it might be stated as a truth that her mind had simply been left free to grow, and like the wild flowers of the forest, was blossoming naturally under the hand of God. In spirit Erl was large and loving rather than small and critical; she dreamed dreams and thought thoughts, and analyzed neither them nor herself.

Perhaps much of this inward quiet was born of the childish innocence which still hung about her like dew on an unfolding rose. Whether it would follow her through life depended greatly on what might be placed in the opposite scale; for no spirit is calm enough or large enough to hold its course altogether independent of the weights of circumstance.

Such thoughts, happily, were far enough from Erl to-day, as she leaned against the tree, her hat drawn over her face, the tips of her boots in the swift water, and waited for the flies to get into a proper state. Just at present that was almost the only solicitude she had, that and some queer little yellow chicks which were unwise enough to make their first appearance in a rain storm. Long before now she hoped they were all cuddled down in the warm nest she had fixed for them, in spite of Flake, their mother, a fussy and irascible old hen, who like some larger bipeds, thought to work miracles through making a noise.

Urged to action by the belief that no one would attend to their supper if she were away, Erl took out the flies, knotted them to the leader one by one, and prepared herself for an attempt at sport. She was wise enough in the art to know that both day and water were against her, but was none the less eager. Indeed, I cannot surely say that half the attraction lay not there, although she delighted in the excitement of outwitting a trout.

"Because, you see, I can't help it; they are so unsympathetic to the bugs," was the excuse she always gave her father when he periodically reproved her for spending so much time in pursuit of "fish." She came naturally by her love of the sport, for Mr. Selden himself was not averse to wandering about with rod and line, and in younger and more active days could always show a well filled creel. But it is not generally pleasant to find our idiosyncracies reflected in a restless and ambitious member of society, particularly if they happen to be masculine and the restless member to be feminine.

"That's the worst of it! the crossing of breeds; you can never justly calculate what'll come out," said unfortunately Mr. Tulliver—a thought whose substance was often in the mind of Mr. Selden when he looked at his daughter and remembered his wife, than whom no one could have been larger in gentleness and all feminine virtues. Erl was not lacking in the qualities, but they were over-shadowed by stronger ones that continually threatened her father's ideal and troubled his peace of mind.

"She's a quick temper and a high hand, but, Lord bless you, there's a heart at bottom," came invariably from Mrs. Morrison—a stout neighbor with a family of boys, who had assisted Mr. Selden in his care of Erl—when he sometimes ventured to express his mind on the subject. This was not often, for he stood considerably in awe of a woman whose belief in herself and her own opinions was only overshadowed by her reverence for the traditional wisdom of Mr. Morrison, long since deceased.

"A quick temper and a high hand!" I've no doubt it was true enough; we all make unconscious records with every onward step, and a person ignorant of books and elegant philosophy may have as accurate a method of analysis as one more learned. Yet Erl gave little evidence of one or the other as she waded leisurely along the stream casting her line under bending boughs that everywhere threw shadows on the water. Her movements were quick, and fine length of arm and limb made grace a natural accompaniment. But this was no summer day casting when good, firm footing could be depended upon. Even close to the banks a misstep was perilous—particularly if one had a liking for dry raiment—and strength as much as grace was necessary for the maintenance of equilibrium. And that, in some places, Erl kept her footing at all spoke well for the strength of the supple limbs which fixed themselves so firmly against the rushing water. What she most disliked was climbing through the brush to get around deep pools through which wading was impossible, for although she had pinned her skirts close about her waist, and so presented only her boots to briars and twigs, some impertinent vine was always interfering with her hat or basket, or what was infinitely worse, becoming entangled with her leader and bending the tip of her rod. But everything has its compensation, and getting into the stream again was made many times more delightful for each bit of scrambling.

An hour of wading, stumbling and casting brought no results in the way of trout, neither did it produce in Erl any weariness or displeasure. She had been working upwards against the current of the stream, and at the expiration of this time found herself near a point where the banks rose high on either side. Upon them the varied growths of underbrush were dense and green and here and there clusters of tall trees raised their heads and threw a deeper shadow over the water upon which her flies were constantly falling. The channel here was deep and narrow; but a few feet ahead a great, conical boulder divided it into two parts, and the pool on the right looked cleaner and more hopeful than anything so far tried. Cautionally she worked her way within casting distance, and using care to avoid entanglement, sent her palmer straight to the top of the pool. Slowly and artfully she made the flies settle down in the water, and, at length, such is the worth of patience, felt that indescribably sudden touch which proclaims an interested trout. Long as she had waited there was no rash quickness in striking, rather a quiet and studied determination, that gave her time to test the mettle of her guest. Generally speaking, the trout taken from the coast streams of California are not famous for mettle. At most, they are palatable little things, averaging about eight inches in length, and coming to hand without much effort on the part of the fisherman. The one Erl had lured was of this kind, and soon found himself out of his element in her basket. Then she cast again and brought in two, and kept on until six silvery fellows commiserated one another on lack of fortune. This seemed the charmed number; not another fish noticed her flies. She cast to right and left and up and down without getting even the feeblest rise. Still six fish were better than none, and would be something to show Rob—Mrs. Morrison's Nimrod, whose exploits by flood and field were well worthy him of the old time, and who could never be persuaded that Erl was an honest angler. But there was not so much satisfaction in this thought after all; another fish would be far more pleasing, with which reflection Erl began anew. Her line was just finding its way to a spot above the boulder when the notes of a horn, far off and faint at first, but gradually coming nearer made her reel it in, and sound an answering call on the horn at her side. Mischievous smiles chased one another over her face as she raised her head and looked toward the top of the ridge on the right from whence the sound had seemed to come. Between the two fir trees that grew about half way down she could just distinguish the figure of a man. He was tall, and pushed his way with difficulty through the low shrubs that caught him on all sides. Erl watched him a moment and then retreated herself behind a friendly bush and awaited his coming.

For Cooking Trout.

Place him on the dewy grass. Don't put your hand on him! Take in the flavor of him! Nothing like that grows on shrubs or trees, nor can they make it with the balm of a thousand flowers.

Well, having caught your trout you gaze at him awhile, as he lies there in the grass. The sun has come up in the meantime and is peeping at your prize through the openings in the leaves, making his gold and crimson to sparkle again and again. Then you can run your finger through his gill and carry him to the cabin. You lay him lightly on the moss, keeping your hands off him. Near the cabin there is surely sweet fern growing, and you can smell it. Perhaps there is a clump or two of spice wood. If so, all the better. You pick some sprigs of sweet fern, or some spicewood, or both, and place them at the side of the trout. Then you take a piece of clean brown paper and cover it nicely with the fresh butter that perhaps your Effie made, and which is in the little stone jar that you sank in the spring at the edge of the alder thicket last night. You cover the paper with butter and sprinkle pepper and salt on it. Then you wrap the trout in it, just as it came from the brook a quarter of an hour ago. Then you wrap a little of the fern or spicewood leaves about the paper, wrap another piece of brown paper around all, and bury your herb-enshrined trout at the bottom of the red-hot bed of ashes. Then go to the creek and take a soothing bath in its limpid waters, after which you take that little flat bottle of yours and walk over to the spring and tamper with it gently.

By the time you have got back to the cabin and cut your bread and set your table you can think of uncovering your breakfast. When the trout comes out from the ashes, and you have taken its wrappings off, it looks so much like it did the minute it left the water and lay gasping on the grassy bank that you can scarcely believe it is not only dead, but cooked. And there is his natural smell, sweet and penetrating, which the fern kept from wasting away. You take your sharp knife and cut the trout open in the belly. There are its "innards," shrivelled up into a little wad. They all come together, and your trout is as clean as can be, and none of its naturalness is gone. You take the trout, place it on a piece of birch bark, if you can get it; if not on your platter, with fern all around it, and then when you eat it you are eating a trout that has been cooked, and if you don't believe it, try it!

THE KENNEL.

Dog owners are requested to send for publication the earliest possible notices of whelps, sales, names claimed, presentations and deaths in their kennels, in all instances writing plainly names of sire and dam and of grandparents, colors, dates and breed.

NEW YORK, Nov. 5, 1888.

Occidental Coursing Club.

An enthusiastic meeting of the members of the Occidental Coursing Club was held at 529 California street, on last Tuesday evening, Colonel S. O. Gregory in the chair.

The Treasurer reported $67.70 on hand, and the following named gentlemen were elected members: M. Curtis, Santa Clara; Clement Dixon and J. E. Watson, San Francisco; W. D. Wadhams, Santa Clara.

Tuesday, the 27th inst., was fixed for the entries and drawing for the meeting to be held on Thanksgiving day, and a handsome silver cup will be given by the club to the winning dog. The election of judges and other field officers will be made on the evening of the draw.

The club will make all necessary arrangements for the successful carrying out of the meeting, and the members are confident that the meet will be the most successful one ever held on the Coast.

The Indiana Kennel Club's Second Annual Trials.

The second annual trials of the Indiana Kennel Club began with the Derby November 1st, at Bicknell, Ind. The quality of the work on the first day was good throughout—a great deal of it excellent, says Major Taylor in the American Field. Most of the day it was warm and dry hot, notwithstanding this, few flushes were made. The work was, in many instances, first-class for so early in the season, many of the puppies having had but little work. Birds were found in abundance and I have never seen better grounds for working dogs on and at the same time of such a nature as to allow the spectators to see a very large share of the work done. Out of seventy nominations there were twenty-eight starters, thirteen English setters, one Irish, one black and tan and one cross-bred setter, and twelve pointers. The character of work by the setters was better than that of the pointers, in that it exhibited more speed, range, style and merry action in work; but in exceptional cases the work of the pointers was most excellent, among them I mention Tennie, Van Bang, Rod's Gal and Duke P, but notably that of Tennie, and Bertraldo and Rod's Gal, the last brace on the first day.

On Thursday, November 1st, the opening day, the weather was bright and warm, making it difficult for good work from 10:30 to 2:30. Eleven braces were decided and in every instance ample time was given, though in some instances short, the work was of such decisive kind as to easily make decisions. I most heartily endorse every one made this day. The judges were: D. C. Bergundthal, a veteran as a judge; Col. Sloo, a genial sportsman of ripe experience in field work, and Mr. E. Schultz, who proved a careful and painstaking judge. I noted in attendance at the meeting: Mr. Smith, Dayton, O.; Ed. Rainer and Will Stewart, Danville, Ill.; Dr. Jno. E. Link, Terre Haute; Dr. Daniels, Cleveland, O.; Thos. Howell, Curtis Wright, Connorsville, Ind.; A. H. Burkert, Jos. Becker, Royal Robinson, M. R. Williams, P. T. Madison, Indianapolis, Ind.; Mr. Boli, Hamilton, O.; Mr. Patterson, Noblesville, Ind.; G. T. Miller, W. I. Mitchell, G. W. Carlisle, I. C. Sherlock, C. C. F. Bent, Supt O. and M. R. K., Cincinnati, O.; W. G. Mellier, Albin Mellier, Kansas City, Mo.

Owners and handlers present were: John Bolus, W. B. Stafford, W. W. Titus, Geo. McLin, Jno. L. Barker, Chas. Schrage, Geo. DeWalt, Jno. A. Hunter, A. J. Gleason, C. W. Barker, S. J. McCartney, Chas. Menker and J. B. Stoddard.

The weather throughout the Derby was good, but the birds were wild and the dogs could not show to best advantage.

First was won in the Derby by Mr. J. I. Case Jr.'s Florence Gladstone by Gladstone—Frounce, a sister to the California Kennel's Leadstone.

A beautiful black, white and tan of medium size, weight about thirty-five pounds, of beautiful form and looking every inch a winner. She was in fine condition and in every heat but one showed fine speed, covering her ground well, and hunting it with judgment that would do credit to an old fielder. She was well handled throughout the Derby by her handler, Chas. Barker. Mr. Case, her owner, should be proud of her. She is a good one. A summary of the Derby is as follows:

Rabies.

The drift of expert opinion seems to be toward non-belief in the existence of any clearly definable disease properly to be styled rabies. Dr. Stockwell, of Michigan, has devoted considerable attention to the subject during nearly twenty-five years of active practice, and his conclusions are well worth recording. He writes:

All punctured and cicatricial wounds, regardless of locality or age, tend to re-open under impoverished conditions of the blood, such as septicaemia, pyaemia, purpura, stomatitis, materni, puerperal conditions, excessive ravages of vermin, poisoning by venomous serpents, etc.; but the theory whereby any virus, rabic or otherwise, is supposed to lie dormant in the vicinity, or at the point of inoculation, for periods varying from two weeks to a quarter of a century, is utterly untenable, not to say ridiculous. Involving physiological and pathological impossibilities, it pre-supposes stasis; or in other words, it teaches that the individual engaged in a street brawl that closes his eyes over-night, has no business to expect black eyes in the morning. That period of incubation for any septic poison (and all are known to be co-relative or toxic product), cannot exceed forty days under circumstances most favorable thereto, and even this is an unconscionable limit, and a disease developing itself subsequently, no matter what or how suspicious its nature and attending phenomena, can never be truly a rabies or lyssa, but must be assigned to one of the many coincidences that are wont to arise, and which, as ever student and experimenter in the pathological laboratory knows, are more frequently developed than facts, owing to physical causes and relations—a truth which the world at large is slow to recognize.

More than threescore of the ills peculiar to humanity, and double as many affecting animality, are perpetually being mistaken for rabies or "hydrophobia." Indeed, the mere suggestion of the animal in connection with any malady is usually sufficient, especially where fear is rife, to secure the fatal diagnosis. I say fatal, for the unfortunate, once the announcement is made or the dread malady inferred, almost invariably succumb to fright that is further fostered by the imbecility of friends and attendants. Under such circumstances, therefore, the medical man, no matter what his surmise or individual conviction, who ever permits so much as a hint of "hydrophobia" to escape him, save in the sanctity and secrecy of professional consultation, becomes guilty of gross criminality.

The ignorance of the medical profession regarding the disease is neither remarkable nor surprising, when it is remembered that aside from mere speculative inferences, nothing of practical importance has accrued to the subject of rabies during our era. Less than a twelvemonth gone, Theodore Billroth, whose surgical and pathological information is the glory of Austria and the civilized world, and which few will care to question, gave utterance to the following remark in conversation with an American physician: "I have viewed scores of cases supposed to be hydrophobia, yet I dare not definitely say I ever saw a case. In not a single case, either before or after death, could it be definitely or satisfactorily established that the disease was of rabic origin."

It certainly is most unfortunate that a mere name should induce mental panic, for, as is well known, rabies manifests no symptom or train of symptoms peculiar to itself, not even fatality, and presents no phenomena that do not with equal certainty accrue to scores of simple, or at least non-infectious maladies. All the laity as well as professional men, should know that it can never be determined with such accuracy as to preclude possibility of error.

Post-mortems are practically valueless even in the hands of the most expert pathologists, so far as affirmative evidence is concerned, and the teachings accruing to such are merely series of negations, ignoring the fact that the pathognomonic changes as laid down, are equally applicable to a majority of the diseases of the nosology, and in the canine are sequels of over-heating, fear, torture, and other forms of physical exhaustion and mental fatigue. The following diseases of the dog are perpetually being mistaken for rabies by all classes of individuals and medical men: Intestinal and other parasites, from which the race, individually or collectively, is rarely if ever free; foreign bodies in the stomach and digestive tract, such as bones, marbles, spoons, coals, sticks, straw, faecal matters (very common in puppies), rags, pebbles, strings, feathers, leather, buttons, etc., all of frequent occurrence in all Canidae—a fact generally overlooked by medical men including veterinarians; all the array of heart, lung, liver, kidney, generative, intestinal, throat, eye, ear, rheumatic skin and muscular disorders; starving and improper food; "ear-ache," "toothache," abscesses, fevers, epilepsy, chorea, and all convulsive maladies; septicaemia, pyaemia, and other poisonings specific and toxic; meningitis, and indeed the whole category of nervous and mental diseases to which dogs are much more prone than man, and whose existence is rarely suspected, or generally ignored by all classes of practitioners.

A dog under the influence of torture, torment, or hallucination, persecuted by a mob, perhaps, is especially dangerous since he is no longer master of himself, and his bite is now apt to induce fatal blood-poisoning in the person or animal bitten. Such a canine if suddenly killed, invariably exhibits the flaccid muscles and "fluid condition of blood" upon which M. Bouley and others lay so much stress as pathognomonic of rabies. The saliva of all creatures, more especially the carnivora and omnivora, man included, contains germs that under powerful emotion stimulating the ganglionic centres providing the secretion, may develop the utmost toxicity. Obversely, a wound inflicted by a strange dog is not evidence upon which a household pet or companion should be destroyed, for canines are jealous creatures and prone to resent any assumption of superiority or familiarity on the part of others of their race whose social caste or status is higher than their own—especially is this true of vagrant street curs. How often one sees two dogs meeting, with stiffened tails, utter interrogative growls, and an instant later, after touching noses, manifesting the extremes of friendship or malice; and does anyone suppose these incidents do not parallel like encounters among higher orders of beings, or that a quarrel is not the sequel of epithets that bandied in like manner, would provoke conflict between their masters?

With something like a quarter century's experience as a physician and student of comparative and general pathology and physiology, and likewise, dog-owner and breeder, I have never (fortunately or unfortunately), been brought in contact with a genuine case of rabies, which fact convinces how much care a trifle of skepticism induces. During this period, however, more than threescore of canines, alive and dead, have been submitted to my inspection as victims of the malady—often by veterinarians; yet in every instance, critical examination and study revealed other, and often most commonplace maladies. Within twenty months I received, per favor of an eminent veterinarian and teacher, the heads of three dogs destroyed by his order as "unmistakably rabic." One was found with a deep-seated tumor of the brain resultant upon an old pistol wound and an encysted bull; the other two were marked cases of the disease vulgarly termed "internal canker," but properly defined as inflammatory mastoid disease. From the ear of one of these last, on dividing the temporal bone through the tympanum, was removed a mass of necrosed bone, rivaling that described by the late Sir Peter Compton as withdrawn from the ear of a lady patient, consisting of the whole internal auditory apparatus—vestibule, cochlea, and semi circular canals: the pneumatic cells in both animals were badly diseased, and the pus had found outlet through the inner table of the skull, producing softening of the middle lobe of the cerebrum, and phlebitis, by the involvement of the lateral sinus. Commenting upon the foregoing, my veterinary friend writes: "I shall never dare diagnose rabies again. I was never so near uttering a total disbelief in the malady."

Pacific Kennel Club.

The regular monthly meeting of the Pacific Kennel Club was to have been held on Wednesday evening last at the Palace Hotel, but the counter attraction offered by the athletic clubs proved too strong, and a quorum was not present. Treasurer Watson reported $196.49 in the treasury with no outstanding obligations. A communication from the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals requesting permission to use the name of the Kennel Club in soliciting signers to a petition to place the Public Pound in charge of the first named institution was made, and the desired authority given. After some informal discussion relative to the bench show to be given on May 22d next, the club adjourned.

Mr. Chas. H. Mason's new book "Our Prize Dogs" is ready for distribution. The high rank of the author as a painstaking dog judge should insure a wide sale. The volume is a beautiful imperial octavo of 588 pages, with thirty-one artotype illustrations, bound in cloth. It may be obtained by enclosing $7.50 to Mr. Mason at 252 West Twenty-fourth street, New York, and we hope a great many will procure the book.

Owners of setters and pointers which they do not need can readily find purchasers at this season by letting the merits of their dogs be known. Many inquiries come each week for broken dogs which cannot be met simply because time does not permit the looking up of possible sources of supply. If those who care to dispose of surplus stock would advertise, it would answer, or they might list their salable animals in this office, with full descriptions, pedigrees, prices, etc. Owners of puppies could with advantage do likewise.

As an outcome of the field trials held last year at Bakersfield, and the formation of the Knights of the Trigger club, the town is, in the incipience of an active development. A Board of Trade was recently organized, and every means will be taken to make the almost uncomparable advantages of the vicinity known to the country. We wish the citizens all the success to which their public spirit and energy fairly entitle them, and that will be a large measure.

The kennel man of Mr. J. J. Pollock, breeder of the pointers Nestor and Sall, recently imported by Mr. William Schrieber writes to that gentleman under date, 24th October, from Anchineden, Scotland, as follows: "The date of Nestor's birth was May, 26th, 1887. I am glad to see that Sall's puppies are doing so well. We had Nestor's brother and sister, Forest Lake and Forest Sappho, at our big dog show in Edinburgh. They met a grand class of pointers and won a second prize each. They were a little to the lean side, I mean not in good show form. Forest Lake beat Forest King and Forest Ranger. The judge was Rev. William Shields, Gladsome's breeder. He thinks Forest Sappho as good a pointer as lives. This much I know, she is the best fielder I ever saw. Your Nestor should be about the best pointer in America."

I sent a pointer to New York in March last, which won the cup for the best sporting dog or bitch at the last N. Y. show, I think held in September last. I am afraid the pedigree of your Mountain Boy will be hard to get at."

TRAP.

Lord Walsingham's big Bag of Grouse.

Lord Walsingham recently gave some interesting details about the monstrous bag of grouse killed by him in August last. He says:

On August 30th, when I killed 1,070 grouse to my own gun in the day, I shot with four breechloaders. No. 1, a gun made in 1866 by Purdey, subsequently converted from pin-fire to central principle, to which new barrels were made last year. No. 2 and No. 3, a pair of central-fire breechloaders, made also by Purdey, about 1870, for which I have likewise had new barrels. No. 4, a new gun made by Purdey this year to match the two mentioned above, but with Whitworth steel instead of Damascus barrels. The guns are all 12-bore, with cylinder 30-in. barrels, not choked. My cartridges were loaded by Johnson, of Swaffham; those used in the down-wind drives containing 3½ drs. Hall's Field B. powder to 1½ oz. No. 5 Derby shot; those used in the up-wind drives (where the birds, of course, came slower) had 3 drs. only of the same powder, with the same shot; not hardened shot in either case.

I find I never go out shooting without learning something. If I had the day again I should cut off the extra eighth of an ounce of shot; not on account of recoil or discomfort of any kind—from which I never suffer, although always using black powder—but because I failed to get as much penetration at long distances as I do with an ounce only. I distinctly remember firing three barrels at one bird, striking well in the body every time, but killing dead only with the last shot; the powder seemed to burn too slow.

Another thing I learnt was that Whitworth steel barrels are not desirable for a heavy day's shooting. The explosion in them makes quite a different sound from that given off by Damascus barrels; there is more ring about it, and I can imagine that this might prove a serious annoyance to anyone who minds the noise of shooting. I have no recollection myself of ever having had a headache from gun-firing. Moreover, the Whitworth barrels become hot much more rapidly than the Damascus, and this is a serious drawback, especially to a man who shoots without gloves. I can imagine that they last much longer, and are in many ways suited for ordinary light work; but I am now replacing them with Damascus, as in all my other guns.

The Horse and His Owner.

A reporter of the Boston Herald has this to say after a pleasant chat with Mr. John Shepard, whose fame as a horse owner is equal to that of Mr. Bonner's:

Boston can well lay claim to possessing within its limits some fast horses and a number of prominent gentlemen riders. Jockeyism in Boston has not, perhaps, so many adherents and devotees as in other cities, and greater crowds may flock to witness turf events on the track in places where the culture of the hub has failed to influence individuals in this as well as other occurrences of whatever nature. But driving for money and driving for pleasure are vastly different. There is nothing akin in the way a gentleman handles a favorite speeder on the road or on the track and the manner in which a jockey drives an animal on the race-course. A sincere gentleman driver likes to possess a horse that he can go out on the road with and make a good showing, should a friendly brush be indulged in with some person who claims to own a superior piece of horseflesh. A gentleman likes a horse for what speed and ambition there is in him; a jockey, or horseman, likes him for the money he can get out of him.

There was a time when the love for good horses was considered greatly against the good name of an individual, and the fact that a man drove fast ones was sufficient to cause many straight-laced personages to turn their backs to him. If the "parson" possessed a speedy animal, members of his congregation would shake their heads and declare it was a shame that such a good man as he should fall into worldly ways. Who has not seen the picture which represents the deacon's old white horse taking the tar out of a trotter which had stolen up behind him and endeavored to go by, and the good man's surprise, dismay and disgust at the unexpected speed of Dobbin and the unholy show thereof? Outside the members of the "profess" in puritanical New England the animals were looked upon as beasts of burden, and when by some mistake a well-bred animal showed signs of ambition and a desire to test his mettle with some stranger, he was at once pulled down and held in check. True, these same puritanical farmers took great pride in raising likely colts, but they were better pleased with a free, good puller than they were with any evidences of an inclination to speed which a horse might develop. Most people to-day think differently, however, and, if he desires, the minister of the Gospel can jog along over the road with a fast goat, or the deacon of a church may test the speed of his animal without exciting unfavorable comment, while there are few gentlemen of means who do not aspire to own something that can pass the fastest when out for a drive.

Most gentle drivers of to-day have an inherent love of horseflesh. To them there is something besides going along at a rapid gait and getting over the ground faster than the average person. They see in a good horse many points which in mankind are esteemed as the most desirable and prominent of virtues. In a good horse they look first for aspiration and ambition—that unexplainable instinct which leads a speeder to endeavor by all means in his power to outstrip his rivals and struggle with his might to outdo any horse which may want to pass him. The animal that has to be lashed with the whip to get all the speed there is in him, or which has to be constantly urged with the voice and reins to "get up and git," is by no means an ideal specimen of horseflesh. As the man in the world desires to win fame, wealth and position, so it is expected of the trotter that he shall aspire to come out at the top of the heap. Still, in justice to the horse kingdom in general, it must be confessed that more often is the fault of the owner or driver that a horse has to be urged or persuaded with a whip to do what is considered his duty. Either he has been worked too much, the lash laid on him to such an extent that he views it in the light of a necessary and bound-to-come infliction, or else a horse has had his ambition taken out of him. According to the old proverb, a child can be spoiled by sparing the rod, but a horse can be ruined by a too frequent use of it, as well as in other ways. A horse bred properly, if left to himself will do the best he can, and make about as quick time as he is capable of, but it won't help him to have him forced in anything. That is his nature, and it is good horse sense.

Next to ambition, a lover of horses looks to his faithfulness and his kindness. Of course there are vicious animals as well as obstinate children, but, as in the offspring of mankind, it is as much due to their bringing up as to any quality devised by nature. Naturally the animal is affectionate, and he evinces his love for his master in different ways. He learns to know his driver's touch on the reins, and he responds to that touch readily; he can learn to distinguish the voice of his owner, and when hearing it obeys. These are the qualities which, once noticed in a horse, cannot fail to elicit the admiration of any man who looks at the animal as a friend rather than a beast of burden. Long-continued caring for the animal increases this feeling, and in time induces such a man to consider his speeder more as a member of his family than a creature from which an equivalent must be received for everything expended. Let a man once become attached to his ideal of a horse, and his best friend is liable to hold a second place in his affection.

Mr. John Shepard's care and love for horses is known almost throughout the country. He is considered one of the best judges of horse-flesh to be found, and few take more thorough delight than does he in driving a fast single or pair. At the same time he is actively interested in looking after his horses, and sees that they are carefully treated and kept in the best condition possible. One day during the past week he told a Herald reporter of his experiences with horses during the past thirty years, and the interest he feels in their welfare. Mr. Shepard was seen at his cottage at Phillips Beach, Swampscott, where he is rapidly convalescing from his recent severe illness.

"My love for horses," said Mr. Shepard, "began—I don't know when. It is something natural, innate with me, and it commenced, I suppose, as soon as I was able to realize it. When a boy I was very fond of them, and there wasn't an animal in the neighborhood that I couldn't handle. At that time I lived in Pawtucket, R. I., and I can easily recollect the pleasure afforded me when I could take a horse belonging to a certain confectioner and ride him for miles without harness of any kind except a bridle. This love continued as I grew older, and with increasing years I became better able to gratify my taste in this direction. My first real experience with speeders began some thirty years ago. Up to that time, although a great admirer of trotters, I had not deemed it expedient to indulge in very fast ones myself. At that time I purchased a horse which I thought a very fine animal for $325. I kept him for some time, taking the best of care of him and gradually bringing him to a condition where he could develop his best speed. When I was satisfied that he was what he should be I disposed of him for $1,000. That was really the beginning of my experience with fast animals, and I have owned a number of good ones since that time. I take as much pleasure with them to-day as I did when a boy, and I would indeed miss them more than I can tell should I ever be deprived of them.

"I consider my horse simply as part of the family. Of course their conditions of life are different, but they have as much care taken of them, in proportion to their needs, as I take of myself or any of the members of the household. One horse to me means simply a little larger family and a little more care necessary. Every horse in my stable I look after personally, seeing that they are properly fed and cared for. When I come in from a drive I watch my man unharness and cleanse them, and then I look over them to see that they are in proper condition. I examine their feet and legs, so that there is no fever or inflammation about them, and that they are very carefully cooled down when heated. I do not believe in sponging a horse with cold water when his blood is warmed up, and tepid or lukewarm water is invariably used. This cooling off is one of the things I am most careful about, and, in my opinion, it would be better if drivers and owners would take more pains in regard to it. Cold water, I think, is absolutely injurious when the horse has been sweating and his pores are open. With a man, if he takes a cold sponge bath and then rubs himself briskly, it is different, but with a horse the rubbing can hardly be accomplished with good effect. After unbiting, a horse should be exercised gently until he has stopped sweating; then he should be sponged with warmish water, and finally, after being thoroughly rubbed down and permitted to walk in the air a few moments, he should be blanketed and placed in his stall. If these points were more carefully attended to, I think there would be less danger of horses contracting colds and fevers."

"There is a saying, Mr. Shepard, that in old times a shoe was fitted to a horse, but that now the horse is fitted to the shoe. Is it not so?" asked the reporter.

"That is true," he replied, "but you may feel assured that shoes are fitted to my horses. There is not half the care taken with shoeing horses to-day that should be, although it is a most necessary point in caring for a horse. I know what is best for my horses, and I have their shoeing done properly, although I know that in many cases that it is not so. I consider the bar shoe the best for horses on hard roads, although it is more expensive. On Millboy, for example, I use that exclusively. The bar brings some of the weight of the horse on the frog, and causes less strain on the cords of the leg, giving much more elasticity and spring to him when in motion. On Millboy I have just a little space left—about enough to slip in a straw—between the heel and the shoe, bringing a little more weight on the frog, and permitting the foot to spread a little. In other horses I would have the shoe fitted close to the heel. There is no rule to be followed in this respect, these minor details depending altogether on the horse and his method of getting over the ground.

"I like nothing so well," continued Mr. Shepard, "as a good trotter. To me there is but little enjoyment in watching a pacer, and I wouldn't give shucks for one to drive. I like to see a horse free gaited, carrying himself over the ground with a trim, steady motion; not one that racks from side to side as if he was over-balanced. A trotter is about as good a representation of superior horse-flesh as can be found—better than either a runner or a pacer."

"How about developing the speed of a horse? Does the bringing forward of the speed of an animal lie with the horse, or does it depend on the training and care he receives, coupled with artificial assistance?" asked the reporter.

"It is mainly in the ambition of the horse, dependent upon his treatment. Any horse of mettle will aspire to do his best, and if proper care is taken of him, if he is not over-driven or whipped frequently, you may depend upon it the animal will do his level best to travel rapidly. I do not think there is any need of urging a horse much; let him choose his own gait, and then if there is any cause for it, he will go as fast as he can. Of course, his speed depends upon his condition. If he is feeling unwell, or is tired out, he can not consistently be expected to go so rapidly, but ordinarily my rule is the best. I know that Blondine and Millboy have a desire to do for me as I wish, and almost as quick as thought my wishes are carried out. The mechanical movement consequent upon a thought is sufficient for them, and they feel the slightest touch on the reins or the least change in the position of the ribbons. If I am driving on the road, however, and any driver attempts to pass me, it is with some difficulty that I can keep them in check. They aspire to speed more than I do, and I really believe that the animals feel aggrieved when I prefer to jog along slowly and let other teams go by."

"I don't suppose, Mr. Shepard, that you need a veterinary surgeon to tell you the good or bad points of any horse which you may examine, do you?"

"No, I haven't much use for a doctor when I buy a horse. I can usually tell at a glance whether a horse is good for anything or not, and whether there are any outs about him. I don't know as I pride myself on this ability, as it is more the result of experience and my interest in horses than anything else. I can stand before an animal, and my mind is immediately made up as to his condition. There may be some hidden defects which are not visible on the surface, but, beyond those, one look is enough. There is something in the way a horse stands, in the trimness of his feet and legs, in the poise of his head, and in the appearance of his eyes and face that tells a man at once what kind of an animal stands before him, and, that fact established, is generally sufficient. I know my horse, and can tell if I want him."

Three of the best horses around Boston stand to-day in Mr. Shepard's stable at Phillips Beach. They are Milltoy, Blondine and Butterfly, and the first named, as a pair, have a National reputation. "Mr. John Shepard handled the reins behind Blondine and Milltoy" is a paragraph which is to be seen almost daily in the newspapers when the sleighing carnival is in progress on the "Mill Dam." It is undoubtedly one of the best teams in the country. They were driven in September, 1881, to beat the record made by Mr. Vanderbilt's pair, Small Hopes and Lady Mack, 2:23, and their first mile around the track was covered in 2:22. They have never been driven for a record since then, although undoubtedly they could make better time if they had a chance, as each has better individual records than that, and it is said that Milltoy can travel in 2:16. These horses are almost perfectly matched in size, standing about 15.1 hands in height. Blondine is chestnut colored and Milltoy is brown. Both are as trim and neat as it is possible to find horses, and when standing together they make a dandy team. Butterfly has not been in Mr. Shepard's possession as long as the other two trotters, but she is fast making a record which both surprises and delights her owner. As Mr. Shepard will be unable to drive her as she should be driven for some time, he thought it advisable to breed her, and she was sent to Viking some time ago. Butterfly cost $9,000, and she is worth every cent of it. Already Mr. Shepard has been offered $2,000 for her colt as soon as it is dropped, but the offer was not accepted. Butterfly, which is a bright bay in color, promises to do better with Milltoy than does Blondine, and Mr. Shepard proposes, as soon as his good health returns, to try them together, and he has no doubt but what the time made by Mand S. and Aldine, when driven by Mr. W. H. Vanderbilt at the New York Gentlemen's Driving Park, June 15, 1883, (2:15½) will come pretty near being equaled. Butterfly at present is a little prone to flightiness, but it is thought that the dignity of maturity and a little training down will put her in good condition, and she will then be competent to jog along at a good gait with Milltoy. She is very clever and ambitious, and when she does go off her feet it is more often due to her desire to outstrip herself than to obstinacy or viciousness.

Mr. Shepard has built a very finestable near his Phillips Beach cottage, and his horses have as fine a summer as any equine of Boston can boast. Beside the three trotters there are now quartered there four carriage horses, which are devoted entirely to the use of the family, Mr. Shepard being perfectly satisfied with Blondine, Milltoy and Butterfly for his personal driving. He generally supervises the care of all his horses, and has three men employed to look after the stable. It is one of the greatest pleasures of his life to care for them, and he prefers it to anything else.

"I would not sell for any amount Blondine and Milltoy," said Mr. Shepard to the Herald reporter, during a pleasant drive from Swampscott to Salem and back behind Butterfly.

The sale of fourteen head of high bred trotters is announced to have been made from the Woodburn Stock Farm to W. R. Allen, of St. Louis; the total aggregate, $23,000, being the largest private sale ever made in Kentucky. Those sold include the two-year-olds Yarrow, Ashina, Corselet by Lord Russell; Maricle, by Chichester, and Sun Maid by Belmont; the yearlings Mica and Venezuela, by Chichester; Salve, by Lord Russell, and Water Leaf, by Belmont; the three-year-olds Mintaka, by Chichester; the four-year-olds Malvasia, by Lord Russell, and Repose, by Conway, and the five-year-old Early Day, by Erelong. The highest priced was Yarrow at $5,800.

Betting frequently assumes immense proportions on the English race courses. At the recent second Newmarket Oaks, a bet was made by the French plunger M. Bazier of £6,600 against £200 on the great filly Seabreeze (winner of the St. Leger and Lancashire Plate)—"the finish of which was so desperate that Robinson had to use every ounce on the filly to keep the slight lead he had acquired, and it was only after a terrific and well sustained effort that the verdict by a head was secured." A pretty close call for the Frenchman's $33,000, and he had better take good care of the $1,000 he won and the balance of his bundle or he will be living on free lunch and snow balls, like Jubilee Juggins, before many harvest moons have come and gone.

A decision of interest to bookmakers as well as speculators was rendered by the judges at Lexington, Ky. After the race won by Vantrim a man presented a ticket to a bookmaker marked "Van," calling for 15 to 1 to win and 5 to 1 a place. The bookmaker refused to pay it, saying the ticket was on Ireland instead of Vantrim, as was shown by his recording sheet. The owner of the ticket appealed to the judges, stating positively that he had bet on Vantrim, as his ticket showed, although the bookmaker's sheet might show otherwise. The judges after consultation and hearing both sides, decided that the ticket was the best evidence in favor of the speculator, and the bookmaker was required to pay it at its face value.

Paragon, Wheeler & Faires' fast and valuable four-year-old chestnut colt by Plenipo, out of Whizzig, while out for work last Friday morning at Ivy City Track, Washington, D. C., stepped in a hole which caused a compound fracture of the left fore leg above the knee. The broken bone protruded through the flesh, and he had to be destroyed. Paragon was a good performer, and at the Nashville spring meeting won the Preland Prize, for all ages, one mile and a quarter, in 2:07½, finishing in front of such cracks as Emperor of Norfolk, Terra Cotta, Volante, Brown Duke and Elgin. The loss is a heavy one for his owners. Mr. Faires has brought suit against the National Fair Grounds Association for $15,000 damages for the death of his horse, which he claims resulted from the unsafe condition of Ivy City track.

San Francisco Speed Drive.

From the "Examiner."

California has more good road horses to the population than any other country in the world, and San Francisco eats up more good road horses than any city in the world. It is not meant to imply that the city's population has the Parisian's taste for equine steaks and roasts, but that horses do not last long on the murderous roads that are mapped out for pleasure drives. The Park and Presidio are the two bits of territory on the peninsula that boast of smooth drives, and either will insure magnificent joints in a single season of lively driving. The red rock used for a top dressing in the Park pulverizes easily, and then packs to the consistency of the steel plates in the Charleston or the bed of a billiard table. Such a road is fair of aspect, and no better could be devised for jogging horses over. But the admirer and owner of a good horse likes to know how fast that horse can travel "in company," and therefore is not satisfied with a jog. The Park rules of speed put the time at ten miles an hour, and they are well obeyed by every true horseman, and by nearly everybody, in fact, except inexperienced drivers and drunken men. The reason is that the roads are murderous if fast work is done over them.

Any stableman in the city can truthfully tell why so large a proportion of the horses of San Francisco are afflicted with knotty joints, splints, cracked hoofs, spavins, stiffness and other crippling ailments. Ask of them, and the answer will come without an instant's hesitation that the cstrion roads of the Park are responsible. The character of the roads is a better guardian against infractions of the law than officer Thompson and his riat and assistants, and that is the reason why a speed road has been built from Strawberry Ridge to the water tank. It is about nearing completion now, and a few weeks at the furthest, if all goes well, will see a straight-way mile of road of approved construction, whereon owners of good horses can test their speed without infraction of the law, danger of interfering with more quiet drivers, or chance of doing their animals irreparable injury.

The accomplishment of the work has been a long struggle of a year and a half for a very few persistent, pushing citizens, but thanks to their indefatigable energy and the natural generosity of the San Francisco admirers of good horses, it is all but an accomplished fact. A few hundred are all that are lacking of the sum that the project required, and there is little danger of the amount not being collected, although at several periods the contractor came near pulling up his plant and relinquishing the work because of the temporary failure of the subscribers to answer his Pine-street cry of "More mud."

Hiram B. Cook, Secretary of the committee having the matter in charge, and an interested Examiner reporter drove out on a tour of inspection yesterday, with the idea of ascertaining what delay the storm might cause. Instead of finding the Superintendent in the dumps, however, he was in the best of humor, and explained by stating that after a day or two of drying out the laid portion of the track would be in fine condition for rolling. No estimate was given of the time that would be necessary for completion, but undoubtedly there will be no speed track open to the public until the money for every inch of it has been subscribed and paid up.

The track is built on race-course plans, with a six-inch top dressing of clay, and as far as can be judged from present appearance, is a first-class job. There is a queer optical illusion about it that disappoints the prospective patrons of it as they look down the stretch from Strawberry Ridge, its eastern point of commencement. It seems as though there is very little of level stretch in the mile, or that a bill is to be surmounted three-quarters of the way to the finish, while just to the eastward it appears that there is a considerable hollow.

That this is an optical delusion is apparent by the engineer's figures, verified by repeated surveys.

The history of the track is an interesting one. Several previous attempts have been made to obtain something of the sort, but through lack of energy all fell to the ground. This made the task of the gentlemen to whom the consummation of the present enterprise is due doubly difficult. On two previous occasions more or less money has been subscribed and paid down, and after failure to complete a sufficient sum the funds in hand have been spent on the park without the desired benefits accruing to the donors. For this reason contributors were somewhat shy, and it was only when the canvassers for funds inserted a clause in the subscription blanks to the effect that no payments should be asked for until the total amount necessary was subscribed that purse-strings were loosened.

On the evening of the 8th of June, 1887, a number of gentlemen met at the Palace Hotel, in response to an invitation of the Park Commissioners, to discuss the advisability of a speed track. R. P. Hammond Jr., President of the commission, briefly stated the object of the meeting, and a citizens' committee was at once organized, with Charles Webb Howard as Chairman and H. B. Cook as Secretary.

At this meeting the committee made its big and, virtually, its only mistake. All through the meeting the new drive was spoken of as "a track," instead of as "a speed road," which would have been the proper designation. The word track immediately roused visions of pool-selling, a grand-stand, gambling, drinking bars, stop watches, breakneck driving and a score of kindred attendants upon California racing, in the minds of a number of truly good, but not over well-informed citizens, and a combative element was organized at once.

The silurians who feared that their pockets might be tapped, seized upon the excuse, impressed a couple of papers of their class into the fight and waged a lively battle against the proposed improvement. A picture of probable demoralization of the rising generation was drawn, touched up, colored and spread abroad on an average of once a week, and not satisfied with this, the prospective patrons of the drive were pictured as gamblers, robbers and thieves, seeking to sport at the expense of the public.

A vain effort was made to stem the tide, but the reporters had all used the word track in reporting the meeting, and track it must be, and a racetrack at that.

The war was very warm, but the energy of the projectors and the common sense of the public triumphed in the end, and a road whereon horses can be exercised without injury is now virtually within the grasp of the horse-loving public.

But to return to the history: Mr. Hammond submitted a rough idea of what the Park Commissioners would aid in accomplishing, and a committee was appointed to report a desirable style of road, location and general details.

The Park Commissioners gave the committee the use of their office and stated that ex-Commissioner Pixley had a subscription list of $8,000 for such a road.

"That was a good starter for you," remarked the reporter to Mr. Cook when the latter had reached this point in his narrative.

"Well, yes," replied the Secretary, doubtfully scratching his head; "or rather it would have been had it ever materialized. We've been hunting for a year and a half, and have never found it yet. It is always in the hands of somebody besides the man we interview on the subject, and I am afraid it always will be."

Three days later the sub-committee met in the Park lodge, when there were present Mr. Howard, Mr. Cook, Commissioner Austin, Engineer W. H. Hall, Millen Griffith, W. S. Hobart, F. M. Pixley and W. W. Stow.

Mr. Hall had made some previous inspection, and explained the various possible sites suggested.

Surveys were ordered of all the sites submitted, and these surveys were plotted and submitted to the next meeting of the committee on the 11th of August. The committee not only discussed the sites at length, but tramped over them, and on the 29th of the same month adopted the present site and began to look for bids.

At the meeting on September 5th affairs began to assume a business-like aspect. It was reported that $30,000 would be required. Alvinza Hayward was elected Treasurer, and a committee of seventeen were appointed to solicit subscriptions. As usual with such large committees, nearly all turned in their own and one or two additional subscriptions, and then left their brethren to do the rest. The report was not promising, and the committee turned its work over to Mr. Cook. He started in the day before Thanksgiving Day and had $15,000 on his books at the end of a week.

The subscription blanks got up by Mr. Cook contained the proviso of no payment prior to the total amount being subscribed, referred to above, and were as follows:

Cbas. Webb Howard, President.

A. Hayward, Treasurer.
San Francisco, ———, 1887.

H. B. Cook, Secretary of Speed Drive Association—My Dear Sir: I hereby agree to give ——— dollars toward the construction of a speed drive in the Park; provided the sum of thirty thousand dollars in the aggregate shall be subscribed therefor, prior to the commencement of the work. Very truly yours,

The corresponding stubs contained a receipt to Mr. Cook from Treasurer Hayward, and thus effectually checked any possibility of the cash and subscriptions not balancing when collecting began, except, of course, should subscribers fail to make good their promise, but the character of the subscribers precluded this in every instance. Two dozen of these books were put in circulation, and in thirty days the subscription was so near completed that a meeting was called on December 29th, when Mr. Cook made his report and a committee was appointed to supervise the carrying out of the work, consisting of I. C. Talbot, W. W. Stow, H. B. Cook, Albert Gallatin and C. W. Howard.

Messrs. Hobart, Griffith and Howard were made an Auditing Committee, and Messrs. Talbot and Cook authorized to collect the subscriptions.

The latter two gentlemen are still at their thankless task, but with prospects of securing nearly every dollar subscribed. Both have an additional gray hair or two, however, and it is doubtful if they could be induced to embark in a similar task again in view of their acquired experience.

Many who did not hesitate an instant to put down their names drew back in hesitation when the coin was asked for, and complained by way of excuse. Any number of them were able to teach the engineer who laid out the road his business, and the committee (in the opinion of these gentlemen) could have found at least a score of better sites in the Park.

The optical delusion referred to above formed an oft-repeated excuse.

The road they said, was surely up hill and down dale and not fit to drive over, the engineer's survey and the certified grade to the contrary notwithstanding. But in the end they all paid, or all that have been asked to do so, and the others presumably will.

From the middle of May, when work was begun, it has been a neck and neck race between the collectors and the contractor. The latter is not a sordid individual, but he has an eminently proper and correct idea that a subscription job should be paid for cash on the nail. In his opinion, if he rushed the track through and some of the subscribers "lacked up," it might be that they never would pay. Consequently the collectors had to raise money enough each week to pay for each week's work, and several times it has been a dead heat. But Messrs. Talbot and Cook, with the aid of C. S. Crittenden, always came out a dollar or two ahead, and the work has gone on unceasingly nearly to completion. Of the subscribers but few remain who have not paid up, and they would aid the work by doing so at once. The collectors have other demands on their time and cannot individually see every one.

Then, after all subscriptions are paid, the committee will still lack some hundreds of dollars of being able to turn their work over to the public in the finished form they desire. The speed road is now in a critical condition. It is an accomplished fact, but whether it will be perfection or a crude job depends on the ability of the committee to spend a little money for the finishing touches. The list of subscribers so far only foots up 230, and there are certainly many times more horse lovers than that in San Francisco. If every subscriber will make an effort to obtain another, money will be had in abundance to make the road a credit to the Park and the projectors. There are undoubtedly plenty of gentlemen who would have subscribed if called upon, but the collectors cannot hunt them up, and to such it is hinted that checks or coin for any amount from $25 upward will be applied to the road if sent to Mr. Cook at the Auditor's office, New City Hall. An appointment with Mr. Cook will answer the same purpose.

The site is the best of the entire number suggested, and is specially well selected for the furtherance of the plan to build an overlooking drive for the convenience of family carriages, and those who may desire to observe the flying trotters without mingling with them.

The subscription list is remarkably small in the number of individuals for the aggregate sum raised, and speaks well for the liberality of the gentlemen who have taken an interest in the road.

The list is headed by Leland Stanford, Charles Crocker, W. S. Hobart, Alvinza Hayward and Col. J. Mervyn Donahue, with subscriptions of $1,000 each.

Then comes a generous list of $500 subscribers as follows: W. W. Stow, S. H. Seymour, A. B. Spreckels, J. McM. Shafter, Edward Barron, C. W. S., Jesse S. Potter, A. Sutro, James G. Fair, The Palace Hotel, Huntington, Hopkins & Co., C. F. Fargo, Millen Griffith, William Dunphy, C. S. Crittenden, William Bridge, Alex. McCord & Co., William H. and F. C. Talbot.

The Starting Judge.

Fidelis, describing in the current number of Wallace's Monthly, the recent meeting at Mystic Park, Boston, justly commends the excellent judging of Mr. George Hicks, of Beacon Park, and goes on to make some pertinent criticisms on the methods of a so-called judge at a less prominent place. We copy a portion of the article:

We ought not to turn away from it without recognizing the thorough business way in which everything was done, even to the caring of the horses and carriages of visitors. The judging, one of the most important features in any such meeting, was excellent, especially that of Mr. George Hicks, the lessee of Beacon Park. The promptitude and impartiality shown by Mr. Hicks, the readiness with which he saw whether a good send-off would be possible before the horses had reached the wire, the way in which he saved the horse from unnecessary fatigue, the delicate regard he manifestly had for what was due to the public who came there to be entertained, were deserving of all praise. If Associations would engage as starting judge such a man as Mr. Hicks, they would have in the judges' stand a gentleman as well as a man who understands his business. We could not help contrasting the ways in which the starting judge acted at Mystic Park with what occurred in a race at Brockton Fair, where between twenty and thirty thousand people had an opportunity to be entertained—let us rather say insulted—by an exhibition of scoring such as is rarely seen even on the degenerate trotting turf. A field of only five horses were scored twenty-eight times. An experienced trackman said that there were ten times out of the twenty eight when a fairly good start could have been made. It was evident to every one but the judges that there was a combination to weary out a fine young horse, who could not be beaten fairly. Fines were formally threatened, but not one imposed. Surely such an insult to the public and such inhumanity deserve the most indignant castigation that even the pen of a Wallace could give them. Why should not the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals have a qualified official at such meetings? There is no plea of justification possible in a case like that at Brockton.

Any Judge calling a race at 1 o'clock, and keeping it on the whole of the afternoon, and then having to postpone it because darkness is coming on, must be either a most incompetent or a most culpable man. At this Brockton Fair, where the public and not anyone else is supposed to be entitled to first consideration, the thieving devices adopted elsewhere, where the public is a secondary consideration, and the pool-box primary, ought to be characterized by such language as alone fits them. A few days later, at Beacon Park, Mr. Hicks, to whom we have made complimentary reference already, started crowded fields of horses in ten to fifteen minutes. The scoring at Brockton Fair in the race apocryphal, in the second heat alone, took more than three-quarters of an hour (by the watch) of the time of over twenty thousand people. If all respectable men would refuse to enter horses when any Starting Judge was to be in the stand who had been capable of such inhumanity—insisting on the names of the intended Judges being published when meetings were announced—something might be done to correct so gross an indecency. Ultimately the characteristic horse of America must be rescued from the piratical hands of his enemies, or the great public, whose aversion means failure, whose patronage means success, will associate him with inhumanity and fraud. If the day would ever arrive when any man of honesty and integrity is tainted by association with what ought to be a reputable national outdoor entertainment, of what value will your breeding farms be? In the last resort, everything is made or ruined by the character of the men who have it in hand.

A Brooklyn man intends to start a goat farm, which he thinks will bring him $10.50 per day. He will stock it with seventy-five goats, and as the ordinary goat will give three pints of milk a day, he calculates upon ninety quarts per day at 12 to 15 cents a quart.

Luxury in Carriages.

Can a builder, or even an expert, stand on Broadway and name the different styles of vehicles that pass within an hour? It is very doubtful, for their name would be legion, and it is dollars to doughnuts that even the people who are riding in them cannot tell what kind they are. The improvement that has been made in the construction of all kinds and classes of vehicles during the past twenty or thirty years is something wonderful, and if our grandfathers could see us riding through the park in carriages upholstered fit for royalty, with vertical steel plates and rubber tires, they would no doubt throw up their hands in dismay and claim that the luxurious habits of this generation would be the downfall and ruin of the American republic.

The rapid improvement in pleasure carriages is due principally to a Massachusetts mechanic, who is now dead. When the Governor elect of Massachusetts went to Boston in 1810 to be inaugurated he rode in a one-horse wagon of the most primitive construction, and with only apologies for springs. Among the crowd that welcomed him was a mechanic who had never attracted any particular attention from his neighbors. That the Governor of a State like Massachusetts should be compelled to make his entree to his capital in a wagon that, from its refusal to give, left him in a rather dilapidated condition, did not at all correspond with his idea of the fitness of things. He immediately commenced to experiment, and in the course of a few years had succeeded in turning out a vehicle that was considered a marvel of elegance and comfort. He continued to reside in Massachusetts until he had acquired a reputation, and then moved to New York, where he, or rather the firm established by him, has been ever since.

Although the best vehicles in the world are made in this country, still some of the materials are imported. The cloth that is used in first class carriages all comes from the west of England. Its superiority lies in the fact that no matter how long it is used it will retain its color, and will never acquire that white look that is so common in cheaper grades. A great many people think that this excellence is due to the better quality of the dyes used and purer water, but such is not the case. The whole secret lies in the fact that in England, where labor and money are cheap, the cloth is subjected to a bleaching process that extends over a period of two years, and consequently every particle of oil is obliterated. In that condition the dye has a chance to get a firm hold, and the consequence is that the cloth never fades. We have in this country just as good cloth, just as good dye, just as good water and just as good workmen, but we have not the time, and consequently our cloth soon acquires a white and shiny appearance that is far from desirable. Another innovation that has entered prominently into the manufacture of pleasure carriages within the last year or two is rubber tires. About the first of the kind that were ever seen in this country were on the droshky of the Secretary of the Russian Legation in Washington. They created quite a furore among the carriage manufacturers, and attempts were immediately made to duplicate them. However, the right quality of rubber was not obtainable here, and for the time the attempt was given up. A prominent firm had so many calls from the ultra fashionable people for them, that they sent an agent to Europe to make investigations. He was successful, and it is a common sight to see carriages on rubber tires rolling through the park. The tires are a composition of steel and rubber, and while they have the toughness and durability of the former, they also possess the elasticity of the latter. They do away with all rattling of panels, and the comfort which they afford is rapidly bringing them into favor.

Good light road wagons that weigh from 130 to 150 pounds, with tops, are being made and sold in great numbers this year. They have the vertical steel plate in the rear axle that prevents spreading of the wheels, and consequently adds from two to three seconds to horse's speed. As the interest in the trotters increases, the demand for the wagons grow larger. The price ranges all the way from $400 to $475, according to the horse they are bought from, some of the more prominent firms adding the extra $75 for their names.

Dog carts—those vehicles that were the delight of the gilded youth of both sexes—are slowly but surely losing their hold. Still they have quite a number of admirers, and with their high seats and brilliantly decorated bodies and wheels, are seen on the fashionable drives quite frequently. As for price, there is no limit to it, one being obtainable anywhere from $350 up. About $450, though, will purchase a very nice one. A man who wishes his wife to make a suitable carriage appearance must have plenty of money, and be willing to spend it. For the opera receptions, balls and shopping a brougham is the correct thing. It must be made of the finest materials throughout and fitted with onyx and silver. Such a vehicle would cost anywhere from $1,000 to $2,000. Then, for park driving, he would have to go into his pocket to the extent of another $1,000 or so for a victors or landan. These last are models of the carriage builder's art, and are the result of study and experiment. Then there are T carts, surreys, phaetons, buggies, cabs, cosches, omnibuses and a number of other kinds, some one of which is indispensable to a fashionable person's stable. They are all models of comfort, elegance, luxury and beauty, and instead of being rattled and jolted over the ground in springless, one horse wagons like our ancestors, we are able to glide along seated on upholstered cushions of the finest quality, provided we have the money to pay for it all.—Sporting World.

Wild Horse of the Plains.

So much has been written of the horse of the plains, which, foaled upon the dew-kissed grass of the prairie, has never known a halter or a touch of a man's hand, that descriptive reference to their fleetness, wariness and oftentimes their graceful beauty, particularly among the stallions, would at this day lack interest. But one curious fact is known to but few aside from those who have followed them for hundreds of miles and studied their habits closely. If there are enough in a band these animals group by thirties. With every stallion there are twelve mares. What becomes of the weaker males whom the stronger fight away—whether they hide their time to get the quota of females or, in the despondency of equine bachelorhood, go off alone and starve themselves—is not known. The matrimonial regulations of the wild horse, however this may be, allow to each male twelve consorts, and the remarkable feature is, no more. They draw the line at an even dozen. Even when the bands that roamed these great plains, then tenantless except by other wild creatures, numbered in the hundreds and more than a thousand this peculiar division into families was plainly noticeable. They kept a little apart and never voluntarily mingled.—Colorado Cor. Chicago Tribune.

Glanders.

Farmers who travel the Sacramento lower roads have recently seen glandered horses in the highway after night, and it was reported to the Board of Supervisors that the animals had strayed from one of Barnhart's ranches, where there were several sick and dying horses.

The threat was made that unless the Supervisors took prompt action in the matter to prevent the spread of the dreaded disease, owners of stock would take the law in their own hands and remove all the diseased animals. The discovery created considerable excitement among farmers living in that section of the country, and the Supervisors employed Dr. Orvis to examine into the matter.

On Thursday last the veterinary surgeon, accompanied by County Clerk Yolland, visited the Dr. Dayton ranch on the Woodbridge road about ten miles from this city where it was that sick horses were being pastured. The ranch is owned by Henry Barnhart and is farmed by a man named Harris. The inspectors found several very bad cases of glanders at the ranch. Four animals had died with the disease and three were yet alive but were in a dangerous condition. The visitors asked what had been done with the carcasses of the dead animals and the answer was returned that the bodies had been burned.

Messrs. Orvis and Yolland went out into the field where one of the carcasses was being devoured by hogs and chickens and found that an attempt had been made to burn the animal, but without success. Hogs had been feasting on the meat for several days. The only person found on the ranch was ordered to build a fire over the rotten carcass at once or trouble would follow. No time was lost in hauling straw out into the field to make the necessary fire.

The three animals that were alive were carefully examined and it was settled beyond dispute that the disease was glanders in its worst form. The head of one of the animals was a mass of rotteness, and yet the dumb brute was permitted to live and suffer and spread the fatal disease among stock on adjoining ranches. A mule was found to be in a very bad condition, yet the ranch hand said the animal would be worked next week.

In talking with the Inspector, the sole occupant of the ranch said some sick horses had been sent up from San Francisco to pasture on the Barnhart ranch, but Mr. Barnhart had written to the owners to take them away. The rancher declared that the disease was not glanders.

"If the Supervisors do not take prompt action in this matter," said a prominent stock raiser, "I shall shoot every sick horse on the Dayton place. It is an outrage to permit glandered horses to live, and the law requires the owners to kill them at once."

"It has been claimed that there are no cases of glanders in this county," remarked Mr. Yolland, "but I know to the contrary. I know that the cases Dr. Orvis and I saw on the Dayton ranch are glanders in a malignant form. Besides the danger of great destruction of stock there is also danger to human beings. It is known that men have taken the disease and that they have died from it. There are well authenticated cases of the sort, one being a San Jose case."

"My stock are all well, so far as I know," continued the County Clerk, "but I am afraid of contagion from the animals on the Dayton place. I shall use every precaution to protect my stock, but if any of my horses are taken sick they shall be killed and buried at once. A man who would not protect his neighbors from glanders ought to be hanged."

Glanders in man or beast is necessarily fatal. The disease is very contagious, and stock will take the poison in eating over a pasture that has been fed on by diseased animals. The poison is frequently communicated in drinking from water-troughs which have been visited by infected stock.

A popular authority on diseases of the horse says: "Glanders is alike fruitful of evil to man and beast, and is generally considered incurable. A horse may have latent glanders for years and work well, the disease being during this time as contagious as in its developed state."

"Cause. The cause is somewhat varied in different cases, and may be attributed to filth, starvation or to debilitating diseases, as lung fever, catarrh or any disease capable of generating pus, which, being absorbed into the circulation, forms a ferment within the blood."

"Symptoms—The membrane lining the nostrils assumes a leaden or purple color, accompanied by a thin, acid, transparent and odorless discharge. This is the first stage, during which the general health does not suffer, and the horse may do his ordinary work. The discharge grows thicker, and sinks when placed in water. The membrane lining the nostrils will be found to have sores, ragged and depressed at the top, with varicose veins leading to them from all sides. The appetite fails, and the horse assumes an emaciated and dull appearance. He will be hide-bound, and his legs swell during the day, and the swelling goes down at night. The ulceration of the nose is very bad, and the sores spread into his throat; the body also is sometimes afflicted with sores. The horse ultimately dies in a wasted condition."

Snow-Shoes for Horses.

[Plumas National.]

Snow-shoes have been worn for years by horses on the Orville and Quincy mail route during the winter months. It would be impossible for them to travel over the deep snows without their aid. A horse that is accustomed to wearing them will travel five and six miles an hour, where it would be impossible to go that distance in a week without them. The shoes are made of thin steel plate, about nine by eleven inches, fastened on the hoofs with clamps. The horses are shod with long heel corks which go through the snow-shoes, and prevent their slipping, going up and down hill.

Starting by the flag has an ancient history, going back to the time of the Roman era. Suetonius mentions that the Emperor Domitian presented as many as one hundred races or matches in a day—the bookmakers of the period must have got very tired of offering to take 2 to 1—and the horses were started by mappa (a napkin) which was hung out at the pretor's tent or from the president's seat. Nero, when sitting at dinner on one occasion, did not seem inclined to go on with the horse-racing, and the people began to clamor that the sports might begin. The Emperor threw his white napkin out of the window as a token of the wish to grant their request, and the white napkin was carried on the occasion on a spear, and lowered as a signal for the start. This was the real birth of the starter's flag. The jockeys' colors, too, were used by the Romans as they are now. Green was a favorite hue in the time of Caligula and Nero. Suetonius mentions the Dotian introduced among the prevailing colors yellow and purple. The Romans raced not only horses, but asses (larger and better, of course, than are bred in England generally), ostriches, elephants and camels.

L. E. Meyers on Australian Racing.

Mr. Lon Meyers whose recent visit to the Pacific Coast and Australia will be recalled with pleasure by those who became acquainted with the gentleman, has been writing to the Sporting World about racing in the Colonies, and his notes are of sufficient interest to justify republication. He says:

Since my return from Australia, the question that has grieved me more than any other is, "How's racing out there?" In fact, all of my horse acquaintances have piled me with questions about the standard of Australian horses, the system of betting in vogue out there and the nature of the Australian race tracks, etc. Now, as I get tired of telling the same story over and over again, I think it a good plan to give my opinion in print, and I know of no better medium than the columns of the Sporting World, whose first copy contained an article from my pen. To answer the first question:

How's racing out there? I can answer with one word, viz: great. It may not be known to the general reader that in the whole of Australasia there are not more than 4,000,000 inhabitants, and in Australia proper there are only about 3,000,000 (not more than we have in New York city and suburbs), yet at a race meeting, that of the Melbourne Cup, I have seen nearly 100,000 people, and there have been occasions when the number has reached nearer 150,000. The Australians are a sport loving people, and first and foremost with them is horse racing. Every little town of 500 inhabitants has its meetings once or twice during the year. There are only two first-class race courses (so I'm told, I did not see them all) in Australia—these are Flemington and Randwick. The former is near Melbourne, and the latter on the outskirts of Sydney, these two cities being the principal cities in that part of the world. Melbourne and Sydney each number about 450,000 inhabitants, but near these cities are clustered towns of 1,000 to 10,000 people, and from these suburban towns no small number of people are regular attendants at the races.

What struck me the first day I attended the races was the seemingly slipshod manner in which the horses were looked after. The day was cold, yet few if any of the horses were protected with blankets. The accommodations for the animals were also meagre. The "boxes" were merely partitions in long sheds, separated by one single rail, the horses standing on stone and barefooted at that. Animals worth thousands of dollars were tied up in a row and stood as meekly as cows at a cattle show. I could hardly believe they were thoroughbreds, i. e., most of them, at first, they showed so little of the spirit and fire of American horses. I spoke to Mr. James Monaghan, a well-known trainer, on the subject of having their horses so completely under control, and he replied by saying, "All foreigners say the same thing. I suppose it must be the climate."

I visited one of the oldest race courses in New South Wales, Hawkesbury, some sixty miles from Sydney, and the crowd who attended the races, as well as the horses who furnished the sport, all went along on the same train. It was at this meeting that the Hon. W. A. Long's flying two-year-old filly Consequence made her debut; she looked about her rather curiously on getting off the train, and shied a bit when the engine puffed, but she tossed her head about her after a bit, as much as to say, "Who's afraid?" and walked off as proudly as a peacock with feathers in position. She ran the half mile after being left at the post and was catching her horses last at the finish, according to private watches in 49½ seconds. The race was declared no race, as the starter says he did not drop his flag, and the field of two-year-olds was thus compelled to run heats in less than ten minutes. At the second attempt she won in a canter in 50 seconds. The course was grass, with a little dip for the first furlong. In fact, all the courses in Australia are, or what is supposed to be, grass. In dry weather the dust flies on some of them nearly as badly as it does on our tracks, and although they are not so level I think them quite as fast.

That all Australian horses are better than American horses I do not believe, but that the best Australian horses are equally as good as ours I think is true. They indulge in long distance races more than we do, and consequently most of their horses go a distance well. They are larger and have more bone and substance, and consequently handle weight better. I saw a steeplechaser, Ravensworth, in Sydney, that I think a 10-pound better horse, however high the weights, than Bourke Cochran ever was in his palmiest day. It is a common thing for steeplechasers to be asked to carry almost top weight in flat races, and they win at that on the flat. Steeplechasing there is not confined to broken down pligs. It would take too much of your valuable space to describe some of their best horses, and recount their performances.

The race courses are splendidly appointed, if I except the betting arrangements for the bookmakers. In fact there are no arrangements for the bookmakers, and in all kinds of weather, with their out of hand books, they stand on the green doing business. There is enough of old English foggyisms noticeable on all sides in Australia to remind one that he is in a British province, and most pronounced of them all, to a sporting foreigner, is the peculiar way in which they conduct their betting. Everybody gambles out there, if we are to consider betting on horse racing gambling, I truly believe that nine out of every ten ministers of the gospel have a "long shot" each year for the Melbourne Cup, or a "little double," such as the "Derby and Cup," about which they get odds of from 100 to 1,000 to 1. The grand stand and other arrangements are simply perfect; their judging, starting and timing excellent. I much prefer their system of starting to ours. The abominable scoring business that our starters countenance is not tolerated at all. The horses are all aligned, each jockey watching intently the starter. When he sees them all with their horses' heads turned in the right direction down goes the flag and they are off. Thus in sprint races the quickest beginner has the best of it, and so he should. What is sprinting, but the ability to get off and in motion quickly. Scoring in foot racing has now nearly died out, why should it not be done away with in horse racing? If a horse is a slow beginner, that is his fault, not the starter's. They have more horses to the race than we do, yet seldom do you see them over ten minutes at the post.

Have they any good jockeys?

Yes, most emphatically! Mick O'Brien, Tommy Hales, Gorry, Gough, Saunders, Ellis, Powers, Fielder, and hosts of others compare favorably with our boys. I should just like to have a mutual on our Jimmy and the incorrigible Snapper against the older division, but among the light weights I would stand Gorry and Fielder against any of our boys, not excepting Barnes. Fielder is a perfect dare devil; mashes his leg one week, breaks a collar bone the next, and brings in some 10 to 1 chance the next.

Their trainers are up to their business, and Daddy Bains, Tom Brown, Sam Fielder, James Monaghan and Tom Payton (Hon. James White's trainer) would get along in any country, as we say. I found them all royal good fellows.

They asked me lots about our horses, track and other things connected with racing. It would do some of our trainers good to get a glimpse of the stable arrangements of the Hons. James Whites and W. A. Long and also Mr. Forester of Warwick Farm. It was at this latter place that I trained for my engagement. Some of our millionaire trotting horse owners have perhaps stables more expensively fitted up, but for perfect arrangements those I saw would be hard to beat. It is whole hog or none with them out there when they have the means and "go in" for a thing.

Their betting arrangements are probably what interests some of your readers mostly. They do cash betting, although it is supposed not to be allowed. Jack Thompson, James White, Oxenham, Wallace, Westbrook, Lees and other big bookies prefer it. Bad debts are thus avoided. They give you a ticket, generally blank with only a number on it and the bookmaker's name much the same as we do now in our pool rooms. After the races, the ticket, if a winner, is presented and money paid over. The bookies travel in twos, as they do in England, conspicuously dressed, so as to let the customers know their whereabouts. Jack Thompson and his brother Phil, for instance, wear huge white hats, made out of white linen, and you can see them towering above the crowd a hundred yards off. Jim White and his assistant wear tourists' helmets, etc. The hooks pay £25 a year to each association. In Australia the public support racing, not the bookmakers. For instance in all races held at Randwick during the year, whether held by the owning club, the A. J. C., or not, each bookmaker pays $25 or $125.

Do they work on as small a percentage as they do here? By no means. The American bookmakers' task is five times as hard. Wouldn't our pencilers think themselves in clover if they could get three horses backed at say two to one, and the rest of the field running for them? Well, I have heard a bookmaker open with: "Two to one the field," and I've seen three different plungers back three different horses at the price with him. Of course, after the betting gets along a bit, prices become regulated, but even then you never see the 100's and 50's to 1 that can be seen on our tracks. This is probably due to the fact that all regular books must lay the odds at $25, however long the chance. During my stay in Australia I never heard of a single instance where a member of the ring wished. They get hit now and then and sometimes ask for time, so I am told, but even this is rare. The Tattersall's Club in Sydney, and the Victoria Club in Melbourne are powerful clubs, whose members are mostly ring men, and it is at these clubs every settling day where thousands upon thousands of dollars are paid over. When "a man is missing" it is always an outsider.

Do they have pool-rooms? Hardly; a few mutuels are run by outside people, who, I believe, deduct 10 per cent, but these are very covert, but what they do have are books open on almost everything. Cigar stores are generally the cover for the real business. I've known saloon keepers and fruiters and other business men to have books, where you could hook a horse or man for say $2,000 or more. I never inquired at an undertaker's but I dare say if I had he would have accommodated me. Altogether, Australia is a wonderful country, considering her position on the globe, and in horse racing, foot racing and sport generally she leads the world.

Hard vs. Soft Tracks.

The New York Sun is responsible for the following:

A knot of sporting men stood in front of the St. James yesterday discussing the races, when one spoke up and asked why it was that California horses made such records on the slope and then came here to be beaten by common platers. He cited the instance of C. H. Todd, who broke the two-year-old record at Stockton, Cal., and who was never prominent in the East except at Chicago last year when he won the American Derby, and that in nothing near record time. "I'll tell you," said a bookmaker who spent two years in San Francisco, "the tracks out there—the Bay District, the Oakland, the Stockton and the Sacramento tracks, are trotting tracks, and consequently harder and smoother. A hard day's rain won't make the mud hoof-deep. Take a horse that is trained there and he can run like a demon, but bring him East on a soft track and he is anchored. It takes nearly all the season to get him acclimated, and not only to the air but to the going. It's just the same when they go back there. Two years ago Lucky Baldwin took Volante out there from here to run at the Bay District meeting. He started him in one race and he never got anywhere. His feet were in the air all the time. He had been accustomed to pounding along in the dust here, and when his feet struck the hard pan there he just bounded up in the air. He couldn't run a little bit, and I think a 40 to 1 chance beat him. You may rest assured that C. H. Todd never would have a record on any eastern track."

A correspondent of the New York Sportsman, writing from St. Louis, says about the question of hard vs. soft tracks for race-horses: "It is hard to understand why owners should always want a soft track. The advocates of this style of going have received a poser this summer on account of the measurably successful season at the trotting track at the West Side, Chicago. Although the track there is very hard, only one horse broke down on it this summer, and that was the old selling plater Lucy Johnson. She, too, was lame when she arrived at the track. When it is considered that this was the haven for almost every patched-up cripple in the w-c-t, the record is remarkable. It stands to reason that a hard track should be safer than a soft one. How many horses strike themselves each year and break down in consequence! This must be caused by being thrown out of their stride in some way. Then, too, how much more liable a horse is to strain a tendon when the ground gives under him than when it is firm and springy. While a cripple's legs are apt to grow hot and fill on a hard track, racing on such seems to have always been safer than in the soft, yielding ground of some of the courses. Still, running horse-owners all want a soft track, and the racing association must cater to the owners."

A horse attached to a large and heavily loaded truck fell one day last week, just at the intersection of the surface railway meeting at the Broadway and Canal street in New York city. A crowd quickly collected and watched the efforts of the driver to raise the animal. Travel soon became almost completely blocked and four strings of cars were compelled to wait for the track to be cleared. Two officers helped the driver of the truck, but the combined efforts of all three were useless. As one of the policemen were about to leave to obtain blocks and pulleys, Johnny Murphy, a well-known driver of trotting horses, stepped out from the crowd, loosened the pole chains, bade the driver pull the right foreleg of the horse forward and to the right while he himself pulled the left leg forward and to the left. In a few moments the animal was on its feet and Johnny walked off amid the applause of the crowd.

Random Notes.

A BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN reporter met Orrin Hickok in the reading room of the Palaces Hotel the other night, and had an interesting chat with the veteran turfman. The talk turned on California tracks, and Mr. Hickok gave this as his opinion:

"As to the fastest track in the State," said he, "I wouldn't turn my hand over for a choice between Los Angeles, Stockton, San Jose and the Bay District, all of them are fast, those of Stockton and San Jose being especially so. If you have noticed it, you will remember that all horses go fast on the Stockton track, and if it was put in condition such as the Bay District is or has been this season, it would, I think, be the best track in the State."

"I don't know," Mr. Hickok continued, "what makes the San Jose track so fast, unless it is a dampness of the under soil. The surface is a rich black loam, and very springy, so that while it is hard it doesn't burn the feet. When Arab and Stamboul trotted their races there, I believe I could have made a heat in better than 2:15. We made the half in 1:06 and the three-quarters in 1:39, leaving 36 seconds for the last quarter. When Stamboul broke I was going handily, and I believe that I could easily have sent Arab in better than 2:15. It's a very fast track."

From the track this conversation drifted around to the horses. Mr. Hickok has Arab, Lillie Stanley, Adonis, Mortimer, and several young ones in his stable which he will handle this winter. Stamboul, who was in his charge from the Stockton Fair until two months ago, has been sent home to Rosemeade. When asked about Arab, Mr. Hickok said: "Oh, he's all right, I haven't worked him much lately, and don't know whether I'll do anything more with him. They are talking of a free-for-all for Woodnut, Antevolo, Gny Wilkes and a lot of others, but I don't know whether it will come off or not."

"Would you send him now in a free-for-all?" asked the reporter.

"Oh, yes, I will trust him against any horse that comes along."

"How is Lillie Stanley?"

"She is in good shape. I have her at Oakland and want to bring her over to the Bay District as soon as the runners are out of the way. They have made up a race for her and Woodnut at Napa on Thanksgiving day, and I want to work her for that. She will go if the plan doesn't fall through."

O'Rourke and Gonzales have quarreled with Lee Shaner. They think Adonis was not allowed to go his speed in his race with Yolo Maid at the Bay District meeting, and indirectly accused Shaner of pulling him so as to throw the race. Of course Shaner denied the imputation, and the result was that Hickok was given the handling of the great side-wheeler. Hickok is enthusiastic over the colt, and thinks he will make a great horse. "Adonis certainly paced a great race at Sacramento," said Mr. Hickok. "I like him better than Gold Leaf; he is a better feeder. The filly is inclined to be dainty, and she went to pieces before the season was over; she was never herself after the race at Stockton. Adonis is stronger than Gold Leaf, and will stand more hard work. They want me to trot Arab against these pacers, but I won't do that."

All the whispered talk about Stamboul having the advantage of the watch when he made his 2:15 at Los Angeles was probably put to rest when he showed 2:14½ at the Bay District track, but in fear that there might still linger a doubt in the minds of some, Mr. Hickok, who was behind Arab in that great race, was asked his opinion. He unhesitatingly said he thought the time was correct. In giving his reasons why he thought so, he cited Stamboul's performance at the Bay District, and then explained how he was worked. When Maben was handling Stamboul he worked the horse easily in 2:28 and 2:30. As soon as Hickok took charge of the stallion at Stockton he began working him hard, sending him five and six heats from 2:25 to 2:17. On Thursday before the Grand National the horse was driven five heats, the last in 2:19. Then, after the hard work of four heats and the scoring in the Grand National, he was brought out but four days after, and went, with a break that cost him something, in 2:14½, and a few days later was sent in 2:15 flat. "For such reasons as these," said Mr. Hickok, "I think he made 2:15 at Los Angeles."

Since Adonis has made a name for himself, quits an interesting story has come out as to how A. B. Gonzales happens to be a half owner of the fast pacer. Everybody knows how O'Rourke, the blacksmith, bought the colt as a two-year-old from G. Valensin, paying $500 for him. The purchase was really made by Mrs. O'Rourke. O'Rourke thought he had a great colt, and hadn't had reason to alter his opinion. He sent him to the Bay District track and put him at preparatory work for his first public performance, the free for all at Oakland. Gold Leaf had already, in the free for all at Los Angeles and Petaluma, shown some fast work, and when she put the record at 2:19 1-5 at Oakland, O'Rourke began to think his colt was beaten before the race. On the day preceding the first event of the colt's life, O'Rourke slipped out to the Bay District Track with his trainer. They waited until the stable boys were off at dinner, and then sent Adonis around at his best speed. What the time was will perhaps never be known, but it was considerably faster than any three-year-old had ever gone, and O'Rourke was happy. At the Oakland track next day he bought all the pools he could get on Adonis. His funds were exhausted and he went to his friend Gonzales and borrowed $2,500. The terms of the loan were that if Adonis won, Gonzales was to share half the winnings, and if he was beaten, Gonzales should lose the $2,500 and take the horse. Adonis was true to his trust, and took the race, Gonzales' share in the winnings was $1,000. He turned to O'Rourke when Adonis took his third heat, and said, "I'd like to own half of that horse. You owe me $3,500. Well, call it square, and I will have a half interest in the colt." O'Rourke accepted the proposition on the spot, and Adonis has since been a partnership possession. The papers said next day after the race that the purchase price was $5,000, but it was really $3,500, and Mr. Gonzales has never regretted the sum. The horse is for sale now, and $6,000 has been offered for him, but his owners want $10,000 and think they will get it.

The racehorse Baltimore was shot at Baltimore recently. The horse was foaled in 1862 and was very successful on the turf in 1876, 1876 and 1877. He could not eat and his owner ended his misery.

At New Bedford, Mass., horsemen are becoming alarmed at the prevalence of a disease among horses there pronounced by the veterinary surgeons to be spinal meningitis. A number of horses have died or become disabled by the disease.

The New York Jockey Club's New Track.

Much has been written and said about the new Westchester County race track, but few, excepting those thoroughly well acquainted with the district, have more than a vague notion of the precise locality or could describe its whereabouts more exactly than by saying it is somewhere away off to the right of Jerome Park. As a rough description this wouldn't be far out, but to be more accurate, the way to get at it most directly is to take the East Side Elevated to 129th street, then cross over the Harlem River Swing Bridge to the depot, which is one block from the other side of the river, of the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad. This conveys you to Westchester, the nearest station to the track, and a ten minutes' walk from there lands you within eight of the field of action. Striking directly across for the brick piers which can be seen, erected in readiness to support the grand stand, you can take, from that point, observations of the big work which has been undertaken, and picture to yourself the track as it will appear by the spring time when in a complete state for racing.

Another way of getting at the track, but involving a two-mile walk, is to get off at Fordham station and bear away over the hill to the right, continuing along the road which leads direct from Jerome Park. Taking the direction from the Park, the new track lies as nearly as can be south east, distance about two miles and a half. It is three miles and a half from the Sound, three-quarters of a mile from Bronx-dale, one-quarter from Westchester and a mile and three-quarters from West Farm.

The ground which has been made use of lies high, and the country around is rolling, but despite the sandy nature of the soil the surface appears almost marshy, and a great deal of money has had to be expended in effecting a perfect system of drainage. Like all the country in the neighborhood of Jerome, there is a big stratum of rock underlying the surface, and at the upper end of the track it was found necessary to remove considerable of it in the course of grading. Had the track been laid out as originally intended, taking a still wider sweep, the amount of blasting necessary would have been enormous, and for that reason the mile and a quarter circuit has been decided upon. Another reason which induced the directors to be satisfied with a track of a mile and a quarter was that if the track were larger the horses would be so far from the stand when approaching and making the top turn that little would be seen of them, and, therefore, it was thought inadvisable to lead the track to such a distance, but to be content with it as now arranged. The work of moving the earth and rock is being carried on under the engineering superintendence of Mr. Thomas R. Jackson of Yonkers, and under his guidance a small army of Italians is busily employed.

The shape of the track is almost a perfect oval and is eighty feet in width, increasing to 100 feet at the finish. The grand stand is on the southwest corner, in a similar position to that at Sheepshead Bay. A straight three-quarter track, 100 feet in width, starts from a point outside of the oval in the northeast corner, and, cutting cornerwise across, finishes opposite the stand, close to the finish of the oval track, only at a different angle. There will also be a chute at the southeast corner, from which will be started races of a mile and a quarter, thus avoiding the bottom turn.

When completed the tracks for the shorter distances should be particularly fast, as they will be on a down grade, for the last 300 yards, of two feet to the hundred. The corresponding up grade will be on the bend round the top turn. The three-quarter straight track, like the Futurity track at Sheepshead Bay, is not absolutely straight, there being a slight bend in it 1,070 yards from the finish. The bend is not so pronounced as the Futurity track, and owing to the lay of it, the start will be easily discernible from the grand stand, as also the whole of the course, since the straight is constructed at an angle with the stand, and will afford a sidelong view, as it were. With horses coming straight for one, it is next to impossible to form an opinion as to their relative positions; but where they are at an angle the difficulty is considerably lessened, and on the Westchester straight, as compared with others, will be very appreciable.

The grand stand is located on a rise which gives a commanding view of the whole, both straight and oval tracks. It will be a fine structure, built on the most modern lines, both for beauty and accommodation. As above stated it is situated at the southwest corner, and, in addition to the natural rise afforded by the ground, will also be raised on brick piers some twelve feet in height. These will be turned into arches, and will leave the way open and convenient to the betting ring. This latter is a new feature in the mode of its construction. It will be the basement, as it were, of the whole of the grand stand, and the big archways all along the sides will give the necessary light and ventilation. It will be convenient for the frequenters of the stand to get at to do their betting business, and convenient in like manner for the betting fraternity to obtain a good view of the racing. Unlike the stands of Monmouth Park, Sheepshead Bay or Brooklyn, the building will be faced at an angle to the home stretch in order to afford spectators on all parts of it a better view of the races. The distance of it from the track at the bottom end will be eighty feet, while that at the top end will be 140 feet. This length of it will be 650 feet, and the betting enclosure will be a similar length.

The stables will be on the opposite side of the track from the stand, and will adjoin the road running to Williams' Bridge. The view will be decidedly the prettiest of any afforded by other tracks, the surrounding country being beautifully wooded, and large clumps of timber extending to the verge of the enclosure. In the distance is the range of hills bordering on the Sound, and the whole forms a most pleasing landscape, which will add to the charm of the race meeting.

The work of grading and so forth is not done by contract, but is directly under the superintendence of the promoters of the venture, and will be completed by December 1st. Mr. J. A. Morris is largely interested in the undertaking, but is not a director, his son Mr. A. H. Morris, representing the family on the board. He is taking an active interest in all which goes on at the track, and spends much of his time and attention in looking after its welfare. Mr. C. W. Bathgate, who is so widely known and esteemed among racing men generally, and who of late years has been more especially noted in connection with the Spendthrift stud, is another who is concerned in the well being of the new track. He likewise is a director, and also is the board's lieutenant, in constant charge of affairs. Mr. Bathgate says positively that all will be in readiness for a spring opening, and with the popularity already obtained from the track among the trainers who have visited the new work and marked the construction and many advantages, success would seem a foregone conclusion.

The railroad accommodation will be perfected so as to suit the most fastidious. The Harlem River Road has expressed its willingness to put in a branch line, which will leave the main track in the neighborhood of West Farm and land passengers at the grand stand doors. Various lines have also offered their co-operation, and mutual arrangements have been entered into which will permit of passengers being brought from the city to the track by express trains without any change whatever.

The Westchester County Track has been incorporated under the name of the New York Jockey Club. The capital named is the nominal sum of $100,000, but the cost of labor to be expended before fitting the ground for the purpose and the necessary buildings alone are estimated in round figures at $1,000,000. The question of track superintendent and other officers has not yet been gone into, but, following the prevailing sentiment of the times, a paid official judge will be appointed, similar to the custom at most of the regular tracks. The managing officers of the association will continue their duties entirely to the general conduct of the meetings and the direction of club affairs.

The directors are Leonard W. Jerome, A. H. Morris, C. W. Bathgate, Charles E. Coddington, Mr. Rodgers.

The club house will not be completed by the spring, but will in due time be erected at the lower end of the grand stand. A special feature will also be made of the saddling paddock, and a regulation enforced that all horses shall be saddled there. The paddock will adjoin the club house, and will be studded with nice shade trees and contain a reception stable fitted with from forty to fifty stalls. The club intends, so far as possible, to make the paddock a welcome and interesting lounging place, which will be suited for both ladies and gentlemen to stroll in. This will be a most agreeable innovation in American racing, and a small matter in which our foreign cousins can justly claim to be ahead.—Sporting World.

Collecting Stallion Fees.

"Stallion owners frequently find trouble in collecting the amounts due them on their books. In fact this is one of the drawbacks to the business of managing stallions. Even when farmers or patrons of stallions are well able to pay these bills, and really expect to do so at their own convenience, the slow, unsatisfactory way of doing it is unpleasant for those who have to make the collections. They imagine that it makes but little difference whether they pay it now or after a while, as money is as good one time as another. With a season's work to collect it makes considerable difference to a stallion owner whether these bills are paid promptly or not when they are due. So much the more is the fact true because the amounts are not large. It is often the man's fault who owns the stallion that these collections are hard to make. There should be a clear understanding that prompt settlement must be made, the same in this as in any other business, and when patrons know that a man means to attend to business upon business principles they will be more prompt in their actions. The number of dead-beats on the books of a stallion depends upon the judgment of the owner. There is no other branch of business in which men who never try to pay their debts take the advantage more than in this. It is a pretty hard matter to keep such men's names off the book, but it should be done as scrupulously as it would be were they asking credit at the store or bank. The percentage of losses to stallion owners from this class of customers is quite great, and to this can often be traced that part of the earnings of a horse that might make a reasonable profit, while with it a loss is sustained. Keep down the dead-beat list and make the others pay up promptly, then it would make the stallion business profitable."

Wounds from Barbed-Wire.

Valuable stock will often get into barbed-wire fences. It is well to have some simple remedies at hand, as many of the cuts, if taken in time, may be readily cured, while if neglected, an unsightly scar may remain, seriously impairing the value of the animals. Ordinary liniments and salves are generally too severe, even when the latter is plentifully mixed with lard.

A preparation, consisting of one part turpentine and two parts lard will soothe the wound and keep away flies. Deep cuts can be healed thus without leaving a scar. But if the animal is not in good condition, blood-poisoning may ensue and death follow. Pine tar applied to the parts affected will also keep away flies; but it has a tendency to harden the bare flesh and render it more painful. A salve made of lard and a little pine tar mixed with it, will heal the wound and keep away flies.

Ordinary cuts on a barbed-wire fence, when the animal is in good health, will often heal rapidly without any application whatever, provided the flies are kept away. A simple remedy, which will not only keep away the insects, but will drive out maggots from wounds where they are found and heal them rapidly is the following: Take the inside bark of the elder and boil in lard until a strong salve is made. Add a little tar. Apply plentifully and as frequently as necessary, and unless the wound is extremely severe, it will soon heal.

Edward B. Allen, a druggist of Flemington, N. J., and quite a horse fancier, has brought suit against John Carpenter, Jr., editor of a Clinton paper, for an alleged libel published on June 4. He lays the damages at $2,000. The publication in question was in reference to the registration of two horses by the plaintiff, which, it is said, was procured by means of a false pedigree. After the publication Mr. Allen demanded an inquiry into the matter before the Board of Control of the Breeder's Association. A hearing was had, at which he claimed that the false pedigree was imposed on him by W. Scott Smith, from whom he bought one of the horses. Mr. Smith admitted having made up the pedigree but said he had done so at Mr. Allen's solicitation.

The Board was equally divided on the question of suspending Mr. Allen from membership in the Breeders' Association.

Bend Or.

Of the great Bend Or, at the National Horse Show in New York, the Sportsman says:

Bend Or, Mr. Cassatt's double prize winner at the Horse Show, looked a grand horse on Monday as he was brought into the ring to compete against the six other entries for the thoroughbred stallion competition. Now in his prime, this eleven-year-old stallion was a fast and stout race-horse, and one of the best weight-carriers that ever ran in this country. Therefore it was not surprising that on Tuesday Bend Or was also awarded the first prize in the stallion class for getting hunters. His competitors on both days also attracted no small amount of attention. The English horse, The Rake, was the only absentee, but Greenback, the son of Dollar, lately imported by Mr. Easton, looked a fine specimen of the high class English thoroughbred.

Coldstream, by Rayon d'Or, the second prize winner in the thoroughbred stallion class, has filled out and developed greatly since he was on the turf. Greenback was awarded the V. H. C., and Biloxi, by Bonnie Scotland, the H. C. On Tuesday Greenback secured the second prize in the class for stallions getting hunters.

Bend Or's turf career, while not a very long one, was, if anything, a more brilliant one than that of his predecessor, the English horse Bend Or, after whom he was named. True, the son of Doncaster won the Derby, but in the light of his later performances it is doubtful if he ever was as stout a horse as was his American namesake in 1882. In that year at Saratoga Bend Or ran some great races for his owners, Churchill & Co. On August 19th of that year he ran his last race, which was also his best performance and a bet on record at the time. It was a dash of a mile and five furlongs, and Bend Or, four years, carried 125 pounds, with Isaac Murphy in the saddle. Opposed to him were Crescote, Bushwhacker, Lida Stanhope, Cot. Sorange Nettle and Wedding Day. In the pools Bend Or sold for $1,500, the field $650, and after Bushwhacker had led for a mile and a quarter Crescote headed him, followed by Bend Or, and the latter won in hand by half a length in 2:49, the best on record at the time.

Captain William Connor's colors were carried by Bend Or in this race, but he was really at the time the property of Mr. A. J. Cassatt, who has owned the horse ever since. Captain Connor had bought Bend Or for Churchill & Co. after his race at a mile and a half for the Summer Handicap, in which, with 118 pounds up, he ran the distance in 2:25½, beating Thora, Ada Glenn, Compensation and Springfield. Later on he sold him to Mr. Cassatt for a round sum. Bend Or won twice as a two-year-old, but in 1881 he only won once out of nine essays, the Galt House Handicap, at Louisville, a mile and a half in 2:38, thus early showing staying powers of a high order. In 1882, as noted, he was a great horse, and won nine races out of twelve starts. His pedigree is such a good one, combining the best families of England and Australia, that we give it in full:

The Dwyer Yearlings.

Commenting on the youngsters that are now being tried in the East, "Black and Blue" writes:

Among turfmen and 40 per cent. of racegoers there is just now as much interest in turf affairs as there was at the height of the summer racing season. Just now the yearlings are being tried. Some of these will be champions of the two-year-old division next year. They will have the richest stakes in the world to compete for, and aside from the interest turfmen take in their trials a large percentage of racegoers with speculative tendencies have a keen desire to see what the embryo champions can do. This knowledge will be of financial value when the spring stakes for the two-year-old horses come up for decision.

The trials of the Dwyer yearlings have been generally satisfactory. So far as developed the youngsters have not shown any dazzling merit or anything to prove that among the lot there is another Tremont, Hanover or Kingston, but nearly all have shown good speed and high quality and give promise of higher development. Of course nobody outside the stable can say with any degree of accuracy—and perhaps the stable attaches cannot—which of the lot is superior. A number have done their quarters in 24 and few in less than 25. With more perfect development the laggards may prove themselves superior to their faster stable companions. Yearling trials are often deceptive.

The stock of the Dwyer Bros., exclusive of yearlings, is valued at $140,000, and with $70,000 worth of youngsters they must be admitted to have a grand collection of thoroughbreds. The highest-priced yearling in the Dwyer stable is Honston, by Hindoo—Bonrlon Belle. He cost $3,200, and is a full brother to the mighty Hanover. So far he has not given great promise, but like his distinguished brother, may constantly improve and grow into a champion. Kingsbridge, brother of Kingston, is the second highest-priced yearling in the stable. He cost $5,800, and gives promise of being a grand performer. His trial was one of the best in the Dwyer string, and the young son of Spendthrift may be a formidable champion.

Blue Bird, brother to the speedy Blue Wing, cost nearly $5,000, and gives promise of winning his price early in the spring. He is exceptionally well formed, and gives promise of great development. Another good one is Congress, a son of Kyrle Daly. He was purchased for less than $2,000, and unless he goes wrong before the next May ann shines on the Gravesend course he will be bracketed a winner. One of the cheapest colts in the Dwyer lot, Sir John, a son of the imported Australian stallion, Sir Modred, indicates by his work that he will be a very useful two-year-old. Less than one-half of the Dwyer yearlings have been tried. It would seem that there are too many in the lot to be taken care of, but one division will be handled by McCabe, and in all probability the other by Thompson.

Animals of vicious habits should never be used for breeding purposes, as vices are frequently transmitted. By careful breeding in this respect the disposition of the animals can be partially controlled.

Speed Reduced.

Half a century ago a horse that could trot a mile in 2:30 would have been considered a nine day wonder, as he would have not only swept away Edwin Forrest's champion saddle record of 2:31½, made in the first heat of a race against Sally Miller, the dam of Long Island Black Hawk, but would also have been the monarch of the trotting turf. Still his reign would have been short-lived, as early in the forties Lady Suffolk, Dutchman, Lady Sutton, the first trotter to finish the third heat of a race in 2:30, Americus, Trustee, Columbus, Jack Rossiter and O'Blennis appeared, while thousands assembled on the Long Island tracks, as well as at Philadelphia and Boston, to see them in their races, which were generally two and three mile heats to wagon or saddle.

When they were retired a 2:25 horse was an unknown quantity, but the next ten years saw such stars as Tacony, Flora Temple, Geo. M. Patchen, Rose of Washington, Lancelot, Widow Machree, Princess and Ethan Allen appear. Tacony made himself famous by reducing Lady Suffolk's saddle record to 2:25½. His honors were transferred to Flora Temple three years later, when she defeated him in 2:24½ over the Union Conorse, the mare going in harness and Tacony to saddle. This race was trotted in 1856 and in 1859 Flora Temple trotted her memorable mile at Kalamazoo in 2:19½. Two mares and two stallions that frequently met Flora Temple in her races afterwards became famous in the stud, Widow Machree producing Aberdeen, and Princess Happy Medium, both foals being by Hambletonian. The stallions were Ethan Allen and Geo. M. Patchen, both of which proved sires of merit when their opportunities are considered.

At the beginning of the sixties Flora Temple's name was still the only one to appear in the 2:20 list, and when they closed George Palmer, Dexter and Lady Thorne were all that had been added to it. In the early seventies the additions came in rapidly, Goldsmith Maid, securing the honors in 1871, and Lucy and American Girl the following year. Then Occident appeared, and he was followed in 1874 by Gloster, Nettie, Red Cloud, Fleety Goldust and Mambrino Gift. That year was also the one from which the first 2:15 trotter dates, Goldsmith Maid having cut her record, which was also the world's record, from 2:16½ to 2:14. Since that time up to the present twenty names have been added to this list of extreme merit and free-for-all qualities, six having entered it during the past season. It now contains the following names:

Maud S., ch m, by Harold—Miss Russell by Pilot Jr. 2:08½
Jay-Eye-See, blk g, by Dictator—Midnight by Pilot Jr. 2:10
St. Julien, b g, by Volunteer—Flora by Harry Clay 2:11½
Gny, blk g, by Kentucky Prince—Flora Gardner by Seeley's American Star 2:12
Maxy Cobb, b b, by Happy Medium—Lady Jenkins by Prince Nebo 2:13½
Rarus, b g, by Conklin's Abdallah—Nancy Awni by Telegraph 2:13½
Harry Wilkes, b g, by Geo. Wilkes—Mollie Walker by Captain Walker 2:13½
Belle Hamlin, b m, by Hamlin's Almont Jr.—Toy by Hamlin Patchen 2:13½
Phallas, b b, by Dictator—Betsy Trotwood by Clark Chief 2:13½
Clingstone, b g, by Rysdyk—Gretchen by Chocros 2:14
Goldsmith Maid, b m, by Alexander's Abdallah—Lady Abdallah by Abdallah 2:14
Trinket, b m, by Princeps—Ouida by Hambletonian 2:14
Patron, b r, by Pancoast—Beatrice by Cuyler 2:14½
Rosaline Wilkes, b m, by Conn's Harry Wilkes—Cigarette by Zilcandi Goldust 2:14½ Hopeful, g g, by Godfrey Patchen, dam by Bridham Horse 2:14½
Prince Wilkes, ch g, by Red Wilkes—Rose Chief by Brown Chief 2:14½
Stamboul, b b, by Sultan—Meeting by Hambletonian 2:14½
Arab, b g, by Arthurton—Lady Hamilton 2:15
Favonia, b m, by Wedgewood—Fadette by Alexander's Abdallah 2:15
Lulu, b m, by Alexander's Norman—Kate Crockett by Imp. Hogen 2:15
Majolica, b g, by Startle—Jessie Kirk by Clark Chief 2:15

All of the above, with the exception of Maxy Cobb and Goldsmith Maid, are still living, and at least seven promise to reduce their records still farther. Ten were got by sons, two by grandsons, and two by great-grandsons of Hambletonian, while three trace to Mambrino Chief, through Woodford Mambrino and Clark Chief. There is also another interesting fact in this table that we have never seen made public. That is, that Goldsmith Maid, the first mare to beat 2:15, was inbred to Abdallah, while the sire of Maud S., the reigning queen, was also inbred to the same horse.

Upon running over the list of 2:15 performers, we find that Lulu was the second to appear in it. She made her record in 1875, and was followed by Hopeful and Rarus in 1878, which was also the same year that the latter reduced Goldsmith Maid's record to 2:13½. St. Julien reduced these figures to 2:12½ in 1879, a performance that placed his name in the 2:15 list for the first time, but he did not make his record of 2:11½ until the following year, which was also the one from which the advent of Maud S. as a star dates. The latter made a record of 2:13½ in the third heat of her second race, and closed the year with a record of 2:10½. This was reduced to 2:10½, and in 1884, when Jay-Eye-See ascended the throne for a day, the peerless daughter of Harold changed the figures to 2:09½, which were cut to 2:09½ in 1884, and to the present 2:08½ in 1885.

Trinket, who started against Maud S. when she made her race record of 2:13½, trotted in 2:14 in 1881, while Clingstone was admitted to the 2:15 list the following year. Jay-Eye-See made his debut in 1883, and his present record the next season. The same year Phallas and Maxy Cobb trotted in 2:13½ and 2:13½ respectively. Majolica was the only debutante in 1885, while Harry Wilkes dropped in the following year, and last season reduced his record to 2:13½. Last season was also marked by the performances of Patron and Belle Hamlin, which was the third time that two performers had entered the 2:15 list in one year. The season that is now drawing to a close casts all the preceding ones into the shade, no less than six trotters having made records of 2:15 or better. Gny leads the sextette with a record of 2:12, which is not only the eight-year-old record of the world, but also the fastest ever made by a member of the Mambrino Chief family. Gny has trotted twice in 2:12, once in 2:12½ and once in 2:14½. Rosaline Wilkes made her record against time at Poughkeepsie, and repeated in 2:15. She opened the season with a record of 2:18½, made during her first year on the turf.

Prince Wilkes and Stamboul each have a record of 2:14½. The Red Wilkes gelding has only been beaten once this season, and made his record in the second heat of a race with Rosaline Wilkes at Cleveland. During the past two months he has trotted repeatedly better than 2:16. Stamboul made his record against time after winning the greatest of all stallion races in 2:17, 2:17½, 2:17, being beaten a head in the first heat, which Woodnut won in 2:17. He also trotted three heats in 2:15, 2:17½, 2:16½, at Los Angeles, and afterwards forced Arab out in 2:15 at San Jose. Favonia has not been beaten this season, and made her record of 2:15 in the fourth heat of a postponed race at Buffalo.—N. Y. Sportsman.

It is said that Mr. Haggin will have in the spring a three-year-old superior to either Salvador or Fresno. If this be so Mr. Haggin will have a champion.

Echoes of the Week.

The Breeder's Gazette thus comments on the National Stallion Race:

In spite of the fact that the race was unquestionably the best contested trotting event combined exclusively to entire bors s that has ever been seen, but meager details of the National Stallion Stake, decided at San Francisco ten days ago, are obtainable. The San Francisco papers of the following day have been carefully scanned, but, curiously enough, the only newspaper man on the Pacific Coast who seems capable of writing an intelligent account of a trotting race is Mr. J. C. Simpson, editor of the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN, and as he had a horse in the National (Antevolo), and drove him, the veteran writer does not feel as though it would be in good taste for him to describe the event in which he was so vitally interested.

That Stamboul had a hard fight to win from Woodnut is clear, and more than that the son of Nutwood that Holly has developed so well went a better race in every respect than ever before, and horsemen on this side of the continent who have watched the career of this horse are inclined to think that this was due in part to the fact that an accident in the nature of a quarter-crack made it imperative that for a week preceding the race the horse should be given almost absolute rest, and that this made him better on the day of the race than he would otherwise have been there is little doubt, as fifty trotters are overtrained where one does not get work enough. And especially is this true when the animal is being prepared for an important event and the man who is to drive him does not have a large string of trotters on his hands, all of which must be worked regularly. It was so at one of the big meetings at Cleveland not many years ago when Phil Thompson and Mand Messenger, both of Crit Davis' stable, won two races in one afternoon, each horse doing one or more heats better than 2:17, and making a record within a fraction of a second as good as ever went to his credit.

Neither of the trotters mentioned had been given fast work for several days preceding the race, Davis being under the weather and not doing much in the training line. The same thing has occurred in the experience of almost every driver, horses that were thought to be short of work winning the best races of their lives, and others that were supposed to be trained to the hour proving to be stale and overdone when called upon for a supreme effort. A notable instance in which the first-mentioned conditions prevailed occurred at the Washington Park track in this city in the fall of 1886. A race was arranged between Opal, Dick Stauffer, Editor and Jeanette, all owned by members of the Washington Park Club. Editor and Opal were thought to be the best of the quartette, the first-named having a little the call in the betting on account of the fact that Budd Doble had been looking after his interests all the season, and it was known that the big son of Princeps was in better shape than ever before in his life, capable of going a mile in about 2:22. John Kelly had Opal in good form, the mare having been in training all summer, and the same was true of Jeanette, the daughter of Don Cossack that won so many races when a three-year-old, making a record of 2:26½ at that age. The other starter, Dick Stauffer, was not thought to have a ghost of a show to win, although known to be a speedy horse, as he had been driven on the road all summer by his owner, a man who weighs 250 pounds, and had been given no easy task in that capacity. The race at Washington Park between the four horses named was to be trotted on Oct. 23, and until thirteen days before the race Dick Stauffer was not hitch to a sulky, Peter Johnston taking him in hand at the time mentioned. It was manifestly impossible to give him many fast miles before the day of the race, and among those who were aware of the circumstances there was not the slightest idea that the horse could win. But Johnson, who is a great man to get a horse ready for a race on short notice, went to work with a will and two days before the race he found that Dick Stauffer could trot a quarter in about 35 seconds. Peter knew that this was not enough speed to win the race, and after looking the situation over carefully decided that Stauffer would go better with toe-weights, although up to that time the horse had never worn one. According he put on a couple of four-ounce weights, and the day before the race drove Stauffer a quarter in 34½ seconds, which showed that the weights made him a faster horse. Then he came out on the following day and won in straight heats, the time being 2:21½, 2:23½, 2:22—every mile being faster than he had ever gone in his life.

That is what a small amount of training and some toe-weights when they were needed did for a Blue Bull that nobody thought had a chance to win, and perhaps the quarter-crack that compelled Woodnut to be restricted to jogging exercises for several days previous to the National Stallion Stakes was responsible for his going the best race of his life, and in addition trotting his miles without breaks, something he had never before been able to accomplish when pitted against horses of his own speed. And it should not be forgotten that in this very race the winner, Stamboul, had a new driver, one of the best in the land, in Orrin Hickok, and that the system of training which had been previously pursued with him was abandoned, the result being that he not only won the great race of the year but, three days later, beat his record of 2:15 by a quarter of a second. Hickok is not much of a hand to work horses hard unless they absolutely need it, but in that case he can give them as much of it as anybody. He showed this in the case of St. Julien, a horse that without an amount of work which in most cases would have been considered excessive was of little account as a trotter, and yet under Hickok's system of forty miles a day in the jogging line he learned to have sense and do as he was told. The same scheme was tried with Gny two years ago when Splan had the little black fellow in char e, the case of St. Julien being in St. John's mind, but it did not work with Gny, the only result being to turn him from a black to a brown by reason of constant exposure to the sun, and make him, if possible, a trifle meaner than before. It was only when Millard Saunders began feeding Gny apples and in other ways petting him that the distinguished member of the Kentucky Prince family condescended to show the public what he could do in the way of trotting. In just what manner Hickok changed the system of training that had been followed in the case of Stamboul is not known, but Antevolo, the third starter in the race, stands forth as a triumph and shining example in the matter of nursing, for the son of Electioneer had a bad leg when his preparation for the National was begun, and in spite of all predictions to the contrary Mr. Simpson brought him to the post in such good shape that he was able to make more than a respectable showing in all the heats. The talk in California now is that if Stamboul is in Hickok's stable another season he will come close to lowering the stallion record of 2:13½ which stands to the credit of Maxy Cobb, the dead and gone son of Happy Medium. In his 2:14½ heat Stamboul made a break in the third quarter of the mile, but in spite of this he beat his record and trotted the last quarter in 33½ seconds. In the National he finished the last quarter of one of his winning heats in 32½ seconds, and a horse that can do this may be relied upon, in the hands of an artist like Hickok, to heat 2:13½ when all the conditions are favorable.

Our Trotters in Europe.

It is not often that an undeveloped colt is taken from this country to Europe and made a trotter of after he reaches the other side of the water, but such seems to have been the result in the case of Grandmont, a six-year-old son of Almont that was purchased in Kentucky by an Italian gentleman last year, and sent to the land of turquoise-tinted skies. According to reports from there Grandmont is a veritable wind-splitter, as he has made a record of 2:26½, which is a tie with the best mile ever trotted in Europe, harring the 2:20½ of Mollie Wilkes at Vienna, over which the Austrians nearly went into hysterics. As the Italian tracks are maelstroms of hardness, and in many other ways not at all adapted to the development of a trotter's best speed, it is universally conceded that the 2:26½ of Grandmont is equal to a mile in 2:20 over an American track.

And right here a very interesting question comes up regarding the records which are made in Europe by the sons and daughters of American sires. Are they to be recognized in this country, and if so how are they to be distinguished so that future generations will know which is which? Grandmont, for instance, is an addition to the 2:30 list of Almont, and Gen. Withers will, naturally enough, want the fact to show on the records. Now it is certain that neither the National Trotting Association nor the American can take any official notice of the European performances, and as there is no organized body in Europe governing the trotting turf there can be nothing done in the way of certified copies of performances. In the case of Grandmont it may be necessary to establish the fact that he made a record of 2:26½, and as a matter of fact it could not be officially done. The same trouble would ensue in case there was a brother or sister to Mollie Wilkes. Of course the fact of Mollie having a record of 2:20½ would enhance the value of such brother or sister, and in fact of any near relative, and yet what chance would there be of convincing an intending buyer of such fact? It might be possible in a particular instance to get a certificate from the European track on which the record was made, but that would be a tedious and clumsy method and would not, in a great majority of instances, give even a slight degree of satisfaction. But to return to Grandmont, it may be said that his dam is Badouahy Strader's C. M. Clay, second dam by Alexander's Norman, so that in the matter of breeding he is well enough equipped to be valuable for stud purposes after his racing days are over—something that cannot be said of all the trotting stallions that have gone from here to Europe, Alexander and Amber being conspicuous examples of stallions that had better have been made geldings, so far as their having any chance to improve the stock of a country is concerned.—Breeder's Gazette.

Johnston, 2:06 1-4.

It is rumored that Budd Doble intends to spend this winter in California, and that if he does he will bring the great pacer Johnston, whose record is 2:06½, with him. When Col. John W. Conley bought the pacer Johnston at auction for $3,900 last winter, it was thought that he had secured one of the greatest bargains in horse-flesh on record. And so he did, on paper, but how to make money with the animal was another question. Johnston was barred in all the free-to-all pacer races. That happened several seasons ago when John Splan sent him a mile over the West Side track in Chicago in 2:06½, so that there was no chance of getting any purse money with him. There was not another pacer in the country near enough to him in speed to make an exhibition that would draw well, and so Doble, to whom Col. Conley contided the horse before leaving for Europe, found that he had on his hands the fastest pacer in the world, and no chance of making expenses with him. After giving Johnston two or three fast miles in harness Budd had George Starr get on the pacer's back one day and ride him a little, the finish of the exercise being a quarter in 31 seconds. This was not fast enough to suit Doble, but he let it go at that and continued working the horse in harness, Johnston getting so good that by the time Hartford was reached Doble drove him half a mile in 1:00½, which was by odds the best clip at which a trotter or pacer had ever done the distance.

In the early part of the season, in fact at the Detroit meeting, young Stewart, the Kansas City lad who drove White Stockings, and whose father is very wealthy, wanted to buy Johnston, and even went so far as to get a price on him from Doble, but they did not come to terms, and so the horse is still the property of Col. Conley. Just to show the owner what a mile Johnston could go if he were hitched with a runner capable of carrying him along, Doble hitched up the pacer and Father John one day last week at the Washington Park track in this city and at the very first offer they split off a quarter in 26 seconds—or at the rate of 1:44 to the mile. This horse Father John ought to be the greatest race horse in the country if breeding settled the matter, for he is by Glenelg, and out of the dam of The Bard, but instead of being a race horse he is a crab of the first water, and could not earn enough in a year on the running turf to keep himself in oats for ten minutes. It was on the strength of this pedigree, at which they looked with awe, that several running-horse trainer kept pegging away at Father John in an ineffectual effort to make him even a respectable performer. After they had all failed Doble brought the horse for $150 to use as a running mate with Charlie Hogan, and at Pittsburg and other places in the fall of 1887 Father John pulled Charlie around the track in great shape, doing the mile on one occasion in 2:11½, which was a dizzy clip for Hogan to go, even with a sturdy galloper hauling him along.

The black gelding Gean Smith, to whom James Goldsmith gave a record of 2:18½ this season, will be wintered at the Goldsmith farm in Orange County, New York, and horsemen look for him to be better than ever next season. Goldsmith has gone right to the front this year as a driver, his string all doing well. He began the season by making the black stallion Atlantic equal his record of 2:21, doing the trick over a half-mile track at that, at Pittsburg. Just before the horse was shipped to Europe he drove him a mile in 2:17, this resulting in the sale of the horse for $12,000 he having been bought the previous season by Goldsmith and Andy Welch for $3,000. Before the Central Circuit meetings began Goldsmith reduced May Gould's record to 2:24½ and then he started down the line with wonderful success, giving Company a record of 2:19½, Gean Smith 2:18½, Beauty Bright 2:21½, William 2:18½, and the pacer Silver Threads 2:15½. This is a great exhibit for any man to make in a season, and Goldsmith's friends are right in saying that he is in the front rank of his profession.

Leaping Extraordinary.

A correspondent of The London Sporting and Dramatic News gives the following account of some remarkable leaps:

On Jan. 24, 1733, the Charlton hounds (subsequently the Goodwood) had a famous run of ten hours, in the course of which the Lord Hartington of the time rode down one of the steep hills on the edge of the Downs and jumped a five barred gate at the bottom, this would be very good form even in these days of long necked spurs and cutting whips. In 1753, Sir Charles Turner, who kept foxhounds in Yorkshire, and hunted about Kirkstatham, rode a jumping match which deserves to be mentioned, though the leaps were not particularly formidable. He made a bet 1,000 guineas with Lord March, the "Old Q" of latter days, that he would ride ten miles an hour and take forty leaps, each leap to be one yard and a quarter and 7 inches: in other words 4 feet and 4 inches. I cannot find out whether touching or knocking down a leap disqualified the rider; but Sir Charles won, during the whole distance, jumps included, in what appears to be the incredibly short time of thirty-six minutes, especially as he rode a galloway. In 1794, however, we find a Sydenham sportsman taking a formidable piece of timber in cold blood. There was then no Crystal Palace nor surrounding villas. Penge was a fine grass country, and the residents in those parts had their choice of both fox and stag hounds. The latter had one day run a fox along the meadows near Sydenham, when some of the field came to a gate guarded by a stalwart butcher, who barred the way and declined to open the gate. The hero of the story "regretted to find that the butcher's temper had been ruffled by some mishap, and asked if he might be allowed to go over the gate." Seeing that it was a full sized five barred one with a paling on the top, the whole thing being upward of six foot in height, the butcher gave his consent and withdrew to one side, expecting to witness a refusal or a downfall. The Kentish sportsman, however, cleared the gate, stove and all, the feat, we are told, bringing forth from the morose hmb slayer the exclamation that he would be d—d if he would ever again prevent this gentleman from going through his gate when he thought proper.

At times one hears a good deal about what are called natural jumpers, a term which is not self-explanatory, but which I suppose must be taken to indicate a horse that jumps without training. In those parts of Ireland where the mare and foal ramble together over the banks, the foals learn a good deal of their hunting duties, as they follow their dams anywhere; but they will, of course, do the same in England; and the other day I came across an account of a two months old foal by Strathmore following the mare over a wall five feet high and one foot thick. This youngster may surely be termed a natural jumper. Another foal, bred in 1844, jumped a high gate out of the paddock in which it ran, and the owner was in ecstasies, and looked longingly forward to the time when he should ride this promising juvenile with hounds. By the time he was a year old he was considered an extremely well grown colt, at two he was remarkably forward, but, alas! he grew ugly, and it was seen that his shoulders were by no means as sloping as they might have been. He was 17.1 by the time he stopped growing, and was utterly useless for a hunter, so he was sold for £50 and went into the Royal mews, though in what capacity we are not told. One of the most wonderful authenticated leaps on the part of a foal, however, was accomplished by a colt dropped by a thoroughbred mare on the 25th of April, 1884. On the second of June this active young thing, in the presence of three persons, jumped a closely cut thorn hedge 5 feet 10 inches high and 3 feet wide at the top, with an up hill take off and a ditch on the landing side; the base measurement of the hedge and ditch was 13 feet 2 inches. This colt may also with justice be considered a natural jumper. It was a curious leap, too, that was taken by a young horse bought in Lancashire and taken into one of the Midland counties. He was standing with a dumb jockey on in a loose box which was divided from the adjoining boxes by partitions 6 feet 3 inches high. On the groom approaching he saw the horse, dumb jockey and all jump over the partition into the next box. Of horses jumping over great heights with a rider on their backs there are a great many instances, of which a few may be selected. At Rugby Fair in 1881 a man who had a horse to sell rode it, at the request of a dealer, over a brick wall which divided the street from a paddock, and then rode him back again into the street. The height, which was measured by the late Mr. White, was 5 feet 11 inches on the street side and 6 feet on the other side. The leap was taken in a cramped situation, and after the owner had shown his horse's powers he sold him for £50. Before the fair was over he changed hands several times, his last buyer giving considerably over £100 for him. Then a gentleman once rode a horse over the wall which used to separate Hyde Park from the Kingsbridge road. The wall was 6 feet 2 inches on the taking off side, and there was a drop of 7 feet on landing. A half bred hunter in Roscommon jumped a wall 6 feet 3 inches high, with a drop of 6 feet 11 inches, while a great big 17-hand chestnut horse, shown by Mr. Gebhard at Islington a few years ago, jumped 6 feet 6 inches at a show in New York.

Trotting on Ice.

It was well into the middle of last winter before any organized attempts at ice racing were made at Montreal. Then Messrs. Larn, Kennedy and a few other enthusiastic horsemen put their heads together, spent money pretty freely, laid out a good track on the river with an ample grand stand and the whole nicely fenced in. The undertaking was started more as an experiment than with the idea of making anything out of it. The best that was expected was that both ends would meet when the season closed, but there was an agreeable disappointment, and by the time the ice was ready to break there was some loose change jingling in the projectors' pockets. This season work will be begun as soon as the ice has set well. The first experiment has proved conclusively that ice racing here may be made a success from both a sporting and a financial point of view, and admirers and owners of the trotting horse were glad to learn that ice racing was to be made a feature of the coming carnival. With respectable purses hung out and no records to lower we ought to see some trotting worth getting one's nose tipped to see. Then Ottawa comes to the front in a way which can hardly fail to give the carnival races a boom. The Winter Trotting Club of Ottawa has already decided on holding a meeting in February, but the date has been left open until the Montreal races have been definitely fixed, when it would suit the Capital people nicely to hold their meeting the week following. The Ottawa men are offering over $1,500 in premiums, exclusive of a reward of $400 to be paid any trotter or pacer winning 2:25 class and free for all, provided winner beats 2:30.

The Sought-For Stallion Record.

The Chicago Times thus comments on the late great stallion contests:

"The recent remarkable stallion races at Lexington and San Francisco and the universal interest which they have evoked, will probably make a resume of the speed progress of the trotting aires of some value at the present time. Less than thirty years ago a stallion which could trot in 2:30 was a phenomenon. To-day if an entire horse is on the turf and can not trot in 2:30 he is a failure. One of the first stallions to obtain great prominence on the trotting track was the famous Ethan Allen, which, on October 18, 1858, on the Union course, Long Island, trotted against George M. Patchen, for a purse of $2,000, and distanced him in 2:28. At the same track on July 12, 1860, he defeated Princess in 2:29½ and 2:25½. In the second heat he distanced his competitor. When it is borne in mind that the fastest trotting time in 1859 was Flora Temple, 2:19½, the record of Ethan Allen becomes more remarkable. He met the best horses of his time and defeated them, including Rose of Washington, George M. Patchen, Tacony, Princess and John Morgan. In the stud he was not a success and his roll of honor in the 2:30 list is a small one.

"Contemporary with Ethan Allen was the bay stallion George M. Patchen, by Cassius M. Clay, dam by Head'em, George M. Patchen won his first victory on Oct. 14, 1857, at Newton, N. J., when he defeated Wolf and American Star in 2:44 and 2:42. At the Union Course, Long Island, on May 9, 1859, he trotted against Pilot and defeated him after a five-heat contest. Pilot won the first and second heats in 2:31 and 2:29½, George M. Patchen winning the next three heats in 2:32½, 2:39 and 2:40. On July 7, 1859, he defeated Brown Dick and Miller's Damael in the first, second and fifth heats in 2:26½, 2:26½ and 2:29. On May 16, 1860, he met his great antagonist Ethan Allen and defeated him in straight heats in 2:25, 2:24 and 2:29. On June 12 of same year he met the great Flora Temple, 2:19½, and defeated her in a race of two mile heats in 4:51½ and 4:57½. He made his best time, 2:23½, on Aug. 2, 1860. George M. Patchen did good work in the stud. He was the sire of the famous Lucy, 2:18½, and three other 2:30 performers. He was the sire of twelve sons which have produced forty trotters in 2:30 or better.

"The next great stallion to appear upon the turf was one which proved to be not only a monarch of the track but the greatest sire of trotters that the world had ever seen. This was George Wilkes, by Rysdyk's Hambletonian, out of Dolly Spunker, by Henry Clay. How fast he could have trotted will never be known. At that time the rule upon the trotting turf was to go as slow as possible compatible with winning. To expose the highest speed of a horse would have destroyed his opportunities for making money. The motto was, win if you can but reduce your record as little as possible. At the present time a stallion is sent for a fast record on the first occasion that he is absolutely fit, and a season's training is not considered wasted if he succeeds in attaching a fast mark to his name. In the days when George Wilkes was on the turf, owners thought differently, and the consequence was that he left the turf with a record of 2:22, but it has been confidently stated by those who know this great horse best, that he could trot in 2:12 or better. George Wilkes won his first race on October 13, 1868, he made his record of 2:22 in a contest with Rhode Island and Draco Prince. In the course of his turf career George Wilkes met and defeated such celebrated trotters as Lady Thorne, Dan Rice, Fearnought, Lucy and American Girl. But his great claim to fame rests pre-eminently upon his superlative speed-producing power. In the 2:30 list he has more sons and daughters to his credit than any other sire living or dead. He has sixty-eight in that equine roll of honor, while in the third generation he has forty-eight to his credit.

"It was not till so late as 1876 that a stallion trotted below 2:16. The feat was accomplished by Smuggler in 2:15½, and all the sporting world declared that the stallion's limit of speed had been reached. Smuggler won his first race on Aug. 18, 1874, at Springfield, Mass. His best time was 2:27. On Sept. 15, 1874, at Mystic Park, Boston, he won a $10,000 purse, defeating Phil Sheridan, H. W. Gent, Commonwealth, Mambrino Gift and Vermont Abdallah. During his turf career he met and defeated Judge Fullerton, Thomas Jefferson, Lucille Goldust, Great Eastern, Bodine and Goldsmith Maid. He obtained his record of 2:15½ on Aug. 21, 1876, at Hartford, Conn. From that period to the present time the speed development of entire horses has occupied a large proportion of the time of the leading trainers.

"The ambition to beat the time made by Smuggler was a predominant passion in the minds of many trainers and owners, but in spite of all their efforts he remained the stallion king for eight years. In 1884 Phallas, by Dictator, trotted at Chicago on July 14th in 2:13½, and by royal right of performance assumed the throne. The rise of Phallas from the ranks was rapid. With the exception of one minor race at half mile heats he made his first appearance on the turf in 1883, and in 1884 he defeated the best horses on the turf and held the stallion championship.

In 1883 he defeated Index, Adelaide, Felix, Duquane George V. and other fast ones, and finished the season with a record of 2:15½. He opened the season of 1884 at Chicago, on July 4, by winning the $2,500 purse for stallions in a walk-over in 2:32. On July 14 he met three of the fastest mares on the turf—Catchfly, Clemmie G. and Fannie Wither- spoon. Catchfly won the first heat in 2:19½, Phallas winning the next three heats in 2:15½, 2:18½, 2:13½. The balance of his performances for the season were trotted against time, and the following year he was retired to the stud.

"Once only has the record of Phallas been passed by a stallion, and that was in a match against time by Maxey Cobb, the fastest son of Happy Medium. For a nominal bet of $25, on Sept. 30, 1884, at Providence, R. I., he trotted a mile to rule in 2:13½. His untimely death in 1885 deprived the turf of one of its brightest ornaments. Such is the brief history of stallion speed progress from 2:30 to 2:13½. With better methods, faster tracks and an improving breed, the champion stallion of the future will trot in 2:10."

The only mare that was applauded at the Erdenheim stud sale was Maggie B. B., foaled 1866 by imp. Australian, dam Madeline. Maggie B. B. is the dam of Iroquois, Pera Harold and Panique. Iroquois is the only horse that ever won the Derby, St. Leger and Prince of Wales stakes. W. H. Forbes of Boston, bought her for $1,110.

At Prescott, Ont., a stallion valued at $15,000, belonging to Dr. McMonagle, recently broke a leg. Instead of shooting the animal the doctor had the leg amputated, and has ordered a wooden leg to be made. The horse is doing well, and Dr. McMonagle expects to be able to continue using him for stock purposes.

A Horse's Deliberate Revenge.

"I will just tell you a story," said Mr. Foster L. Backus, "about the memory and reasoning power possessed by a horse on my father's farm. This horse was in the habit of making journeys about the neighborhood in charge of a certain groom, who was coarse, ignorant, low and cruel. The horse had been brought up on our farm and was very good tempered and gentle, but the groom's roughness and fondness for laying on the whip confused him so much that he was not prompt in obeying orders sometimes. Then the groom beat and bullied him. The horse never showed the slightest sign of resentment till one day the groom approached him in the pasture field. The horse was free for the first time in the presence of his enemy and he charged the groom. A short halter was around his neck, and the groom seized this and hung on. The horse tried to strike him with his forefeet; tried to bite and kick him. The man dodged and shouted for aid.

"The fight was desperate and very exciting. The horse fairly roared with rage. The groom was nearly fagged out, and in another five minutes would have been knocked down and trampled to death, when my father came on the scene. He seized the halter and told the groom to run. As soon as he was gone the horse subsided and was as docile as ever. Now, I am satisfied that the horse deliberately planned to kill that groom at the first favorable opportunity. See how carefully he chose the time and place of the assault. A lonely pasture field where he had his enemy all to himself. He had never shown the faintest sign of viciousness before. The groom kept away from him after that, and the horse never afterward was known to exhibit rage. If he had killed the groom it would have been murder in the first degree, for the element of deliberation was there. Yes, sir; horses have reason, and they have memory also.—Brooklyn Eagle.

People who are on the lookout for signs and omens on which to back horses, got a unique tip in The Sporting World yesterday. In making up the Guttenberg race report on the last page, the "alug" of one of the compositors had, through an oversight, been left in the matter. It was No. 5, and stared out boldly and prominently, and, of course, attracted attention at once among the spectators. And several speculators that I know of at once set out to back No. 5 in every one of the races, and the result was marvelously successful. In the first race it failed, Aftermath being the representative. Then Donald a 10 to 1 shot scored, Monte Christo a 12 to 1 chance followed, Amos ran a very good race, and finally Monmouth, the last of the five, beat the favorite, Pericles. It is fortunate that the compositor who answers to "Slug Five" is not a betting man. Otherwise he would surely have gone on a sorrow-drowning expedition for not having backed his own tip.—Sporting World, of November 5th.

CATTLE.

Howard Sale of Dairy Cattle.

In another column appears notice of a sale by Mr. W. H. Howard, of one hundred and fifty head of thoroughbred, short-horn dairy cattle, on Tuesday, Dec. 11th next, at San Mateo Rancho, San Mateo. Measra, Killip & Co., the popular auctioneers, will conduct the sale and supply catalogues.

The cattle offered comprise the entire herd of thoroughbreds of Mr. W. H. Howard of the San Mateo Dairy Rancho, and were selected specially with a view to improving and breeding up the grades for milch purposes. To dairymen, this sale therefore, offers special inducements, affording a rare opportunity to purchase desirable animals at moderate cost. These cattle have the additional advantage of being acclimated and accustomed to California ranges.

Dairy Tests.

The more we hear of dairy tests the more firm is our conviction that concert is needed among dairymen representing different breeds, as to a universal system for the determination of the valuation of a dairy cow, says the Duron Record.

The contests at fairs are proving unsatisfactory and furnish no criterion for coming to a conclusion. Experience shows that few if any cows will do their best in a strange place and under the handling necessitated by their removal from home. The production of milk is largely dependent on nervous conditions, and at fairs these are extremely unfavorable. This will doubtless in part account for the comparatively small record made in the dairy contests.

On the other hand the test made at the farm, although it may more nearly correspond to the capabilities of the cow, is open to the objections which arise for want of publicity. Differences in treatment of butter may make serious differences in the reported yield. The amount of water retained in the butter is an important item over which the private test exercises, probably, but little discrimination. The cost of production is an item of first rank in such a test, but this is rarely given. It is not impossible that, under the large appropriations, now making by the National Government to our experiment stations, these stations might undertake the work of dairy testing at the homes of cows, under a system which would have features of uniformity such as have not yet obtained.

Covering the Bones.

Making beef so that the better class of consumers want it or do not want it, and consequently, so that it may be profitable or unprofitable, is largely a matter of how the bones are covered. Two calves—twins, for that matter—may be taken from the same farm by different men, fed the same length of time, sold at the same age and in the same market, and command a difference of a cent or more per pound—for such things are done every day. How is this to be accounted for? The butcher can explain it, and will do so by telling you that with practically the same weight of bones in the two animals he has in one case a beef which will dress sixty pounds or more to the hundred weight, while in the other he is glad to make fifty; that one is rounded out with juicy, tender flesh worth pound for pound more than that of the other even if the quantity yielded was the same; that among people who know the quality of beef at eight le can sell one animal in half the time he can get rid of the other; that while he is independent of any but cash customers in selling the one, he is often fain to even trust the uncertain in order to sell all of the other; that every pound of the former he sends out advertises his business, while in selling the other he does so at the risk of injuring his reputation among discriminating consumers.

While we might clearly cite other reasons why the butcher is clearly justified in paying much more for one beef than another, these will suffice; and now let us see why the calves have such dissimilar outcomes. To make a long story short, it is a matter which lies wholly with the feeders. Given the same stock and the same market, one has done his work well, and the other has failed. One has used his food to advantage and the other has wasted it. One has fed judiciously, liberally, systematically, and for a positive end, knowing every step as it was taken; while the other has done his work loosely, carelessly and irregularly, losing by neglect at one point as much as he gained at another, and getting through without any special idea in connection with the whole matter further than to wonder why he is never as "lucky" as his neighbor. This thing is being done over and over again every day. Reader, in which way do you feed?—National Stockman.

Separating Milk.

The article below, which we take from the Prairie Farmer, will certainly be read with profit.

Only two principles are involved in the separation of the cream from the milk—of the fats from the other ingredient. There is no mystery about it, and no patent can change or do otherwise than use these principles. Formerly, and now commonly, the principle known as gravitation, did the work of separation. The different ways of making this principle available in the separation of the cream from the milk, are the foundation for the patents and contrivances for that purpose which have sprung into existence during the last fifteen or twenty years. That cooling the milk facilitated the separation of milk, or "raising the cream," as it was called, must have been early known. Hence, milk houses supplied with cold water from a spring, were common in the boyhood days of the writer. In some instances, cold water was kept running under and around the milk pans—a method that has not been improved upon for the perfect separation of the cream from the milk and the manufacture of gilded butter. This was the first idea of cold setting. But the small, shallow pans were used, and the milk was not set over two to two and a half inches deep.

The idea of deep setting was not thought of. It was only with the use of pools of water and the application of ice that the practice of deep setting came in. Then deep cans were used for holding the milk, and it was found that the cream rose in a shorter time. But it was some time before it was discovered that the quicker rising was due to the more rapid cooling, and that the separation was complete when the lowest temperature was reached.

The more rapidly the milk cooled, the faster the cream rose, and it was finally discovered that the wider apart the extremes of temperature, or the farther it had to fall, the more complete was the separation of the milk from its cream. Hence, the sooner the milk is put to rest after it is drawn from the cow, and the less it is cooled before setting, the more favorable it is for complete separation. Then no matter how quickly the temperature is lowered to forty degrees or below, the rising of the cream is completed when the lowest point is reached. But the quality of the cream—that is, its freedom from caseous matter—is varied according to the rapidity of the separation. The more rapid the rising of the cream, the greater the bulk and the more caseous matter it contains.

Slow rising makes a clear and more solid cream—such as we used to see on the surface of milk when it was permitted to cool naturally down to the temperature of the room in which it was set. Hence, one of the causes for wide difference in the butter producing quality of cream received at cheese factories. The sooner the milk is skimmed, after the lowest temperature is reached, the bulkier it is, and the more gauges are required to make a given amount of butter. By standing, a further separation of the cream takes place, the less it measures by the gauge, and the greater is the per cent. of butter as compared with measurement.

Cream always rises fastest on a falling temperature; while the separation is very slight, if at all, when the temperature of the milk is rising. In a warm room, without artificial cooling, cream rises very slowly, and in hot weather, when the temperature of the room remains high, the separation is more or less imperfect.

We have been speaking of cream raising by gravitation. The other force is the centrifugal. It is exactly the opposite principle to gravitation, the heavier portions of the milk are thrown to the periphery of the cylinder or bowl, leaving the cream in the center, whence it is taken by a tube which enters the cream at a certain angle, while the skimmed milk is drawn off through another tube. The machines used for this purpose do the work effectively, and the question to be settled is that of economy. The question is something like that between the use of steam and water power. Is it more economical to separate milk by the centrifugal, or by the simple application of gravitation—a force which costs nothing? In both cases, certain preparations have to be made, and conditions observed.

More Bone and How we May Secure it.

Whether we consider our average full-blood domesticated farm animals, as they are represented by their portraits, more or less lifelike, in the agricultural papers, or whether we examine them as they stand in the show ring, farmyard or pasture, the first important deficiency we note is in the bone, which appears quite too small and fragile for the mass of fat and flesh it holds up and sustains in locomotion. The improved Berkshire and Poland-China hogs show this deficiency most in the cuts, and so much so that the prize pig looks for all the world like a plump cucumber set up on good-sized shoe pegs, while the live animal is sure to break down if driven either fast or far. The steer raised and fed for meat alone, is not criticised so much for want of bone, but the calf is, because a good bone is the surest sign of a heavy weight, whether he is reserved for breeding purposes or reformed for beef. And so in some, if not most points, in respect to the cow. But nowhere does the lack of bone bear so heavily as on the grade heavy-weight horse. The old and popular dictum in horse-breeding countries, "no hoof, no horse," is not truer than the later one, common in the corn and cattle countries, "no bone, no horse," and in those sections there is no deficiency so commonly to be met with as a twelve or fourteen hundred-pound body, on an eight or nine hundred pound set of legs.

Now, the problem to solve is how shall this defect of bone be remedied? The deficiency of bone is no doubt owing to a lack of bone-making material in the food—grain in the form of corn, and grass and hay, lacking in the phosphates? If we undertake to feed the phosphates in the mineral state, or in acid solutions, the digestive organs refuse to assimilate them, the whole being carried off in the dejections. At any rate, that is the sum of the conclusions arrived at, after a long season of experiments on the other side, and it is now recognized that digestion and assimilation of the phosphates is never successfully accomplished, except they are first taken into the substance of the plant while growing, and are extracted from it by the digestive forces of the living creature.

It remains then, for us to accept these facts as conclusive, and take measures to increase the phosphate in our grain, grasses, forage and hay.

As preliminary to what I am about to advise let me relate a few of the results of personal observation and experience, and report facts learned of travelers, and what I have read in the papers. In Kentucky, two years ago, noticing the small size of the mules, I asked a farmer and breeder to explain it. He said he could not; nevertheless, while it was not found difficult to raise and feed mules as successfully as formerly, it was impossible to get the size on them that made the business profitable. I suggested a deficiency of phosphate in the grain, grass and hay, and I was reminded that the blue-grass region was still one of the richest in the world, as recent investigation had shown. The answer to this was that the soil as a body may have lost but a small per cent.; still, by continuous cropping there is less within the reach of the plants to take up and assimilate, and in conclusion suggested that if the phosphate fertilizers were used liberally, there would be no reason to complain of small skeletons and general bone deficiency.

An acquaintance of mine, a horse dealer of considerable experience, has, within a few years, visited many of the leading horse ranches of the Southwest, as well as those of Montana, Oregon, and Washington. Of some of these, located in fertile and sheltered valleys, he related many interesting facts as to horse breeding. For example, he had seen our loads of three-year-olds, which had been raised without shelter and never had a kernel of grain, weighing on an average of the hundred, 1,400 or 1,500 pounds each, with a bone development corresponding, and with mares and tails so heavy and long that the three-year-olds resembled gigantic Shetland ponies. Beside, he said that full blood draft stallions, from abroad, turned loose to shift for themselves, doubled the length of the mane and the hair on the tail and legs in the course of two or three years. After these statements had been made, I explained that the excessive growth of bone and hair was due to this, that these creatures for years, never took a bit of grass, green or dry, but that they ingested a certain quantity of soluble phosphate, with which the plants were fully charged, because the living were preying upon the dead, whose remains had accumulated on the surface for generation after generation. It is known that the California thoroughbreds at two years of age, have acquired as large a bone and muscle development as those raised in Kentucky at three years—another case of the abundance of the phosphate in the wild oats and grasses of California, and their comparative poverty in the hay, grasses, and grain of Kentucky.

I have a couple of grade heifers, one a three-fourth Shorthorn and the other three-fourths Jersey; in each case the remaining fourth being scrub. The former has legs under her like mill posts, and on the scales to-day, being 23 months old, she weighed a trifle over 1,000 pounds. The Jersey is 19 months old, and weighed at the same time 930 pounds. The Shorthorn is fat, and due to come in Jan. 19, 1889; the Jersey is in very good order, and will enter on motherhood Nov. 23d of this year. Both have had the run of a good pasture all summer, and two quarts of oats daily. They are exceptional only in size of bone and body, which I attribute partly to the pasture, which has received several heavy amendments with bone and phosphate fertilizers. With these observations and experiences I am confident that if some of our leading horse breeders were to select a timothy and blue grass pasture of 40, 80 or 160 acres, sow bone and potash fertilizers at the rate of 500 pounds per acre, turn no stock on till after the middle of June, and after that pasture mares in foal and with colts by their sides, that in course of a year or two they would recognize a bone development which would compare favorably with the horse stock of Montana and California. When the grasses of those latter regions have been depastured down as long and as closely as those of Illinois, Kentucky, Tennessee, etc., then the same deficiency in bone will be found in stock on the west side of the mountains, as now on the east.—The Cultivator and Country Gentleman.

The Lifework of the "Veil-Lifters."

FROM "SWINE PLAGUE," BY DR. FRANK S. BILLINGS OF NEBRASKA.

To discover the true character of natural phenomena is the chief mission of science. The inner acts of nature are largely hidden from our view. The final end of all scientific investigation is to arrive at an effect. This effect is not only the expression of the action of some unknown cause, but it veils that cause from our view. Behind the last veil we can never get, notwithstanding the subtle abilities of the developed brain, or the wonderful analytical power of the scalpel, the crucible, or the most acutely defining lens.

The mission of science and limits of human endeavor can never be more truly and beautifully expressed than in the language which Edward Arnold has clothed some of the principles taught by Guatrama, when he says:

"Shall any gazer see with mortal eyes,
Or any searcher know by mortal mind?
Veil after veil will lift, but there must be Veil upon veil behind."

How historically true of the past, how prophetically true of the future. Once nothing was known of the structure of animal life, or of the actions of its elements, or the laws that control their action. All seemed hidden behind an impenetrable veil. The darkness must have seemed as crushing to the Aryan priests at the foot of the Himalayas as it now is to the uneducated and unreflecting, notwithstanding the evolution and development of so many thousand years. "Veil upon veil" has been lifted, but the masses still refuse to gaze beyond the lifted curtain. Even to-day they know as little of themselves as those early Aryans who first gave us records of attempts at lifting the veil. How glorious the band of veil-lifters in our special branch of scientific research. Beginning with that majestic divinity, Aristotle, what a flood of light was shed in behind the corner of the curtain lifted by this son of Grecian culture. So well was it lifted that even the clouds of the dark ages could not darken its life giving rays. The dropped corner was again taken up by Hippocrates, Galen, and the veil-lifters of that period, though they added but little to the light reflected by the work of the great master.

For centuries it burned like the vestal-fires on the altars of knowledge; sometimes it flickered to a dim spark, but again it burst forth under the skillful hand of a Vesalius, and once more the flame started by Aristotle began to send its warming and dispelling rays into the clouded ignorance of the priesthood and sanctuary. For the first time the human form actually became divine, for the son of inspiration had given the veil a mighty lift. This time the light was let in upon structure, but how the structure worked, what gave it vitality, was still a veiled subject, until another genius touched the already lifted curtain with magic wand, and lo! the streams began to move and man was told something of that wonderful current, vital with life's mystic energies, the blood and Harvey inscribed his name on the uplifted fold, and physiology was born. And so went on the work, a Hunter taking hold of another corner and letting light into the terrible mystery of disease, and pathology was inaugurated as another branch of science to be followed by Boerhaave, Haller, Bichat, Laennec, Goethe, Muller and an ever increasing army of indefatigable and devoted workers, each of whom has lifted the veil somewhat; each of whom has made Goethe's immortal words, "Mehr Licht," the watchword of their lives. But this lifting of the veil was somewhat one-sided; the other corner was still draped in mourning, in token of the griefs of suffering ages. Now and then some mighty soul made an endeavor to let in the light, but the wail of suffering millions only too manifestly show how little the veil had been lifted. But the veil-lifter came, as he ever will come, when human suffering has borne its cross too long, and the immortal Jenner gave it such a lift as man had not seen for many a century. Now both corners were up, but still the work went on. The veil-lifters increased. On the one side worked a Rokitsansky, or a Vibrow, on the other a Petteukofer or a Koch, while a Helmholtz, a Du Bois-Reymond or a Ludwig took hold of the middle, and then with one mighty throw a Pasteur lifts up the corner still hauging as Jenner left it, and again the suffering millions not only see "Mehr Licht," but so much light that they become uneasy in their hunger, and demand more and more, until a vast army of veil-lifters spring into being, and the curtain is lifted so high, and the deep recesses of darkness become so illuminated that humanity is becoming dazed, and wondering men are saying, "What does all this mean?" but still goes up the cry, "Mehr Licht." But this is only mentioning a most insignificant portion of the veil-lifters, for every branch of science has had her devoted representatives in the light-giving work.

However much we may lift the veil, it leaves us ever in the presence of an effect behind which is some producing cause, which in its turn may be an effect. But human endeavor must ever stand impotent to correctly interpret the cause of a final effect! No matter how much deeper it may penetrate into the mysteries of nature, there will ever be "veil upon veil behind." The veil will never be entirely lifted, and it is well that it should be so, else all stimulus to human endeavor would cease, and the race gradually relapse again into the darkness of ignorance. The history of human development would then repeat itself, but in a retrograde direction. Though we start with an effect, still we start with that effect as a cause.

Let us illustrate this fact by the disease under consideration. Beginning with a dead hog as an effect, we make an autopsy, and come to other effects which in themselves have been causes in the death of the animal. What these effects are we need not touch upon here; we subject these microscopical effects to the analysis of the microscope, and in the cells of the organs find those finer changes which have been the cause of the microscopical lesions. So the work proceeds until aided by the life-inspiring genius of a Koch, we still follow these effects, and in the most of them we find—what? A bacferium! How wonderful the word looks to the uneducated mind! The very name, if mentioned in connection with water, ice, or food, seems to frighten half a community out of its wits. How much, on the other hand, it expresses to the competent pathologist! What a flood of light this discovery lets in upon hitherto unexplainable mysteries! How much such a discovery lifts the veil! Then comes the comparison of all that is seen with all that is known upon kindred subjects. All this has been the result of the analytical method. The final effect so longed for has been discovered! In one sense the investigator is satisfied. He knows that this final effect, this microscopical object, is but an effect; but what an effect! He knows that this effect is the cause of millions of dollars of loss to this country, and thereby much suffering to humanity. He also knows that this effect has a cause behind it that he may never discover. But does that discourage him? No! No! It only stimulates him to renewed endeavors to lift the veil, even though but a little more. His analytical studies have shown him that this minute effect is ponderous in its action as a cause. He commences to build! Instead of the analytical method he has resort to the synthetic.

He would discover how this microscopic effect has produced that long line of effects over which he had traveled before he discovered it. So he begins at the beginning. He has learned something as to the life-necessities of this effect by his studies of other effects of a similar nature. He knows something of the elements it needs to live upon. So he cultivates it. He watches how it grows. How it deposits itself in different media. He inoculates healthy animals, and if his first effect has been the right cause, he again produces the line of effects and causes and causes and effects which he passed over in its discovery, and again produces the final effect, death! So the veil is lifted! So one victory is won! But this last effect inspires him to retrace his steps somewhat, to less fatal effects. He returns to the sick animal and studies it as an effect, but also as a cause in its relation to healthy animals of the same species. He studies these effects and causes in their relation to each other, and finally determines the nature of the deceased effects upon healthy organisms, and so light is let in on a dark question, and the suffering swine breeder finds that the disease is not contagious, but infectious, and has some comfort in that he can see means to prevent his losses. And so from effect and cause and cause to effect, the investigator goes on patiently and ceaselessly with his work, letting in the light, but still he finds other calls for his ambition. Still he finds

Such is the work of the pathologist! His work is not only analytical and synthetic, it is more. After tracing all these effects and causes to the final effect, and from effect again as a primary cause, to the last fatal effect, death, he must now endeavor to explain how all these things have occurred and their direct relation to each other. The description of all these effects as they appear to the eye is comparatively easy work, but to interpret them correctly, and tell how they have all been produced until the primary is lost in the shadow of the veil, is the work of the master mind; hence the pathologist must be a philosopher as well. The world sometimes calls him "a theorist." The half-educated and mercenary practitioner crows over him as a mere laboratory worker: "a visionary person without practical experience," yet but for this same "theorist," that very practical ignoramus would be almost without the means of making a livelihood. This "theorist" is the real lifter of the veil. The very "practical" practitioner is the dead weight which has to be continually overcome before the real value of the light gains entrance to the public mind. The correct interpretation of the "how" is the real problem in all research. The correct interpretation of the "how" is the first standard by which all work must be judged. Disease, then, is the summing up of the action of the effects upon the normal elements of the organisms. It is a disturbance of the normal action of these elements to such a degree as to threaten their continued existence.

An Error.

The "wo" of the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN is this week written by an unaccustomed pen, whose owner regrets that her first duty is to correct some mistakes in last week's issue which she did not discover until the mail was all sent away.
To state that A. P. was 19 hands high could but provoke an amused smile on the face of the reader, but to mangle the report of Balkan's race was "worse than a crime, it was a blunder." We append a report of the race as it actually occurred:

Match race, mile heats three in five, between brown colt
Balkan, three years old, by Mambrino Wilkes, with bay colt Princemont, also three years old, by Altamont.

First Heat—Princemont, from an even start, took the lead, but soon broke, and continuing to make a succession of breaks, was unable to push Balkan, who jogged in an easy winner in 2:15.

Second Heat—Balkan took the lead from the start, opening of a gap of several lengths which he maintained to the finish in 2:34½.

Third Heat—Balkan got a lead of such length as to considerably endanger the distance of Princemont, and finished a long way in the lead in 2:32.

SUMMARY.

Brown colt Balkan by Mambrino Wilkes.....	Hinds 1	1	1
Bay colt Princemont by Altamont.....	Beach 2	2	2

Two Young Sons of Elmo, 2:27.

A six-year-old stallion that has shown speed, but has not yet done his best, is a desirable acquisition, and to be a full brother to a good horse is an excellent recommendation for any colt. The six-year-old Judge Belden, 2:31½, and the three-year-old full brother to Alfred S, 2:21½, are in the hands of Messrs. Killip & Co. for sale, at a very reasonable figure.
Both are by Elmo, record 2:27.

The old and thoroughly reliable firm of J. O'Kane is still catering to the wants of horsemen. Mr. O'Kane brings years of experience, and experience of truly a practical nature in the manufacture of the various kinds of horse boots. Years ago he invented and introduced several of the best styles of horse boots and is still busy making improvements. An inspection of the large and judiciously selected stock of harness, blankets and horse furniture they carry will well repay one for the time spent in so doing. Both Mr. O'Kane and his son are genial and well informed, and courtly and square dealing is the motto of the firm.

The Blood Horse Meeting.

Much to the regret of all lovers of good sport, and much to the pecuniary detriment of the Pacific Coast Blood Horse Association, during the last ten days Jupiter Pluvius has had the guidance of the San Francisco weather. Had the days been of the type which San Franciscans expect in mid-November—days when the air has just enough of "edge" to warn us that the "turn of the year" is behind us, days when the sky is a paler blue than in the matchless summer—days when to be out of doors is a delight—had there been such days as these, the 1888 Fall Meeting would have been a long remembered success. But in place of the gay silk jackets crowding at the starting post, the raindrops plashed in the dark pool that had gathered there. Instead of the jovial visitors who usually throng the balconies and crowd the seats the scribe was solitary as he looked about him.

At the stables little was doing, and that little in the half-hesitant way that work is done when the doers feel that it doesn't matter. The races should have taken place last week, but owing to the rain they were postponed until Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday of this week.
But day after day the clouds gathered over the city and rain fell steadily. But on both Tuesday and Thursday the rain was still falling, and although at present writing the sun is shining brightly, the track is a sheet of mud, and nothing can be done. If the fair weather continues the racing will probably begin next Tuesday, November 27th, but if Old Prob sends more rain the Fame and Autumn stakes will be run, and the other races declared off.

Nomenclature.

One of the most troublesome of the minor tasks on a stock farm is the finding of names for the year's crop of youngsters.
The name should be short, new and easy to pronounce. If further it can hint at the pedigree, so much the better. But above all and beyond all it should be distinctive. If a colt is not good enough to deserve a decent name, no enterprising breeder would keep him till a yearling.

The colt, of course, cannot be affected by his name, but a clumsy and ill-chosen appellation casts discredit on his owner.
Biographical, mythological and geographical dictionaries, and the post-office guide are mines where all may easily seek, and there are good names enough to furnish all who will. Nearly all the "boom" towns of California have names that are new.
Why not use these? Most of them are pleasing and many of them are short.

Breeders on this coast might surely find plenty of good names, for they have the whole Spanish vocabulary at command, a language full of musical words, and words too, which would have the charm of novelty. The tiresome
"Mollie" and "Mary" re-iteration, and the "Madam" This or That, or "Lady" T other nuisance would be abated, and there would be some individuality shown.

Names of characters in plays and novels are often admirably adapted for the names of the youngsters of the paddocks.
Shakespeare, Scott and Dickens have furnished the designations of many an aspirant for hippic honors; indeed, the names of actors and authors themselves are often born by equine celebrities.

Some breeders have adopted the plan of naming all their colts born in a certain year from words beginning with the same letter; using them in regular alphabetical order for the successive years. This plan has the advantage of fixing in mind the age of the foal. Others name all of one year from a certain class of objects. This serves the same purpose.
Others again try to give all the colts names beginning with the same letter or syllable as the name of their sire, or name of some relative distinguished on the turf. For instance some young sons of Aleyone, 2:27, are called Aleyo, Aleyon and Aleone. His brother Aleantara, 2:23, has Aleana, Aleonor Aleamont. But this system, like any other, has its reductio ad absurdum, for the former has a colt Aleandre and the other a son Aleander. The transposition of a letter, which change need not affect the pronunciation of the name, is not enough to prevent confusion.

It is much more easy to criticize or to praise the work of others than to do ourselves work which can defy criticism or gain praise. In looking through the list of sires of 2:30 performers, or a volume of the Trotting Register, one may easily notice enough oddities of nomenclature to fill columns, and may gain many excellent hints upon the proper methods to avoid.

The names Hambletonian, Mambrino and Patchen have been used as prefix or suffix, or have been rent into pieces and compounded with other valued fragments so often that it is almost a custom. There are among the 2:30 sires thirty-three horses whose names begin with Mambrino. Five of these are named Mambrino Chief, and two are called Mambrino Hambletonian. There are Black Hawks, Night Hawks and Eagles, not to mention Morgans, in large numbers.
There are three horses named George M. Patchen, either one of which is good enough to deserve a special name. But it is when, leaving the comparatively circumscribed 2:30 list, one wanders into the wider fields of the Stud Book, that one finds the most clumsy composite names. But even the 2:30 list will show such names as Stamp the Dealer, Nigger Baby, Nigger Doctor and Nigger-in-the-Woodpile.

Instances of excellent names are fast multiplying. Referee, Arbiter and Executor for sons of Administrator are good, while Counsellor, Saturn and Advocate are excellent for sons of Attorney. A fairly good procession of names is found here: Blucher sired Patriot, and he Young Patriot, whose daughter produced Sentinel, Volunteer, Heroine and Marksman. This Sentinel's son and namesake sired Signal. A son of Volunteer is called Standard Bearer, and two of his daughters produced Ensign and Valiant. Heroine produced Hero of Thorndale who sired Combat.

The current light literature—it should rather be said current fiction, since so much of it is far from literary—furnishes many names which are new and easy to remember. No
"Mr. Barnes" or "Potter" is on the turf, there is an "Eden" but no Usselex or Mrs. Manhattan. Of course there are Barbaras—there have been Barbaras since the beginning of time, but the name of that curious widow's aunt, Miss Fridiswig, is, as yet, unappropriated. Belinda, Cynthia and Celia, Amanda and Josephine, Rosaline and Christabel, Linda, Belle and Olivia and even Anastasia are of frequent occurrence. Lalla Rookh and Nourmahal are popular names, and Lenora and Capitola are frequently found. Even outside of song and story, short, new and often pleasing names may be discovered. Chemistry and geology will furnish a few, botany a great many. Many of the Indian and Spanish names that are common in Californian ears are new to the stud-book, and under some of these the flyers of the future may well be introduced to public notice.

The Duties of a Stock-Farm Clerk.

Not long since, in chatting with a prominent horseman from a southern State, the conversation turned upon the duties of the clerk or secretary of a stock-farm. "I do not know," said he, "what may be the rule on other farms, but my secretary issues my catalogues, attends to all my advertising, reports to the chief horse papers all the foals dropped on the farm, all sales or purchases, and all deaths among my stock."

"Correspondence naturally falls to the secretary, as well as receiving visiting horsemen in my absence. Of course such duties require one thoroughly informed on pedigrees, and conversant with the current events in the horse-world and familiar with all matters that tend to enhance the value of my stock. A good clerk is hard to find, because a man that is capable of doing all this generally has a stock-farm of his own. A good clerk, capable, alert and well-informed is a treasure and commands a good salary, but the bird is as rare as the 2:15 trotter; there are only enough of them to show us the desirability of excellence."

Eureka Jockey Club.

The entries for the Fall Meeting at Eureka closed on Friday, November 15th, and their races begin on Tuesday of next week, occupying four days. We regret that the list of entries has not been sent us. It is to be hoped that our friends in Eureka may have better weather than the horsemen of San Francisco, and their meeting may be a great success.

The Melbourne Race Stable Sale.

The racehorses composing the Melbourne racing stable, property of Messrs. W. S. Barnes & Co., will be sold at the stables of Messrs. Treacy & Wilson, in Lexington, Ky., on Tuesday, Dec. 11, 1888, by Col. S. D. Bruce. This lot comprises some of the best and sondest racehorses now on the turf or ever offered at public sale in America, including Gal-lifer, winner of the Clark Stakes and Champagne Handicap at Louisville, Himyar Stakes, at Lstonia, and who ran the first mile in the Kentucky Handicap, officially timed, in 1:41, with 109 lbs.; The Lion, a first-class three-year-old; Alexandria, half brother to the great two-year-old Fresno, by Fissetto, one who has worked 1½ miles in 2:09½ and a mile and a half in 2:39, with 118 lbs.; Ceawood, a superior colt, winner of the Clay Stakes at Lexington; Prather, by Virgil, Sire of Hindoo, Tremont, etc., a good racehorse; ten two-year-olds, including the Lioness, acknowledged to be the best two-year-old filly that appeared in the West this year, winner of the Wilgus, Hunsbourne, Runnymede, Vestal, St. Louis, Waldo Park and Kentucky stakes at Saratoga; she defeated
Procter Knott, winner of the Futurity Stakes, Champagne Charley and other cracks; Once Again, winner of the Harold Stakes, and who beat Champagne Charley, Bluerock, own brother to Raceland, and a firstclass two-year-old; The Forum, a large, fine son of the Great Longfellow; Glocker, by Duke of Montrose, a firstclass two-year-old, and a winner;
Retrieve, a very fine handsome daughter of Duke of Montrose, full sister to Montrose, winner of the Kentucky Derby; Cotton Exchange Stakes, etc., a firstclass filly and a winner in fast time; Madolin, daughter of the great Hindoo; Middle-march, own sister to Carrie Hanson and Islington, by imported Billet, and winner of the only race in which she ever started; Century, sister to Catalpa, by Billet, a very superior and fast filly, and twenty-three yearlings, the pick from all the great breeding establishments in Kentucky, and individually the best lot ever brought to the hammer in America. Have never been speeded, only broken and seasoned. The Melbourne Stable has bought more winners in proportion to the number purchased than any other stable.
This lot was selected after watching them in their paddocks from the time weaned until sold, and are from the most potent racing and best producing families in America. The sale will be positive and without reserve on account of the retirement of the owners from the turf. The animals are all engaged in the most valuable stakes to be run in the East and West during the years 1889 and 1890.

The Haggin Sale.

Messrs. Killip & Co., of 22 Montgomery street, City, announce through the advertising columns that on Tuesday Nov. 27th, at the Railroad Stables, corner Steiner and Turk streets, San Francisco, they will sell for account of Mr. J. B. Haggin a heavy draft of horses from the stud of that gentleman. Many road and harness mares of most approved breeding, and determined excellence are listed. A number of thoroughbred riding horses of fine size and action are offered. Also work and draft horses and Shetland ponies in large selection. Wherever horsemen are the name of Mr. Haggin is known, and his success in breeding and selling hitherto will induce general interest in this last opportunity given to secure really good horses of avouched breeding and high quality.

The horses may be seen at the stables on and after to-day.

Trotting Stallions For Sale.

Two promising young stallions are offered at private sale in our columns this week. They are Judge Belden, a son of Echo, with a record of 2:31, and a full brother to Alfred S., the famous young trotter who has a record of 2:21½. We are assured these young horses will bear critical examination, and are full of promise. They will be sold at a reasonable figure. The terms and full particulars can be obtained of Killip & Co., in whose hands they have been placed for sale.

Killarney, 2:20 1-4.

P. Fitzgerald of Woodland, Yolo county, offers for sale the pacing stallions Killarney and Killmore. The former has a pacing record of 2:20½, and his son Killmore should inherit a goodly portion of his speed.

Sales.

Maj. P. P. Johnson, Lexington, Ky., has sold to W. H. Wilson, Abdallah Park, Cynthiaua, Ky., the bay colt Marins, foaled 1886 by Simmons, record 2:28; 1st dam Katie C. by Mambrino Howard 3655, 2d dam Meteor, record 2:31, by Clark Chief 88, 3d dam Miss Waxey.

CORRESPONDENCE.

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN:—In my article found in your last issue you make me say of A. P., Alexander's great son, that he stands 19 hands high. Now I object seriously to the extra two inches. A. P. is 17 hands high. I am also made to say that one of A. P.'s colts is heavily muscled in the pastern. Excuse me! I wrote gaskin. An ankle is often a swell thing—many men are captivated by an ankle. But a swelled ankle in a horse will never do. Mr. Page in his article should have said, or you for him, that Mortimer's record was 2:34½, and that in trotting in 2:27 on November 5th, he reduced it 7½ seconds. Hurrish for Mortimer! I have a little bit of breeding to felicitate myself upon, the partial result of which I send to you.

Two years ago I traded to Doctor J. M. Proctor a yearling Dawn filly out of a Rustic mare of mine called Pastime (a pretty name, is it not?) for a six-year-old Whippleton mare. Mr. Arthur Whitney at the time had a yearling Dawn out of Gazelle, called Pilgrim, which could beat the Doctor's filly easily. I used to console the Doctor by saying "Well, if Silky ever does trot, she will go fast. Her mother could show me a thirty clip as a two-year-old."

It took Geo. Baylis some little time to get the great Dawn balanced as a yearling, but when level he was a diamond of the first water. Thus consoled, my friend Proctor never lost faith in his beautiful chestnut. Fred Vail and Steve Craudall worked Silky some, but as she had no confirmed gait, but was mixed up in her action, but little promise was shown. Finally the Doctor who is a good horseman, to the manner (not or) born took his pet home and drove her in his buggy about Petaluma visiting his patients. Sometimes Silky carried the M. D. on the wings of healing and mercy to his friends and patients. Once in a while the Doctor would give his young Dawn a spin round the Petaluma track.

So you may imagine how pleased I was to receive this letter, the other day from Dr. Proctor. (I drove the filly (three years old) yesterday to my road buggy on the track, a half mile. The first quarter in 40 seconds, the half in 1:22½.) I immediately wrote my friend, hurrah for Dawn! hurrah for Rustie! and hurrah for the driver!

Wilfred Page and Orrin Hickok have a great Dawn yearling I hear, which they own in common. A quarter in 50 seconds after a few times driving for their colt was an easy move.

The time has come, it is now that all progressive live men have got to have the great mothers. She who rocks the cradle of the world, sways the destinies of nations for good or ill. The hopes, the fears, the home training of early years, makes the mature man or woman. Look at the successful horsemen, Rose, Stanford, Baldwin, Haggin. They own such mares as Minnehaha, Midnight, Lister, Anne and Mand Hampton.

What a beautiful thing the Arabs have to say of mothers! They say, when God made the world he saw he had left many things undone, which the comfort and future happiness of the race demanded so he made mothers. So we say, God bless our mothers.

OLEMA, Nov., 18, 1888.

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN:—We beg leave to call your attention to the following: In your issue of September 22d, page 196, at foot of third column (summaries of Stockton Fair), there is a paragraph which refers to the two-year-old Agnes B. who walked over, and that no one knew the breeding of this animal. In your own issue of March 24th, page 179, you will find it, in the center column, under the words "running stake." The pedigree as there given is perfectly correct. She was entered for the Omnibus Stakes (at Mouth Park) for 1889, but has been declared.

New York, November 12, 1888.

GOODWIN BROS.

The pedigree of Agnes B. is there given "by imp. Glengarry, dam Ensue."

We take pleasure in directing the attention of our readers to the advertisement of W. B. Chapman. "Perrier Jouet" is such a choice brand of wine and so universally sought by connoisseurs that many unprincipled dealers are fraudulently claiming to handle this celebrated champagne. Mr. Chapman is the sole agent for this Coast and has placed it for sale with all the first-class wine merchants and grocers.

Horses' Names.

Handed down from "Sire and Dam to Son and Daughter."—Some Unlucky Titles.—An Interesting Chat With Miss A. L. Wilson of the "Breeder and Sportsman."

Under the above head lines the San Francisco Examiner published in a recent issue, an article which we copy, taking the liberty of correcting certain errors, which are due to transcription from stenographic notes.

The same little girl that asked her father who it was that made the prices of dress goods, sugar, butter and wheat, inquired yesterday as to who it was that gave race horses such funny names. The perplexed parent referred the matter to the Examiner, and the reporter who was appointed a committee of one to find out, interviewed Miss A. L. Wilson, assistant editor and business manager of the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN. Miss Wilson does not look like a business manager, nor does she resemble a sportsman. On the street one would take her to be a very fair sample of a good-looking Boston school m'am. She wears glasses and embonpoint, has a clear, bright eye, an engaging manner, can talk business like a veteran financier, and can tell more about horses in an hour than a reporter could write in a week. In response to a leading question put by the reporter, Miss Wilson replied: "Some people use methods in naming their horses and some don't; but those who don't use any method seem to hit it right. One way is to name some of the horses in a certain family after some great progenitor. For instance, there is the Wilkes tribe, many members of which bear the name of Wilkes. There are Prince Wilkes, Royal Wilkes, Guy Wilkes, and one named a filly Flip Wilkes. One of the tribe was named Wilkie Collins, another Wilkie and a filly Wilksa. Prince and King, Chief and General, Colonel and Captain are frequent handles to the Wilkes' pedigree.

"There used to be a good deal of trouble and confusion about names," went on Miss Wilson.

"Unscrupulous men used to name poor stock after the great progenitors of some other horse than their own, and it was chiefly for this reason that the National Association of Trotting Horse Breeders passed the following resolutions:

"Resolved, That every stallion or colt entire shall be registered in a name distinctly his own, or with the name of a distinguished ancestor or sire, but no material part thereof shall be repeated in any form when naming animals farther removed than the immediate progeny of such an ancestor or sire."

"A good story is told of a man who wanted to get some of his horses catalogued. He had neglected to name them, and when the cataloguer asked him for their names he replied, looking at the objects about him in the barn-yard: Lady Fairpost, Lady Strawstack, Stallfed, Shingle, Nail and Hammer," and they were catalogued under those names.

"Many horses are named after great men, as Daniel Webster, whose record is 2:30; H. W. Beecher, whose record is 2:28½, and Captain John Smith for him of Pocahontas fame. Daniel Lambert founded a great family, and he is still living at the age of thirty-two years. Herod is twenty-two years old, and two years ago he made a record of 2:24½. There is also a Beaconsfield, a Beauregard and any number of Robert E. Lees. Albert France has a record of 2:20½. Grover Cleveland (and the coincidence is strange) ran one good race, then broke his leg the next time and was shot. Horsemen are getting the impression now that it spoils a good horse to name him after a good man.

"Most horses named after speedy things do not turn out so speedy as their owners would wish. A horse named Piledriver would have a better chance in a race than one called Lightning or Electricity, although there is an Arrow with a pacing record of 2:13½.

"The horses of L. J. Rose and those of Leland Stanford at the Palo Alto stables have been well named. Whenever Mr. Rose finds a word that is not familiar to him as a horse's name he puts it down in his notebook, and when he has to christen a colt he consults the book and selects a name. Many horses are distinguished, also, from some spots or peculiarity of color, such as Pinto or Bronco, and sometimes titles are given that suggest some accidental occurrence at the time of birth.

"The matter of names is more important than most people would imagine.

"A notable horse with a bad name is the Indiana pacer, Blue Bull. It is a horrible handle for a horse, but he has sired some excellent trotters. He was so called on account of his odd gray color and from the scorn in which he was held. He, however, worked his way into prominence, and the abominable name has now become the honorable badge of a great family.

"There was an English running horse out of Peine de Cœur (Heartache) who was named Despair. He ran in seven races and was beaten only by a head each time, whereupon his owner, in despair, ceased to bet money on him. He won the next race, when his owner had no money up, but he never won again. His title was most appropriate.

"Filles are frequently named after unknown people—the friends, neighbors, wives or sweethearts of their owners. The frequent use of initials in designating animals has grown to be a great abuse, owing to the confusion which this practice will necessarily cause. Oliver K., 2:16½, has a brother whose name was suggested as O. K., but there was some hesitation about accepting the name, and I do not know whether it has been accepted yet. The initial fever has been very prevalent. Thus, John Smith will call his horse John S., or J. S., and John Sanderson will do the same. The result is that there is considerable ambiguity and uncertainty as to horses having the same or similar initials. In a recent race in the Grand Circuit there were five horses known by initials—an absurd and confusing arrangement. This fever took its rise from the success of Jay-Eye-See, named from the initials of his owner, J. I. Case. Another horse came out as Jay-I-Don't-See, whose speed, by the way, never showed on the record as low as 2:30.

"Sometimes the names fit very well indeed, Kibosh came out a few years ago, but retired without having accomplished anything. Cui Bono never showed what he was good for, while kings, chiefs, conquerors, monarchs and others of similar nomenclature seem to labor under great difficulties to sustain their titles, only a few of them having risen to fame. I owned a horse named Loafer, brother of Ambler and Lounger, but he never did anything on the racecourse but to loaf behind all the rest. Electric, with a record of 2:20, fitted his title very well. His dam was out of Jupiter. D. spatch, another fast name, trotted in 2:24½. Sleepy Tom, Sleepy John, Sleepy Joe and Sleepy Bill have all done better than might have been expected.

"Slander, Scandal, Rumor and Gossip are by Tattler. Names sometimes run through a single equine family in a very odd way. The mare Colon, sister to Comma, had a colt by Simmons, and this colt was called Simmo-Colon. Simmons was also the sire of Persimmons. The horse Cyclone, 2:23½, is a brother to Calm, and had a sister, Cycle, and a brother Cubit. Twilight's son was called Csnd'elght, and Chance produced a daughter Commerce, but none of the family was related to Speculation. Imported G. Hop-de produced Cotillon, who in turn produced Redowa, who produced Flirtation. Flirtation was the dam of Deceiver.

"Smuggler, 2:15½, is the sire of Deceiver, Rover, Robber, Scoundrel, Pirate and others of similar disreputable titles. This system of naming is very common, convenient and distinctive. Thus the colts of Monymusk might be appropriately named Sequin, Coin, Dollar, Ducat, Rupee, Knble, Piastre and Son. The Moor, owned by L. J. Rose, is the sire of Inca, Del Sur and Sultan. Sultan is the sire of Rajah, Pasha, Caliph and Alcazar, as well as of Budouin, Kismet, Soudan, Smyrna and Stamboul. Baron and Baroness are brother and sister, and the mare produced Barony.

"There was a gray mare which produced Sandhill, Fortress and Citadel, and another who produced Shafty and Palace. Paymaster is by Volunteer, a very good name. Indianapolis is a son of Indiana, and Japanese produced Oku and Okada. Col. E. H. Broadhead of Milwaukee owned a gray horse remarkable for speed and endurance, and called Mazomanie, the Indian name for iron horse or locomotive. Mazomanie made a record of 2:20½ in 1887. Cashier is a son of Sterling. Leather is by Soapstick, and there is a runner out of another family who is named Drumstick.

"The mare Calm was sired by Gentle Breeze, and Harvest Queen produced Mayboy. Despot and Director are sons of Dictator, and Director has a son called Direct. Some sons of Electio are: Elect, Re-elect, Re-election, Election and Elector. Illused is the sire of Misused, Polenta is out of Maccaroni, Cherokee is by Imported Saxon, and Sentinel, Fright and Frightful are by Alarm. Vidette is out of Volteigeur, Alta, Altitude and Altamont by Almont.

"The name Belle is very frequent in the Palo Alto stables, and they are all good. Beautiful Bells produced Hinda Rose, Alta Belle, St. Bell, Rosemont, Chimes, Bell Boy, Palo Alto Belle, Alto and Electric Bell.

"In the Pacific Coast Blood-Horse Association entry list we find Haggin's Extract, the daughter of Tincture, Loveknot, the daughter of My Love; Applause, by Three Cheers. Mollie McCarthy's Last, for the daughter of Mollie McCarthy, is a very poor name. Then there is Little Rose, the daughter of Roseland, Caress, the daughter of Carissims, Maid of Honor, the daughter of Puss, Faustine, the daughter of Firt, Shannon Rose by Shannon out of Fairy Rose, Songstress out of Malibran, Liberty Flibbet out of Filiberty Gubbet, Hermes out of Herclade, Nodile sired by Wildside. Bogus by Ophir is a suggestive combination to mining men. Oro out of Golden Gate has a California flavor.

"Some peculiar names in this list are Lucifer, Sinfire, Peregrene, Heliotrope, Sleepy Dick, White Cloud, Blue Bonnet, Tricksey, Mother Hubbard, Jack Pot, Flood Tide, The Czar, Black Pilot, Grisette, Dago, Canny Scot, King Idle and Silver Bow.

"Many horsemen have a superstition regarding names and others are adopting a method for cataloguing their stock in a way to indicate the pedigree. So there is something in a name after all," added Miss Wilson with a gentle laugh.

One of the editors of Wallace's Monthly firmly believes that "for any man with the necessary capital there is in the breeding business a profit of 20 per cent on his investment, if he will go to work in the right way, look upon the breeding of horses as a pure and simple business, and give it the same careful thought and attention that he would to mercantile pursuits."

ROD.

Among the Redwoods.

CHAPTER II.

Not to be read by those who dislike retrospection.

It is not a pleasant sensation when something has gone wrong to feel that you alone are to blame for it. In the first place your personal agency debars you from the privilege of telling some one else just how he could have avoided so disagreeable a result, and in the second, you become weary of the "ifs" that stand like so many miniature images of Cerberus, guarding the gateway between you and peaceful reflection.

Add to this disturbing feeling a lonesome tramp of a mile or more through a pathless forest, a mind engrossed by the heads of a treatise on lichens, and a heart beating with fear lest something has befallen its dearest care, and you will have some understanding of the perturbed state in which Mr. Selden found himself when he reached the bank of the stream, and did not, as he had hoped, see Erl.

"Strange, strange!" he said, half aloud, and with a kind of gentle apologetic impatience, "Strange, I'm sure the call came from here."

Only the rush of water made reply as he looked anxiously before him. He had a taut, interesting face, full of lines and furrows which thought and care had ploughed; and the half absent, half wistful expression in his full blue eyes told a pathetic story of struggle and unrest. While his dark brown hair streaked well with gray, worn longer than custom sanctioned, and combed back from a brow high and constructive, gave him the appearance of an uncertain scientist of the fifteenth century.

Even Erl, full as she was of the thoughtless tricks and pranks of youth, peeping slyly from the bush, was struck by the patient sadness of his hearing. One of the sudden revelations which occasionally come to us all concerning those with whom we live in familiar intercourse, flashed through her. For the first time it appeared that her father's life was unusual and possibly unhappy. Wonder why they lived as they did comparatively alone in the woods, had never come to her before; their living so had all seemed so natural and right that no disturbing thought had ever been born of it, but now, swiftly, like a new thing winging its way into her life came the spirit of this inquiry, came also, a new sympathy and a deeper tenderness for her father.

A week ago she would have led him a merry chase through brush and stream, but to-day, under influence of this new feeling she surrendered at once, and with a suddenness that had nearly frightened her father from the spot, burst from her hiding place, not under it, or at one side of it, but literally from it, and said impulsively:

"The call was from this side, papa, dearie, not from that. No, no, you must not come over! I'll run down to the big tree and cross to you."

Away she sped like a water-sprite, or some partially human nymph of the woods, and before he could fairly realize she had gone, was standing beside him.

"See," she said, giving him her rod, and opening her basket, "see, in spite of the rain I have six fish, Rob said I would get none."

"A marvelous catch, truly, quite worth coming for." Mr. Selden took one of the smallest up and let it slip through his fingers again. It was pleasant to note how much younger and brighter his face seemed as he looked at Erl and pursed up his mouth at her catch.

"Worth coming for! Here, give me the basket. You shall not have one for supper." Sae stretched out her hands, and when he held the basket far out of her reach, buried both of them in his long beard.

"Here, take it. You're a wretched teemagant, Erl." So his lips said, but the look of love in his eyes made the words seem false.

"That's because I'm your daughter, dearie. You see I have to be something dreadful to keep you within bounds."

He smiled and gave her the basket. She turned in the direction of the road that stretched along Bear Creek and up to the top of the hill.

As they walked along slowly he attempted to make her feel the indiscretion of stealing away as she had done to-day. She dreaded his tender chiding, and shielded herself by telling him how deep he was in books and terms when she had gone out. He felt his dereliction in this respect deeply, and scarcely needed the reminder.

"Beside, I did not intend to fish at first," she said gravely, "I went"—here her voice sank very low—"to see if my violets were in bloom. When I came back you were still so busy that I would not even call Nestor for fear of disturbing you."

All the sadness had come back to his face as he asked, "Why did you not tell me where you were going at first? It would have pleased me to go."

"Really, papa?" she asked, noting his changed expression.

"Let us go now, then. Kiss me first."

He bent his head and kissed her, and instead of turning aside to the footpath that led homeward, they followed the road until they came to an open space where the sunbeams came first in the morning and rested last at twilight; then they left the road and walked across a grassy slope until they reached a small enclosure under a low oak tree. Here a marble cross told its tale of a finished life. On it was cut the name Helen Abernethy Selden. The grave itself was entirely covered by a mass of white violets gathered and planted by Erl.

"Tell me, papa," she said, moving close to him and seeming not to notice his question, or to see the tears in his eyes, "tell me, am I like mamma?"

"No, child, I have never seen any one in the least like your mother." Then fearing she might be pained, he drew her down to a seat beside him on a broad stone that lay near the grave, and put his arm across her shoulders.

"Perhaps I am fanciful in this, but your mother came into my life when I was so young and—"

"Oh, papa, tell me about it. You know—" Erl broke in impulsively as usual, but stopped and looked keenly at her father before ending. She meant for the future to be very womanly and careful.

"Yes, yes, child, I know," he said hastily. "It is time—time—"

"No, not if it hurts you like this." She noticed how pale he had grown. "Tut, tut, over no dead things to sadden us both."

"Hush, Erl, it is your right to know what I can tell."

He sat in silence a moment calling himself weak, and saying what he had said many times in his life, that he should have been a woman; then, with a sudden summoning of will that proved his self-accusations untrue, he began abruptly.

"It was not my good fortune to be born a remarkable boy, though my mother, who was altogether too fond for properly taking my measurement, thought otherwise. I was rather quiet and fond of certain kind of books and that, she argued, made me different from other boys. Believing this fully, she made many sacrifices, after my father's death, to keep me in school. One of these was to give up part of her home to boarders. At first we had chiefly disagreeable people, but gradually my mother grew able to make choice among her applicants, and so manage life more pleasantly. One day, when I was just fourteen years old, I came home from school and found a tiny girl in the dining-room—a wonderful little creature, it seemed to me, with the sunniest curls and the shyest brown eyes I had ever seen. 'Here is a new friend for you, Harry,' said my mother, 'this is Helene Douglas.'

"The little girl held out her hand very timidly and said, looking down on the floor, 'Helen Abernethy Douglas.' She put such an emphasis on Abernethy, which I afterward learned was her mother's family name. That afternoon I was obliged to give up my play and show the new boarder books, or entertain her in any way she chose. In the evening, after she was tucked away in bed, I learned that she was an orphan and that her guardian had placed her in my mother's care until she should become of age.

"Happy days they were for me when I attended her to school or Sabbath school, and happier still the first Sunday evening we went unaccompanied to church. She was then in her sixteenth year and I in my nineteenth. All my plans of life were laid, and with one exception, she knew them. For my mother I cannot say so much, since I held my chief plan back from her, knowing she would be disappointed in me when I revealed it. And yet, looking back on my life from where I stand to-day, I feel that I was following out the strongest bent of my nature in becoming a schoolmaster. To have entered the clergy, as mother desired, would have been to make the church over which I might be appointed ridiculous. If the struggle for a livelihood had not told so decidedly on my mother, I might have waited longer before announcing my intention, but as it was I felt that action must be taken at once. I could see that it was a severe blow, and yet it grew more and more difficult to be quite patient with the wailings over a university course, which she felt sure would have made no view things in a different light. Time and again I argued that life would bring out whatever power and force were in me, and that if none were developed it would be because the elements of them were not there. But it was poor talking at best, and unsatisfactory to both.

Having made up my mind as to what was best to be done, I went directly about it, and before turning twenty had my first school. It was a small one in San Mateo County, but my mind was turned to good work and I achieved such a measure of success that in two years I secured a vice-principalship in San Francisco. During my absence many things had happened—the two which chiefly affected me being my mother's poor health and Helen's accession to the fortune which awaited her. For the former I could and did provide, but in regard to the latter I was without a voice. Her friends, chiefly people of fashion who had known her parents, the frivolous finishing school she attended and her early acquaintance with society all militated against any influence I could bring to bear. Never for a moment did I to myself deny that I loved her; but her perfect frankness when in my presence made me feel that so far as I was concerned her heart slept, and the one plan of mine she did not know was that I hoped some day to win her. This hope now began to die. For although she refused to leave my mother, her time was so taken up with a thousand and one social demands that our meetings were necessarily infrequent. Even my deep feeling was against me, making me constrained in her presence, and by degrees a coldness grew up between us.

"But my worst trial began when gentlemen sought her. No one could blame them; she had developed into a beautiful woman, but I was sure they wanted her money and withdrew further and further instead of doing my duty and ascertaining whether those who did come were worthy of admittance. A man with unconquerable vices is worse even than a money-seeker, though both should be kept away from a woman if her future happiness is desired.

"At length the tidings which I constantly expected, yet dreaded to hear, were brought me. Helen was to be married. I had met the gentleman once or twice, a Mr. Graham, prosperous as a merchant, handsome and well enough spoken. Of course I did not like him. And this was not solely due to his success with Helen, but to a certain peculiar animal quality of expression that now and again shot across his face. Ah, child! those were bitter, bitter days to live through!"

"Poor papa!" Erl nestled close to him and kissed his cheek.

"It was then that I bought this piece of rough land and built my cabin on it. And the Saturdays and holidays spent here with my rod and gun were about the only bright things in existence."

After Helen's marriage my mother and I took a smaller house and settled down to a kind of drowsy life. The wedding journey was a long one, including, beside the usual European trip, a visit to Egypt and Greece. Often as I sat in my room at night and looked out on the stars, I pictured what happiness it would be to me to accompany her over this old battleground of thought and religion, and wondered if her husband troubled himself about what it was doing for her mind, or if he went simply because it was the thing for moneyed people to do, and chafed at everything primitive and inconvenient. I have always believed that women are what men make them, or permit them to be, and looking ahead I could not see a large future for Helen.

At the end of two years they came back, and she visited us. I was prepared for change, but not in the least ready for the pale, anxious face and hollow eyes that met me. Even my mother was struck, and said to me confidentially that she hoped Mr. Graham had not gone back to drinking so soon. Then for the first time I learned what I should have made it my business to know from the beginning, that Helen, in her girlish ignorance had married a man absolutely unfit to mate with any woman of purity. If the days had been heavy before, they were doubly so now. But three years passed away, disturbed by no worse developments than rumor could serve, and I was beginning to hope that whatever best there was might continue, when one night as I sat reading in my room the door-bell rang faintly. I looked at the clock; it lacked two minutes of midnight. Instead of going down I opened the window and asked who was there. The answer came timidly, "Helen." I made all haste to let her in, and without asking a question took her to my mother, then went to my room to think on her cold, trembling hands and pale face, and to pace the floor until morning. Upon one point my mind was thoroughly fixed, that no further step should be taken without my full knowledge and consent. And when my poor, little, delicate mother met me in the morning I told her so. In reply she said to me that there was nothing to be done, that Helen had left Mr. Graham altogether. When I read the morning paper I knew why. Such a story of drunkenness and immorality you could not understand, child, and, God willing, need never know."

Mr. Selden leaned his head on his hand a moment and then continued:

"I thought it time now to let Mr. Graham know there was at least one man who had something more than a business interest in Helen's affairs; so I wrote a note demanding what things belonged to her, and notifying him that action for divorce would be commenced immediately. His affairs had already gained such publicity that he dared not fight, but for months he annoyed her in every way. No words could express the tenderness I felt for her all through this severe trial, yet the habit of coldness I had cultivated had taken complete possession of my manner, and I was so formal that she afterward told me she thought I was on the side of those who blamed her for not bearing in silence. There was, of course, an immense amount of babble and clatter, though nothing in the least touching her, and I resolved there should not be. This led me to accept a principalship in Oakland, and to spend only Saturday and Sunday at home. To such a plan Helen demurred, and insisted on going away, my mother, however, prevailed with her not to, and she fully repaid her. No daughter could have been more tender and devoted. This sort of life continued for five years; then my mother died and found peace beside my father."

Helen and I were now quite alone, and unless I could pick up courage to learn my fate, our paths must lie apart. More than once she had expressed her dislike of the city where she had endured so much, and I knew she was arranging to leave it, when I found heart to ask her to marry me. At first she would scarcely listen, pleaded poor health, disgrace, everything she could bring to bear, but through it all something in her manner gave me hope. I felt that after the long strangeness her heart was beginning to answer mine. She kept me in doubt for over a year; I could have waited ten knowing she would belong to me at last. After the quietest of weddings we came down here. From the first she loved the place and wanted to live in it, begging me to give her money as my own. 'This I would not do, but found a primitive school near by; built by degrees the house of which you are so fond, and with the aid of Mr. Morrison's sister set up housekeeping. Poor Helen! how happy she was! As for me—of that I will not speak. For two years this deep, full, pleasant life went on. At the end of that time you came to us. She lived only long enough after to name you, and at her own request was buried here."

For a moment his voice was husky; with an effort he cleared it and went on:

"Ellen Morrison took care of you until you were three, then she married a woodman and moved with him to the mill. The year previous her brother had died, and his widow was very glad of what work I could give her; that is why Mrs. Morrison disturbs herself so much on your account, you were the only girl-charge she ever had. No desire for the bustle and fret of the world ever tempted me to return to it. My heart's home is here."

For some time after her father had finished, Erl sat silent and motionless; then she leaned forward and touched her lips to the top of the cross. Her face brightened visibly as he watched her.

"The violets are prettier than the myrtle was, papa, but I understand now why you planted it."

"And yet you are right, child. Your mother would have liked it better as it is now."

They stood hand in hand, a second's space, looking down on the mound; then next, as the final beam of the sun touched the leaves of the oak-tree, and a nestling quail called softly from the hill-side, they crossed the road and followed the pathway that led them home.

PETRONELLA.
SAN FRANCISCO, November 20, 1888.

That Boy of Bowen's.

There is a softness about the writings of anglers, a human quality, that without lacking virility, yet smacks of tenderness which cannot but commend them to readers, whether of angling proclivities or not. An article recently contributed by "Johnny Chat" to the English Fishing Gazette, may be given as an example. The genial writer says:

Such is my fondness for that queen of sports—angling—that I exclude from the walls of that little room, known amongst the younger members of my family as "Papa's Study," any picture which is not in some way connected with or descriptive of its fascinating pursuit. The room being small necessarily limits the hanging space; and possessing as I do a number of pictures descriptive of the gentle art, they are consequently, jumbled in a most unshowy manner upon the walls of my sanctum. Nevertheless, standing out from all the others, conspicuous from their truly life-like fidelity to what I can readily suppose the living original would resemble, are two chronos, worth perhaps only a few shillings, which I feel sure most anglers must have seen in some cheap picture-dealer's shop window. I think if I describe them, they will be recognized at once. The first portrays an old kindly-looking, wrinkled-faced individual; from his surroundings evidently the village shoemaker. He has apparently hastily thrown aside his tools, and, in view of a promised treat upon the morrow—a day's indulgence in his favorite sport, fishing—is turning over the contents of a well-worn fly book. The tender manner with which he regards that which is evidently a favorite specimen of his feathered lures, now being held as closely as possibly to his spectacled, beaming old face, betrays an amount of confidence in his killing powers which bodes bad for that particular finny individual whose path it may chance to cross on the morrow.

The other and companion picture is called "Just a pound," showing the old fellow triumphantly adorning a small steelyard, from which, pendant, and apparently dripping, is a freshly captured trout, obviously just scaling what the title conveys. There is a look of such supreme satisfaction, and honest gratification, in the old chap's face, as he gazes so admiringly at that which is, in my humble opinion, the nearest approach to a thing of perfect joy and beauty, that I question if any event which he is likely to encounter in his humble sphere is likely to afford him its equal. 'Tis true these pictures are but a pair of cheap and valueless specimens of the chromo-lithographer's art, and probably beneath a critic's notice; still, in my harmless conceit, I have long ago received them as living actuaries, and placed them in that niche of my heart in which are treasured with affectionate interest those big days and memories of true brothers of the angle whom it has been my fortunate lot to meet in my many piscatorial wanderings, and who go to swell the number of those "Anglers I have known."

But, enough of my visionary friends; let them give place to something more solid—say like my old uncle Ben, for instance. He never caught a fish in his life, yet every Saturday afternoon found him at one particular spot by a small horse pond in a field adjoining the house, and there, for nine years, once a week, did this excellent old man duly put tackle together and poise the self-same little quill float in the identical self-same spot, and anxiously await what he never got—a bite. The true Trachion whispered the pond contained one small roach, and all my dear old uncle's efforts to catch him reminded me of the angler in Bulwer Lytton's "My Novel," who so unceasingly fished for that one-eyed perch, but never got him. I have often wondered since what the effect of Uncle Ben's podgy little figure, in drab smalls, and colored gaiters, must have had upon the cabinatory power of that solitary roach, as he, regularly as clockwork, once a week, trotted off to interview his roachship and dangle before his accustomed vision the usual weekly worm. I really think if that roach had compassioned him and vouchsafed him the merest possible nibble, such an event would have both frightened and surprised him far more than a death in the family would have done.

Then there was that "boy of Bowen's," he was a puny, weazened-faced little fellow, about fourteen years old; a cripple. The first time I saw him was during a short holiday in North Wales. His father was the tailor of the little village in which I had taken up my quarters for a week's trouting, and as I walked down the only street the place contained early one beautiful June morning, with my rod and tackle, chance led me past the old-fashioned broad-built window at which he was sitting cross-legged and industrially sewing. Although my mind was full of glorious expectation, which the favorable state of both water and atmosphere promised to realize in a heavy creel, his wistful longing look, when he caught sight of my angling kit, saddened me, when I thought of the poor little chap cooped up all the lovely summer day, and I enjoying myself by the pleasant river side. "Going fishing?" he queried. I nodded in reply. "I say, Mister," try the lug rock, this side the wilty bed, jnat paat Evans Jones' weir; there's a brace of big uns lay at the tail of the eddies, below the chalk stone. I see 'em last night," and further adding, his small face lighting with pleasure, "There was four last night, but there's only two left now; but bide bit," and so saying he vanished, re-appearing shortly afterwards with a brace of fine trout, scaling a pound. "Come inside and have a look," he said. I vaulted through the open window in an instant, and sitting upon the board by his side, am fain to confess I was as much a child as my little host, as I admired his fish and questioned him as to particulars of their capture. I found him an old-fashioned little fellow, and in his knowledge upon fish and fishing more a man of sixty than a boy of fourteen.

I had many an excursion with him subsequently, and found he possessed a wonderful aptitude in overcoming the scruples of an exceptionally wary old trout, when located to his perfect satisfaction. He had admirably ingrained in his fishing the old Quaker's advice to his son in regard to getting rich, when he told him to "get money honestly if he could, if not, get it." I must confess I condoned his questionable ways, and shut my eyes to his shortcomings, so much so that he evidently looked upon me, to a certain extent, in the light of a confederate, and never attempted to invest his poaching proclivities with the slightest amount of excusable cover. He was, truly, a veritable little river gamin, to whom the occupants of the neighboring streams were as easy of access, and as subservient to his deft little gurgles as the needle and thread with which he plied his trade. He always kept a supply of artificial grottos on hand. These he built at low water, leaving two openings only, just sufficiently large to admit his hands, and from out this seemingly safe and friendly cover, just previous to the water resuming its normal condition after a flub from the mill above, he would tickle ad libitum the struggling little brown beauties who had shown such simplicity in the choice of a temporary harbor.

Amongst the neighbours he was known as, and always spoken of as, that "Boy of Bowen's," and was accredited with every possible species of juvenile rascality. His last exploit was the following:—The Local Angling Club, in view of getting certain privileges conceded them regarding the right of fishing from a certain rather questionable portion of the public mead, asked the principal churchwarden to say a few words at their next general meeting. This gentleman had great local influence; he was a retired tradesman from the neighboring town, very wealthy, ignorant, and pompous, possessed of great ideas as to his elocutionary powers, and was never so happy as when airing his supposed oratorical abilities before a public meeting of some description or other. The club, of course, thought that if Elder David—that was his name—could be induced to identify himself with their object, that he would give them the benefit of his local influence, which would be extremely valuable to them in the matter they were contending with the local board, and their application to him was more as a sop in the pan than any real desire for his society. Nothing pleased the old gentleman better, and he cheerfully acceded.

Thinking to show his knowledge on piscatorial subjects, he forthwith commenced to study up for the occasion, and actually made a public announcement that he would deliver a series of lectures on the subject of "Freshwater Fishes," commencing with the carp. Thinking he could speak more positively if he actually saw a carp, he privately deputed Bowen's boy to obtain him one. This was the easiest matter in the world, for an old man near was literally crammed with them, all sizes, and as trout fishing was the principal topic amongst the surrounding anglers, they were very little thought of, and hardly ever disturbed. Bowen's boy accordingly procured a small 2-ounce carp. This the old gentleman placed in a large tub of water, and commenced his piscatorial studies. Next night Bowen's boy quietly took the 2-ounce fish away, and unknown to the old gent replaced it with a 4-ounce fish. This was a few days after again purloined, and one a trifle larger substituted, and so every other day for about a month was each successive fish changed, and one a trifle larger put in its place, and at the end of a month the original 2-ounce little carp had attained the respectable weight of 14-pounds, to the old gentleman's astonishment and delight, who had been taking copious notes meanwhile. At this weight it stopped for a few nights, and then, to the old man's great grief, slowly began to dwindle away, thanks to Master Bowen's unremitting attention and substitution of a smaller fish each evening, till at last the little original 2-ounce carp again became apparent.

About this time the meeting took place, when the old gentleman commenced his lecture, and after a few preliminary hems, and a little fencing with the subject in hand, got fairly warmed to his work, he gravely told them how he kept a domesticated 2-ounce carp in a tub of water for two months, and that during that period it had attained the surprising weight of 14-pounds, and subsequently returned again to its original weight; and that his late scientific investigations led him to believe that all other fish must be liable to the same fluctuations in weight as the one he had described. Well, everyone acknowledged the old gentleman to be the biggest liar in the place, and no one was more loud in his condemnation of the old gentleman's want of veracity than that "Boy of Bowen's."

THE RIFLE

Shell Mound.

The Shell Mound Park ranges presented a scene of unusual activity on Sunday last. All of the boxes were filled all day long, and many marksmen who could not obtain places at the 200-yard range had recourse to the 500-yard target, where they held their practice shoot. Besides the regular monthly shoots of the various companies the Schuetzen Verein made it a special day, and offered as a prize a turkey to all the members of the Verein who would fire three shots at the target. As an inducement to the member making the best score a choice of turkeys were allowed. The occasion called out nearly the entire company, and in all eighty-six Thanksgiving birds were given away. The regular shoot for medals was also held, and the following-named won the gold medals offered by the Verein: W. Ehrenpfort made a score of 365 rings and captured the first-class medal; H. A. Kurlinke captured the second-class medal with 365 points; F. W. Apparius scored 377, and was given the third-class medal; L. Bendel made 330 points and secured the fourth-class medal. As each of the winners had won the medals twice successively, they were entitled to ownership according to the rules of the Verein. The prizes will be distributed next Tuesday evening in Germania Hall.

Several other companies were present and competed for the monthly medals. Company F, of the Fifth Infantry Regiment, made the following scores: Corporal Cobblestick 41; Corporal Wetheron 40; Lieutenant Hayes 38; Captain Parsons 37; Private Cobblestick 37; Private Morrison 37; Private Tyrell 36; Private Bangle 35; Private Short 33; Private Brewer 30; Sergeant Hunt 28.

The Swiss Rifle Club of Oakland sent a goodly number of men to the boxes to compete for the monthly medals. Their scores are appended:

An Expert on Rifles.

"What can you tell me about the history and merits of this rifle?" asked a reporter of Capt. S. A. Day, picking up a handsome Springfield.

"That is beginning right at home," was the reply. "The Springfield rifle is the one with which our own troops are armed. It has the hinged breech block, with the upward and forward action. It is a good gun, and has done good service, but it is a little out of date. It is good for 600 yards, but not a foot further. We have tried to shoot it at 1,000 yards, but our only hope with it at that distance is 'scratching,' or accidental scores."

"What is this?"

"That is a gun we have all heard a great deal about—the Martini-Henry rifle, with which the English army is provided. It has been used in more countries than any other rifle, except possibly the Remington. In some respects it is just the opposite of the American army gun. It has the hinged breech block, opening backward and downward, instead of forward and upward. This is an excellent gun. The barrels are well made and the British manufacturers have the knack of grooving very effectively. It is the gun shot in international matches. American riflemen should have great respect for this gun, for it is the one with which our national teams have been twice defeated. It is a handy gun—it is a 'gunny' gun. It feels like a gun in the hand. A man would trust that gun almost anywhere if he had plenty of ammunition."

"Here is a Sharps rifle—isn't that a little out of date, too?"

"There are no more of them made now, except one once in a while by hand. This is the style of weapon that was sent from the east to border settlers in Kansas and Nebraska, along with Bibles, during the troublous times just before the war. This individual gun," continued Capt. Day, patting the butt affectionately, "is a very fine long range Sharps-Borchardt. It is a gun with a history, having won many prizes at long range, not, however, in my hands. It is used by marksmen when they lie down or double and twist their bodies into almost every figure known in the constellations of the heavens. Its action is excellent, having a square, falling breech block, containing the hammer and lock. It strikes the primer in the prolongation of the bore, thus causing the least possible disturbance of the piece in firing."

"What can you say about this Remington?"

"That is the gun formerly known among national guardsmen as the 'gas pipe.' There have been more guns of this kind made for and used by armies, raiding parties, filibustering expeditions, insurrections, etc., than of any other arm ever invented. It has a rolling block, falling backward and downward, leaving a free way through the barrel for inspection and cleaning. It is simplicity itself, and has an excellent action. The barrel, however, is too light for long range or heavy work, but it has killed many a man in many a clime."

"This other gun, I believe," said the reporter, "you referred to as being a remarkable gun with a remarkable record. Is it not an ordinary Winchester repeating rifle?"

"Rather an extraordinary one. This particular gun has been fired more than 40,000 times by Dr. Carver and is still in fair order, showing only a little weakness of the main spring. The Winchester is the leading sporting gun of the world, and more game has been killed by it than with all other guns put together."

"But this brings us into the domain of magazine guns. There are three pronounced leading types, with some twenty-five or thirty variations of which I have knowledge, and there are doubtless a great many more individual modifications of these types. For purposes of convenience I have selected the Winchester, the Lee and the Spencer as typifying the three great classes."

"The well known Winchester has a fixed tubular magazine with lever action. The Hotchkiss is a bolt gun, with a tubular magazine in the butt instead of in the stock, as is the case with the Winchester and many others. There," said Capt. Day, after ejecting a number of shells over his shoulder from both guns, "you can see how complicated are the motions necessary in using these guns."

"The Lee magazine stands alone of its kind, although there are many modifications of it. It is a detached magazine, with cartridges superimposed one upon the other like the fingers of the hand. The great and important feature of this gun is the detachability of the magazine. As a military man, I have no hesitation in saying that it is just as important for troops to be armed with a detachable magazine for cartridges as it is for them to be supplied with fixed bayonets. When an order to 'fix bayonets!' has been given and obeyed, an officer knows that his men are prepared to make a charge at the word of command. Why should not similar security be felt when waiting to repel an attack? After the command 'fix magazines!' an officer may rely upon all his men having their magazines full and in position. Nothing could give him greater confidence in a crisis. This is the best system for troops of which I have any knowledge. The Lee, however, has a feature in common with many other guns which, personally, I do not like—it is a bolt action. A prejudice is a heavy load for any man to carry through this world, but my whole experience has tended to increase my dislike for bolt guns. The inventor of this gun however, Mr. James P. Lee, was so expert with it that he could have three or four shots on the way to a 1,000 yard target at one time. Such skill is attainable by few men, and the bolt action is necessarily slow in the hands of an ordinary soldier."

"Mr. C. M. Spencer, the ingenious inventor of the rifle so well known during our late war, is still living. The Spencer rifle is something new. It is an American gun although it has been very remarkably improved by Col. George V. Fowbery, an English army officer now in this city, who is an expert not only in its invention, but in its manufacture and use. It has a sliding piece on the stock, with a trombone movement." Capt. Day hereupon gave an exhibition of the rapidity and ease with which the Spencer can be fired. A quick backward slide of left hand threw out the empty cartridges, while a rapid forward motion placed the piece again in condition for firing, the whole not occupying a second of time. "This is an admirable contrivance," he continued. "It requires the use of two hands, however—one to reject and load the cartridges into the chamber from the magazine, while the other simply grasps the small of the stock and pulls the trigger."

Indiana Kennel Clubs Second Annual Trials.

Continuing his report to the American Field; Mayor Taylor says of the All-Age Stake:

"Immediately following the finish of the Derby the All-Age Stake was begun, there being eighteen starters. While there was some exceptionally good work done by two braces, Bodkin against Effie Hill and Katie Noble against Gath's Mark, and the separate work of Rod's Gem, Bohemian Girl and Polly II, the work of the aged dogs did not compare with the Derby. Taken as a whole the work done by the Derby starters was much the best."

Col. Sloo and Mr. Schultz having had to return home on Saturday night, the All-Age Stake was judged by D. C. Bergundthal, Royal Robinson and P. T. Madison. I endorse their decisions, but in one or two braces I think there should have been more time taken, as the dogs were too near tied in their work.

Tricks on the Track.

No modern institution furnishes such an array of interesting and peculiar characters as the American race course, says a writer in the New York World. It is a little world within itself, governed with a rod of iron, to which owners, trainers and jockeys bow with a greater submission than they would to the highest judicial power in the land. The track is also a rendezvous for some of the most unprincipled scoundrels in the world, who are a constant menace to the fair racing, and a source of terror to honest horse owners. These men are known as the parasites of the turf.

There is another large class that seem to be a necessary adjunct to the racing of to-day. There are the tipsters, touts and horse-watchers. Although the mission in life of both the tipster and the tout is to advise race-goers as to the best horse to back in a race, the manner of procedure of the two men is vastly different. The tipster conscientiously tells his customers what horses are best to back and does his business openly and above board, while the ways of the tout are rather shady to say the least, and a number of them are downright swindlers.

The uncertainties of racing tend to make the mind of the average race-goer of a most vacillating order. Almost any old race-goer will look over the list of entries in the paper at his breakfast table and carefully select the horses in the various races that he thinks will win. He is then cool and collected, and picks the horse because of its having shown some high order of speed or gameness in previous races. He determines to back those horses. When he reaches the track, however, he is caught in the swirl of excitement. A tout comes up and asks him what he likes. He is laughed to scorn and told that his selections can't run any better than a goat. If he wavers, and he generally does, he is lost. Before the race is run he will have heard that every horse in the race is a sure winner. The horse that he picked in the morning generally wins. A large class of race-goers are veritable fiends after tips. If they can button-hole some jockey they are in the seventh heaven, and is a cause for wonder to see a man who is shrewd every other way, place the utmost confidence in a cock-and-bull story of some ragged parasite about the wonderful trials of such and such a horse. Bookmakers and heavy bettors employ clever touts upon whom they can depend to

Tips and Toe Weights.

A Natural and Plain Method of Horse Shoeing.

...WITH AN APPENDIX...

Treating of the Action of the Race Horse and Trotter as shown by Instantaneous Photography.

By JOS. CAIRN SIMPSON, Author of Horse Portraiture.

"Round-hoof'd, short-jointed, fetlocks shag and long."

—Shakespeare.

Tips and Toe Weights.—We have received from Mr. Joseph Cairn Simpson, Editor and Proprietor of the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN, San Francisco, Cal., a copy of his book entitled "Tips and Toe Weights, A Natural and Plain Method of Horse-shoeing, with an appendix treating of the action of the racehorse and trotter as shown by instantaneous photography. Toe and Side-Weights." Mr. Simpson has had many years of experience in training trotters and runners, and is besides a most able, pleasant writer on matters pertaining to the horse. His "Horse Portraiture" was one of the first and best works on "training" we ever read. For several years he has been experimenting with tips in the hope that they might be made to serve every purpose of a full shoe and act as a preventive of the many horrors entailed by the ordinary method of protecting our horses' feet. These experiments have been demonstrated that tips will accomplish all he had hoped for, and we believe every horseman who reads the result of his experience will conclude with us that Mr. Simpson has inaugurated a revolution in shoeing that will prove of incalculable benefit to both horse and master. We are a willing convert to tips as against full shoes, and reading the plain, unbiased reports of actual trials by the author of "Tips and Toe Weights," together with the knowledge that the common system of shoeing has caused more suffering and done more damage to horses than can be traced to any other source, has had much to do with our conversion. We would not take $50 for this book and be without it, and on behalf of the "most faithful friend to man" would urge every reader of the "Sportsman" to secure a copy of it and test the value of its teachings. Price, in paper, $1, cloth, $1.50.—Western Sportsman and Live Stock Journal.

"Tips and Toe Weights," a natural and plain method of horse-shoeing, is the title of a very clever, ingenious and practical book from the pen of Joseph Cairn Simpson, the Editor and Proprietor of the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN. The author in his introduction presents "his little volume with apologies;" he had no need to do so, every chapter gives evidence of careful thought, his arguments are well worked out, the results of his experiments are placed in the most perspicuous manner before his readers, and his researches into the past show that he is at once an enthusiastic and veracious student of the horse. His great argument on tips receives its strongest endorsement from his famous colt Anteeo, whose history from his first shoeing to the time of publication is exhaustively treated. The opening chapter is a plea for a better system of shoeing, and each succeeding chapter is a step on the ladder towards that final conclusion which the author has arrived at. He brings history, theory and experiment into play to support his argument, and whether the horseman believes in his conclusions or not, he will not quit the book till he has read it through, for in addition to the perfect knowledge of the horse which the author possesses, he surrounds it with a literary charm, which holds the audience to the last sentence. We heartily commend "Tips and Toe Weights" to the attention of the public.—Chicago News.

Tips and Toe Weights.—J. C. Simpson has been prominently identified with trotters for many years, not only as a writer on the subject, but as an expert handler and developer. He has given a great deal of study to horses' feet, and the best way to improve their action. After experimenting for a number of years, he has put the result of his researches and practice in book form. This work, entitled "Tips and Toe Weights," claims to be a natural and plain method of horse-shoeing. It treats of the action of the racehorse and trotter, as shown by instantaneous photography, and gives the subject of tips and toe weights a thorough ventilation. The work is meeting with a large sale, and is deserving of a place in every horseman's library, no matter whether he agrees with the ideas advanced or not. Send orders to the San Francisco News Company, or to the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN, San Francisco, Cal. Mr. Simpson is the Editor of the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN, which is a weekly journal devoted to the interests of breeders of fine horses, etc., and the advancement of all legitimate sport. It is the chief medium and representative of the breeding interests on the Pacific Slope.—N. Y. Mail, May 10th.

Tips and Toe Weights.—Jos. Cairn Simpson of San Francisco, California, has just published a book which is almost worth its weight in gold to every horseman. He does not believe in the old, any more shoe that gives no play or expansion to the horse's foot. He has found that shoes are unnecessary, and everybody knows they are hurtful. He is a believer in the use of iron or steel tips to protect the toe of the foot. By their use, and without ever having put a shoe on Anteeo he trotted when four years old in 2:20½. He claims that for ordinary use even on macadamized roads tips are all that are required; that that fearful cause of lameness, contraction, is entirely avoided by the use of tips. We are going to use them, and advise others to do it in the manner he recommends. Send $1.50 to him and he will send you the book and it will be as good an investment as you ever made for the money.—Coleman's Rural World.

Since the book was published, Anteeo gave still more convincing proof of the efficacy of the system, trotting a public trial in 2:20½, and showing half-miles in 1:23 and furlongs in 16 seconds while a year-old. The best evidence of the genuineness of the trials was his sale for $10,000, with other parties ready to take him at the price. Anteeo, two years younger than Anteeo, never wore a shoe, and owing to an injury to his foot when a foal it was the universal impression that he never could trot fast. He did well as a yearling and two-year-old, and this past season, when three years old, he won the Occident stakes, 1:21½, in which he got a record of 2:29½, last half in 1:1½; first money in purse at Sacramento, 1000 second money at Stockton, $550; the Stanford Stakes, $1,672; and the Embury, $870, making a cash return for the season of $1,514. I am satisfied that if he had been shod with full shoes when first put in training he would have been hopelessly crippled.

In the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN will be given a complete history of the treatment of Anteeo, showing with exactness the trials and results. I have made arrangements with an eminent microscopist to make full examinations of the horny deposit in wall and sole, and all the tissues which compose the foot of the horse, which will be incorporated in the forthcoming articles in the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN. Fully convinced by practical results, that this part of the anatomy of the horse is not understood as thoroughly as the other portions of the frame, I anticipate valuable accessions of knowledge from the revelations of the microscope.

watch certain horses in their early work and trials, and pay them handsomely for any stable secrets they may worm out of the stable-boys or trainers. The work of the tout is at all times of the most onerous nature and at times dangerous. Stable secrets are kept with zealous care. If a certain trainer has a horse that he has worked over a certain distance in very fast time, it is, of course, natural that the horse's performance should be kept a secret, so that the owner can get heavy odds against him. He is entered for a race, and within two days of the race is given a final trial with the full weight to be carried and the regular jockey up. It is, in fact, a mimic race, two or more horses being started with him, and the race is run and timed just as if it were a regular race. It is then the business of the tout to be on hand and see this trial. He has a fine timing-watch, and must know every horse on sight. If he sees the trial he at once informs his employers and they get a slice out of the pie.

The trainers use a thousand and one subterfuges to fool the tout, and often succeed. A big bay horse with a white foreleg was the favorite for a certain handicap sometimes since. At his trial the trainer took a bay stallion companion that was lame, painted his leg white and sent him out. In two hours fifty backers received notice from a tout that the favorite was lame. They rushed to hedge against him, and he receded to a long figure at which his owner backed him, and he came out of the race as sound as a dollar and won it. Touts have been fired upon by trainers for climbing onto the stable roof to hear if any of the horses were coughing. As an example of the zealous manner to which a stable's secrets are guarded, the following is a case in point: Garrison last spring went to California to try J. B. Haggin's two-year-olds. There were 125 of them, and he wanted the pick of the lot. Garrison was not allowed to carry his timing watch, and he couldn't even tell the names of the horses he rode.

There was a singular occurrence at Boiris races, in Ireland, lately. One of the five horses which ran for the Adamstown Plate was Mr. Meredith's Dainty, upon which, a fortnight ago, the operation of tracheotomy was performed, as a cure for roaring. Dainty ran the race with a metallic tube in its throat, opening at the neck, where it was fastened with a silver plate, and won.

Grim's Gossip.

The big Black George has been bought by F. M. Day.
Sam. L. Daniels was seen on Sunday behind a beautiful pair of trotters.

Directors Carr, Green and Boggs, of the State Board of Agriculture, were in the city on Saturday last.

W. G. Bogan has purchased the bay gelding Budd, and can now travel behind his own 2:26 trotter.

Marion Biggs, Jr., of Biggs Station, who has several fairly good distance horses was in the city Tuesday.

Another fine colt in the stables, and one which is thought highly of by his owner, is an unnamed by Sir Modred-Marion.

Father Bill Daly has purchased from J. Sisbert, the c. c. Futurity for $700, and will change his name to The Sweet Bye and Bye.

R. J. Lechan in buying a pair of Sultan colts from Mr. Rose, secured an exceedingly good bargain, and may be seen almost every fair afternoon taking a spin behind them.

Barbed wire fencing is good enough in its way, but R. McEnesky, of Butte, has occasion to regret the death of a valuable horse from its deadly proclivities.

State Senator A. F. Jones, of Oroville, who dearly loves to drive a fast team and has several of his own, has been a guest at the Palace Hotel several days this week.

Snapper Garrison will not carry the blue and yellow colors next year because Mr. Haggin will not race his horses in the East. Perhaps Snapper has been one of the causes of the withdrawal.

Mr. J. B. Chase has a filly by Longfellow—Katie Pease, and another out of a daughter of Katie Pease by Kyrle Daly who will have to give a good account of themselves in the spring.

Budd Doble is at present at Albuquerque with one of the Vice-Presidents of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe system. He has been elected director on one of their lines and may give up the track altogether.

W. M. R. asks Grim if "John Splan has taken to the prize ring." W. M. R. can rest easy if he alludes to gentle, child-like Jack, the old-time driver; it is another Splan that has brought this name into disrepute.

The Emperor of Norfolk will shortly be taken to the Santa Anita Ranch. Mr. Baldwin has decided to have the horse blistered, feeling assured it will do no injury and may possibly be beneficial.

Killip & Co., sold at public sale during the early portion of the week, eight head of Shetland ponies. The prices ranged from $60 to $105 and without a doubt many more could have been sold at equally good rates.

Walter Gratz has determined to have Austriana by Alarm—Australind, bred to Elkwood next spring. She has been very unsuccessful on the turf this year, but should make a valuable addition to the Roslyn Hill brood-mares.

Lord Mandeville, whose face is frequently seen on the English tracks, writes to a friend in this city that on his return from Mexico with Col. Cody (Buffalo Bill) he will visit this coast to inspect the large breeding farms.

Ex-Sheriff Sprague, of Butte, but who is now a resident of Colusa County, came down from the north on Saturday last to witness the third day's racing of the P. C. B. H. A., and, like many others, was disappointed.

Col. H. I. Thornton has four first class yearlings, two of which are very promising, one being by Three Cheers and another by Milner. He anticipates seeing his colors carried to the front by one of these next season.

Harry Morris, Mr. Keene and Mr. Lloyd will in future adjure riding over jumps. Thus three of the best gentlemen jockeys in the country will be lost sight of as such. The frequent accidents at the hurdles is the cause.

Mr. Storn paid a visit to the Dwysr stables shortly before his return home, and his opinion is that the very best yearling in the lot is the one bought at the last Haggin sale, a colt by Kyrle Daly, out of Eliza, she was Norfolk.

I asked Will S. Green of the Colusa Sun if he had any horse items for the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN, but the only thing he could say was that Billy Billups had a tolerable fair horse by the name of Tilton Almont. The Sun will be without an editor if Mr. Billups meets Green.

An untried two-year-old son of Foxhall has been sold in England for $9,750. He has been named Barkham.

Uhlan, by the Rangers, from La Mechante, was sold at the Kinloch Stud sale for $2,705, yet it is only two years ago that Mr. Haggin tendered $17,000 for him, Mr. J. Lucas Turner refusing the offer. He was purchased by Milton Young, of the McGrathiana Stud.

H. W. Meek, of San Lorenzo, recently had the misfortune to lose a fine Antevolo yearling filly, dam Lady Belle, by Chieftain; second dam Bonnis Belle by Belmont. The cause of death was inflammation of the bowels.

Mr. John Hallweigen, a prominent horseman of Chicago has arrived in the city and will winter here. Rumor hath it that he will wed before his return east. California has more than climate to recommend it to visitors from the other side of the mountains.

One of San Francisco's prominent jewellers has in his window a diamond necklace arranged in the form of a race-track, while in the center of the jeweled circle is a running horse fully set with the precious stones. The attraction has caused many to stop and look at the glittering pictures.

Dr. C. C. Mason, of Chico, was at the Lick House for a few days this week. The BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN tenders its congratulations to "Doc" on his recovery from a long and serious illness, and hopes to have him once more holding the helm of the Chico Track Association.

Many of the Eastern sporting papers have stated that Hamilton, the colored jockey would ride for Senator Hearst next season. There has been no positive engagement made, although the understanding is at present that he will have this mounts unless something should turn up in the meantime to change the programs.

All lovers of the trotting horse feel keenly the serious accident which has happened to Jay-Eye-See and sympathize deeply with his owner. The main artery in the leg was severed, but being discovered in time it is now thought that he may recover, and Mr. Case gives as his opinion that the gelding will not lose in speed.

Matt Byrne writes to say that Fresno, Salvador, Sonoma, Prose, Firsnzi and Yum Yum are in splendid fettle, Salvador being looked upon by many as the coming crack three-year-old. He says the trainers who are at Monmouth Park have the highest admiration for the colt and expect him to win many of the rich stakes in the spring.

At the Haggin sale on Tuesday, Mr. T. J. Crowley secured a magnificent bay filly, by Kilrush, son of Whipple's Hambletonian, first dam Birdie by James Lick, he by Homer, son of Rysdyk's Hambletonian for the small sum of $135. While not fashionably bred, still there are enough of good strains of blood in this filly to promise a reasonably good roadster.

A rumor has been current in New York for the past week that Snapper Garrison had offered Mr. J. B. Haggin, through Matt Byrne, $25,000 for the two-year-old Salvador. Those who give credence to this rumor couple with it the name of Mr. Belmont as one who is putting up the money. The report also says that Mr. Haggin refused to listen to any such offer, and as he is out of the city at present, the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN can neither confirm nor deny the truth of the rumor.

Any of our large breeders might do worse than secure the services of Joe Courtney who is at present disengaged. He has graduated from the stable, and passed through all the degrees of horsemanship, including jockey and trainer. Mr. Courtney has been in the employ of Theodore Winter, Esq., for several years and is thoroughly conversant with all matters appertaining to a first-class stock farm.

Joe Clark, general business manager for Senator Hearst in the East, has received from Kentucky nine yearlings, all of which he reports in excellent condition. There has also been sent to the stables, two Spendthrift colts from Keene Farm. Mr. Clark reports all the horses in good condition, but there has been such miserable weather that but little exercise could be given them.

The latest novelty in the East is voting for the most popular jockey among the attendants at church fairs. In Passaic, N. J., lately, ten jockeys were entered to be voted for, the prize to be saddle, bridle and whip. At last accounts Palmer, of Daly's stable, was in the lead, being closely followed by Bergen and Oasler. The starters include Bergen, Church, Ossler, Kelly, McCarthy, Dunn, M. J. Lynch, Cullen and Palmer.

Four colts which are always shown with a good deal of pride by Frank McCabe, trainer for the Dwysers, are: A full brother to Hanover, full brother to Firsnzi, full brother to Kingston, and a full brother to Lizzie Dwysr, also a sister to Miss Ford. The stable has never had so many first class youngsters, and it is hoped that the bad luck of last season will be wiped out next year. The Dwysr Brothers have in their stables at the Brooklyn track horses which cost $210,000.

George Hankins, of the Chicago stable, is very jubilant over his late purchase, the $10,000 Galen, and expresses confidence in being able to down as three-year-olds such cracks as Proctor Knott, Salvador, the Faverdals colt, Fresno and others. He will have a hard time doing it, but still I thought when Turner had him at the five furlong post in the Futurity that the gallant son of Faustus was sure to carry off the big stake for his owners, and he may prove a dangerous rival for these cracks this coming season.

Some of the best gentlemen riders in the country have signified their intention to abandon riding over jumps, being prompted to such action by the numerous accidents which have occurred among their number. Mr. Lloyd, the gentleman rider who was injured in the fall at the Philadelphia hunt races, is still confined to his bed, and will abandon riding over jumps in the future. Harry Morris who was so badly injured at Saratoga last year, has not fully recovered his health, and will dispose of his jumpers. Mr. Ksne has also abandoned the hunt races since Mr. Lloyd's injury at Philadelphia.

While in Chicago, for a few hours, one day last week, Grim learned that Ed Corrigan is having trouble about the rebuilding of the wooden structures and fences on the grounds of the Chicago Fair and Trotting Breeder's Association at the west side track. On November 13th an injunction was asked for by a number of wealthy west-side citizens to prevent the rebuilding. In the bill the plaintiffs assert that "the further maintenance of the Driving Park would be a nuisance to the surrounding property, as it increases the rates of insurance and damages the property values by bringing together crowds of objectionable people who gamble and get drunk."

J. H. Steiner, Secretary of the American Trotting Association, has sent the following list of short tracks to Wallace's Monthly, showing just how many feet each is short of a mile. Biggsville, Illinois, 264; Burton, Ohio, 168½; Charleston, Illinois, 95; Denison, Iowa, 46; Deshler, Ohio, 352; Dunkirk, Indiana, 438; Elkhorn, Wisconsin, 132; Fairmont, Nebraska, 14; Findlay, Ohio, 64; Garrettsville, Ohio, 173; Huntsville, Alabama, 111; Independence, Iowa, 136; Janssenville, Wisconsin, 43½; Kahoka, Missouri, 46; Libertyville, Illinois, 26; Monmouth, Illinois, 32; Norwalk, Ohio, 16; Strawberry Point, Iowa, 75; Warren, Ohio, 16; Yorkville, Illinois, 34.

A few evenings ago, while sitting in the Palace Hotel, the conversation turned on naming horses. The peculiar names of several horses were talked about, and one of the gentlemen present asked, does any one know how "Robert the Devil" got his distinctive title? A BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN reporter was appealed to, and answered the question. As it may interest our readers we give it again here. The owner of the colt had two gentlemen visiting him and after luncheon they were invited to take a look at the stables. Both of them admired the beautiful horse, and it was suggested that one of them name the horse. The first one said "Robert" would be a good name. The second one said, "The Devil!" meaning to express his disgust at such an ordinary name. The owner at once spoke up saying: "You have both named him; he shall be called Robert the Devil." Matthew Dawson the celebrated English trainer is authority for the above.

Budd Doble, who is noted the country over for the smooth and polished manner in which he does everything he undertakes, has just forwarded by express to Mrs. W. H. Wilson, Abdallah Park, Cynthiana, Ky., a beautiful urn-shaped solid silver cup, fifteen inches high, richly engraved and surmounted by a life-like figure of a horse in action. It bears the following inscription, which explains its object and origin: "Awarded by M. Smith & Co. to Budd Doble, driven by Budd Doble, at the Blue Ribbon meeting of the Detroit Driving Club, 1888, for the horse winning the best contested race during the meeting." The value of the cup is $175. The pacer Budd Doble, the winner of the above cup, is five years old, bred and owned by W. H. Wilson, Cynthiana, sired by Indianapolis, 2:21, dam Kate, by Stocking Chief. The above race was a six-heat contest, the time being 2:21½, 2:22½, 2:22, 2:22½, 2:22 and 2:20½. Budd Doble won the last three heats and race, which was certainly a grand performance for a five-year-old, the average, we think, being fully equal to any six-heat race by horses of that age ever trotted or paced.

The National Horse Show in New York.

Old Madison Square Garden put on its best uniform to receive the picked lot of exhibition equines quartered within its spacious walls. The shabby exterior gives no notion of the gay scene that greets the eye on entering the garden. Acres of bunting and numerous tasteful decorations hide the rough posts, and large additions have been made to the stall accommodations, the Twenty-seventh street side of the building being utilized for the first time. In the open stalls the cobos, hunters and draught horses are quartered, while the Fourth avenue side is reserved for the aristocrat of the light harness, and comfortable box stalls are here erected for the special use of the trotters. The entry list has four hundred and twelve names, divided into one hundred and sixteen classes, many of the horses being entered in two or more competitions. On Monday, November 5th, at 9 a. m., the formal opening took place, and the work of awarding the premiums was commenced at 2 p. m. Messrs. Courtlandt D. Moss, Albert C. Hall and J. W. Ogden, the triumvirate selected to adjudicate on the merits of the trotters and roadsters, discharged their first duties during Monday afternoon in two of the classes. First were the four-year-old stallions shown to bridle or halter. Chimes, the $12,000 purchase from Palo Alto, now owned at Village Farm, Buffalo, won the first prize of $100, and Foxwood by Nutwood, out of Lady Foxie, was given the second premium of $50. King Cossack, from Caton Stock Farm, came third, with very high commendation. Shortly after the three-year-old fillies were paraded. The Village Farm was again triumphant with Nightingale, by Mambrino King, dam by Wood's Hambletonian, this shapely filly carrying off the blue ribbon and $100, with Diplomacy, by Don Cossack, dam by Hero of Thorndale, second.

After entering the Garden, Tuesday, I first paid court to Highblown Farm's young monarch Nominee, by Stranger, dam Sapphire, by Jay Gould, 2:21½; second dam Lucy, 2:18½. Stranger was go. by General Washington out of Goldsmith Maid, 2:14. Washington by General Knox, 2:31½, trial 2:24, out of Lady Thorn, 2:18½. I had seen all of Nominee's famous ancestors make their fastest records except General Knox, and viewed with peculiar interest this young scion of the old-time queens. He is a very compactly-built colt, and from every point of view is truly proportioned. I was particularly taken with his countenance, which betokens great sensibility, and as he shows trot in both his head and heels, supported by the strongest kind of breeding to trot, I predict that it will be said of him, as it was of his great grandsire in Maine, "A Nominee that can't trot is a rarity." He had a strong band of competitors in class fourteen, but as his breeder, H. N. Smith, remarked to me, "He won the blue ribbon on his own merits in the ring." The second prize was awarded to Almont Hero (Gallop), by Hamlin's Almont Jr., dam by Hero of Thorndale. The third in rank, as per the judges' decision, was the richly-bred Lavalard, by Director, 2:17, dam Sweetness, 2:21½, by Volunteer, and the fourth place was given to R. Steel's Cedarward, by Nutwood, 2:18½, dam Four Lines (dam of Merry Thought, 2:22½), by Blackwood. Nutrition and Merry Christmas were also named in this class.

The same afternoon the trotters in harness were judged. The blue ribbon fell to the lot of Starletta, 2:23½, by Starlight. Spofford, 2:18½, another of the house of Kentucky Prince, took the red ribbon, and still another J. Q., 2:17½, was very highly commended. J. B. Thomas, 2:28½, received high commendation, or fourth place. By the way, Spence, of Tanner Boy memory, has charge of Mr. A. J. Bailey's horses. He has the stalls of Thomas and Lou B. tastefully painted and equipped.

Lovers of the trotter were regaled with three competitive examinations the third day. The opening one was for stallions under two years old, to halter. It would be almost impossible to beat the Caton Farm representative, Highwood, by Nutwood, dam by Harold. By right of breeding and merit he received the blue ribbon. Hereward, by Mambrino King dam by Wood's Hambletonian, got the red ribbon. Mormon, by Epanlet, 2:19, dam Free Love, 2:21½, and Charley Perkins, by Wedgewood, 2:19, out of Bijon, were placed in the order named.

The roadsters are next paraded before the judges. Mr. Bailey's chestnut mare Lou B, by Regulus, dam by Kentucky Prince, made her owner happy by carrying off the blue ribbon. The red ribbon was tied to the bridle of the gray gelding Robin, by Parks' Volunteer. A very stylish fellow is Robin. A. J. Feek tells me he can surely trot in 2:30. He was purchased at the show by broker E. de Cerna for Mr. Norman L. Monroe, the publisher; price $1,500. Mr. H. W. Reboul's Queen, daughter of Watchmaker, was very highly commended, and Kentucky Joe highly commended.

A much coveted prize is the blue ribbon for stallions four years old and upwards, kept for service and judged on their individual merit. The judges, after mature deliberation, gave it to Bayonne Prince, 2:21½, by Kentucky Prince. They placed Mambrino King second, Hamlin's Almont, Jr., third, and A. A. Bonner's Volmer, 2:24½, by Gambetta, dam Ulster Queen, by Rysdyk's Hambletonian, fourth.

"It would cost me several hundred dollars, and a lot of extra time, to see as many representatives of the trotting families as I can look at here for a dollar," said a loyal lover of the light harness performers last Thursday afternoon, as he stood watching the stallions and their quartets of descendants file into the ring at Madison Square Garden. It was just at the climax of the most successful of the five National Horse Shows that have been held in the metropolis.

During the preceding three days the competitions had been among individuals, among trotters, runners, coaches; also ponies and the minor classes, but the fourth day saw the grand special contest, not only for the biggest money prize of the week, but for the most important award in point of general interest. Ever since the National Show was inaugurated the class designated as "Trotting stallion to be shown with four of his get" has been the blindest of the blue-ribbon events, and this year it lost none of its attractiveness. Even Sweden, from Murry Hill down, forget their allegiance to the bang tails, and the private boxes were thronged with Gotham's wealth and aristocracy as the quartet of fashionably-bred trotting sires and their get were brought into the tan-bark arena.

First came the two champions from Village Farm, Buffalo, Mambrino King and Hamlin's Almont, Jr., the former with the familiar slender cord on his jaw, and the son of Almont controlled with a bridle. The grooms in their white singlets and caps, with corduroy trousers, added to the picturesque of the display. After Mambrino King came his colts, Mocking Bird (four years), dam Mabel A, by Toronto Chief, Jr., 2:23½, with a recently-acquired mark of 2:23½; Nightingale (three years), record 2:32, out of a daughter of Wood's Hambletonian; Prince Regent (three years), dam by Alcantara, and Hereward, a yearling, out of a mare by Wood's Hambletonian. Hamlin's Almont, Jr. was followed by Almont Hero (Gallop), three years old, dam by Hero of Thorndale; Village Queen, a yearling, dam by Mambrino King, and Daphne, out of a mare by Mambrino Patchen.

A minute later came Starlight, the big but light-footed son of Kentucky Prince, with four weanlings bringing up the rear. Mr. Darling's grooms were not in uniform, and there was no artificial attempt to please the eye of judges or spectators at large.

Then there was a hush, followed by a buzz of admiration, as the dainty blue and white costumes of the Caton Farm attendants appeared with lofty Don Cossack and his string of offspring, made up of Sally Cossack, 2:22½ (four years), dam by Almont; Diplomacy (three years), dam by Hero of Thorndale, record 2:28½; Dora Cossack, 2:39½, two years old, out of a mare by Forrest Goldust, and Verona Cossack, yearling filly, out of Smutty, by Ottawa Chief 2:25.

This completed the herds that were to compete for the richest premium of the show. An added attraction was that of the sensational Epanlet, with a record of 2:19 as a five-year-old, and four of his yearlings, from the Cedar Park Stock Farm of Robert Steel, Philadelphia. The turf career of this speedy stallion was brought to an end by the sickness which destroyed his sight, and the physical defect rendered him ineligible to show against the other sires. The best of the quartet of youngsters is Flutter, out of Buzz Medinm 2:20½, and the filly won first honors in her class.

After the five great sires with the score of progeny had paraded in single file, they were divided into herds, and the work of judging the four for competition followed. Hamlin's Almont Jr., was put through his paces first, and then his get were shown in the same way. Then Superintendent Thomas of Caton Stock Farm, mounted on a mustang, led Don Cossack and his colts. The sire himself showed considerable speed, and the offspring evoked general applause by their rapid flight over the circumscribed tan bark track, and the pure and even quality of their action. Sally Cossack bore off the honors and was particularly admired. Then the colored groom in charge of Mambrino King raced up and down the ring leading the showy chestnut, which seemed to know that his reputation was at stake, as with lofty head and flashing eye he rushed along, carrying his sable attendant in mid-air by his rapid clip. His colts, too, shown with a runner, evinced much of the lofty style and action of their sire, though their speed was far short of that of the Cossack family. Last, Starlight and his young offspring were led out, after which the judges made personal inspection of the herds. It was evident that the problem was a knotty one, and as the big crowd impatiently awaited the decision which should settle the supremacy, the judicial trio deliberated long and deeply. Finally the attendant stepped forward with the coveted blue rosette, and fastened it in the flowing mane of Mambrino King, and another fixed the red ribbon in the bridle of Don Cossack. The great event of the week was over, and once the Village Farm had proved triumphant. The empty honors conveyed by the yellow and white rosettes went to Hamlin's Almont Jr., and Starlight, respectively. Macey, by George Wilkes, has been entered in this class, but the stallion had taken sick since his arrival at the garden, and he and his colts were not taken from their stalls.

"I knew that horse would be first, for he always gets it," said one of Gotham's fashionable fair ones as she raised her lorgnette and inspected Mambrino King from the box where she sat. Her remark only echoed an opinion shared by many others that the disposition of the blue emblem of superiority was to some extent a foregone conclusion. This was but natural, from the fact that the stallion has for many years borne the title of "the handsomest horse in the world," and he was a winner in this same class at the show of 1885. The remainder of Thursday afternoon was occupied with classes for saddle-horses, jumpers and the like, but the stallion herd continued to be the chief topic of conversation. Mambrino King seemed to have a majority of supporters, though the lovers of speed thought Don Cossack should have won on the form shown by his colts. There were no other competitions for trotters that day, and the evening was devoted to a dress parade for a squad of mounted police and a contest in high jumping for qualified hunters. Fred Gebhardt's famous leaper Leo, with Mrs. Langtry's imported jockey Peter Smith up, won first honors with a record of six feet five inches, which height none of his opponents were able to clear.

Dull, threatening weather kept the crowd away during Friday morning and afternoon, and the more devoted turfmen had ample opportunity for a closer and more critical inspection of the stock. Five trotting classes were up for competition during the day, beginning with four-year-old mares or geldings shown to wagon. C. J. Hamlin's chestnut filly Madame, by Mambrino King, dam by A. S. McAllister, was judged the best of the trio exhibited. In the class for pairs the same mare, with Gold Fringe, a half sister, out of a daughter of Bob Johnson, won first honors over a pair of geldings bred from imported stock. In the third of the harness classes for three-year-olds no first prize was awarded, the hay gelding Hull, by Hamlin's Almont Jr., getting the red rosette over Flossie, by Belmont. There was a more interesting exhibit in the class for standard mares or geldings four years old. In this there were seven young mares, representing such prominent sires as Electioneer, Sultan, Mambrino King, Don Cossack, and Starlight. The bays were born off by Suisun, an Electioneer filly, owned by J. B. Houston, and purchased from Senator Stanford last year. Sally Cossack got the red ribbon. Delight, by Starlight, and Mocking Bird, by Mambrino King, came in for commendation. In the class for two-year-old fillies Mr. Hamlin's horse retrieved himself somewhat through his likely daughter Redwitch, beating Dora Cossack and several others. The heavy draft horses were not up to the mark, and in some cases the judges withheld the first premium altogether. The rest of the day was occupied with high-steppers, roadsters, owned by farmers or dealers, a competition between polo ponies for the special delectation of Murray Hill constituency, and two jumping contests for hunters. The evening programme drew the most brilliant audience of the week to see the cavalry competition between a troop from Philadelphia and a detachment from the New York Hussars. The creme de la creme of the Quaker City, Boston and the provincial towns joined the beau monde of the metropolis and the boxes and reserved seats were crowded with "the bright, the beautiful" and their frock-coated escorts. It was the greatest triumph in the way of assemblages that the show has ever seen, and the list of famous personages would make a considerable directory in itself. What with the Vanderbilts and their set to represent the metropolis, the Ellises, Grubbs, Chapmans and others of that ilk from Philadelphia, and a delegation from the Somerset Club, Boston, headed by ex-Mayor F. O. Prince, the ordinary citizen stood overshadowed and awe-struck in the presence of so much grandeur and blue blooded humanity. As for the performance of the troopers themselves it was of a kind to satisfy the good-natured and patient spectators to whom the novelty of the affair was sufficient to keep down criticism. The horses were of excellent quality, and some of the Philadelphians had good seats, but the "head-cutting" was a sorry exhibition of awkwardness when compared with the skillful work of the British dragoons. The honors were borne off by the city of brotherly love, and the New Yorkers were completely eclipsed at all points. It was close on to midnight when the various contests were ended and the distinguished audience melted away, well satisfied with the first attempt to introduce the charger and the dragoon to the patrons of the of the National Horse Show.

Saturday saw the heavens open and the floods descend to an extent that depopulated the streets and reduced the attendance at the garden to a bandful during the forenoon. Later on a goodly number of road-riders braved the elements to see the turn out in the class for roadsters and best appointed road rig. There were thirteen entries and nine of the lot came out to compete for the honors. Besides the ordinary appointments of a single light harness team there was required a full complement of everything appurtenant in the way of horse clothing and tools for keeping wagon and animal in order. But it took a good while to decide the issue, but finally Colonel Kipp's Katrine, by Kentucky Prince, driven by Frank Ferguson, was declared to be first in merit, with J. B. Houston's Clara second. Johnny Murphy had J. Q., but forgot to bring the necessary appointments, and the team had to be ignored in consequence. This is the third successive victory for Mr. Ferguson in this competition.

There was only one trotting class for the closing day, but the quality of the exhibit quite compensated for the lack of quantity. This was for two-year-old stallions shown to bridle or halter. Highblown Stock Farm, Lee, Mass., had sent Alphonso, by Baron Wilkes, out of grand old Alma Mater (dam of Alcantara and Alkyone), and the richly-bred colt was adjudged worthy to wear the blue rosette. Syndie, by Stranger, a big shapely fellow standing 16.2 hand, a full brother to Nominee, was placed second, and the dispositions of the premiums stirred up a lot of discussion upon the merits of the two blue-blooded young colts. Adonis by Hamlin's Almont, Jr., dam by Hero of Thorndale, had as much style as one could desire, but his breeding fell considerably short of the more aristocratic pair in the elements of speed production, and he was placed third.

Fortunately the clearing-up shower fell shortly before eight o'clock in the evening, and another big crowd came to see the jumpers. Three years ago Foxball Keene's hunter Hempstead cleared six feet eight inches, and this record has stood unbeaten till Saturday night. After the lower distances had reduced the number of contestants to two, the judges raised the poles to six feet nine and seven-eighths inches. Fred Gebhardt's Leo was the first to try the lofty obstacle, and on the second attempt the nimble old chestnut went clean and clear over, skillfully aided by his jockey, Peter Smith. His opponent was File Maker, a Canadian-bred gelding, that had only been trained a few weeks in high jumping. He, too, got over the fence, though not as cleverly as Leo had done. Both horses stand credited with a best-on-record, and two blue rosettes were given them amid the plaudits of the delighted throng, and W. E. D. Stokes doubled his prize of $100, and each horse bore off an equal share. W. K. Sturgis had offered $200 if the record was beaten, and he too was moved to double the amount as a reward to the pair of champions.

Financially and in all respects the Fifth National Horse Show has more than fulfilled the hopes and expectations of its promoters, and its success marks another mile-stone on the road to perfection in the development and breeding of the equine race in this ambitious and progressive republic. This is particularly true in the trotting classes, which were better patronized and more attractive in point of general excellence than was any previous exhibit. In fact this department far outstripped the others in everything which goes to make an ideal show, and the light-harness horse has met and fairly vanquished his curtailed brothers in the chosen home of their most faithful adherents.—Chicago Horseman.

Another Great Purchase.

In November, 1876, Gov. Leland Stanford visited Stonyford and purchased of Charles Backman thirteen head of gilt-edge trotting stock for $41,200. The purchase (the largest ever made by one man up to that time) included Electioneer, by Hambletonian, out of Green Mountain Maid, and Elaine, by Messenger Duroc, out of Green Mountain Maid. The price of the stallion was $12,500 and of the filly $7000. Since then $100,000 have been refused for Electioneer, and Elaine has trotted in 2:20, and produced Norlaine, with a one-year-old record of 2:31½.

On Friday, November, 16th., William Russell Allen, of the Southern Hotel, St. Louis, Mo., who is founding a breeding farm at Pittsfield, Mass., visited Stonyford, and beat the Stanford record. He paid Mr. Backman $44,100 for ten head. This is the largest sale ever made to one man.

Mr. Allen has secured a son and a daughter and two granddaughters of the famous Green Mountain Maid, a daughter of the sister of Guy (record 2:12), and a son of the sister of Dexter (2:17½) and Dictator, sire of Jay-Eye-See (2:10).

The names of the animals bought and the prices paid are as follows:

Lancelot, bay colt, 1-year-old, by Messenger Duroc, dam Green Mountain Maid; $12,500.

Elista, b. m., 5 years, by Messenger Duroc, dam Green Mountain Maid; $10,000.

Edita, b. f., 2 years, by Kentucky Prince, dam Eliza, by Messenger Duroc and dam Green Mountain Maid; $5000.

Mirella, ch. m., 3 years, by Kentucky Prince, dam Miranda, by Messenger Duroc II, dam Green Mountain Maid; $4000.

Gnyda, blk. m., 5 years, by Messenger Duroc, dam Leslie, sister of Guy; $4000.

America, blk. c., 2 years, by Kentucky Prince, dam Alma, sister of Dexter; $5000.

Marina, b. f., 1 year, by Sorrento, dam Mary Whitman, by Kentucky Prince; $1500.

Nyda, b. f., 1 year, by Kentucky Prince, dam Camille, by Hambletonian; $1500.

Alfaretta, b. f., 2 years, by Kentucky Prince, dam Betty, by Messenger Duroc; $1400.

Fedora, b. f., 2 years, by Kentucky Prince, dam Cassandra, by Messenger Duroc; $1200.—Rural World

A feature of the horse show in New York was two paintings of Hanover and Surinam, by Henry Stullo. Hanover is shown in the conventional style with legs spread out in the impossible way artists have of portraying them, positions that no racer ever assumed on a track. The painting of Surinam is better. It is entirely unconventional, but is full of life and action. The horse's feet are gathered under him just as they are when he is racing. It is the best turf painting seen in some time. It was purchased by Senator Hearst, and will be given a place in his San Francisco residence.

Sacramento Horses.

The Sacramento Record-Union gives the following:

The ranch of J. B. Haggin, just across the American river from this city, has become famous as a producer of the fastest race horses in the world. Below is given the winnings of the Rancho del Paso stable for 1888. As will be seen, he has won over $125,000, which is the largest amount won by any one stable during the season. Mr. Haggin's connection with racing is recent, he having began in this State in 1884, but in 1885 he was formally introduced to the country at large by his clever coup with Tyrant in the Withers and Belmont stakes at the Jerome Park Spring Meeting. That season he was also won the Emporium with Hidalgo, and the Hopeful with Ben Ali. Since then his "orange with blue sleeves and cap" has become famous. In 1886 he won the Kentucky Derby with Ben Ali, and such horses as Ban Fox, King Fox, Preciosa, Firenze, Aurelia, etc., have worn his colors. He has at the Rancho del Paso's stud, near this city, the largest collection of stallions and broodmares in the land, having sent to Australia and imported the colonial champion Darcin, as well as the New Zealand champion Sir Modred.

On the whole, Mr. Haggin had a great year in the amount of money won. Yet it may be questioned if his racing was profitable, as he had nearly seventy horses in training, and his forfeits were enormous, as will be seen when we state that they amounted to over $22,000 at one meeting. He will race a small and select stable next season, and with proper management it might prove far more remunerative and pleasant than the handling of a great, unwieldy establishment.

The English race-horses, Gay Hermit and St. Mirin, which were bought by South American parties for large figures and sent to that country early this year, were expected to do wonders, but a few weeks ago they raced for the grand prize at Buenos Ayres, and were beaten by a French colt, Cormelies, which had been bought in France and sent to South America. Cormelies was formerly owned by Count de Juigne, and was sold for a trifle to the present owners.

The Fresno Expositor reports the cattle on the Laguna Tache Grant to be dying at the rate of 200 per day from a disease said to be anthrax or splenic apoplexy. A well-known stockman of that city informs the reporter that the suffering of the herds can be traced to alkaline feed and water, "for when the cattle suffering from the early stages of the disease are removed from the bottom lands, where the alkali is, they, in a majority of cases, recover. I don't think there is anything to be alarmed at, for herds on the grant where the pasture is not impregnated with alkali do well."

AN EXTRA DAY.

Bay District Track Association.

Officers of the day: Judges H. J. Agnew, F. Vaughn, Lee Shaner. Timers, R. T. Carroll, J. H. Hastings, O. Hickok. Starter, C. S. Crittenden.

Although the Bay District Track was hardly in condition for a first-class day's racing, Mr. Hinchman decided to have an extra day on Tuesday, there being many strangers in the city who had arrived to witness the third day's racing of the Blood Horse Association. The day was all that could be desired for "the sport of kings," and as a consequence a goodly number were present. The bookmakers did not seem to reap a lively harvest, while the mutuels and auctions fared equally bad. The usual patrons of the betting men seemed afraid to venture their money as the mud made almost everything guess-work and there were no sure things to be had. Many ladies graced the stand, although some of their escorts were heard grumbling about having to pay extra for admittance. The Santa Anita Stable were fortunate in winning two of the four events, and many present backed the black and Maltese cross in the three last races.

When the bell was rung for the first race, a dozen faced the starter, the favorites being G. W. Trahern's pair, Haidee and Blue Bonnet. From their long inactivity, many of the mounts acted in a very refractory manner, and it was fully half an hour before the word was given to go. At one of the false starts, ten out of the dozen were past the quarter-post before the signal was given for them to return, Brady and Elwood having been left standing at the post. It is to this fact, probably, that Brady was enabled to win, for when Haslett made a final call on him at the end of the stretch, the son of Wildidle was fresh enough to respond, while the balance had lost all their wind. When the flag fell, Index and Nerva had a little the best of the start, with Kildare trying to cut in and head them off, the balance being well up. At the quarter Coloma secured the lead and kept it to the half, Elwood causing the brown colt to keep up his pace. At this point they were all well up and from there home it looked almost anybody's race. Coloma should have won it, but his extra exertion in the false start and the comparative freshness of Jack Brady, gave the latter an advantage which his jockey was not slow to utilize, they came under the wire, Brady first, Coloma second, Kildare third. The following is the

The second race had six starters, Bessie Shannon being with-drawn, the bettors made Caliente favorite with Lady Helen a good second choice, while a small minority seemed to think Naicho B. had a chance for honors. When the word was given Jack Pot and the favorite jumped off in the lead, Caliente quickly taking first place while the rest of the field were well strung out. It was simply a procession from start to finish, the horses coming in as they were on the card, Caliente being first, Lady Helen second; Naicho B. third. The summary is as follows:

With two such good ones as Grisette and Mollie McCarthy's Last, it is no wonder the Baldwin stable was made prime favorite, Daisy D. and Susie S. finding a few supporters among those who delight in long shots. When starter Crittenden dropped the flag, Grisette, Notidle and Daisy D. cut out the pace, and a lively race they made of it.

The two favorites had things all their own way until the last furlong, when Notidle was brought up with a rush and heat Grisette out by a nose for second place, but had not speed enough to take the race from Mollie's Last. The stable had declared to win with the daughter of Rutherford, but from all appearances the Glenelg mare was a five pound better horse. The summary is as follows:

Same Day—Handicap for all ages. One mile and an eighth. Santa Anita Stable's br m Mollie McCarthy's Last, 5, Rutherford—Mollie McCarthy, 109.....Monahan 1

Estrella was established favorite and carried some money in the fourth race, but a large number considered the Denver importation, Al Farrow, good enough for a mud horse and put their modest bets on him. Bogus also had a few admirers, but he was not in the race from start to finish, while the winner, Edelweiss, was seemingly forgotten in the books and auction pools; those who thought well of her evidently put their money in the Paris Mutuels, for she only paid $9.50. Johnny Gray and Carmen got a trifling advantage at the start, but the latter came back almost immediately and was passed by Estrella and Susie S. The Santa Anita entry tried very hard to place another race to the credit of the stable, but try as he would, Monahan could not carry the Rutherford mare to victory. The last part of the last farlong was fighting ground between Edelweiss and Al Farrow, but the former had too much speed and won easily, Estrella finishing third.

Third Day—Blood Horse Association.

Officers of the day—Judges: Messrs. McClure, Lathrop and Wolfskill. Timers: Messrs. Morrow, Hickok and Carroll. Starting Judge, P. A. Finnigan.

A beautiful day, a holiday, a good track and first-class entries, were a combination of circumstances which tended to make the Bay District Conise a great source of attraction on Thanksgiving afternoon, at least five thousand persons being present. As usual on a "Blood Horse day," the ladies were out in full force, and many a quiet little bet of gloves has had to be settled since, and in one instance the expenses to the theatre were to be paid by the unfortunate loser. The day was all that could be desired, the track had improved wonderfully since Tuesday, the horses were seemingly all in fair condition. President McClure and Secretary Culver were smiling, the bookmakers were giving very decent odds, and there was really nothing to mar the enjoyment of the large crowd in attendance.

That horse-racing is very uncertain was fully demonstrated before the day was over, not a favorite passing under the wire first in any of the events. In the Autumn Stakes Sorrento had the services of probably the best jockey on the coast, while the favorite, Almont, was sadly lacking in that respect, and in addition had the worst of a bad start. Much was expected from the Three Cheers—Queation colt, but Mr. Mrry will have to get a first-class rider if he wishes to win with Almont. The winner, Don Jose, is by Joe Hooker, out of Countess Zieka, and is owned by Theo. Winters, Esq., of Yolo. He is a beautiful chestnut colt, large and rangy, and gives every indication of being a cracking three-year-old. Sorrento is a chestnut colt by the same sire as Don Jose, and out of Rosy B.. He has already won spurs on the Eastern tracks and was there accounted a good horse if he and his rider understood one another. He is a perfect glutt n punishment, but always wants his head and cannot bear to be pulled. He loves to hear the clatter of hoofs behind him and is willing to do his part towards keeping them there. He has netted his owners many thousands this season and good accounts should be heard of him in 1889.

The first race of the day had more starters, Estrella being established a warm favorite, with Notidle a good second choice. Heliotrope also had a few admirers, but they were few and far between. After a false start the word was given to a very bad send off, Estrella being at least ten lengths behind, while Elwood was absolutely left at the post. Kildare and Notidle were the first to show in front, with the balance well bunched close behind. Monahan tried very hard to bring Estrella up with the others, but without avail. The relative positions were maintained to the head of the stretch where Hill came up with Heliotrope and gave the two leaders a battle. It was a splendid fight for supremacy, in which Notidle showed the most powers of endurance, Hitchcock landing the mare a winner, Heliotrope being a good second, with Kildare well up for third place. The following is the summary:

Between the first and second races D. McClure, Esq., stated from the judges' stand that he was present at the starting of the horses in the first race, and explained what looked to be a bad start, as the awkwardness of Elwood, who, when the flag fell, throw himself against Estrella, knocking the mare from her stride, causing her to lose many lengths.

The betting fraternity hurried at once to the books, all anxious to get their money in on Geraldine, which was considered the sure thing of the day. Cinch, dead thing, a walk-over, and many other exclamations of like kind could be heard on all sides from those who glean their knowledge through corner touts, but they had evidently forgotten a few others of the good ones who were on the card. Minnie R. and Bogus were scratched, leaving thirteen to face the starter, and as they were more or less fractions, some little time was consumed before the flag fell.

Daisy D. showed in front at once, but was quickly displaced by Geraldine, she evidently not liking her impost of 120 pounds. At the half-mile post Peregrine and Edelweiss had moved to second and third, the Maltese Villa stable colors still showing in front. The rest were well bunched behind, with Al Farrow and Grisette leading the contingent. From here home a hard punishing race ensued, the pace proving too much for Geraldine, who fell back, giving way to Al Farrow for third place. On entering the homestretch Grisette took Peregrine's place, and at the drawgate it looked as though either of the three leaders might win. Hill, by good judgment, secured first money for his stable by a length, Al Farrow beating Grisette for place.

The third race of the day was the Fame Stakes for which only three contestants made an appearance. The favorite appearing to be Canny Scot, although in a good many of the pools he brought up more than Loveknot.

As they walked out to the starting post, Coloma was disposed to be unruly and had to be led up to the track. To a good start they were well off, Coloma immediately jumping to the fore, Canny Scot second and Loveknot trailing. This position was kept up past the grand stand and well into the back stretch where the tailenders moved up, they being all bunched at the five furlong post. By this time Coloma had shot his bolt, falling behind, and Carillo tried to gain a lead with Canny Scot but Loveknot would not be shaken, she keeping close to his flank as they rounded into the home stretch it looked as though Carillo was punishing the horse, but he was not for Canny Scot had quit, while the filly was still full of running. Without whip or spur Winchell landed Loveknot an easy winner by two lengths, Coloma being fifteen lengths behind.

The fourth event on the card was the race of the day, a great deal of money passing into the boxes from those who fancied they could pick the winner, the knowing ones especially investing heavily on Almont. The McCarty Bros., early in the day backed Sorrento, driving the price from 4, to post odds of 2 1/2 to 1. Don Jose and Flood Tide were not without backers, the latter carrying probably a bit the most money, Lady Helen stock was dealt in very charily, the long odds, however, causing a few to back her for place. The start was far from being a good one, Sorrento and Don Jose having the advantage while Almont was at least five lengths behind. At the first turn Sorrento was leading closely accompanied by Don Jose and Lady Helen the others being well up. As they neared the half-mile post Carillo was holding Don Jose well in hand and allowing all but Almont to lead him, Sorrento being also under a strong pull and leading his field by a length, while the balance were evidently fighting for place. As they came into the upper turn Flood Tide and Don Jose were let out, both coming into the homestretch on almost even terms with Sorrento. From here out it was a pretty race, Don Jose having more in reserve than the others, had little difficulty in winning.

The last was a selling race, and had eleven starters. Extract being the horse selected to carry the bulk of the public money. Al Farrow and Jack Brady were not forsaken, however, many modest little bets being placed on them. Nancy was scratched, and notwithstanding that Starting Judge Finnigan waited some time, he had to give the word without Elwood as he failed to put in an appearance, Kildare and Oro were the first to show in front when the word was given, with the rest all in a bunch well up. Winchell did not seem to be able to get out of the ruck with the favorite, and had to make the best of a bad situation. The same positions were held until the horses entered the stretch where Al Farrow and Extract came up, Oro falling behind. The previous race of Farrow's evidently fitted him for this one, as he won it hands down, Kildare second and Extract third. There was no bid for the winner, he having been entered for the selling price of $1,500. Following is the Sleepy Tom, the blind pacer, was a horse with a remarkable story. After being raised from obscurity to a world-wide fame in the speed ring, he "drops again into neglect and wretched squalor, and dies a horrible death in a mean stable somewhere within the ague stricken regions of Indiana," says the Xenia Blade. He was foaled at the present St. George Hotel stable in Bellbrook, O., in about 1866 or 1867; was a stonily bred horse, sired by Tom Rolfe, dam sired by Sam Hazard. Tom was a very unpromising colt both in gait and appearance, and led a vagabond's life in his early days, being racked about the streets of his native village as a common "sorb." His dam being a natural pacer, and as he showed inclinations toward that gait, which were more manifest as he grew a little older, his owner, Mr. Isaac Dingle, put him in training, but with indifferent success; when seemingly to end poor Tom's career forever, he lost his eyesight, becoming totally blind. He was then withdrawn from the track as worthless, and sold and traded from hand to hand, at one time changing owners for $30 in money and a bottle of very poor whisky. Finally he fell into the hands of Steve Phillips, of Xenia, O., who again put him in training with the results so well-known. The a ghtless horse seemed to understand and obey perfectly every word spoken to him by his trainer and driver, Phillips, as he would lean over him from the sulky in the race and incite him to renewed effort. "Go in, Tom, and win," were the words that spurred the intelligent borse to his greatest speed at the last quarter-stretch in a close race. He was the star in the splendid pacing quartet of 1879—Sleepy Tom, Mattie Hunter, Rowdy Boy and Lucy—which three were beaten at Chicago, July 24 and 25, 1879, Tom taking the third, fourth and fifth heats in 2:10 1/2, 2:16 and 2:12 1/2, for a purse of $1,500. The last heat Tom recorded the best time known in the world at any gait, and Sleepy Tom's name became a household word, and his fame spread throughout the world. Soon, however, old age and terrific campaigning began to tell on the old horse, and he became unfit for the turf, appearing for the last time at Red Oak, Iowa, in 1882, shortly afterward being sold to Dr. Olin, of Chicago. At last Phillips thought he would hunt up old Tom and take care of him during his old age, and went to Chicago in search of him. It was found that Tom had become worthless for any purpose, and had been traded away for little or nothing to a man in Indiana, and, saddest of all, shortly after reaching the barn of the new owner the structure took fire and poor Tom, the king of pacers in all the world for three years, was burned to death.

It scarcely need be said that the success of Prioresse completely rehabilitated Mr. Ten Broeck in the good opinion of all American admirers. Brown's training and Fordham's riding in the run-off were eulogized from Louisiana to Maine and from New York to California. Mr. Ten Broeck's winnings were known to be enormously large, as nearly all the stable commission was on at 100 to 1. He lost his big bet of $100 to $100,000, made with "Leviathan" Davis, that Pryor would win the Cesarewitch and Prioresse the Cambridgeshire, and the same bet over again that Pryor would win the Cesarewitch and Babylon the Cambridgeshire. As to Babylon, he began running there for the Country Stakes at Warwick, unplaced for the Doncaster Plate, and second for the Town Plate at Doncaster; after which he was matched for £200 a side, half forfeit, against Mr. Jackson's Saunterer, to run "across the flat." The race was fixed to be run the day before the Cesarewitch, but Mr. Ten Broeck paid forfeit for the reason that had Babylon won, as he probably would, it would have attracted special attention to Prioresse's chances, and not only reduced the odds but might have caused a combination against her in the race. Immediately after the Cesarewitch, Prioresse, at 98 pounds (including seven pounds penalty), was installed favorite for the Cambridgeshire. But on the day of the race El Ilakim, which had run second in the run-off for the Cesarewitch, was the starting favorite at 7 to 1 against, with 100 to 8 against Prioresse. Neither was placed—Mr. T. Parr's three-year-old colt Odd Trick, ridden by George Fordham, at 102 pounds, winning by two lengths. Babylon, ridden by Challoner at 84 pounds, with the odds of 66 to 1, was also unplaced. This ended the American horses' running for their first year. On the day after the Cesarewitch Mr. Ten Broeck won the Bedford Stakes for two-year-olds with the filly Belle, by Slane, out of Miss Fairfield, that he had bought a yearling at Doncaster in 1856. She was ridden by Fordham, who made a great effort, one for which he was praised even in the days of his greatness.

The Clays in 1888.

Thos. B. Armitage, in the Kentucky Stock-Farm, makes a very good showing for the Clay family so long despised in some sections of the country:

If your readers will either take their memories, or take the trouble to refer to the advertising columns of various prominent newspapers which for twenty years past have advertised stallions for use, and will carefully note the families to which said stallions belonged, they will the better appreciate the almost insurmountable obstacles against which Clay blood has struggled for even a mere existence by reason of lack of numbers, a public dislike akin to hatred, and still greater lack of opportunity. The result of such research will demonstrate that for twenty or more years two vast armies in numbers, of Hambletonian and Mambrino stallions, have been in the field against a pitifully small band—a "forlorn hope"—of Clays. This historical fact must be carefully considered and fully realized before the reader can even approximately do simple justice to the few scattering Clays, which, by force of superlative inherent merit, have not only kept their family name alive, but have also greatly added to the renown of the American trotter, and out of all proportion to numbers or opportunity.

California, though containing but a few breeders, and, by comparison with Kentucky, a few specimens of trotting stock, and besides these disadvantages, being one of the youngest of stock-breeding States, has not only challenged Kentucky for supremacy, but has also been victor in a sufficient number of points of contest to at least prove her worth as a mighty antagonist. With a mile record as the standard of excellence, California possesses that for yearlings, two-year olds, three-year olds, four-year olds and for stallion contests, as against five-year olds, aged horses, stallion record and contest against a field, for the entire Eastern country—summing up five points for California against four points for "the East." In fact she has a majority of the standard points in her favor. In connection with this phenomenal success the consideration of the "blood" used by California can not be avoided, and we find that she has ungrudgingly and fearlessly used Clay stallions as stock horses with the same freedom, if not greater, than she used Clay mares, while the East has hesitatingly and sparingly used Clay mares almost to the utter exclusion of Clay stallions. As the day has come when all "the East" should breed for fame and profit rather than to gratify an unfounded prejudice which has so largely dominated them in the past, would it not be well to copy the methods of this powerful young antagonist and victor?

Stamboul, 2:14, and winner of the greatest stallion race on record, is an inbred Clay, being by a Clay horse in the male line and out of a mare whose dam was a Clay mare. He has been trained every year, I believe, since he was a two-year old, and is now six. Yolo Maid, 2:14 at three years, is also a Clay in the male line, but a pacer. Her manager recently challenged any horse, mare or gelding, whether pacer or trotter, to a 3 in 5 mile heat contest for $2,500 a side. While I do not advocate the pacer gait, there are many who do, and they seek to gain trotting success by breeding to fast pacers. These two specimens show what the Clay male line can do. Stamboul is not only the fastest stallion that has ever been in California, but is also the fastest trotter ever bred there. Yet he is a Clay in the male line (as well as inbred to Clay), and "the East" claims that the male Clay line will not produce trotters—merely brood mares to "play second fiddle" to some other idolized family. Does it not begin to look as if some Eastern idols are to be upset, and some falsely conceived opinions proved false?

Electioneer, from a Harry Clay mare, now leads all living aires, and this year has put a round "baker's dozen" into the 2:30 list, more than any other horse ever accomplished in one year, if I mistake not. His unprecedented success in producing level-headed, pure-gaited, fast trotters from mares containing all degrees of running blood, has made him famous over any horse in history. Can the Clay element be separated from its proper share in the honors? One of his sons, when bred to a mare whose dam was Electioneer's dam (by Harry Clay) produced Norlaine, one year, 2:31. Inbreeding to Harry Clay gives us a wonder. If Harry Clay blood was a detriment in Electioneer, then inbreeding to Harry Clay would intensify that detriment, and Norlaine would have been a grievous failure. Electioneer's two-year-old daughter, Sunol, has recorded 2:18 to her credit, thus equaling the record of Sable Wilkes, 2:18 at three years, which he has repeated at four years. Sable Wilkes is also inbred to Clay, having two crosses. The four-year-old record of Manzanita, 2:16, still remains the best, and she contains Harry Clay blood.

California excels in another direction. She knows how to produce stock that command the fullest market price. Electioneer's son, Bell Boy, sold at auction for $50,000 at three years of age, which is the largest price ever paid for a trotter. By another coincidence Bell Boy is still deeper inbred to Clay blood, three times in all, inheriting the Harry Clay cross through his sire, his dam being a Clay mare, and her dam out of a Clay mare.

"Too much Clay," the wise men of "the East" will say, but "money talks," and all breeders "East" as well as "over the Rockies" ought to find it pleasant to breed $50,000 colts even if they do have to sacrifice a few prejudices in making handsome profits. Bell Boy's full brother, Chimes, recently drew a bid of $30,000, but Mr. Hanlin (whose marked successes in breeding have been from Clay mares) refused the tempting bid, even if his grand colt did contain three Clay crosses. A yearling sister to these colts sold for either $8,000 or $12,000 (I have forgotten which), notwithstanding that she also contained "too much Clay." If a horse with three Clay crosses commands $50,000 at public outcry, it becomes a legitimate subject for speculation as to the price a well-bred one with five or six crosses would command. In the same ratio is it hard to believe that he would bring over $75,000 to $100,000?

It so happens that these big sales of containing Clay blood, and at profitable prices, are not confined to horses of California growth. So Clay blood does not necessarily need California's stamp and seal. Not very long since a shrewd "down Easter" bought up all the produce of the Clay mare Emeline, that he could obtain, and paid well for it according to report. Now we have another "down Easter" among us picking up Clay blood, and his purchases are worth repeating here in detail as a "sign of the times." Readers will please notice the various prices paid for animals, and make comparisons for himself as to what blood commands top prices. "Money talks" loudly here too.

This question reminds me that "we are confronted by a condition not a theory," and I will once more ask breeders whether it is better judgement to breed to suit big buyers with long purses and let prejudice go to the dogs, or to carefully stick to old ruts, keep ancient pedigrees warm, gradually "get left" by more sensible and progressive breeders, sell low, and let the big money go somewhere else?

In mentioning Stamboul I omitted to state that Nutwood, 2:18, has produced a faster horse than himself in Woodnut, 2:16. In fact Woodnut is considerably the fastest of Nutwood's get, and in the greatest stallion race on record took one heat away from Stamboul. By the same striking coincidence that we have already considered, Woodnut's dam is out of Manton, by Harry Clay. Can it be possible that the Maud S. family is to be thus helped by Harry Clay blood, and Mr. Brodhead, of Woodburn Farm, made no mistake in sending Maud S's mother and sister, and Nutwood's sister, to Electioneer for the purpose, as he told me, of getting the Harry Clay cross? And furthermore, this gentleman, whom so many brainy men consider to be a brainy man also, in summing up his opinion to me on breeding and crosses, gave it as his mature conviction that Harry Clay blood was the best cross known. In fact, he further said that before sending to Electioneer he had tried to get a son of Harry Clay to stand at Woodburn.

Would it not be still another striking coincidence if the Woodburn foals by Electioneer out of the noted mares sent so far from home, should either command larger prices than ever even realized at Woodburn, or bring greater honor to their breeder than he has yet enjoyed? Who can tell, when this Harry Clay blood has such a singular way of astounding many people? This reminds me of another coincidence. In California there is a young sire named Sidney. He is a Hambletonian in the real line, by Santa Claus, 2:17, and his dam is a fast trotter by Volunteer, his second dam is by Edward Everett, and his third dam by the Jack-in-the-box Harry Clay that keeps popping up so unexpectedly which ever way one turns. This Hambletonian-Clay-Mambrino, Sidney has quite a number of fast children out this season, among them some three-year old pacers with records of 2:14 to 2:15. To those who will not see, and who refuse to acknowledge that Harry Clay is a positive element I will say that if he is really powerless to do good he is just as surely harmless to do evil. If he don't do any good he certainly don't do any harm. I was quite amused at receiving numerous letters from the reader of my last winter's letter to your paper substantially stating that until they had read my arguments in behalf of Clay blood they had always supposed that George Wilkes, Electioneer, Green Mountain Maid, Harry Clay, George M. Patchen, Lucy, American Girl, Hopeful, Sultan, Emoline, St. Julien, Jerome Eddy, etc etc, were great "in spite," of the Clay blood which they contained.

This letter is already so long that I will only offer another coincidence, and it relates to the fastest classification of trotters that we have, viz: the 2:15 list. There is a wide-spread impression that the Clays absolutely need a great deal of running blood mixed in to "stay them up" for a mile. There are just three Mambrino representatives in the male line, in the 2:15 class, Guy, 2:12, and Trinket, 2:14, and Patron, 2:14, yet the family is one of enormous size and has enjoyed endless favor and patronage since its start in Kentucky. Every one of these three are bred upon a thoroughbred foundation, and Guy leads all in record, he is doubly built, so to speak, on a running foundation as his father was out of a mare about half thoroughbred. Against these three, the little, neglected and despised family has two representatives, Hopeful, 2:14 to harness, with a wagon record of 2:16, 2:17, 2:17, which is the best known, and a game performance, and Stamboul, 2:14, winner of the greatest stallion race on record. Hopeful is a mixture of Clay and nothing else of moment. Stamboul is an inbred Clay with only trotting crosses. Neither contains a separate thoroughbred cross. In other words, without thoroughbred backing there would not be a single Mambrino of the male line in the 2:15 list. As to the Hambletonian family it would have St. Julien, 2:11, in the male line, a trotting bred horse (containing Clay blood), just 3 1/2 seconds faster than the male Clays, because Maud S. and Jay-Eye-See are bred from a thoroughbred foundation also. With these two out of the way because of their thoroughbred help, the fastest world's record would depend upon a Harry Clay dam, just plain every day Clay. Altogether there are eight horses in the 2:15 list containing Mambrino blood, seven containing Clay blood and seventeen containing Hambletonian blood. How does this strike average reader, when he remembers the relative sizes of these families?

In conclusion I will ask: Why do white sheep eat more than black sheep? Answer, Because there are more of them.

Driving With a Light Hand.

Last spring John F. Dingee, of Brooklyn, N. Y., purchased from Rundle & White, of Danbury, Conn., the four-year-old bay mare Miss Alice, by Alcantara, for $2,000. She could then show about a 2:40 gait. He kept her during the summer at his country place, Green's Farms, Conn., and worked her on Arthur Sherwood's half mile-track. A visiting trainer failed to get her going. Shortly afterwards I went to the village and drove the mare, also Mr. Bedford's fast three-year-old De Soto, by the sire of Geneva S. I found that Miss Alice had a sensitive mouth, and long, easy stride, so that even an ordinary pull would not do in her case, but she drew me a 2:30 gait along the back-stretch on letting her square away gradually, then barely feeling her mouth. Mr. Dingee adopted similar tactics in driving her, and is now living again in Brooklyn. On election day he drove her a mile in 2:25 over the Parkville Farm track. The same day Fred Bedford drove Kitty Patchen a mile in 2:21, which is within a half second of her best record, made four years ago at Boston. When Mr. E. T. Bedford bought her she was "out of fix," and troubled with corns. He nursed her back to speedy form and used tips forward. He attributes the disappearance of the corns to tips, and is now an earnest disciple of Joseph Cairn Simpson, of the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN, San Francisco, Cal., author of "Tips and Toe Weights."—Cor. of the Chicago Horseman.

Sale of Road and Harness Mares.

Tuesday morning a fair sprinkling of would-be buyers and spectators assembled at the Railroad Stables, the occasion being a sale by Killip & Co. of an exceedingly good lot of road and harness mares, and thoroughbred horses from Stockdale and Rancho del Paso, the property of J. B. Haggin, Esq. The prices were fairly good, both purchasers and sellers being well pleased. A few bargains were obtained, Mr. A. McFadyen of Santa Rosa buying a grey filly, three years old by Zulu Chief, son of Mohawk Chief, and having strains of Pilot Jr. and Patchen Jr. blood. Marion Biggs, Jr., kept the bidding lively for a short time on the grey, but Mr. McFadyen tired him out. As will be seen below, D. M. Short, Esq., of this city, was the principal purchaser. The list of horses, age, breeding, buyer and prices paid is as follows:

Cure for Pink Eye.

Dr. W. F. Cutter of Sacramento says of "pink-eye":
This term is very misleading. The proper name for the disease is Inzootic nephritis. It is a disease of the kidneys. The presence of the disease in an animal may be determined by these symptoms. The horse becomes drowsy, and the eyelids become heavy and droop so as almost to close the eyes at times. Water is frequently discharged from them. The hind legs, and sometimes the fore legs become swollen, rendering locomotion very painful to the afflicted horse. In many cases the symptoms would mislead an owner into the belief that his horse had foundered. The disease attacks the kidneys principally, and only shown in the eyes through sympathy of the organs of sight with the diseased kidneys. The treatment is not at all complicated and if administered in time may be the means of saving many valuable animals. The horses should be taken from work immediately upon the appearance of the symptoms indicated, and should be given only one hour's work each day to afford the necessary amount of exercise. Water should not be given to the horse in greater quantities than six gallons a day. About four ounces of Glander salts should be dissolved every night with bran mash, using hot water to mix the salts with the bran. The horses should be kept warm. If this simple treatment is faithfully carried out, a cure should result in from five to eight days. It is difficult for a person unacquainted with diseases in horses to handle a case intelligently unless he knows what the ailment really is, and it should be understood that the disease I speak of is not one of the eyes, but of the kidneys. It is sometimes necessary in severe cases to call in aid, but I think that the treatment referred to will be found to effect a cure in most cases.

CATTLE.

Dangerous Procedure.

Not a few untoward results have followed the use of wire in baling hay, some of them entailing serious losses upon owners. Despite all precautions, pieces of wire will remain in the hay and be taken into bovine stomachs, there becoming engaged in folds of the mucous surfaces and setting up acute inflammatory action, with consequent fatality in many cases. One cattle owner describes a case of the sort in this way:

"One of my heifers which had been out grazing was noticed to be dull and not feeding about ten days ago. She was at once brought up to the homestead and attended to; but although she appeared to rally somewhat for a day or two, at the end of a week she was really no better, so that we decided to slaughter her; on opening her chest, a large quantity of badly-smelling fluid and matter escaped, and sticking close to her heart was found a piece of wire, and this I suspect was the cause of all the mischief. But how did it get there? And is it not wonderful that she lived so long?"

There was no doubt whatever but that the piece of wire found in the proximity of the heifer's heart was the cause of the state of things described, and the way in which it got into that position was this: the wire was swallowed (probably along with food) and by the action of the stomach, assisted by the process of inspiration and expiration it was gradually forced through the coats of the stomach, piercing the diaphragm or skirt close to the heart, resulting in the accumulation of matter, etc. It is indeed astonishing that animals can live so long as they do in these cases with such an amount of disease close to such a vital organ as the heart.

Another bit of experience somewhat like that instanced, was with a Jersey cow. She was young, had had a calf in spring, was well kept and giving two gallons of milk a day. She had been taken off grass and being fed principally hay and bran, when suddenly she began to fail in her milk and to go off on her feed until she failed entirely in both. No one could divine the cause for she had no cough, otherwise tuberculosis might have been indicated; nor had she been where she could come in contact with Texas fever. She was given the best of care in hopes that it was nothing serious and good nursing would yet bring her round all right. But she died and on opening her there was found a piece of stout wire looped and twisted, as is done in baling hay, at one end, the other end being quite sharp as though cut with an axe slantwise. This had penetrated the walls of the stomach and without more ado was determined the cause of death. The moral is evident. Those who feed baled hay cannot be too careful in securing all the wire and putting it away before the hay is fed.

Care and Management of Bulls.

Bulls from birth should be so fed as to produce a thrifty growth, and be kept in the open air, loose and without restraint beyond the fence of the yard or pasture, which should always be of such height and strength that no domesticated animal would attempt to pass it. Air and exercise are as necessary to animals as to humans, and with food, air and exercise all domestic animals should be so broken and trained that the idea of disobeying their keepers or any person could not exist in them. The knowledge that man is their master, and friend as well, should be so thoroughly ingrained in their whole being that it can never be, by any means, eradicated or temporarily displaced.

The question is, how can this be done? Certainly not by confinement in a stall and high feed and leading out by a staff and ring in the nose occasionally to drink. Just thoroughly tame and subdue the calf, beginning as soon as he is born and continuing as he grows so long as he lives. Never play or fool with a young animal of any kind. Let all your management of them be business and nothing else. Teach them with patience what you require of them and never allow one to avoid doing what you command; on the contrary, let them know that it is impossible for them to have their own way instead of obeying your will.

In a stock-breeding establishment where many calves are raised, such an education of every bull would be quite a task but it would pay. As soon or perhaps before bulls are a year old they should be broken to harness or yoke or both and worked for business. Anything that a horse or colt can be used for, a bull or pair can do as well, except a display of speed, and they will learn to walk as fast as a man does, to answer their names, understand and obey with alacrity verbal commands, without the use of a whip or a goad. Of course it takes time, patience and perseverance to bring a bull to this perfection of training, but there is no impossibility about it, and a bull so trained will never become vicious or unsteady and may run in the pasture without danger of injury to men or animals or fences.

A pair of bulls broken to the yoke and worked regularly are much stronger than steers and far more intelligent and docile, and in heavy work are worth nearly or quite double as much as oxen.

As bulls are ordinarily managed and brought up by breeders, there is no knowing what they may do or when they will manifest a vicious disposition. The means relied upon for security against their attack is restraining force. This is bad, especially so when docility and gentleness may be relied upon, and if the methods above set forth are adopted.

Bulls trained and worked with regularity will be much more valuable as breeders than they can be, kept and managed in the usual way.

If anyone is unfortunate enough to own a vicious bull, or one that seems likely to become so, slaughter him, do not wait a day.

Feeding Old Cows.

There is a wide spread prejudice against cow beef, remarks a correspondent of the Philadelphia Press. The butchers do not like it because a fattened old cow has a larger proportion of waste than a young animal, and, as often fattened, the beef is apt to be tough. There are many exceptions to this, and some farmers claim to know how to fatten cows so that their meat shall be tender and delicious. The main secret seems to be to fatten quickly and give a due proportion of succulent food. The high quality of English roast beef is largely due to feeding on roots or mangels. Oil cake is better than Indian meal, for the reason that though rich it is not heating nor constipating. Feed enough roots, pumpkins and ensilage to keep the digestion good and enough grain to fatten quickly. The best beef I ever ate was that from an old cow that had been fattened mainly on refuse Hubbard squash in a season when that vegetable was especially abundant and cheap.

The Anthrax Scare.

The local organ of the butchering interest, writing of the recent report about Anthrax says:

There seems now to be no doubt that the general alarm that nearly all the cattle in the state, especially in the southern counties were either infected by or exposed to contagion from epidemic diseases hitherto hardly known among us, was unfounded. The loss of a few hundred head on one or two ranches having a strong alkali soil started the report, but inquiry shows that the trouble to date is local.

The consuming public have been unnecessarily scared and many of the timid ones have either avoided beef altogether or eaten it sparingly with fear and trembling.

We are not making an argument against inspection. Indeed, all the respectable butchers, wholesale and retail, favor inspection if it is thorough. Inspection that would prevent the sale of the meat of the sick or worn out cows brought in from the dairies, or immature calves being consumed for human food. The wholesale butchers of this city when they go into the stock counties examine the herds and if they can, make a bargain for so many herds, to be selected by themselves. Now, these men who have followed the business from youth know healthy from unhealthy cattle at a glance and would not pay out good money for animals that their customers would refuse to buy if the market inspectors did not condemn. Then again all the leading retail butchers are experienced men, most of them having been employed cutting up most all their lives and would not buy meat that they could not with confidence offer to a customer, as many are good judges.

That there is meat utterly unfit for food in Chinatown, is true, and if white people are foolish enough to go there to buy food they must expect to suffer. The people who deal with respectable tradesmen have nothing to fear, and we can hardly understand how this city with a notoriously defective sewerage system could show an annual death rate below the average of deaths in cities half its size, if all our butchers were selling bad meat. Climate and summer winds are important factors in maintaining a low death rate, but we do not see how they could operate as preventives against disease and fatalities resulting from habitually eating diseased meat. Still as a stitch in time may, according to the proverb, save nine, let us have strict inspection of foot and dressed. If it is only to restore public confidence in the wholesome quality of our beef.

Stock Suffering in New South Wales.

It is stated in a foreign paper that stock in New South Wales is suffering from the effects of the dry season: "A well-known gentleman who has just returned from a tour in the district far west of the Darling, says that there are sore times in store for the people unless rain comes very soon. Many squatters are unable to get their sheep in for shearing on account of the weakness of the stock and the scarcity of water. On some stations they have not enough water to last for a month. Along the Tiboburra route the government tanks have from four to six months' supply of water, which is in good condition. If it were not for them and one or two lakes, such as Dry Lake and Cobham Lake, there would be no safety whatever in traveling. Squatters are reduced to the last extremity in regard to horses, and it is impossible for some to reach the front at all, because the few horses they have left are employed in mustering, and it may be safely said that there will be no lambs this season west of the Darling. No wool is going to port at all, it is being stored until rain comes. The weather is very warm and summer is commencing very early. The nights are calm and bright."

Holstein-Friesian Cattle in the Netherlands.

Mention is made in foreign exchanges of a report on "Agriculture in the Netherlands," recently issued at Amsterdam by Consul Robinson. A summary of what is said regarding Holstein-Friesian cattle is given as follows:

Much attention has been paid latterly to the improvement of the breed of Dutch cattle, and herd-book associations have been formed for this purpose. There are three different varieties of Dutch cattle—the big variety, the moderate-sized and the small breed. The first is found on the alluvial land, and on the polders regained from the sea, all composed of heavy clay. Moderate-sized cattle are confined to the peat land and the fenny, marshy grounds, and the small cattle to the heath land and sandy soil. In Friesland the large variety is principally bred. These are, like all the varieties of Dutch cattle, piebald as a rule black and white, either hue predominating. In many cases there is a broad band of white round the middle of their bodies. The Friesian variety of Dutch cattle has been specially improved, both as respects the quantity of milk, its quality, and fattening characteristics. From a report of Friesian cattle recently published by the Herd-book Association, it is learned that the average quantity of milk yielded by good milking cows of this breed is about 770 imperial gallons per head. As to the quality of the milk, it is stated that very few foreign races yield a higher percentage of cream and butter. Compared with the foreign cattle most renowned for their plenteous production of cream, there exists but slight difference, and our breed reckons among the races which yield most milk and cream. If they did not produce plenty of cream as well as milk, foreign merchants would not prefer them either for butter or cheese-making, to transfer these qualities to their own stock, or to import and acclimatize the purchased specimens into their countries "as a new, original type." Concerning the fattening qualities of this breed, the report goes on to state that "except the more precocious English Shorthorns, which excel only in this point, and not in their production of milk, our breed may rival with the best cattle in Europe as concerns their weight and production of fat and meat."

A description is given in this report on Friesian cattle of the modes of feeding and housing cows. The cow-sheds and sheds it is, perhaps, needless to say, are models of cleanliness. The cow-sheds are paved, and the foot-ways behind them. There is a paved trench behind the cows, between them and the foot-way, to receive manure, urine, etc., which is cleaned out twice a day. Each cow has ample room, and her tail is tied up so as to be kept clean. All the cows are curried and brushed daily. It is said that the Friesian farmers never send their good cows to market, therefore foreigners in search of first-rate animals must not go to the markets, but to the farms to find what they want. "This seems to be a favorite breed of cattle with the Americans, though they will style them 'Holsteins,' to the great indignation of the compilers of this report of the Herd-Book Association. Though this association was only formed in 1879, 800 breeders have joined it, and 1,194 bulls and 5,521 cows have been entered in the herd-book. As a proof of the improvement effected in Friesian cattle by the adoption of a herd book and by the efforts of the association, it is said that at the large agricultural exhibition held at Leuwarden in 1886, 'as for the cows exhibited there a great improvement might be witnessed when comparing them with cattle at former shows, especially in build, fineness of skin, hair, horns, etc. Whoever looked at the beautiful collection of bulls, and remembered them exhibited ten or twenty years ago, will be convinced that the Friesian bulls have been very much improved, and it must be acknowledged that our Friesian breeders could not have shown such a splendid collection ten or twenty years back."

A New Breed.

Mr. J. B. Galland, owner of the Galland Ranch, Merced County, and a prominent breeder of short horned Durhams and Polled Angus cattle, has recently returned to San Francisco from a tour through pretty much the whole of California. He reports that in the north the recent rains have not as yet started feed to any great extent, while in the south the effect of the downpour is gratifyingly apparent. More rain is needed. The southern part of the State is much more active in a business way than the upper counties. Settlers with money are flocking in, and skilled farmers bringing what was thought to be an arid waste into a most productive condition. On Mr. Galland's ranch the Durhams and Angus cattle have been crossed with the greatest success. The cross-breeds are hardy, hornless, good foragers, well formed for beef, mostly black, and in form show more characteristics of the black than the Durham. The heifers are good milkers and fine looking cows. The bull calves sell for $150 at three months old, and are in demand. A peculiarity of the new breed is its excellence in a cheese way. The milk is strong in curd and makes more cheese, gallon for gallon, than any other that Mr. Galland has noted. He is noting results from the cross carefully, and we shall receive further information from him in relation to the matter.

Rules for Building Barns.

These buildings are often erected very much at random, and without a careful estimate of their needs, and with an imperfect knowledge of many useful details. The following twenty brief rules, if observed, would often save money, meet requirements, and afford conveniences, although others might be added:

1. In the first place, ascertain what will be wanted in the proposed barn.
2. Estimate the number of tons of hay to be stored, the loads of unthrashed grain, the required contents of the granary and the number of cattle and horses to occupy the stables.
3. Calculate the room required for hay at 600 cubic feet on an average for a ton, and nearly the same for the unthrashed grain.
4. Determine granary room by allowing $1\frac{1}{2}$ cubic feet to the bushel in the bins.
5. For cattle and horse stables, allow for stalls at least $3\frac{1}{2}$ or four feet wide for cattle, and five feet for horses, and fourteen feet for entire length including passage and mangers.
6. Then provide room for hay and grain bays, space for straw, area of threshing floor, room for tools and horse power, size of granary, entire space for cow and horse stables, root cellar, silo and manure sheds.
7. In arranging all these, place the threshing floor convenient to the grain bays, and the granary contiguous to or below them; the feedrooms, roots, meal or ensilage on a level with and near the animal; and give heavy products the first place for convenient position.
8. Provide for good working space for horse forks and hay carriers.
9. Having thus laid the general plan, select, if practicable, gradually sloping ground for the barn, so as to give ready access to the stables, cellars, etc., below, on one side; and to the principal floor above by a slight embankment on the other side, for ready access of wagons.
10. Every barn should be at least a two-story one; the basement may include cattle stables, sheep pens, root cellar, cistern, water troughs, silo and area for manure.
11. The next story above may have central floor for drawing in crops, toolrooms, horse stalls, granary, harness-room and tool rooms, including horse power.
12. A three-story barn should have an upper bridge or causeway for entrance, and is particularly convenient for unloading hay and grain. It should have at least twenty-foot posts.
13. Chutes should be provided for throwing down hay from the second or third story to the animals below.
14. All barns should have good eave troughs, connected with spacious underground cisterns, if water is needed.
15. The basement walls should stand on small stones or coarse gravel in a broad deep trench, to effect drainage; and if on wide and heavy flag-stones, projecting several inches within the walls, rats will not burrow under them.
16. A space of a foot between the basement walls and the earth outside filled with broken stones and coarse gravel, will effect good drainage down to the drain below, and prevent heaving of the walls by frost.
17. Every granary should be graduated inside, so as to show at a glance the number of bushels it may happen to contain at any time. This graduation may be quickly made at any time by multiplying the cubic feet by forty-five and dividing by fifty-six.
18. Petroleum makes inside floors last longer, and gives outside wood-work the character and durability of cedar.
19. The value of a barn with its surrounding cattle-yards is increased by evergreen screens, which are the most pleasing and cheapest shelter against winter storms.
20. The cost of barns will vary very much with locality, price of lumber and skill in the builder, but a tolerable approximation may be made beforehand by allowing one dollar for each two square feet of area if the barn is made of rough lumber with stone wall basement, and when materials are very cheap, $2\frac{1}{2}$ or three square feet may be had for a dollar. For planed lumber and good finish, with punt outside, one-half more may be added.

Mr. R. P. Saxe will send to Japan by the next steamer, December 8th, eight clear-bred Jerseys, six cows and two bulls. The cattle will be placed upon one of the Government farms or "experimental stations" as they are called.

We shall be pleased to receive news notes from our readers as are especially interested in cattle breeding, whether for beef or dairy uses. The cattle department may be made very useful if breeders will be at pains to contribute to it.

San Francisco, - Saturday, Dec. 1, 1888.

Sunol, 2:18.

Too late for the issue of this week, unfortunately, we have received an admirable electrotype of this great young mare, whose recent wonderful performances have made her name familiar to every horseman between the two oceans. The drawing is by H. W. Boyd, whose excellent work has so often appeared on our first page. We hope that our editor-in-chief will be sufficiently recovered from his recent illness to write the biography which should accompany the likeness.

Ed. Rosewater. Two-Year-Old, 2:20 1-2.

Mr. N. I. D. Solomon of Omaha, Neb., has sent us a photograph of his great young pacing stallion, Ed. Rosewater, whose recent record of 2:20½ is the best for two-year-old pacers, the second being held by Dr. Schwartz's filly Irma 2:24½. The photograph shows a good looking colt of good proportions and excellent muscular development, with well shaped legs and feet. In 1887 he made a half-mile yearling record of 1:15½ at Lexington, Ky. This year, as a two-year-old at Ooncil Bluffs, Ia., on Nov. 1, he made 2:22 which two days after he lowered to 2:20½.

The Eureka Jockey Club.

Many of the horses entered for the races at Eureka being engaged at San Francisco in the long delayed races of the Blood Horse Association, the Eureka Jockey Club were obliged to postpone their whole programme, so that their meeting will take place next week instead of this. They may be congratulated upon the fact that they may reasonably expect pleasant weather in which to settle the ownership of their liberal purses and stakes. Racing will begin Monday, Dec. 5.

"Rolls of Honor."

In this issue appear long tables of the 2:30 produce of Elec-tioneer and George Wilkes; a list that is full of mistake, it having been sent, by foreman's error, in our first forms, with not even the first proof being read, and the tables of Electioneer's produce not arranged. This was not discovered until one side of the whole edition was printed. Tables of this character are so important that too great care cannot be exercised, not only in their compilation, but in their printing.

Pacific Coast Blood Horse Association Races.

After repeated delays, the third day's races of the P. C. B.
H. A. took place on Tuesday last, and the programme of the fourth day will be run off on this (Saturday) afternoon. In another column will be found a full report of Tuesday's sport, in spite of the muddy going the races were well contested, and as the track is now in much better condition, the card for this

The Turf Congress.

Some weeks ago, "Black and Blue" writing in the N. Y.
Mail and Express, ventured the opinion that at the coming Turf Congress, some action would be taken to suppress the demands of organized bookmakers, the chief coterie of which is the Turf Alliance of New York, and stated that his authority was a gentleman prominent in the Moumouth Park Association. From our Eastern exchanges we learn that the congress has been held and things generally have been stirred up, weights, jockeys, starters, hookmakers, and in fact everything has had an overhauling, and all for the best interest of racing. The weights of two-year-olds have been raised to 118 lbs. and three-year-olds to 122 lbs. The increasing of weights has long been a mooted question and it is with much pleasure that the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN welcomes the change. The weights carried in former years has been altogether too low, and as the riders gained in age and experience, they also increased in avoirdupois, and consequently have lost many mounts from overweight. Toward the latter part of this season McLaughlin was unable to accept a hundred and fifteen pound impost, and he could by no means get below one hundred and sixteen and a half pounds, and thus the public lost the superb riding of the best two-year-old jockey in the country. When the young ones had to carry winning penalties, Jimmy could at times make his bow in answer to the usual applause, but he was at a great disadvantage in the majority of cases. There is a very strong probability that Garrison would have been too heavy next season to ride at his last season's weight, but the alteration will now enable America's two best jockeys to be seen on the two-year-olds of next year.

At the meeting a committee was appointed consisting of Colonel Clark, of Louisville, and Mr. Brewster, of Chicago, while Messrs. Hunter, P. J. Dwyer, Charles Wheatley, J. G.
K. Lawrence and D. D. Withers acted for the East. These gentlemen were given authority to favorite any new rules that they might see fit for the benefit of the various associations represented. The committee met last Friday and the first made was a bold stroke against the different bookmaker alliances.

Resolved—That the subscribing Jockey Clubs agree that no contract for betting privileges be made with any association of bookmakers or any member thereof.

But very little discussion was indulged in when the resolution was unanimously adopted. Speaking of the New York alliance the New York Mail and Express says:

The Bookmakers' Alliance is a menace to the morality of the Turf. Its members have a perfect right to decline to pay $100 each per day for the privilege of doing business on the race tracks, but when they go further and because of temporary success dictate to the jockey clubs how betting shall be conducted, what systems of betting shall exist and what men shall do business as bookmakers, they go too far and threaten the safety of the Turf. The Bookmakers' Alliance is not a body of entirely honest men. Some of its members are notorious violators of the law. Others in its membership have been in the past anything but good citizens of the community. To let such men obtain control of the betting privileges would be a perilous arrangement. Some of these men own horses and jockeys. Some of them control the trainers of horses. Others are known as backers of men who run horses, and with proper co-operation there need be no limit to the fraud that could be perpetrated. The public must look to the jockey clubs for proper protection in the Turf Exchange that exists on every race track. To afford proper protection the jockey clubs must control the operations of the exchange, and control it in such a manner that prompt measures could at any time be taken to punish those guilty of fraud. For this especial reason the Bookmakers' Alliance must go.

The language used is very strong, and it behooves all associations to watch the interests of their patrons. Another exchange makes this suggestion:

The safest way out of the betting dilemma is for the jockey clubs to agree upon some one man of marked honesty, who shall have control of the bookmakers' department of every race track. One such man would do for all the Eastern race tracks. It should be his duty to settle all disputes arising from financial operations in the ring, to look after all the details of the betting systems, to collect the fees from bookmakers, and to see that only reliable men did the business with the public. Accomplish this and reduce the excessive fee charged to bookmakers and there will be less friction between the jockey clubs and the bookmakers, and the public will gain in the end. So far as the reduction of the bookmakers' fees is concerned the proper method would be to charge a stated sum for each man doing business and then not limit the number of those who avail themselves of the privilege. If bookmakers should fall by the way others would take their places, and the revenues of the jockey clubs from the bookmakers would be amply sufficient.

The committee have under consideration at present several amendments to the old rules, and a special meeting of the Congress will be held shortly to pass upon the changes proposed. It is proposed to have two responsible gentlemen, one for the west and south and the other for the east, to look after forfeits, as under the present methods it is manifestly unfair to have a horse penalized for winning money which his owner has not received and perhaps may not. A horse wins a valuable sweepstake; the owner naturally supposes he will receive the published amount, but instead thereof he is given a portion of the money, the balance being in forfeit orders or parties in the forfeit list. This is so obviously unjust that the committee will endeavor to right the matter so that hereafter winners will receive in cash what may be due them.

Still another change which has been made will no doubt cause many discussions pro and con as much can he said for and against the rule, it is that hereafter no allowance shall be made for geldings. The allowance for mares will be as usual, but geldings will have to carry full weight. Prior to adjourning the congress elected the following officers: J. E. Brewster, secretary of the Washington Park Club, Chicago, was elected president to succeed Charles Green, of St. Louis. B.
G. Bruce was re-elected secretary and O. L. Bradley was chosen to succeed himself as treasurer. The next annual meeting will be held at Chicago, on the second Wednesday of November, 1889.

When the rumor gained ground in New York that a blow had been struck at the interests of the bookmakers, a meeting of the latter was held, although in all fairness it should be stated that the "Bookies" claimed it as their regular annual meeting. Reports were received and acted on, and unfinished business for the year was disposed of. After the meeting several of the members were interviewed, but each and all declared that nothing had been done in relation to the resolution passed by the committee. They all seemed to be of the opinion that the aggressive course taken by the associations would be considerably modified before the next season rolls around, and consequently at present there is nothing for them to bother themselves about.

The National Horse Show.

Elsewhere we reprint from the Chicago Horseman an excellent report of the great Horse Show just closed at Madison Square Garden, New York. This report gives with some detail the results of such of the rings as are of particular interest to our readers.

Jockey Suits.

There has never been any firm on the Pacific Coast which has paid special attention to turning out jockey suits, but now J. M. Litchfield & Co., of 12 Post Street will make a specialty of both jockey and driving suits. The firm also deal in uniforms and society regalia.

Brood Mares Sold.

Last Friday, Messrs. Killip & Co., sold by order of J. B. Haggis E. q., thirty-eight brood mares and fillies from the Rancho del Paso stock. The rapid increase of young animals necessitated the sale and the purchasers may congratulate themselves on the small numbers of buyers who were present, for the animals brought but a small sum in comparison with what they were really worth. Floris, who was number 13 on the catalogue, went to Mr. Pacheco at $350, and is well worth double the money. Mr. Kerr secured quite a number of bargains, Virgie and Ana being dirt cheap at the prices paid. Mr. W. F. Smith, was lucky enough to secure the chestnut mare Annie Laurie, by Hubbard, he by Planet (son of Revenue and Nina by Boston) out of Minnie Mansfield, by Imp. Glencoe, for the exceedingly low figure of $210. Col. Thornton secured rare good value for his money in buying the bay mare Rebecca, whose breeding is the same as Annie Laurie, for $520. All of the mares have been stunted to the Rancho Stock Stallions, among whom are Tyrant, Darebin, Kyrle Dsly, Sir Modred, Hyder Ali, Milner, Lougfield, Warwick and others. Arrest and Counter-Arrest.

Several months ago, Louis N. Schoenfield, a gentleman prominent in turf matters and also the owner of several race-horses, loaned a sum of money to the owner of Bolero and Adeline, who were then stabled in San Francisco, taking from him a chattel mortgage on the horses as security. The horses were placed in the keeping of Jeremiah Cumber, to fill their engagements throughout the West, and at conclusion of the racing season Cumber left the horses with William Cunningham on Long Island, acting under instructions from the owner. Mr. Schoenfield had Cumber arrested for larceny, claiming that the chattel mortgage was an absolute bill of sale. Cumber was imprisoned for several days, although entirely free of any wrong intent; but on motion of his attorney was discharged on his own recognizance. On his release Cumber had Schoenfield arrested for false imprisonment placing his damages at $15,000. Schoenfield was arrested in New York last week and released on giving bail in $5,000.

F. Hochschulz, the well known carriage manufacturer of Turk and Fillmore street, is paying personal attention to the construction of hacks, carts and sulkies, and giving general satisfaction to his customers. A number of Pacific Coast drivers claim that Mr. Hochschulz turns out a superior sulky to anything produced in the East.

Medical Classics offers the following suggestions to horse owners, and while some of it is more applicable to farm horse than to the aristocrats of the race, it is sound advice.

It costs more to keep a poor horse than it does to keep a good one.—Change the food of your horses often enough to make them relish it.—Improper feeding is the cause of nine out of ten cases of sickness among horses.—Every time you worry your horses you shorten their lives and days of usefulness.—Sweat and dust cause the horse's shoulders to gall. So do poor, ill-fitting collars.—The temperature of water for horses is not so much of an object as the purity of it. While it is best to have the water cool, it is more important to have it free from all impurities.—Mares in foal should have exercise and moderate work, and under no circumstances should they be subjected to harsh treatment, nor should they ever be allowed to go where they would be in danger of being frightened.—The horse which can plow an acre while another horse is plowing half an acre, or that which can carry a load of passengers ten miles while another is going five, independent of all considerations of amusement, taste, or what is called fancy, is absolutely worth twice as much to the owner as the other.—Affection cannot be pounded in. Kind treatment inspires the affection of an animal, while rough treatment is sure to cause its hatred.—It is alike dangerous to other horses and men to spare the life of a glandered horse. Glanders is a highly contagious, incurable disease, and as a rule, fatal to the human subject.—When horses are suffering from the bites of flies, or stings from other insects, sponge the parts that cannot be protected by nets with water, in which insect powder has been mixed—a teaspoonful to two gallons of water.—Of two colts similar in disposition and sense, one may develop into a steady and valuable family horse, while the other may be vicious, treacherous and unsafe—all because of the difference in the men handling them.

CORRESPONDENCE.

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN:—If Hidslo may advise us of the description, pedigree, etc., of the six-year-old stallion, record 2:25½, for $1,000, he can find a buyer probably.
 Yours,
 A. T. JACKSON & SON.

KEWANNA, IND., November 19, 1888.

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN:—I send you by this boat, Mariposa, the latest files, with accounts of the boat race for the championship between Searle and Kemp, who lately defeated Hanlan. You will see that Searle, our new phenomenon, beat Kemp very easily, and he is considered by good judges to be the best man ever seen in a boat, i. e., judging by collateral form Kemp defeated Hanlan easily, and this man beats Kemp much easier, notwithstanding that Kemp was considered in tip-top condition. Therefore, the conclusion is: that supposing Hanlan to be anything like the man he formerly was, when vanquished by Kemp, of course Searle must be a veritable wonder indeed, and whichever of your men comes down he will have a lively time to get back the lost laurels. Kemp met Matheson in a match over the same course two days after his defeat, and won easily.

I am going down to-morrow to see the Melbourne Cup run for. It is supposed that there will be quite 150,000 spectators this year, as the exhibition has drawn so many people from the other colonies to Melbourne. At present Mr. Gannon, who owns Australian Peer, that brilliant son of Darebin, has the strongest string in training. He will start Melos (winner of our Sydney Derby) and Wycombe in the Victorian Derby, and has a easy show of winning with either, while his grand veteran Arsenal (a previous Cup winner) is as good a favorite as anything else for this year's Cup. The Honorable James, which will be represented by Volley for the Derby, and Anstran Peer's old opponent in many a bitter fight, viz. Abercorn for the Cup. I will send you on files of news, however, directly it is over. Hoping that sport is still progressing on your side, I am,
 Yours truly,

The Growth of Gambling.

The New York Sun in a recent editorial on the above subject says:

Gambling, then, has descended from the higher to the lower strata of English society, for it has always been practiced to a wide extent among the people of wealth and leisure. Including under the general term of gambling all forms of betting or chances, it may be said that an Englishman in the superior classes who is not a gambler is the exception; and with him go the whole body of Englishmen who look up to him as a pattern to be imitated. Because the Prince of Wales bets on a race, it is the fashion for Englishmen generally to do the same thing, and even the clergy themselves are not always proof against the temptation; for, besides the tendency of that people to ape their social superiors, there is in them a strong natural instinct toward gambling.

Undoubtedly the old gaming houses and such gambling haunts as Fox was wont to engage in have now become things of the past. Heavy playing, like hard drinking may have gone out of fashion among English gentlemen, popular as poker became in England after its introduction by General Schenck, but betting on all kinds of contests is more frequent than ever before.

Therefore it is not to be wondered at that the passion has extended to the working people. There are more contests of skill to bet upon, and the interests in them have become universal, so that the opportunities and the temptations have increased, and bring within their influence all ranks of society. The spread of reading has also made these sports familiar to a far wider circle than formerly, and stimulated the interest in them, of which betting is a natural and almost irresistible consequence.

Meantime modern methods of transacting business are in some sort of a gambling character, or of a character to breed the gambling passion. The stock broker and the dealers and the speculator at all the different Exchanges are either gambling for themselves, or acting as agents for those who take gambling risks. In the late wheat corner here, London grain houses lost millions of dollars, for they were betting on the wrong side of the market. Whenever there is great activity in Wall street at this period it has come to mean that Europe is speculating in our stocks, which are sent over in small blocks for a great number of gamblers.

With us the growth of the gambling spirit has never been shown so unmistakably as during the political campaign now near its end. Never before has there been anything approaching the amount of betting on this year's election, both as to the number of bets and the quantity of money put up in individual cases. It has been enormous. Every day and from all parts of the country we receive numerous requests for opinion to be used as a basis for betting. They come by telegraph as well as by mail. They are all very urgent. There seems to be a betting mania abroad, and in no other canvass in our history has there been any equal to it. Of course we cannot assist these gamblers, except by giving the advice of the English Chancery Congress, Don't bet.

The Buffalo papers say it is reported that Horace W. Brown is to sever his connection with C. J. Hamlin's Village Farm, and take charge of the horses of Sire Bros., among which are Harry Wilkes, 2:13½; Rosaline Wilkes, 2:14½, and Gossip Jr. (pacer), 2:13½.

The thoroughbred horse Lexington was the sire of the granddam of the phenomenal two-year-old filly Sunol, 2:18; also Jay-Eye-See and Clingstone, the latter on the sire's side, while Boston, the sire of Lexington, sired the granddam of Maud S., 2:08½. Blood will tell.

At a recent race-meeting at Abdallah Park, Cynthiana, Ky., nine colts of the get of Simmons, 2:28, made records all the way from three minutes down. Simmons is nine years old, and a full brother to Rosa Wilkes, 2:18. His oldest colts are four years old, and this is his list of performers for this year:

Roll of honor at nine years old:—Bon Bon, b m, four-year-old, record 2:26. Gossiper, h s, three-year-old, record 2:29½, public showing at Bay District track 2:22½. While reading the article called "Horses Names" in your last issue, I saw the name "Election" used. What I am anxious to know is, do you know of an entire son of Electioneer by the above name? My reason for asking is on account of owning a stallion which I exhibited at the Salinas Fair two years ago under the name of Election. If any one else has a prior claim to the name I wish to know it, so that I can give my horse another name. My horse was raised by Gov. Stanford at Palo Alto. He is by Electioneer, first dam Lizzie H. by Whipple's Hambletonian; second dam Lizzie Harris, by Comus; third dam by Arnold Harris. Comus by Green's Bshaw, dam Topsy, by Prophet. Arnold Harris by Whalebone, etc.

Answer.—The horse of which Miss Wilson spoke is Election (a full brother to Maiden, 2:23), foaled 1855, by Electioneer, dam May Queen, 2:20, by Alexander's Norman; second dam Jenny (dam of King Almont, 2:21½) by Usef, son of Mokhladi; third dam by the pacer Davy Crockett. He is owned in Philadelphia.

The Fashion-Boston Race in 1842.

Commenting on the great races of forty years ago, the New York World says: Of all the great races of the past, none excited greater interest than did the match between Fashion and Boston, run over the Union course, Long Island, on May 10, 1842. It was for $20,000 a side, and was made a sectional affair—North versus South. The attendance was something enormous, the spers of the day making it as large as 70,000 spectators. Boston was nominated by Col. W. R. Johnson, trained by Arthur Taylor and ridden by Gilpatrick at 126 pounds. The chestnut mare Fashion, who represented the North, was from New Jersey. She was nominated by Mr. Henry H. Toler, was trained by Mr. Samuel Laird and ridden by his son, Joseph Laird, at 111 pounds. Boston was the favorite at about 100 to 60. In the first heat Laird made a waiting race, with Boston leading, running the first mile in 1:58, the second in 1:50, and the third in 1:54. In the first quarter of the fourth mile Laird moved up with Fashion, taking the lead at the quarter-pole. It was a desperate race for the last three-quarters, with Fashion winning by a length in 7:32½, the then fastest time ever made for the distance, the last mile being run in 1:55. Both cooled-out well and Fashion went to the post the favorite for the second heat.

The tactics of the first heat were reversed. Laird took the lead with Fashion, and at the end of the first mile led by three lengths in 1:59, the same at the end of the second mile, which was run in 1:57. In the third mile Gilpatrick assumed the offensive, and, out-running Fashion, Boston was in the lead at the end of the mile, which was run in 1:51½. Gilpatrick kept Boston under a drive, while Laird relieved Fashion by a long, steady pull until they were well into the last three-quarters. He then cut loose and headed Boston in the run down the backstretch. The race in an instant was virtually over, for keeping on, Fashion won the heat and race easily 7:45, Gilpatrick pulling Boston up inside the distance. Thus ended a race that—like the Eclipse Henry race in 1823—added fuel to the then already developed sectional feeling between the North and South. The race between Eclipse and Henry was the entering wedge, and was helped on somewhat by the success of Bascomb over Post Boy.

Since Thos. Dunbar went to the Fashion farm in New Jersey three years ago, he has been developing the speed of the youngsters and aged horses there in a wonderful manner, his last act in that direction being to give the mare Beulah, a daughter of General Knox that could barely trot in 3:30 last year, a mark of 2:19½. When Dunbar had the Gordon horses he made that stable famous by the races it won, and he drove Guy and Clingstone a mile in 2:17 for Mr. Gordon, a feat which pleased that gentleman immensely. Had it not been for the unwarranted action of the Cleveland track in expelling Dunbar the Gordon stable would have been stronger to-day than ever, but perhaps the expulsion was a good thing for Dunbar, as it sent him to a place where his work shows in a marked manner, and as good colt handlers are at present in demand more than ever before he has not lost anything in a money way.

CHAPTER III.

Wherein man is not idealized.

Everything true has, by its ancient birth, become so frayed and worn that even ignorance grasps a measure of it and smiles complacently. Hence I may be accused of triteness, but not taxed with lack of truth when I say man is a strange creature. The ways in which he displays this are so many and so varied, and he is, withal, so unreasonable that the saints—had not most of them once been men themselves—might weep at sight of life so turned and twisted. Tie him down to a prosperous business and he longs and sighs to be free; sometimes, even, becomes pessimistic, doubts friendship, love and virtue, and nibbles at sin to quiet his restlessness; turn him loose with a fortune, he drains the resources of the world, worries and frets over circumstantialities, and wishes he were this or that friend who is somewhat cramped for money, but has excellent health and a philosophical mind; give him bachelor freedom and he is evasive of domesticity; make him a husband and he covets bachelor freedom. Thus has he always his winter coat for summer and his summer coat for winter, and knows no peace except when at war with his condition.

It was due, somewhat, to the workings of this peculiar characteristic that when Eri and her father were walking slowly homeward two young men were stumbling along the mountain-side a short distance below and to the south. Seen afar, owing to some very nondescript coats and trousers and a liberal supply of red mud on their boots, they looked like forlorn and dissolute tramps, but a nearer view proclaimed them harmless fishermen armed with rod-cases, fish-baskets, "gums" and blankets.

The taller of the two seemed less accustomed to mountain travel than his shorter and more compact friend, and shifted his roll of blankets impatiently, as though anxious to reach some spot where he might rid himself of their weight. It was plain that his movements arose from secret vexation rather than lack of strength, for his six feet of height were balanced by proportional breadth, and a chest that Hector might have envied gave him plenty of breathing space. He needed all his gifts to follow the wild trail his companion had chosen, and the query where it would end I was driving him to such desperation that for the past ten minutes he had been ardently wishing himself back home. To express such a wish, he knew, would but render him food for laughter, while at the same time he realized that something must soon be done, for night was almost upon them, openings were growing fewer and fewer, and there was no more hope of reaching a habitation (so far as he knew) than there had been two hours ago. At last he could stand it no longer, and regardless of dampness and dirt, hurled his blankets in front of him and declared he would not go a step further.

"All right, Mr. Philip Wells," said his companion with great deliberation, and a slow, easy smile. "All right! No place could be more perfectly ideal for a camping spot than this. There's a little glade where we can build a fire, and over here under this jutting rock are plenty of dry sticks. Why my!"

He concluded with an intonation that would seem to imply a wish for anything better as altogether preposterous, laid his blankets down gently upon a spot from which he first kicked the wet leaves, deposited his rod can upon them, put his "gums" and basket at one end, took out a briar-wood pipe, filled it and began to smoke in the leisurely manner expressive of calm content.

Mr. Wells regarded him through the entire performance in silence, doubtful whether it were better to let his anger have its way, or to braid it up for some future occasion. While deliberating he caught his friend's eye, and in spite of himself laughed. Everybody always laughed at "Dick" Foote, no matter how absurd he was. Whether it arose from his impudence, was born of his independence, or grew out of an assumed influence, his power for disarming resentment was regarded as phenomenal. He was one of the men easy to censure when absent, and difficult to resist when present. Like all people of his temperament he had a full understanding with whom it was best to exhibit his peculiarities, and if he cared for the person at all, was well advised when and where to stop. What he did not desire to tell no one could find out, and if an overbold person asked him why he was so fond of Philip, he laughed and said because the Wells family had the reputation of being interesting, and he found Philip the most interesting of the lot. Had this been true it would have been most unjust to Philip who admired Dick beyond everyone, and gave him credit for infinitely superior mental and moral qualities, beside considering him the jolliest companion in the universe.

It must be confessed that in regard to the latter consideration Philip was just at present undergoing a change of heart, for since the first day out Dick's perverseness had been remarkable.

In addition to the many minor reasons that go to influence conduct, there was in this case a particularly large one, which Philip was just beginning to suspect. This suspicion helped to cool his anger and made him ask:

"Dick, tell me the truth, have you any idea where this place is we've been hunting for the last two days?"

Dick did not answer immediately, he frowned instead, and Philip, gathering courage, continued:

"I'll swear if you haven't I'll never go out with you again. This makes the fourth time you and I have been on a wild goose chase in the mountains, and I think it's about time to stop."

"So do I. Come pull yourself together, old boy, and get in and help make a fire. We must destroy the last of that coffee before it loses flavor."

Dick laid his pipe down on a stump and began to gather up the loose pieces of wood that lay scattered here and there and to pile them in a heap. Although he weighed considerably more than was fashionable, his motion had a springy, if rather ponderous quickness that kept him from being clumsy and gave him full command of his strength.

It so happened that they had not yet reached the belt of timber owned by the railroad, and wood of every kind, left by the mill hands who, up to a day past, had been busy here, was lying about in logs of available size and branches of desirable length.

It only accorded with Philip's general reputation for sunniness that, at Dick's appeal, he was done with anger and ready to undertake anything that might help along. Together they laid the foundation of a mammoth fire, leaving plenty of space for the blaze to mount through.

What difficult work it was getting that first little tongue of flame to lick upward! How the damp wood hissed and drove it back! Three times they watched it glimmer, glimmer, like a poor, earth-worn spirit and then cease altogether.

But on the fourth, a great snapping and crackling followed its swift dash through the center, and determined sparks cheered it with bright banners until it roared lustily.

Both men heaved deep sighs of satisfaction as it grew, for the grim shadows of night were becoming larger and larger, and nothing but broad jets of firelight could drive them beyond the camp.

Philip, once fairly started, was indefatigable in his efforts toward securing comfort. While Dick was feeding and keeping a watchful eye on the growing fire, he had undressed his bundle and drawn from it a medium-sized tin coffee pot which he proceeded to fit to four stones. This completed to his satisfaction, he scooped a hole between them with a stick, took from his bundle a tin plate, filled it with coals from the fire, dumped them into the hole, added some short sticks, and in two or three minutes had a place where coffee could be made in the most approved and artistic camp fashion. Dick, who by this time could steal away from his occupation as stoker, was quietly watching Philip's operations, and, at last, ventured to upset that promising amateur's castles by saying in his easy, deliberate way:

"Toss up, Phil, and let's see who'll go down to the Lorenzo for water."

Such an expression of disgust, astonishment and vexation shot suddenly across Philip's begrimed and heated face as beggars description.

"Oh, saints and sinners! I forgot all about water." With this he gave his small fire such a poke that the few coals flew in every direction.

"Can't make coffee without it, old boy. Here, give me the coffee pot and I'll take my can and go down. Let's listen a minute and get the bearings right."

Each stood perfectly still and listened to the sounds that stole into camp; the voice of the light breeze rustling among the firs and redwoods, the faint, evening twitter of birds, the lonely call of the owl, and the quick snapping of twigs came at first, and later, as their ears grew more accustomed to the forest voices, they heard far off a continuous murmur that seemed like the rushing of water.

"There," said Dick, with the quick understanding of an experienced woodman. "It's just down a few feet. We're on the right bank," and he disappeared among the brush.

"Just down a few feet," said Philip to himself, as he patched up his small fire. "I'm certain it's a mile." Then he resumed preparations for supper, by opening both fish baskets and spreading their contents on a redwood stump which happened to be smooth enough to answer for a table. The display of edibles was not imposing. There were plenty of broken crackers, a fair-sized piece of bacon, some very dry bread, part of a can of tongue, some white sugar, three lemons and half a can of condensed milk. He looked this scant supply over and over, and his appetite assumed gigantic proportions, that drove him immediately to cut prongs for toasting bacon. This done he mended the camp fire and sat down to wait. Slowly the minutes dragged by, each one seeming an hour, and he was just making up his mind that he would probably never see Dick again, and summing up his many virtues, when the owner of them walked quietly into camp carrying both tins in one hand and wiping his face with a rather elaborate silk pocket handkerchief.

"Something of a pull down there, Dick, eh?" said Philip, jumping up and taking the coffee pot.

"Oh, bless you, no. Nothing at all. How perfect!" This last exclamation coming forth in so very fervid a tone, was due to a glimpse of the impromptu table which Dick caught as he was setting down his can.

Even Philip's anxiety about the coffee pot now resting unevenly on the stones, could not hinder his loud laughter, as he exclaimed:

"Perfect, well every thing else! I think some of Hannah's biscuits would be pretty fine just now."

Philip here forgot that only three days since he had expressed utter and complete dissatisfaction with all his poor old housekeeper's efforts in the bread line and wished himself among the wilds with a baudful of "hard-tack."

"But, my dear fellow, you can have Hannah's biscuits every day in the year. What do you want them now for? They would spoil everything."

Dick's enjoyment seemed so real that Philip gave up the controversy (as he usually did) and helped spread out the rubber blankets between the camp fire and the stump so they might enjoy their meal at ease.

Soon the water in the coffee pot was boiling and the addition of some coffee killed the camp with delicious odor.

"Perfect, perfect!" again said Dick with the fervid intonation that made Philip smile.

He had cut the bacon into slices and was toasting two on the prongs.

"Bacon never has the fine, clear flavor, gotten up in the kitchen that it has cooked like this, Phil. How is the coffee?"

"Immense! don't you smell it? What's become of the tin cups? Hold on I've got them. Fixing any bacon for me?" Philip's appetite was again distracting him.

"To be sure, old boy. Here's a full supply. Not too much sugar in my coffee, Phil, and toss down the condensed milk."

After all the tramping and uncertainty it was good to sit before the cheering blaze with a cup of coffee in one hand and a sandwich in the other, and throw off every hindering gyve. The world might be exciting itself over conclaves, and completion of bridges, and the coming coronation of a Czar; but here, for the present, at least, all was as tranquil as when the Creator held intercourse with man through the mouth of a chosen prophet.

Constitutionally, Dick was better suited to such scenes than Philip, and even if life bore not nearly so pleasant an aspect for him, and he was generally criticised for lacking ambition, he kept his own counsel, laughed at his critics, and, though he did not choose to proclaim it, led much more the life of an ant than that of a cricket.

The very worst trait in his character was a habit of excessive profession where really little feeling existed. It was born of a belief, acquired when very young, that flattery is a better key to the affections of men than frankness. No one could associate with him intimately and not learn this, and learning it, become doubtful of him in every way. So that his inconsistency and insincerity passed for a fact, when the truth was, few were so strong in real attachment and so faithful when occasion required.

Philip felt these inconsistencies and mourned them. Perfect frankness was so completely the rule of his conduct that he could not even assume the policy that a smooth life is claimed to require. He hated to doubt people and yet he was always doubting Dick whom he loved, and then condemning himself as mean. Deep down in his heart he did not believe the evil accounts of his friend, still they unconsciously influenced him. And even in so slight a matter as when Dick said "Perfect! Perfect!" he did not give him credit for sincerity.

"It might be perfect enough," he said, in reply to one of these regular outbursts, "if we were sure of to-morrow. Unless we find this place what are we going to eat?"

"Now, Phil, stop," said Dick setting his cup down beside him and stretching himself out on his blanket. "You're old enough to take things easier. A day at a time is all I can stand. What's your opinion of women as anglers?"

"Dick, there's a complacency about you that I admire, and if money would buy it, it would be mine to-morrow. What do you suppose I know about women as anglers and what do you care. I fancy they'd be first rate. They can do anything." Philip had been kept in a state of constant subjection during his boyhood by four sisters, one of whom gave promise of being a linguist, another of excelling as a musician and two others as making more than average artists; while he showed very large capacity for doing nothing—a state of affairs which probably accounted for his sanguine view. This was evidently not shared by Dick who said gruffly:

"No they can't. They can't do anything. They're dabblers. I've been fishing with at least a half dozen different women, and I've never seen one yet who could strike a fish."

"Any how, Dick, to come right down to it, how many men are there who strike a fish just right?"

"Plenty." Dick had resumed his pipe and attention to it had kept him from a lengthier and more explicit answer.

Philip's companion briar-wood was sending out rings of smoke with a regularity that bespoke a more advanced state, and he could venture on more explicit remarks without running the risk of being obliged to apply another hot coal to his tobacco.

"Well, you must be in luck," he said with the smile he always gave to Dick's gruff replies. "From experience with them I can count eight or ten genuine fishermen out of the hundred or more duffers who frighten trout every summer. And some of these are not above criticism in striking and landing fish."

"Why, you're a kind of a critic," said Dick, trying to gather his good, broad brow into an enormous frown. "Can't you get a place on a paper?"

"By all the rules wouldn't that put an end to criticising? I think, on the whole, the farm suits me better. It's pretty hard work sometimes, but—"

"Hard work," mimicked Dick contemptuously. "All the hard work or hardship you know anything about could be put in a thimble. If I didn't drag you out in this way occasionally, you'd die of actual non-circulation."

"It was easy enough for Columbus to discover America, too. It was there, and all he had to do was to see it, eh? Perhaps you think managing a vineyard and orchard is great fun."

"I do, the way you run it. There's money enough back of you to build a town. If you were an impecunious pleader like me you might talk about hardship."

Something relative to his impecuniousness, or to his position annoyed Dick, and he sat up quickly and stared in the fire. His face, excepting the nose which was too short, possessed unusual strength, and the chin and throat were remarkably handsome. He wore no beard and his hair and eyebrows were that wonderful black, which in lustre and depth is like nothing in the world but itself.

Dick always felt aggrieved when he talked this way of himself; though his manner was not calculated to arouse sympathy, it said quite as plainly as words could: "Let me alone; I may talk about this; but you shall not." And immediately after he would ask some perfectly irrelevant question. He felt, now, that Philip was regarding him sympathetically, so he opened his long, grey eyes very wide and asked:

"How long do you think you will stay, after we find Selden's place?"

"I can't say positively Dick, but think about two weeks will wear me out. How long have you made up your mind for?"

"One clear month."

"A month! What'll become of your clients?"

"In San Jose? Some will probably find another lawyer. I'm not going back there. I'm going in with Wild & Sharp of San Francisco."

"Good! That'll please the girls immensely. Rachel will have you over to the house every week."

Something in this allusion to the girls did not seem to be exactly pleasant to Dick. He brushed his coat vigorously for a second, and then got up and walked beyond the firelight into the shadows. Philip was too accustomed to such humors to regard this one especially, and he had smoked himself almost asleep when Dick came quietly back and laid a hand on his shoulder.

"There are foot-steps and voices in the brush just below us," he said with the calm deliberation that always characterized him.

PETRONELLA.

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 26th, 1888.

Local Flies.

It was a splendid May morning, now some four years ago, I found myself at the head of the good water, and ready to begin, says MONA in the English Gazette. The river was in splendid condition—the least thing high, perhaps, but the color was all that could be desired, and it was flowing down nicely. Never stood hope higher, and I soon saw that the fish were rising, too. I fished a mile and more of the best of that stream, "all I knew." I tried rising fish and likely places, neither changed to often, nor aukily refused to show them anything else. Four hours yielded four fishes, scaling under a pound and a half all told. It was saddening and strange; quite inexplicable. I never had a really good day on the water, but this was a downright bad one. At last I came to Bitty Rooney's Quicks. I don't know Bill Rooney myself, nor why this lightful and impassable bull-finch was called his quicks, but I mention the matter in order to explain that the prospect down river was as effectually stopped by the "quicks," as it would have been by a park wall. I negotiated these "quicks"—not for the first nor last time, either—but beg to be spared the details, and then saw, about a hundred yards lower down, Tim the Weaver, in mid-stream steadily and discreetly flogging away with his hazel. Tim wore his brogues, but with an eye to economy and subsequent comfort, had his corduroys under his arms and his stockings in his pocket. He was killing fish. I slowly followed and watched him and just came alongside as he lifted out his fourth half-pounder.

We had met before at the modest bar of the single village hostelry, a mill further on, where I frequently had a last glass of beer before the train called, so we exchanged salutations and inquiries. He had begun at "Rooney's Quick," and had got six. The day did not "please him." Yesterday it was a trifle too high, to-day it was too low. Last Friday he got a "gay lock (lot) afore breakfast," but it was now getting "mortal clear." I had but little to say, not feeling at all equal to the occasion. I accompanied him for nearly an hour, but did not wet a line, and then his wife appeared on the scene, about to cross a bridge (a plank) that led to the village, just as we came to it, and said something which was unintelligible to me, but which Tim translated into action by saying he had to go home. His role was an eight foot hazel wand; he had no winch—winch, indeed! His line appeared to be strong hemp twine, and his collar a short, much-frayed, heavy piece of salmon gut. Oh, it made my heart sink! Then he came ashore and asked to look at my flies. The man was quiet, unpretending simplicity itself. He never uttered a joke or smart thing in his life, nor ever tried. "Them flies is a trifle too small for the day, but that isn't a bad one at all, at all," and so on. "Them's mine!" and with the calm air of a man taking part in the most unpretending transaction in life, he quietly drew his collar over the back of his hand, and for a moment named and briefly characterised each of his five flies. He called one of them his Hare's Ear: his Hare's Ear! Yea, he tied them himself. His eyes were not as good as they once were, and he could not always get the stuff.

I was dazed, dumfounded. Astonishment too deep for utterance held me spell-bound; the subject defied observation. He relieved me by offering the best of his fish—not that I wanted his fish for a moment, but it gave a turn of human interest to the situation. His flies were—well, uncanny, and gave one the shivers. His Hare's Ear! Finally he forced half-a-dozen of his best trout on me, and as he stoutly refused money, and my flask was empty, I drew out my fly-book. I trembled as I did. Would he annihilate me? Would a withering glance of sarcasm come from those passive blue eyes, and madden me into assailing him on the spot?

No! He exhibited all the instincts of the true gentleman; he scanned my glittering treasures like one thoroughly insured to it, praised here and there, detracted the size of this, the wing of that, and on the whole, bore him nobly, and could only be persuaded to help himself to four. Carefully he fastened them inside his cap, and wishing me a hearty good-bye and good luck, retired over the bridge, to "put on him," under the tree on the other side. But I am haunted by a misgiving that those flies remain unwetted to this day—at least until they were remodelled. And those flies of his? In size they were small salmon, his stretcher medium, and all tied with a cobbler's "wax-end." For body and hackle he teased up the frayed worsted of an old sock. As for wings and tail, he said he had a few "hins" and a cock, and he could generally pick up a feather or two about the door or garden at the back of the house. His "Hare's Ear," like the Psalmist of Israel, was fearfully and wonderfully made, and its memory abides with me to this day. Felt scrapings from an old hat and a gray pullet's feather supplied the material. And the heads of those flies? Small peas in size, and their rudeness and coarseness were simply incredible.

An old angler on the Shannon I have sometimes heard disparage full-bodied, "woolly" flies as "wads of hay," but had he seen Tim's he would have been beaten. Flattery has its limits, and in the interests of justice he would have to hunt up something more worthy of the subject. Wads of hay were models of artistic elegance in the comparison.

Next day I sought my fly-dresser and recounted my experience. He made up from my instructions the nearest approach to the weird originals; but what a falling off was there! Still, I must say in justice to him, that I never have seen anything so ragged and uncouth since. I relieved his evident anxiety by assuring him that no man should draw from me whence the things came.

A few days after, on rather fine water, I tried my savage nondescripts. Two hours' conscientious flogging and not a rise. Then I mounted a set of my own, rather small, and had a fair day, getting some eight or ten half-pounders before time called me to put my rod together. Half an hour later I was relating my experiences to the landlord of the village hostelry.

"You see, sir," he said, "Tim never fishes only when the water is full, and then, I believe, he fishes in a way of his own."

I believe him. A miller, who was standing by talking to a friend, then broke in:

"Yes, Tim is mighty lucky among the trout, my old woman had a beautiful lot from him last Friday week, and faith he had them up to the house afore breakfast."

I mention this as incidentally confirming Tim's own account; but then it wanted no confirmation, as I had seen enough to convince me that the prowess, under his own chosen conditions, was something to contemplate with mingled feelings of admiration and despair. I met him but once after, and that out of harness. He was making hay towards the end of summer, in a field beside the lower reaches of the river. The season had been warm and dry, and the river had dwindled to a streak. He told me the trout were being snared by day and set-lined by night in hundreds—by the "cubs." Cubs is local for boys, and is not at all appropriate.

I suspect Tim himself is something of a cub in this respect. He told me incidentally that he had been fined £4, or three months, a few seasons before, for taking salmon with a gaff when ascending the river in October. He also informed me that the fine was paid by subscription among his neighbors.

I freely expressed my surprise that his misconduct should have elicited what seemed very like condonation, if not approval, and hinted that there was probably a fellow-feeling in the matter. My views were received with quiet astonishment. I was utterly mistaken. "Arrah, shure, sir, jail is no place for any man to be in!"

And really it seemed to me that there was nothing to add to this philosophic view of the matter.

THE KENNEL.

Dog owners are requested to send for publication the earliest possible notices of whelps, sales, names claimed, presentations and deaths in their kennels, in all instances writing plainly names of sire and dam and of grandparents, colors, dates and breed.

The Field Trials.

The week beginning January 14th is being looked forward to with anticipations of pleasure by the sportsman fraternity of California.

On that date the field trials of the Pacific Coast Field Trial Club will begin at Bakersfield, Kern county, and they bid fair to be of unusual interest. The members of the Kennel Club and sportsmen in general, will be guests of the Knights of the Trigger of Kern County, who are using every effort to make the week one continuous feast of pleasure.

No better place could have been selected than Kern county for these contests, and the residents in order to show their appreciation for selecting their county, are uniting with the Knights of the Trigger in making preparation to receive the visitors. The guests will be given an entertainment each evening, and at the close of the field contests a shooting tournament will be held to exceed anything in the history of the State.

A large number of dogs are now in the county being trained, and many more will be there in a few days. The contest will be well worth witnessing, and we predict a gala week in Bakersfield both to those whose interest begins and ends with the competing dogs, and to those who desire a little outing during which they can see something of the work of grand setters and pointers, and enjoy first-class shooting as well. The grounds reserved for the trials are but a moiety of those affording splendid sport, and all of the land controlled by the Knights of the Trigger will be open to the use of the visitors. The hotel and restaurant facilities at Bakersfield have been so much increased during the year as to insure comfort to all who may be present.

Mr. Isaac Miller, a sportsman himself, together with Mr. Richard Seymour, of bear-killing fame, can accommodate a hundred or more, and give them precisely the attention which lovers of the gun appreciate. Mr. Leonard and other stable owners will have plenty of saddle horses and vehicles on hand. The delightful rooms of the Knights of the Trigger will be open at all times to sportsmen, and last but not least, Mr. Ed Lechner, whose place of business is near the club rooms, will devote his whole time to anticipating the wishes of his friends.

The air of Bakersfield should be inspiring these days. Mr. Schreiber, of this city, expected to go down there deer hunting a few days ago, and went ahead a large flagon of something warranted to dispel the night damps and fend off miasms of all intensities. The flagon was securely sealed, consigned to Mr. W. E. Houghton, and placed by that gentleman upon the piazza of his residence where it remained exposed for some days. When the consignee happened to examine it one day, he perceived that its condition was a convincing proof of the highly bracing and ozonized atmosphere of the town. Although the flagon was of heavy glass, the fluid had all disappeared, and the only tenable hypothesis is that it evaporated and is now being whirled about on the winter zephyrs of Kern County. One thing is certain, it either evaporated or did not.

Those who go down to the field trials should be driven at once to Mr. C. E. Lechner's in Masonic Block, where they can learn of the whereabouts of acquaintances and be piloted to good quarters.

Those who intend being present at the field trials, and wish to do so, can secure rooms and saddle-horses or seats in carriages by dropping a line to the Kennel Editor of the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN, who will be pleased to arrange for them. Such a course will insure against delay or disappointment, and naturally give those who first make application, the choice of apartments and conveyances.

Treatment of the Brood Bitch.

As the external world is the environment of the mother before the birth of progeny, so she forms its environment, and as her surroundings are under domestication, very much those which we supply, it follows that great care should be taken that these should be of the most fitting kind, says Esté in the Kennel Gazette. Exercise were best optional to her, anyway it should be regular, if somewhat restricted. Her nervous system must be guarded from sudden shock. Cleanliness should be supreme. See that the bench and yard be kept most scrupulously clean, and it is well to wash the bitch herself once or twice to remove any ova of worms, which might be adherent to her breasts, and so, finding an easy passage into the stomach of the young, produce those dreaded parasites from which so many die in the early weeks of life. The ova of many worms, e. g., Acaris lumbricoides, may remain in wet soil for many months. Dogs pick up these ova on their feet, whence they get on the bench, and so on to the breasts of the bitch, and thence into the puppy's stomach, where they develop into worms, with results which we all know.

Nothing can be added by mental impression, but it is quite possible that much may be withheld from the embryo by arrest of development. In an organ, as the ovary, so abundantly supplied by nerves, maternal impression and nerve shock may often cause arrest of development of the ovum, resulting in the deficient formation or mental quality of the future embryo; similarly also the foetus in utero may be influenced and its developmental growth arrested by means of failure of nutrition. I must make this point very clear—when the impregnated ovum has once been cast off from the ovary of the mother, it is no longer an integral but a disintegral part of her body, and becomes a pseudo-parasitical—that is to say, whilst deriving nourishment from its hostess, the vital powers inherent within it carry out its own development, subject of course to the supply of the material for this purpose. The ovum, cast off and fecundated, becomes an embryo which is re-attached to some part of the maternal body (usually, but not invariably the uterine interior—as in abdominal pregnancy, where the foetus sometimes grows freely and attains perfect maturity) by means of the placenta in mammals, but has no direct connection with the nervous system of the mother, therefore no impression can act, except by arrest of blood-supply, which indirectly is capable of preventing proper development.

Thus, by the exhaustive process of reasoning and by excluding what can not, we may arrive at an inference of what may, and thus find out what does occur. Nature is a clever conjuror, and though she oftentimes repeats her tricks to show us "the way it is done," we are frequently none the wiser; sometimes, however, we may get behind apparatus differing from the carnivore, and are able to extract the smaller amount of proteins, contained in a larger bulk of food. To balance the daily waste, under moderate exercise, the proportion of albumenoid to carbonaceous food should be relatively less for ordinary dogs than for brood bitches, because they require a larger proportion of the former to supply the demands of new growth in the progeny. If albumenoid food be abundant, unnecessary work is thrown upon the kidneys, and the dog will show a great craving for vegetable matters as conchgrass or even manure; but if the carbonaceous food be excessive, an unnecessary load is thrown upon the intestines. Gelatinoid, although nitrogenous substances, have not the same power of nourishing the body as the proteides, and a dog will soon die if fed alone upon them. The importance of lime-phosphates to breeding of Lions, etc., in the Bristol Zoological Society's gardens, where the head-keeper Blunck informed me they form an important part of the dietary. Very few cubs are born in these gardens with cleft palate, whereas such are not uncommon in other Zoological Gardens where lean meat is given.

Haroldine Dead.

Mr. Wm DeMott who is training a string of Derby dogs for the coming field trials at Bakersfield, lost last week by death from pleuro-pneumonia, his English setter bitch Haroldine. The bitch was a Blue Belton, whelped April 29th, 1886, by Harold (Gath-Gem)—Janet (Count Noble—Dashing Novice). In form and coat Haroldine was not particularly showy, but she was about as racy an animal as California has seen, and as a puppy in last year's Derby she showed great pace, much pluck, an extraordinary degree of sense and a good nose. Her style was of the low, level-moving sort, and unless closely watched her work was not appreciated at its real worth. All in all, she was the peer of any English setter that we remember to have seen, as to her natural quality. She did not have the benefit of skillful training and handling, but showed brilliantly, although beaten for first money. Her name was originally Henriette, but in October of 1886, her breeder changed it to Haroldine. Mr. DeMott's loss is great, but the loss to the setter interest is greater. Haroldine would have started in the current all age stake, and bid fair to make it warm for competitors.

Joe Emmett's Dogs

Mr. Joe Emmett, at whose pranks upon the stage half the civilized world has laughed, and with whose vein of pathos and dainty love songs the rest of the world has been moved by strong emotion, is a great dog fancier. His purchases have been noted in these columns from time to time, and it is with pleasure that some side lights are thrown upon his pets. An exchange says: Mr. J. K. Emmett, the popular actor, who in his one character of "Fritz" has so completely won the esteem and even affection of the American public that he everywhere obtains overflowing houses, and is frequently invited to visit cities, the inhabitants of which think they have been slighted when he was on tour, has for some years introduced dogs as his companions on the stage. In explanation of this he said recently that he had always felt that it was impossible to present a faithful picture of a man without giving him a dog for a companion. From the standpoint afforded by this view it is easy to comprehend why "Fritz," running over with what Sam Slick calls "human natur," should be constantly associated with dogs.

Mr. Emmet first put his theory into practice in 1881, when he fell in love with Bayard Junior at Madison Gardens, New York, where he was shown by Mr. Pope, of Boaton, who did not, however, get a prize with him; but he did what probably suited him as well, for he sold him to Mr. Emmet for $2,500 (£500), the highest price ever given for a dog up to that time. Bayard Junior made his first appearance on the stage soon after in "Fritz among the Gypsies," in which there is an Alpine scene. The hero crossing the mountains finds a child and adopts it, the dog after his purchase having a large share in the finding as well as in subsequent scenes, all of which took immensely with the audiences that everywhere crowded the house from floor to ceiling. The receipts that season were $25,000 in excess of any other, and Mr. Emmet attributed this entirely to the dog, who was as affectionate as he was handsome, and was Mrs. Emmet's constant companion and guard. He died during his second season under unaccountable circumstances, and a post mortem revealed the fact that two small bones of a pig's foot were wedged in one of the intestines and had set up inflammation which caused the death of this grand dog who was bred by Mr. J. Cumming, Macdonald.

Bayard Junior was mourned by his master and mistress as sincerely as though he had been one of their children, and it was partly to fill the gap in the domestic circle that Rector was purchased soon after for $4,000 (£800), a price that again broke the record. He was bought from Mr. Herne, of New York, who had given Mr. S. W. Smith, of Lee's, £300 for him a few months before. Mr. Emmet was warned to beware of his dog, who had the reputation, here, and in New York, of being very savage, and his looks certainly were not prepossessing. However, Fritz soon put the temper of his new purchase to the test, for he took him on the stage within an hour. The play then running was "Fritz the Bohemian," in which a child has an important part, children being, of course, as necessary as dogs for a correct picture of "human natur." In one scene the child is sung to sleep by Fritz with a very beautiful lullaby, and a couch had been used in this scene up to this time. But Fritz took Rector straight from Herne's Kennel on to the stage, where the dog went to the footlights, and looked calmly over them round the crowded house, answering, with a somewhat ominous growl, the thunderous applause which greeted him as soon as the audience got over the astonishment caused by his appearance.

At command from his new master Rector laid down to make a couch for the child, who was carefully laid just across his breast, her head resting on his shoulder. Rector completed this charming, but unheard-of scene by encircling her with his left paw, and remained perfectly still while two verses of the lullaby were sung, although he gave a snarl when the child was lifted from his breast and placed on her couch. He filled this role for about twelve months with enormous success. He was also a splendid guard from the owner's point of view, but not from that of visitors. He would always escort them from the front gate to the house, but if they attempted to go away without seeing some one (as in the case of tramps) he would at once seize them, generally by the arm, and would hold them until their cries brought assistance. Occasionally he treated legitimate visitors in the same way, but Fritz maintains that such attentions were only shown to people who came to borrow money. Rector was neither quarrelsome nor savage, but he would not endure restraint. He would remain perfectly quiet in a room if the door was left ajar, but if closed he would at once rear himself against it, and hammer it in a way calculated to beat out the upper panels in a very short time. In one instance when locked in a stable he splintered the door, which was an inch thick in this way, and then with his teeth made a hole large enough for his egress. Then he laid down and slept quietly through the night on the bed provided for him. His objection to confinement led to his death, for he killed himself in getting free one night when he had been chained up by the kennelman.

Prior to this Mr. Emmet had purchased from Mr. Pope, for $1,000, the bitch Jura, bred by Mr. Cumming Macdonald, and had bred her to Rector twice. Since the dog's death she has taken a role in "Fritz, our German Cousin," her part in which is simply to accompany her master through several scenes, and to listen to a song, "My true dog, I love thee," which Fritz sings to her as an answer to the taunt of a relative who complains of the attention wasted on a dog. Afterwards Jura is sent away to her kennel, in a few moments a shot is heard, and the heroine rushes in to say that the noble dog had been shot by order of its envious relative. Jura will fill this role for the coming season, and will then retire in favor of Philimon, purchased on August 13, as already mentioned, for £1,000, and destined to appear in a new play to be called "Fritz in a Madhouse." Mr. Emmet has another St. Bernard, a very beautiful bitch called Gloria, by Rector-Jura; but she is simply the pet of the house, being so shy that she will not face a single stranger, much less an audience.

Raising Dogs For Their Skins in China.

Mr. Edgar, the commissioner for customs at Newchwang, in Manchuria, in the last Chinese Customs Yellow Book, referring to the trade from that port in robes and mats made of the skins of dogs and goats, says it is generally supposed that dogs are picked up promiscuously whenever they may be found straying, destroyed and their skins sold to dealers. This is not the case. The business may have had its origin in this way, but it is now as systematically carried on as sheep farming. There are thousands of small dog and goat farms dotted over Manchuria and the eastern borders of Mongolia. A bride will receive as dowry, a number of dogs proportionate to the means of her father. It is probable, says Mr. Edgar, that in no other part of the world are there to be found such splendid dog skins for size, length of hair, and quality, the extreme cold developing a magnificent coat. For the full-sized robe, say 80 inches by 36 inches, at least eight animals are required. Putting the price realized at 14s. 10d. per skin including the selection, for the skins must match in color and length of hair, and cost of sewing. The animals are generally strangled in mid-water, but not before they are eight months old, and then the skins taken in a frozen condition, principally to Moukden and Chinchow, where they are cured, assorted and made into robes, mats, etc.

Hints to Kennel Owners.

Acute diseases of the digestive organs of the dog are not so frequent as are derangements of a subacute and chronic form. Although Youatt speaks of the intestines of the dog as very irritable and liable to suffer from inflammation it is evident that he does not refer to the form of disease which is intended by the use of the word now; in fact, he includes constipation under the heading of inflammatory affections.

Euteritis, as true inflammation of the intestines is properly called, may arise from the exposure to cold. It also occurs as a consequence of the introduction of any irritant substance, and generally it happens that the stomach is involved in the disease, and the term gastro enteritis is then applied.

Symptoms of acute disease of the stomach and intestines are usually very marked, and appear quite suddenly. At first the animal is restless, often pants, and suffers from severe thirst. The internal temperature is raised, but this is seldom found out until the signs of disease are so decided that the aid of a veterinary surgeon has been sought. But the presence of heat externally is ascertained by merely placing the hand on the abdomen which is not only hot, but also tender to the touch.

Vomiting is one of the most distressing accompaniments of the inflammatory attack, and while it lasts it is almost impossible to give medicine by the mouth.

Pain in enteritis is not so acute as in colic, and it is more constant. The dog makes no violent movements indicative of suffering, but shows by frequent panting and restlessness that pain is present. At different periods in the course of the disease either constipation or diarrhoea may be a symptom; although it is never safe to give purgatives in this disease in the dog, enemata of warm water with a little olive oil and soap will be useful in breaking down any hardened mass which may cause an obstruction.

Treatment of enteritis or gastro enteritis does not promise much success, and very little indeed can be done beyond using sedatives to allay pain. Medicine cannot be given by the mouth in cases where vomiting is incessant, but the hypodermic method of treatment, which is peculiarly applicable to dogs, offers an easy escape from this difficulty, and various anodynes may be conveyed beneath the skin without exciting any alarm or irritating the stomach.

A warm bath is a domestic remedy which can always be applied at once to dogs of moderate size, and animals which are too large to be immersed in water may be fomented constantly with flannels wrung out of moderately hot water. It must not, however, be forgotten that the skin of the dog is very sensitive. Constant vomiting, which resists the effects of sedatives injected under the skin, will sometimes yield to small doses of prussic acid, and this remedy should always be tried in doses of one to four drops with a little cold water.

Occidental Coursing Club—Second Meeting.

The Occidental Coursing Club organized a year or more ago, with the purpose of renewing interest in the grand sport, has had a rather precarious existence since its opening meeting of last year. But the success of the event given on Thursday last at Newark, will go far toward placing the club upon a firmer footing, and giving it that vigor necessary to the highest success. Its first meeting under the presidency and supervision of Colonel Stuart Taylor, was the best managed coursing conclave seen up to that time in the State. Colonel Taylor's military decision and inflexibility in enforcing order conducted much to the comfort of the spectators, and relieved the day of all embarrassing incidents. It is not too much to say of the present President, Colonel S. O. Gregory, that he has even improved upon Colonel Taylor's admirable methods, and last Thursday's gathering will go down in the annals of the club as being about an ideal day with the hounds. No pool selling was allowed, and no noise or wrangling annoyed the spectators, although much hotting was done quietly by the keen veterans who thought they could pick winners without fail. The attendance was very large when the counter attractions nearer the city are considered, a half dozen very pleasant ways of spending the holiday being offered, besides visiting Newark. The day was perfect, being bright, sunny and dry, and the ground having been well moistened by the recent rains so that the footing was good and the feet of the dogs were not torn in their turns. The hares were surprisingly good. It is too much to expect that a hare which has been paddocked for a month shall be equal in speed and strength to one which ranges the Merced plains and jogs twenty miles each day to water.

The arrangements for driving the hares from the slipping door were well made and no hitch occurred. The officers of the day were on the alert at all times, and attended to their duties so promptly and were so pleasant about it as to earn the grateful acknowledgement of the club and visitors. The field stewards were Messrs J. F. Carroll, S. L. Abbot Jr., and Thomas J. O'Keefe; Slip steward, Colonel S. O. Gregory; Flag steward, H. Boyd; Judge, John Grace; Slipper, James Wren. Secretary S. B. Lincoln is entitled to much praise for his attention to the details of the meeting.

The slipper got a lot of punishing but stood it bravely, giving all of the dogs fair slips and the owners satisfaction. The next meeting will be given on New Years day at Newark.

The winner, Sly Girl, belonging to Mr. Egan is a very strong and racy bitch, rather small, by Tribute-Jemima, and has been a winner since her sapling starts. She is very quick from slips, a close worker and has any amount of staying power.

Gentle Annie, the runner up, is a famous old bitch, that has been conditioned year after year without seeming to grow stale or weak. She has won many courses and seems likely to win many more.

FIRST ROUND.

KATE FISHER—LADY.

Lady led from a long slip to a decent hare and wrenched it, letting Kate Fisher in, and the latter could not be displaced through a long course, in which she scored two go-bys and the kill.

CRIBB—JENNIE JUNE.

Cribb cut out the work for the run-up and a wrench and a turn, and then let Jennie June in for a couple of wrenches, when Cribb again took possession and won.

SNOW DRIFT—DAVY CROCKETT.

Snow Drift made a brilliant burst to a very strong hare and got a turn out of it before it entered the escape. Davy Crockett, though game, was not speedy enough and Snow Drift won.

PEASANT GIRL—JULIET.

The former won a long course and won out of hand, Juliet not being placed until the latter part, when she made two wrenches and the kill, Peasant Girl winning.

NEW BROOM—BENELON II.

Benelon was first to the hare, but New Broom in the nick of time scored a go-by and turned, holding the quarry for several points, when it escaped. Benelon II got a bad fall but was beaten anyhow.

BELLE OF WATERLOO—REDWOOD.

After a hard no-course in which the Belle got a punper after a second hare, the dogs were fairly slipped and Redwood made the run up and turn, when Belle assumed command and rolled up a grand score before letting the dog in. The hare escaped and Belle was awarded the course.

GENTLE ANNIE—BEN COTTON.

The bitch beat Ben, almost pointless, on a hare which escaped.

KILLARNEY—FAUGH A BALLAGH.

Old Killarney showed that he had a shot or two left in the locker, beating Faugh in short sharp burst to a ghost of a hare, Killarney securing a wrench before the hare escaped.

MISS CROCKETT—NEVADA LASS.

The pair had a no-course after separate hares, Miss Crockett soon killing, while the Lass pumped herself before getting her game. Put in slips again they ran a short no-course, and were again slipped when Miss Crockett scored all the early points, the Lass being placed for two or three terms, and then Miss Crockett killed and won.

SLY GIRL—YOLO MAID.

The Girl beat Maid pointless, being very sharp to the hare, and working very cleverly.

SECOND ROUND.—Kate Fisher beat Cribb by her close working the latter, going very wide, although he rather had the foot of the bitch.

SNOW DRIFT—PEASANT GIRL.

After two no-courses, in the first of which the Girl killed, and the second the dog, they were sent to a good one, Snow Drift getting the run-up, turn and kill, although Peasant Girl was after him.

NEW BROOM—BELLE OF WATERLOO.

The Broom made about a clean sweep, on as good a hare as was slipped during the day. Belle was game and honest, but had taken too much out of herself in previous courses, and New Broom won as she pleased.

GENTLE ANNIE—KILLARNEY.

The two old dogs made a pretty course, but Annie was too quick on her feet and won quite easily, after a no-course.

SLY GIRL—MISS CROCKETT.

The Girl was put down with Crockett to a good hare and won out of hand.

SNOW DRIFT—KATE FISHER.

THIRD ROUND.—After a no-course, Snow Drift beat Kate almost pointless on a hare which escaped.

GENTLE ANNIE—NEW BROOM.

In a long course which might have been decided in favor of either, Annie beat Broom. The course was the best of the meeting, the hare being strong and both bitches working honestly.

SLY GIRL, A BYE.

Sly Girl was put down with Maid of Erin, and ran a sharp bye.

SLY GIRL—SNOW DRIFT.

FOURTH ROUND.—A no-course was run, after which the Girl beat Snow Drift all around, and before the dogs could be taken up they ran another hare to the escape.

GENTLE ANNIE, A BYE.

Annie ran a bye with Benelon II.

Final.

SLY GIRL—GENTLE ANNIE.

Sly Girl, seemingly as fresh as earlier in the day, beat her splendid old competitor in a short, lively chaso after a fine hare, and won first money, ending the stake, and proving herself an unusually good greyhound.

THE RIFLE

Sacramento.

For many years Company G, of Sacramento, has been the crack shooting company of the State militia, and it now has more good marksmen than at any time in its history. The Carson City Guard has always been regarded as one of the best shooting companies in the United States, and still lays claim to having twenty men who will face the target with a like number at any time, at any distance, over any range, for marbles or money.

Some weeks ago Company G, in compliance with law, shot for medals. Several of the best marksmen of the company were absent, yet the score was the best in the State. Some two weeks ago the Carson Guard shot for medals, also making an excellent score, but did not come up to that of the Sacramento company. For comparison, the scores of both companies are given below:

Literary Note.

The Forest and Stream Publishing Company announces "Charley's Wonderful Journeys," a handsomely illustrated new book by C. F. Amery. It belongs to the "Alice in Wonderland" class of juveniles.

Rapier, in the English Sporting and Dramatic News, thus discourses of phenomenal winners on the English turf: "Achievement's two-year-old earnings, £10,387, have for a long time past been instanced as extraordinary, and she headed The Bard, which, as history records, compiled £9,188 9s. in his sixteen wins. But Donovan figures quite eclipse these, for, as many readers are aware—but I must have the record in my columns—he has won in stakes no less a sum than £16,487 15s. The colt is, I believe, perfectly sound, and so, though it will probably be shown in time that he is very far from a wonder, he may pile up a phenomenal record. As it is he has won nearly as much as Bend Or or Robert the Devil secured during their entire career, and it is odd that the two great rivals should have credited their owners with so nearly the same amount in England, Bend Or having won £17,517 10s., and Robert the Devil £17,854 10s., though this is exclusive of the Grand Prix, which raises the winnings of the son of Bertram by £6,000 odd. West Australian, who was a giant in his day, won £14,135. Ormonde did not come out until the October of his two-year-old season, and the three races he then won only amounted to £3,008, but as a three-year-old he piled up £21,552, and as a four-year-old added £3,905 10s. to it making £28,457 in all. Achievement's total winnings during the two years that she was in training were £22,442. I suppose old Fisherman remains, and long will remain, champion as regards number of races won; he was first seventy times in 120 attempts, far eclipsing Caller On, which ran ninety-eight times, and won exactly half her races, forty-nine in all, including thirty-four Queen's Plates, of which Fisherman won twenty-six, Lillian twenty-seven, and Ratanplan the respectable number of nineteen. Kinsem's performances should not be omitted from this note. She ran fifty-four times and was never beaten, and though doubtless she met some wretches in some of her races abroad, she beat Pageant and Lady Golightly for the Goodwood Cup in 1878."

Brief Mention.

Miss Kittson sold her pacer Little Brown Jug, record 2:11½, for $900.

Erdenheim is now to be transformed into a farming and dairy establishment.

Woodburn Farm, Ky., has sold $72,000 worth of horses during the season just closed.

F. B. Harper has sold the produce of Belle Knight, the dam of Lavinia Belle, for more than $30,000.

Mr. C. F. Emery has sold forty-six colts from the Forest City Farm this season for $35,425, an average $770.

If Firenze, the Bard and Hanover should be entered in the Spring Haudicap, winter speculation will be decidedly lively.

Bismarck, who started favorite for the Cambridgeshire, has been sold for £4,000 and goes to Buenos Ayres, and not to the United States, as rumored a week ago.

Capt. Brown's trainer, Rogers, says he will have a grand lot of three-year-old horses when he pulls up stakes at Mobile and journeys northward next spring.

The Suburban winner of this year, Elkwood, may not go into retirement. His trainer believes that he will be able to stand up next spring and run into form that will be hard to beat.

The smallest winning jockey on record is no doubt Kitchener, who rode Red Deer, the winner of the Chester Cup in England in 1844. Red Deer's impost were fifty-six pounds, and Kitchener's bodily weight was a few ounces less than forty pounds.

What is termed "a startling departure in the line of horse trading" is reported from Fall River, where a citizen who has a mare for sale states frankly that "her disposition is so sour she hates herself," and that he would recommend the creature to nobody unaccustomed to horses.

S. S. Howland, of New York, has purchased for his stock farm at Mount Morris, the English thoroughbred King Galop, by Galopin, who won the Derby of 1875. Mr. Howland's new purchase is of high form, as well as lineage.

Luella, by Hero of Thorndale, is one of the successful dams of 1888, having two daughters which have made records of 2:30 or better this season. They are Diplomacy, by Don Cossack, 2:28½, and Dora Cossack, also by Don Cossack, record 2:29.

The London (England) Telegraph reports that at a recent meeting of Biological and Hygienic experts it was suggested to trainers of horses that if they girthed on the racing saddle behind the ribs instead of over them, they would thereby gain for the horse the same advantage as was experienced by the long-distance runner from his broad, tight leather belt.

Hamilton is already riding at the Clifton track, and the management promise that McLaughlin and Garrison will be riding there before long. The late action of the Eastern associations in annulling the old rule in reference to the amount in purses that jockeys might ride for will probably cause many of the prominent riders to appear at the short tracks during the winter months.

Hiram Blake, a wealthy farmer residing in the southern part of Blount county, Ala., recently related a thrilling story of a battle to the death between a spirited horse of his and a huge rattlesnake. The horse, a very fine animal, valued at $2,500, was loose in a pasture, through which ran a small stream. Along the banks of this stream there was a dense undergrowth of bushes, interspersed with patches of grass, and the horse getting near a thick clump of bushes was struck about the nose by an immense rattlesnake. The horse threw his head up and wheeled suddenly around. The fangs of the snake were so firmly imbedded in the animal's flesh that several vigorous shakes were required to throw it off. The snake fell in an open space, and the horse, instead of running away, plunged at the writhing reptile with his fore feet. Failing to strike the snake the first time, the brave horse was again bitten on the leg. Rearing high in the air, with a piercing neigh that sounded almost human, the noble animal plunged again and again at the striking monster until his iron shod hoof crushed its head. An examination of the horse disclosed the fact that it had been bitten no less than five times, and though drenched time and again with quart bottles of whisky, it died in a few hours from the effects of the deadly bites. The rattler was of the diamond back species and the largest ever seen in that section. It measured nine feet in length and had nineteen rattles. Mr. Blake is going to send its skin to the Smithsonian Institute.

Raceland, that goes into winter quarters with the reputation of being the best three-year-old in training, this having been awarded him by virtue of some wonderfully good races right at the close of the season, is a horse of surprises and disappointments, and has been ever since he was foaled. As a yearling he was a cheap looking colt, and so positive was his owner of the colt's unsoundness that he was so advertised when put up at auction, and on account of this supposed defect a St. Louis bookmaker was enabled to buy him for less than $300. It was a lucky purchase, for as soon as Raceland was trained he showed that he had plenty of speed and won some races that stamped him as first-class. This was in 1887, and when the colt continued to howl over the acknowledged cracks in such handy fashion that August Belmont paid $17,500 for him, and in the meantime the bookmaker who owned him had won as much more in stakes. When the present season began Raceland was of little account, and no matter how good he might have been he could not have beaten Emperor of Norfolk, who was at that time able to concede lumps of weight to any three-year-old in the country. But after winning the American Derby in New York, worth $12,000, the Emperor broke down and has not since faced the starter. This mishap left the rich Eastern stakes a much easier problem for the other colts than they had been. Los Angeles and Sir Dixon were better than Raceland, however, but he finally wore them down, and before the season was over he was the pick of the basket. Over a distance of ground Raceland is particularly at home; his action being of the kind that does not tire easily, and in addition to this he is a speedy one, so that, all things considered, he is about the best one in the country for the big handicaps next season, in which, however, he will be given nearly the top weight to carry, as every one has a great opinion of his ability.

A horse's usefulness is measured by his strength and rapidity of movement, more than by the size or weight, says the New York Times. Size is not always indicative of weight even. The spongy bones of a mammoth horse loaded with soft flesh and bulky fat will not be at all proportionately heavy with the firm, solid, dense bone and hard, firm muscle of a much smaller horse, which will do twice as much work as the heavier one of this unsubstantial character. Justin Morgan, a rare type of a most useful horse, and perhaps really the most valuable sire of any we have had, was a small animal, but he was known as the strongest and most robust horse in a locality famed for its useful work animals. No other horses matched with him could pull the weights he drew with ease, and none made as good time upon the road as he. He is said to have been a bundle of sinews and muscles upon a very light frame of the most solid bone, and strangers were amazed to see the little horse walk off with loads which larger but not heavier horses could not move. This is the real test of value in a horse—strength, lively action and endurance all combined in the lightest weight possible.

The Breeder's Gazette says: "The Dwyers, who are on the turf for the money there is in the business, and who have often declared that there is no sentiment in their method of managing a stable of horses, are going to make a desperate effort next season to regain the place at the head of the list which they lost this year, and also, if possible, get back some of the money they dumped into the maw of the bookmakers owing to the unexpected defeats sustained by their horses. Thompson, the new trainer, is especially engaged to fit two-year-olds for early engagements. They have fifty-six thoroughbred horses, thirty-eight of which are yearlings, stabled at the Brooklyn Jockey Club track and immediate vicinity. This lot of runners represents an actual cash investment of over $210,000 by this enterprising firm.

A correspondent of the St. Louis Republic writes: A gentleman from Woodburn, the Stock farm of A. J. Alexander, at Spring Station, Ky., says that if this era is to witness a two-minute trotter, then he has seen it on that farm. It is one of six, five being foals, and one a yearling. Mr. Alexander sent two mares to California two years ago—to Palo Alto, Gov. Leland Stanford's place—to be bred to Electioneer. One was the dam of Mand S., 2:08½, and the other the dam of Pancoast, 2:21½. The latter failed to come in foal; the first dropped a fine colt. Mr. Alexander sent out three more mares last year, two full sisters to Mand S. and a sister to Nutwood, 2:18½. They have just returned, all five mares, with foals by their side and in foal. They are a fortune, and would sell at hardly less than $10,000 apiece. The foal by Electioneer, dam the dam of Mand S., is a daisy.

The Chinese have their tombs built in a semicircular form, like a horseshoe, and the Moors are also wont to use it in their architecture. The fact that the nimbus or halo which in old pictures surrounds the heads of saints and angels, bears a rude resemblance to a horseshoe, is no doubt one of the many accidental coincidences that have strengthened this popular superstition. The belief in the horseshoe attained its greatest diffusion at the end of the last century, and the beginning of this. Aubrey, in his "Miscellanies," tells us that in his time most houses in the west end of London had a horseshoe nailed over the threshold. In 1813 Sir Henry Ellis counted seventeen horseshoes in Monmouth street, but in 1841 only five or six remained. Lord Nelson nailed a horseshoe to the mast of the Victory; and Lucky Dr. James attributed the success of his fever powders to the finding of a horseshoe, which symbol he adopted as a crest for his carriage.

The Portland, Oregon, turf circles are greatly excited over a decision making a stakeholder liable. It seems that Judge Shattock, of Portland, Oregon, sustained the demurrer to the answer in the suit of W. A. McCarthy vs. J. R. Wintler for $500 posted with him as a plaintiff's half of a purse for a race between Gray Daisy, owned by himself, and Matt McCullough, owned by Proebstel & DeLore, of Vancouver. McCarthy claims that the start was not a fair one, and demanded the return of his money, which Wintler refused. Judge Shattock held that a horse race wager was an illegal contract, and that if either party to it commanded the stakeholder to return his money before it was paid over to the owner he must do so, and if he failed he would be liable for the amount at issue.

Luck in Horseshoes.

The custom of nailing a horseshoe over the door of a house or other building as a protection against evil spirits and an assurance of good luck is widely spread over England and the United States, says an exchange. The horseshoe unites within itself three lucky elements—it is crescent-shaped, it is a portion of a horse, and it is made of iron. Popular superstition has long endowed iron with protecting powers. Such powers attached in some degree to most metals, but since in most countries iron has been the metal latest worked, it naturally inherits the virtues of the others. The Romans drove nails into the walls of cottages as an antidote to the plague. When Arabs in the desert are overtaken by simoom, they seek to propitiate the Jinns, who have raised it, by crying "Iron!" "Iron!" The Scandinavian exercises the Neckan or river spirits with an open knife in the bottom of his boat or a nail set in reed, singing:

Neckan, Neckan, nail in water!
The Virgin Mary casteth steel in water!
Do you sink, I fit.

Horses, in the proper mythology of England, were looked upon as luck bringers. In Yorkshire it is still thought that disease may be cured by burying a horse alive. An horse's hoof placed under an invalid's bed is a specific for many complaints in rural districts. "In Ireland," says Camden, "when a horse dies his feet and legs are hung up in the house and even his hoofs are sacred."

On account of its form, there is no doubt that its qualities anciently ascribed to the crescent, have been transferred to the horseshoe. The crescent like the horseshoe, is semicircular, and presents two points. From the earliest antiquity, ornaments shaped in this way have been popular as preservatives against danger, and especially against evil spirits. Hudibras embalms this ancient superstition in the couplet:

Chase evil spirits away dint,
Of sickle, horseshoe and flint,
And Herrick, in his "Hesperides," says:
Hang up hooks and shears to scare
Hence the hag that rides the mare.

The DeLAVAL CREAM SEPARATOR.

Extracts all the cream from milk, fresh and sweet, as it comes from the cow, without setting or holding. Is not affected by extremes of climate. Increases the yield and improves the quality of butter, greatly adding to the profits in dairying. Over 100 of these most valuable machines are in constant use on this Coast alone, many thousands in the United States, and all are proving so profitable that many dairies are using two or more DeLvals.

It is now a well established fact that the Separator increases the yield of butter from 15 to 20 per cent, and even more in some parts of this State, while the quality in many instances has been greatly improved as is shown by comparison of market returns before and after the introduction of the Separator.

Four sizes and styles of DeLvals now in use:
"Hand Power," "Standard," "Increased Capacity," and "Steam Turbine" Separators.

Steam, Water and Horse Power suitable for driving. Complete Outfits furnished and fully guaranteed.

SUNOL---Two-Year Old Record 2:18!

ELECTIONEER

WAXANA.

We look for wonders from Palo Alto, and from the speed shown at home by "the Waxana filly" last year, all who knew her predicted that she would astonish the trotting world when she showed on public tracks. But it may be questioned whether even the most rosy spectacles of prophets expected a two-year-old to beat 2:20.

As a yearling Sunol was not given any fast quarters or halves, although she showed every indication of wonderful speed. Mr. Marvin always regarded her as the fastest trotter of her age that was ever trained at Palo Alto, and her speed is natural, for she has always been the fastest since first she was put in harness. She could beat Norlaine at any time as a yearling, but her powers were kept quiet and held in reserve in 1887, expecting that some Kentucky yearling would come here in the fall to try conclusions.

More than one wealthy horseman desired the great young mare last spring, one of them intimating that even a $25,000 price would not prevent his acquiring her. Since making her record she is "not for sale."

Her first race was at Los Angeles, on August 10 of this year, when she defeated Vesolia in 2:32½ and 2:25. At Petaluma she won again in 2:28½ and 2:26¾. On October 19 she started at Bay District Track, San Francisco, to beat the recent 2:23 of the stallion Axtell. She went to the quarter in 35 seconds, the half in 1:10½. The three-quarter pole was reached in 1:45, and she passed the wire in 2:20½, beating not only Axtell's 2:23, but wiping out also the 2:21 of Wild Flower. This, too, when a chilly, southwest wind prevailed. And yet on October 27 she still further reduced her record to 2:18.

Waxana, the dam of Sunol, was never given any hard work although as a two-year-old she showed quarters in 40 seconds, and could do better if asked. But, unfortunately, her feet were injured, so her training had to be given up. She has produced four stallion colts to Electioneer. Woolsey, foaled in 1882, was fast as a two-year-old, and showed quarters easily in 34 and 35. He was sold to Richard Gird of Pomona for $10,000, and has been used since in the stud. Wellington, a four-year-old, and Warren, a yearling, are still at Palo Alto, and the fourth brother, C. D. E., is owned by Mr. C. D. Ely of New York. Wellington and Warren are in good condition, and have shown some speed, the yearling showing quarters in 40 seconds. Waxana is by General Benton, sire of Sallie Benton, 2:17¾, and others, dam Waxy (dam of Alpha) by Lexington.

In South America.

In a recent number of the Sporting World appears a newsy and entertaining letter from "F. L. S.," Valparaiso, Chili, describing the sports of the Chilians, and their recent adoption of our sports. Valparaiso being the chief seaport on the west coast of South America is the first place to feel the influence of foreign sports, and from the large number of English and Americans now residing there, is the city where foreign manners and customs gain the strongest hold. "F. L. S." says:

The true Chilian is a born gambler, and anything that will give him an excuse to wager one of his hard earned pesos he takes to like a duck to water, hence sports of all kinds are beginning to get a firm hold in this "Yankee land" of South America. As if their natural inclination were not enough they are assisted by all nationalities. From the English they have gotten runners; from the Americans trotters, boxing and other athletic sports, and from other nationalities all sorts of gambling games. In the first place there are the runners. Of course there are no great stables of thoroughbreds maintained here, but then there are some very fair horses, and some excellent contests are very often witnessed. A few years ago it used to be that a party of Americans and Englishmen would hire native horses from one of the numerous livery stables that the city possesses, and take them out on one of the roads and race them.

These roads are all macadamized, and while a little too hard for runners, make magnificent thoroughfares for speeding road horses. They have all been built by the Government, and are kept in first class order at its expense. But back to the runners. The natives finally became interested in the exciting contests and close finishes that they saw day after day, and some of the wealthier class took the matter up and built a track. That is, they used the old bull arena, just outside of the city, and where the bovine battles that used to be a part of the life of a Chilian were fought, the runners now fight their battles of speed and endurance. The track itself is a good one, turns rather short, perhaps, and not pleasant to go around at full speed in a hunch, but nevertheless far better than a person would expect to find here. The accommodations are not what would be considered first class at one of the big New York tracks, still they are fair, and the grand stand is a very good one. There is no betting ring, and book-making, as we understand it, is not known here.

A number of thoroughbreds have been imported from the United States, England and France, and match races and sweepstakes are of common occurrence. When a race has been arranged it is published all over the city, and as it always takes place on one of the holidays that are as numerous here as in other Catholic countries, a large crowd is sure to be in attendance. The betting is mostly between individuals, although some pools are sold. The assistant starter is dispensed with, and the jocks, who could probably give McLanghin, Garrison, or any of our crack riders points in rough riding, have to keep their eyes on the man with the flag. The excitement and enthusiasm displayed during a race is intense, and when the finish is at all close it passes all bounds, and the crowd is beyond control. Such a hold has running secured on the people here that it will not be long before regular meetings are held. Of course, the universal fairs, where fat hogs and sleek cows disport themselves for the pleasure of the bucolic citizen, are held, and at these both running and trotting races are given; but after a while the runners will have a distinct meeting, and it is sure to be a big success.

The trotters are also receiving a good deal of attention down here now, and it is getting to be a common sight to see a horse that can cover his mile inside of three minutes. On any fine afternoon the different drives are fairly alive with the beauty, wealth and fashion of Valparaiso. The races are mostly match ones and are sometimes for large amounts. They always attract a large crowd, and a great deal of money is won and lost over them.

I suppose that in speaking of sports here, I should have given bull fighting the first place, but everyone knows that it is the national pastime, and so much has been written about it that I can add nothing more. After racing, the thing that is most popular here is cock fighting. Every family has its fighting bird, and they are always willing to back him, even to the extent of going hungry if he should be defeated. The time always selected for these fights is Sunday afternoon, when the whole population turns out in their Sunday best. The padres are also fond of the sport, and are always on hand to see fair play. They do no betting, but, nevertheless, they get as interested as any one, and if they see any unfairness they administer a sounding box on the ear to the perpetrator of it.

Boxing is another branch of sport that is fast coming into favor down here, and the people are as familiar with the doings of Senors Sullivan, Mitchell and Kilrain as those in either the United States or England. Boxing exhibitions are of nightly occurrence, and they are always well attended. There is a man just coming into prominence here, who so far, has not failed to knock out every person who has attempted to stand before him. He is a big, strapping fellow, from San Diego. His reach is something phenomenal, and the blow that he can hit is hard enough to kill an ox. His name is Miguel Dominican, and he is only 23 years old, he has plenty of time to improve. He is even more thought of than John L. is in Boston, and there is serious talk of sending him to the United States to have a go with either of the big ones. He met a strapping big Englishman the other night, and the ease with which he defeated him was a regular surprise party to a large number of Englishmen who were present, and who had backed their champion for pounds, shillings and pence for all they worth. The first round was nothing but cautious sparring on both sides. In the second the Englishman thought he had his opponent's measure pretty well taken, and went in to finish him. He made a great rush, but Miguel met him with a straight arm blow on the jugular that put him to sleep for over half an hour.

Athletics are also receiving some attention here now, and there are prospects of a club being formed before long. The ones who are interested in it just at present are mostly young fellows who have been to the United States to school, but as the different events afford an excellent opportunity for speculation there is no doubt that the whole people will take it up as soon as they have seen a little more of it.

There is just one thing more that I will speak of in this letter, and I am sure it will at least prove a novelty to the readers of The Sporting World. Cockroach fighting is what I mean. It is intensely exciting, and the bugs make as fierce a battle as a person would wish to see. The roaches are great big fellows, about an inch and a half long. They are put in a dark box several days before the fight is to come off and never fed, but teased the whole time. The fighting generally takes place in the back part of the saloon. The roaches are put in a big basin, the sides of which are greased to keep them from crawling out. After looking at each other for a few moments they commence to maneuver, and then the fun commences. Their whiskers, or horns, commence to swell and become as stiff as poker. They advance on each other cautiously, and making a sound like a hiss, drive at each other with a rush. The horns are used both for defence and attack, and they can accomplish a lot of damage. Sometimes a fight will last for half an hour, and it is never finished until one or both of the roaches are dead. One will run his horn through the other one's body and that settles it, unless the impaled one in his death struggles happens to land his leg in his opponent's eye, then both give up the ghost and the battle is given to the one who succeeded in impaling his antagonist.

A professional gentleman, formerly of Toronto, and now residing at Las Chneres de Serantes, in the Argentine Republic, writes to Field & Farm under date of October 9th, as follows:

The best of all business here is gambling, legitimate I mean, introducing American running, trotting and carriage horses; selling the last named and racing the first two in one or two races, then disposing of them. The best horses from England, France and Russia are coming here, the English and French horses for racing purposes and the Russian horses for carriage use. This year some thirty trotters have been sent here from the United States. One with a record of 2:26 sold for $17,000, another (Pickwick) for $21,500 in gold, and I don't think as yet that we have a horse that can beat 2:20. A running horse such as any of the following could clear in one season half a million if properly handled: Volante, Little Minch, Paragon, Emperor of Norfolk, Cruiser, Marshall Luke, Wary, Poteen, Lelex, Maobeth, Bruit, Safe Ban, Defiant and many others, not including the cracks. All horses to have great value here must be entire. Stallions and mares less than 8 years of age, sound and good tempered animals. This year we imported for the International Grand Prize, valued at $40,000 or more, two good English horses, Gay Hermit, and St. Mirin. Each cost 5,000 guineas in England. The former cannot "stay" more than 1,750 metres with weight on, and the latter is partly broken down, and the result will be that some common horse will win. The races are nearly all at long distances, averaging two miles, and the average weights 125 pounds. I have seen 33,000 pool tickets at $2 each sold in one room on a trotting race of a dash of 3,500 metres, and have known of $160,000 more wagered on the same race in the other three pool rooms in town. Something similar occurs every week. The way the owners of "sure" horses win is by giving out that their horse will not start, then buying him in the pools when the public have planged on the others, and then running him, or if possible to do this withdraw him from the race. For instance, Gay Hermit was entered for six races, but did not run any, paying forfeit for delaying declaration until a few minutes before the race. All who bought Gay Hermit in the outside rooms lost their money, as all bets here stand whether the horse runs or not. In a race a few days ago the public would not touch Gay Hermit, and the owners secured all the tickets, and pocketed $38,000, as Gay Hermit won easily.

Famous Old-Time Racing.

The question has often been asked during the last five or six years, are the horses now racing as good as those of thirty or forty years ago? The answer is not as easy as one would suppose; for, while it is all very well to say, "Oh, yes, they are just as good," or the reverse, as the case may be, to practically prove the answer and carry conviction with the argument is difficult. The system of racing, and necessarily the system of training, animals was different from those seen in the Junior Championship and Futurity Stakes last season. The type of horse has changed. An inch or two has been added to their height and a few miles taken from the distance they are able to go. The sturdy animal of the fifteen-hand type, with short and well-ribbed body and make-up that looked like staying all day, has given place to the sixteen-hand type of animal, which, instead of staying qualities, shows speed.

Each successive generation possesses more speed and less ability to stay. Thus we have an animal that can pack weight beyond all old-time ideas for a short distance at a rate of speed not dreamed of by the old trainers, is sacrificed to time.

Especially is this the case with two-year-olds, of which some have run as many as twenty races. Champagne Charley, by the English Prince Charlie, out of the American mare Triangle (she by Gilroy), has run in twenty-nine races, winning eleven, including the last two, carrying weight up to 120 pounds. Is it therefore surprising that each year shows less three and four-year-olds, while as to real good live and six-year-olds there are less than a dozen in training? The late Milton H. Sanford always contended that it was the pace that killed. Yet to keep up with the public demand for almost unlimited racing, with the natural adjunct, excessive betting, associations present programmes of six and seven races a day, made up of dashes at distances of a mile and a quarter or less, with many even at a less distance than a mile. The demand is speed, speed, speed.

Everything is sacrificed to time. Tracks are kept hard, while timing watches are improved by splitting seconds into "fifths," with a probability that next year we shall have "eighths." Even the most conservative of breeders are now a great deal more interested in breeding for speed than for staying qualities, and a sire whose progeny can run the T. Y. C. of three-quarters of a mile in "fifteen" or less, with the standard weight of 115 pounds, and repeat a few days after with 118 or 120 pounds in about the same time, is at once a gold mine, with his next lot of yearlings selling well up in the thousands. That such celebrities do not keep on as three-year-olds is only too well known. Two-year-old stakes can have ten, a dozen or more starters, while even the Lorillard, Omnibus and other valuable three-year-old stakes are contended for each year by a much smaller number of horses, and instead of the average ten or twelve starters of ten years ago we now see only about half that number. Thus, taking the situation as a whole, there is certainly a deterioration of staying powers as against speed, ability to carry weight and to run a great number of races when two years old.

The question at once arises, Would the public be satisfied to have a return to the old style of racing? For instance, to that of Boston and Lexington—the former running from 1836 to 1843, and the latter in 1853, 1854 and 1855. The fame of both horses was made in heat racing, a style of racing that is practically at an end. Owners will not enter their horses to run two and perhaps three races for one purse. Trainers, with but few exceptions, know nothing of cooling out a horse and bringing him back to the post again for another hard race in twenty, thirty or forty minutes, according to the distance. While last, but not the least objection, is that a majority of betti g men object to locking up their money in heats, preferring the issue of a single dash. The latter may be an unworthy argument, but it is an important one under the present system of racing, the main support of which is the revenue from the betting ring. That many racegoers like heat races is admitted, but they are almost entirely confined to men who not bet, and it can also be said that there are many who consider heat-racing a cruelty.

It is certain, however, that under the present system of training, with yearlings tied at "quarters" and "three furlongs," and two-year-olds raced in a dozen or more races, we shall never again have a class of four-year-olds or upward that can cover the old cup distance as did Preakness and Springbok at Saratoga, or repeat at four miles as did Ten Broeck, Bushwhacker and Glenmore at Baltimore. The races they ran took place within a period of fifteen years.

Unlike the followers of racing in England, the American has literally no records to fall back on by which he can study up the racing careers of even the horses that ran in the "fifties," and for the first few years at Jerome Park in the "sixties," while, as to a straight set of records from 1870, there are not ten complete sets in this city. In fact, it is easier to get a complete set of English records from about 1760 than an American set from 1870. Thus it is not surprising that the performances of the great grandsires and dams of the American turf are unknown. Only a few weeks ago the writer remarked to a well-known follower of racing that Lexington only ran in all seven races. His surprise was so complete that it was amusing, and from him came the suggestion that perhaps the readers of The World would like a brief synopsis of the career of Lexington and his sire Boston.

The career of Boston, the sire of Lexington, is of more than passing interest to the present day followers of racing. Boston (said to have been named after the famous game of cards of that name, and not as a compliment to the Massachusetts Athens) was foaled in 1833, the property of Mr. John Wickham, of Richmond, Va. He was by Timoleon, out of a sister to Tuckahoe, the grandsire of both being Diomed, the winner of the first English Derby. Under the old system of calculating the age of horses from May 1, Boston really ran once as a two-year-old and twice when three years old. All three were heat races; in fact he never ran in any other style of racing. The first effort was made on April 20, 1836, at Broad Rock, Va., in a race of mile heats, where he "bolted" the first heat. His second race was at Petersburg, Va., in October, when he won at two-mile heats in 4:01 and 4:00, and his third appearance was on November 3, at Hanover Court House, at three-mile heats, which he won in 6:25 and 6:19. Very slow time compared with the present records. It is impracticable to give the whole of Boston's career by races as ran. It can be said, however, that during the eight years that he was in training he ran at Augusta, Ga.; Petersburg, Hanover, Broad Rock, and Alexandria, Va.; Washington, D. C.; Baltimore, Md.; Camden, Trenton, and Hoboken, N. J., and over the Union Course, Long Branch, the results of which are as follows, condensed from B. G. Bruce's "Memoir of Lexington," published by him a few years ago at Lexington, Ky.:

1836—Ran three races, won two, one each at two-mile and three-mile heats; earnings, $700.
1837—Ran four races, won four, all at three-mile heats; best time, 5:50; earnings, $2,640.
1838—Ran and won nine races, including a walk over at three-mile heats; won eight at four-mile heats; was paid $500 each not to start in two other races; best time, 7:54; earnings, $8,900.
1839—Ran nine races and won eight, of which one was at three-mile heats, and seven at four-mile heats; best time, 7:47. Boston was beaten by Portsmouth at two-mile heats for $10,000 a side, earnings, $19,300.
1840—Ran and won seven races, six at four-mile heats; best time, 7:49, and one at three-mile heats in 5:56 and 5:49; earnings $14,700.
1841—Ran in five races; won four at four-mile heats; best time, 7:59, was distanced in one race by John Blount and Fashion; earnings $2,501.
1842—Ran in five races; won three, each at four-mile heats, best time, 7:46. The defeats include the great race with Fashion as best earnings, $2,410.
1843—Started once, and won at three miles; earnings $300.

The race in 1843, when Boston was ten years old, was at Petersburg, Va., when he beat Black Dick in 6:10 and 6:21, the track being very heavy. This ended Boston's racing career, which extended over seven years, in which he started forty-five times, winning forty, his total earnings amounting to $61,200. Thirty of the races were at four-mile heats, nine at three-mile heats, and one at two-mile heats. In addition to the races run in 1841, Boston served forty-two mares. After his match with Fashion, in 1843, he covered Andrewetta and Ironette, and then ran at Camden, N. J., and at Alexandria, Va. When retired from the turf in 1843, Boston was as sound as a new dollar. That he could have won more races is admitted. His owners on several occasions withdrew him at the request of proprietors of racecourses upon representation that his entrance would destroy the sport and disappoint the public.

He made a season at Hanover Court House, Va., in 1843. Also, in Washington or vicinity in 1844, and subsequent years. In 1847 he was sent to Kentucky, where, in that year and 1840 and 1849, he was in service at the farm of E. H. Blackburn (father of United States Senator J. C. S. Blackburn), at Spring Station. He died there in the autumn of 1849, from the indirect effects of a cold contracted during the bad weather while making the trip from Virginia to Kentucky. "Frank Forester" described Boston as "a chestnut with white stockings on both his hind feet, and a white stripe down the face. In other respects than color and marks Boston closely resembles the British phenomenon Harkaway. They have alike prodigious depths of chest, and immensely powerful loins, thighs and hocks. Boston is only a trifle above 15½ hands high, but to the eye seems taller, owing to his immense substance; he is a short-limbed horse, with a barrel rather flat or 'slab-sided' than round, and well-ribbed home, while his back is a prodigy of strength. Though he has occasionally snked, Boston runs on his courage, and is never ridden with spurs."

Of all the great races of the past, none excited greater interest than did the match between Fashion and Boston, run over the Union Course, Long Island, on May 10, 1842. It was for $20,000 a side and was made a sectional affair—North versus South. The attendance was something enormous, the papers of the day making it as large as 70,000 spectators.

A full account was published in the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN last week, but we repeat the summary.

TUESDAY, May 10, 1842—Match, the North vs. the South; $20,000 a side, $5,000 forfeit; four-mile heats.

Bonnetta o' Blne, the dam of Fashion, was bred by Colonel Johnson, who, after running her with success, sold her to Mr. Gibbons. Fashion was foaled in 1837, in Morris county, New Jersey. She was a richly eaten-coated chestnut, standing about 15½ hands high. She first ran in 1840, when she won two races at two-mile heats. In 1841 she won once at two-mile heats, twice at three-mile heats and once at four-mile heats. She was beaten once at two-mile heats, at Camden, N. J., after winning the second heat in 3:52.

After Fashion had beaten Boston she ran in a number of races during 1843 and 1844, with considerable success, besting, among other horses, The Colonel, Blue Dick (the latter in a race of four-mile heats, which took four heats, Fashion winning the first in 7:46, the second was a dead heat in 8:04, Blue Dick won the third heat in 7:53, and Fashion the fourth in 8:23), Donvegan and Marchioness. In 1845 Fashion again raced as the representative of the North in a sectional match, her opponent being the great Alabama mare Peytona, by imp. Glencoe, out of Giantess, by imp. Leviathan. They first ran over the Union Course, Long Island, on May 13, for $10,000 a side, $2,500 forfeit, which race Peytona, ridden by "Barney" Palmer, at 113 pounds, won in two heats, in 7:39 and 7:45. Fashion, then eight years old, was ridden by Joseph Laird, at 123 pounds.

The miles in the heats were run as follows: First heat, 1:54, 1:53, 1:57 and 1:55; in the second heat, 1:58, 1:54, 1:55 and 1:58. In less than two weeks Peytona and Fashion met again at Camden, N. J., on May 28, in the race for the Jockey Club purse of $1,000. It was again a race at four-mile heats, with weights and riders the same as on Long Island. The result was then reversed, Fashion winning in two heats. Time 7:48 and 7:57. The miles were run in 1:56, 1:53, 1:59 and 2:05, and for the second heats in 1:54, 1:55, 1:58 and 2:10. The crowd on the occasion was so great that the stand broke down. The two mares never met again, and Fashion was eventually raced almost to death, and in 1851, when fourteen years old, was bred to Mariner, subsequently to imp. Monarch and Bonnie Scotland. She died while foaling a filly to the latter in 1860. None of her produce proved of special excellence. Her daughter Etiquette was, however, a good brood mare for Mr. Francis Morris, while another daughter, called Young Fashion, was a dam of a number of good horses, by Bonnie Scotland; also Hock Hocking, by Kingmaster, and Three Cheers, by imp. Hurrah, both of which are well known in California.—N. Y. World

Richard Gird's Lucky Purchase—The Outlook.

The racing stock at the Chino Rancho was augmented a year ago by the purchase of Will Crocker and Woolsey from Leland Stanford. Since that time the remarkable record made by Snool, a full sister of Woolsey, has made the prospects for some fast time by Gird's stallion next year very bright. In fact his present owner has been offered a raise of $5,000 on his purchase price, which was $10,000. Woolsey as a two-year-old made a half mile in 1:15, but was not in good shape and has never since been on the track.

Will Crocker, who came down from Palo Alto at the same time, is just about as valuable. Fred Crocker, his brother, made 2:25 as a two-year-old. His dam, Melinche, is by St. Clair, who is the sire of the dam of Manzanita, that made a mile in 2:16 as a four-year-old. This is the best four-year-old record. Albion is another pet of the ranch and made 2:29 as two-year-old, after a single month's training. He is out of Aimee by Messenger Duroc. These three and their progeny are expected to do great things in the future, and if blood is worth anything, they will not disappoint their owner. The well-known Billy Norfolk, by Winter's Norfolk, out of Merrimac, who is now 20 years old and whose get are among the fastest runners in this section, and Idler by Wild Idle, dam Kate Gift, is also a well-known horse, are brilliants in Gird's string. On the Chino, draft included, there are now 900 head of horses. Until a year ago no attention at all was paid to racing stock. Woolsey and Will Crocker were the first thoroughbreds of the kind on the ranch and as it looks now the foundation has been laid for a stable that will rival the Santa Anita.—Los Angeles Tribune.

From L. J. Rose.

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN:—Through an interview with Mr. O. A. Hickok in yours of the 24th, I see that there is always a lingering doubt about the performance of Stamboul at Los Angeles, and that every step of his performance has to be doubly proven. First, the track was said to be short, then when that was by the survey proven correct, then that he had the advantage of the watch. It seems that turf affairs can never be believed except when seen. It is necessary to place the finger in the wound to believe its existence.

This emphasizes the fact, that for "ways that are dark," racing is believed to have the call. The fact that there was a large attendance, at least 4,000 people present and everybody that had a watch was timing and no one heard of one individual who so timed that disputed the time, seems not sufficient. Nor was this crowd of people from Los Angeles only, but all parts of the state and especially San Francisco, were largely represented, and not one of these doubted the fact that Stamboul made 2:15. The doubt has been entertained and talked by people who were not here and did not wish to believe it true. Mr. Ariel Lathrop was one of the timers, in fact was the leading one of the timers and put down the quarter and half which were made in the first heat, first quarter 31, half 1:04. Other timers, for instance Hon. T. D. Mott, made it 31 and 1:04 flat, and no one to my knowledge made it any slower than Mr. Lathrop.

Mr. Ariel Lathrop was one of the timers. It was he that led in saying what the time was and put the figures on the timing board. Mr. Lathrop had all the advantages that could be obtained. He had a good split second hand watch and stopped on every quarter and sat up high enough with nothing intervening to see every foot of track. When this is understood, all persons who know Mr. Lathrop personally will have no doubt about the time as given, to be correct and put all this doubt to rest. Nor was 2:15 the full limit of Stamboul that day. This is evident to every one who saw the race. They all saw that Mr. Maben being a long way ahead in the stretch, he pulled up to save his horse. Whether he could have beaten the stallion record is with me a matter of doubt, for I think he trotted too fast the first part of the mile, that he would have been near it I believe. As to Arab making any contest, there was none, for from the word go to the finish Stamboul drew right away from him and at the quarter pole he certainly led Arab three lengths and I think more. That it was a great surprise to Mr. Hickok and for that matter to me, goes without saying. In fact it looked as if Mr. Hickok could not believe himself for when on the back stretch he gave Arab a few raps with his whip, and he not being able to go away from it convinced him that there was something the matter. Some one suggested to him he boul's ear and break him up, he answered, "how can I get to his ear when he goes right away from me?"

In all the other heats the same condition occurred. Stamboul went away from Arab, and that was the end of the contest.

The race was a great surprise to me. I had no belief that he would beat Arab, and told all that asked me so, although I had expectations for the future. But this race proves that a horse may trot a great race without much work, nor is this the only instance which has proved this fact to me. Ruby, Le Grange and others have trotted good races with absolutely no fast work and only short preparation. That it will knock them off for a week or two is equally certain, but they will come again as did Stamboul at Stockton and San Jose. Stamboul had covered thirty-five miles and been in slow work for four weeks, only having one fast mile in 2:18 on my track. This was all the preparation he had for his race. His next race at Oakland he was not at his best, yet he should have won, perhaps. At Sacramento he was still of less account, and although he lost to Arab at Stockton and at San Jose, yet it was not perhaps the fault so much of Stamboul as the want of strength and perhaps experience of my driver Walter Maben, which all who saw the races understand. At San Jose, however, he was at his best, and that he could have beaten all stallion records under lucky circumstances both on Saturday and again on Monday, the day of the postponement is a certainty to my mind, and my belief is based on these facts. After getting the word, Stamboul and Arab went off like a double team to the half in 1:05, from there out Hickok had to drive Arab, and Stamboul was going well within himself, in fact, Maben found he could draw away from him easily, and, in fact, did draw away a half length, but again took him in hand in order to get him straightened out into the stretch without a break, for the trouble with Stamboul had been all along back to the Los Angeles races, where he had hit his hind pastern and made a sore that, when swinging from the turn to straight work, he feared hitting himself, and he would bear off to the right. He being close to Arab he swerved into his sulky, knocking spokes out of both sulkies, which scared him into a wild break, losing fifty yards or more, and the opportunity was gone. When he was caught he was full of trot, and having rested himself, going around the upper turn and yet going in 1:39 to the three-quarters, he only had to trot the last quarter, which is a fast one, in 34 seconds to have trotted in 2:13, and that he could have done it in 23 seconds I have no doubt.

The next heat they again went to the half in 1:05. Stamboul again made a wild break coming in the stretch; yet Arab had to trot in 2:16 to win, and the next heat Stamboul beat Arab down the stretch with something in hand, when the race was postponed to Monday. Stamboul on Monday was even better than on Saturday, but misfortune followed him. In scoring, Maben, with Stamboul, was a length behind, and did not expect the word, yet the judges said go, and being unprepared, perhaps annoyed and anxious, he let Stamboul go off his feet in one of his disastrous breaks, and he looked out of the race, being, say at least a hundred feet behind, but when he caught he trotted the fastest of his life, and on the backstretch trotted an eighth in 15 seconds, and even with this very bad break reached the three-quarter pole in 1:40, and would have yet beaten Arab but Maben again was unable to keep him from one of his disastrous breaks, which ended the race and his opportunity for this year.

Here Mr. Walter Maben had to go home and Mr. Orrin A. Hickok took charge of Stamboul, and in his hands he made rarely a break, and when he did break it was not disastrous for he caught him every time with scarcely any loss. That very few men could have driven or handled him as well as Mr. Hickok is certain, yet I do not believe that Stamboul was at his best in the National Stallion Stake. That he did not have his usual speed is certain, for the first heat he could not beat Woodnut in 2:17, but he kept improving in the race and the last heat in 2:17 was the easiest heat he trotted. It is amusing what strange belief will be entertained. I was asked by one of the reporters whether I had bought Woodnut, I said, "No, what makes you ask?" He says, "I was told you bought him after the first heat, as you found Woodnut could beat you." Aside from this I have heard that Mr. Holly was paid not to win and like nonsense, and anyone seeing the race must have but little horse knowledge to be able to believe such stuff. It was a great race and both victor and vanquished almost equally share in its glory and honor. It was a race where quality was displayed by the horses and skill by the drivers, and there was as much anxious and earnest endeavor on the part of both Mr. Holly, Mr. Simpson and Hickok as was ever exhibited on a race course. Mr. Hickok labored under disadvantages in taking a horse, knowing almost nothing about him, and with no time for experimenting, and the men are very rare who could have done so well. Yet when he handles him for a season he will show time and trot races much faster than he has yet shown.

Hickok starting Stamboul against time so soon after his race was against his inclination, and he wished me to let him remain with him, and he said he had no doubt about his beating the stallion record. We were too unfortunate in striking a cold, windy day, but I had to go home and I felt nervous about leaving him behind, besides I wish to make a season, and a let up of training is, in my belief, a necessity; besides I feel that I have yet something to show, and have something in reserve for the coming year.

I hope I have not tired out your good nature, and if it is not of sufficient interest, if this Stamboul matter has been written to death, then put this in your waste basket.

Won on a Fowl.

In a race between a zebra and an ostrich, held in Zanzibar recently, the prize was given the rider of the zebra, although the ostrich came in 100 yards ahead. The zebra's jockey claimed that his rival won on a fowl, and the judge sustained him.—Exchange.

A trotter with whose name nearly everybody who reads about the races is familiar is the roan gelding Screwdriver, and the New Hampshire Yankee who owns him recently gave a reporter for a local paper some interesting items in connection with the horse. He was purchased when four months old, $40 being the price paid for him, and has been owned and handled by the present owner ever since. No one else has driven him in a race, and all the training and preliminary work has been done by the same hand, the result being that Screwdriver, now thirteen years old, has a record of 2:24 and can heat it. In preparing for races the plan has been to give the horse ten or twelve miles a day on the road, taking him to the track but once a week, and this plan could be followed to good advantage by many a driver whose horses get so much track work that they are sick and tired of it long before the day of the race arrives. Screwdriver has started

Grim's Gossip.

Ike Weir, the pugilist, has been riding at Clifton under an assumed name.

There is a bad disease prevailing among the horses about Tehama. At least thirty have died.

Lennie Graham of Hayward's, has lost by paralysis one of his well matched team of gray carriage horses.

The stable boys that play ball at the track have abolished the old rule of "over the fence lose the lick."

Billy Hysward says that The Bard is the best horse he ever threw a leg over, with the one exception of Blair Athol.

The Chicago Horseman says that a great many good judges are of the opinion that 2:08½ will be whittled down a notch or two next year.

The well known race horse Rupert, owned by the Freshness Stable, when at home answers to the name of "Bones," owing to his inaptitude to make flesh.

Mr. Robinson, of Sacramento, has for sale a five-year-old mare by Prompter, out of Old St. Clair. The mare has a yearling which has paced a quarter in 0:37½.

A small delegation of Butte County folks visited the track on Tuesday. They were rather unlucky in guessing the winners.

A pet mare belonging to Samuel Hutchinson of Los Guilicos, Sonoma county, had her hind legs broken from a rifle shot fired carelessly by a hunter last week.

Claymore, the winner of the Manchester (England) November handicaps, was the longest shot in the race, he starting at 33 to 1. He is owned by Sir H. De Trafford.

Dry Monopole's full brother has been named Extra Day. If any other son of Glendelg can show as much endurance, speed or gameness as Dry Monopole, he is worth a small fortune.

Genial Billy Florence, the comedian, has been acting as one of the judges at the New Orleans meeting. Billy is nearly as good a horseman as he is an actor, and that is saying a good deal.

Mr. A. J. Cassatt has determined to reduce his stable, and hereafter will not breed on as extensive a scale as heretofore. As a consequence twenty of his brood-mares will be disposed of shortly.

Jay Beach, of Jacksonville, Oregon, says he will have Pricemont by Altamont in the 2:30 list next year. The colt is coming very fast and Mr. Beach feels highly elated in consequence thereof.

It is reported that Geo. Engeman's profit on the Brighton track amounts to $3,000 per day. He runs all the privileges himself and has no book-makers on the track, as they will not come to his terms.

L. Cohnfield, who owned Maxey Cobb when that horse trotted in 2:13½, is once again getting together a string of trotters. Of late he has been in financial difficulties, but seems to be getting on top again.

Dan Dennison, Thos. G. Jones and W. H. Babb went to Enreka on Sunday last, taking with them the following horses: Haidee, Blue Bonnet, Dave Douglass, Kildare, Jack Pot, Applause, Rosa Lewis, Arthur H. and Gladstone.

W. M. Murry, sold to Senator G. Hearst this week the b. c. Almont, by Three Cheers—Question. The price given is quoted at $3,600. Almont, although only two-years-old, is credited with having won a mile race in 1:42½.

King Thomas the now well-known $40,000 yearling, was not given a trial among the rest of Senator Hearst's stable, but was reserved by Matt Allen for a private run, as he did not want any tips to go out about the son of King Ban.

Thursday of this week there was sold in New York, from the stable of the Dwyer Bros., the following well known horses: Tea Tray, Ballaton, Prospect, Hemlock and Paris. The telegraphic message did not mention the prices obtained.

In watching the late stock sales in and about San Francisco, one cannot help coming to the conclusion that good saddle horses are in active demand. They bring fair prices and, in some instances fancy figures have been given for very ordinary stock.

Capt. Sam Brown, of Pittsburg, has had his two horses Blue Wing and Troubadour, sent to his stud farm in Kentucky. With Masterpiece already there, and many excellent brood mares on hand, Capt. Brown has the nucleus for a paying stock farm.

Capt. Cecil Lloyd, a well known artist, has arrived in New York from Europe. The Captain has been making paintings of prominent thoroughbreds while abroad, and already commissions have been given him to produce on canvas the portraits of several eastern horses.

I had a chance to shake hands with Mr. E. Johnston, of Chico, at the Bay District on the last day of the Blood Horse meeting. When "Ese" gets onto a winning horse he makes the bookmakers suffer, and it is rarely that his judgment is wrong.

The Dwyer brothers have two horses which are entered in the three-year-old stakes that have never made a public appearance. There is considerable speculation as to their merits, however, rumor has it that they are very fast.

After Dave Gideon purchased the unbeaten son of King Ban, French Park, he was turned over to Mr. Hyland for treatment, and the latter believes the colt will face the starter next year as well as he ever was. He is being wintered at Jerome Park.

Capt. Sam Brown's stable is wintering in Mobile. Mr. Rogers, the trainer, is already making claims of superiority for various of the horses under his charge, and ventures the assertion that he has all the principle three-year-old stakes at his mercy with Don, by Lisbon—Minnie Brown.

The eastern turf writers are of the opinion that the racing is faster and more honest at Guttenburg than it is at Clifton. At the latter track those in authority fail to see many of the jobs, while at the former, Judge Burke always has his eyes open for any deal that may be put up to rob the public.

Senator Hearst is disposed to purchase Hermit mares if any are procurable, and for that purpose will probably send a commissioner to England to secure any that may be for sale. He is anxious to cross the Hermit blood with his California stallions in hopes that the get may be phenomenal.

Richcreek, the western jockey, has been ruled off by the New Orleans judges, after winning a race, for "attempted" fraud. It seems he tried all he could to pull his mount, but when the eyes of the judges were looking down upon him he gave Eight-to-Seven his head and the game little horse won by a short nose.

Elkwood's trainer now denies that the last suburban winner has broken down, and says he will be trained again for next season's work. A kick on the horse's leg caused him to be turned out, and he is now fully recovered. He will be exercised over the snow at Saratoga this winter, and make his first appearance at Brooklyn in the spring.

The BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN tenders congratulations to Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Campbell, who were united in marriage at Yuba City on Tuesday of last week. Mrs. Campbell was formerly Miss Ida Harkey, daughter of ex-sheriff Harkey of Sutter county, an enthusiastic horseman whose face is familiar on almost every track in the State.

If the breeding of Sir Modred, Darebin, Cheviot and Mariner (Oatcake) to American mares proves a success, there will be great competition among the wealthy breeders as to which of them will be able to purchase Commotion or Malua Commotion was a great favorite on the Australian tracks and our antipodian cousins will hardly like to part with him.

Mr. Michael Dwyer is reported to be looking about for a property to lease in New Jersey. He has had his eye on the old Secaucus track for some time and is now prepared either to build it up again or he would prefer to get a lease of the fair grounds at Waverly and lengthen the present course to a mile. Which ever he gets will be ready in the early spring.

Friars Balsam, the English crack two-year-old of 1887, was the winter favorite for the Derby but went to pieces early in the spring, due to an accident. He has had three operations performed, in the last a piece of bone being removed from his jaw. The work was successful and it is said he will run as well as ever next season. Sir F. Johnson has refaced $75,000 for him.

Duff Gordon, lately purchased by Matt Byrnes for Mr. Haggin, is a b. g. foaled May 3, 1881, 15½ hands, sired by Happy Medium, sire of Maxey Cobb, 2:13½, dam Lady Penistan, by Rysdyk's Hambletonian. He is an exceptionally fine looking and nice driver. While not having entered the 2:30 list, still it is known that he can beat it almost any time and by many seconds.

On November 23rd Johnny Murphy drove the b. g. Governor Hill, at Fleetwood Park, to try to beat Steve Maxwell's two-mile record 4:49½. The track was frozen in places and far from being fast. The first mile was completed in exactly 2:18 but the speedy son of Star Edmund was unequal to the task he passing under the wire the second time in 4:52½. There was $250 a side wagered on the result.

A lady was overheard at the Bay District Track lately, speaking to a friend about horses. Said she, "Some mares are just as bad as young mothers, they want to show all visitors the baby. Now there was my mare Polly, as soon as her foal was born last spring, no one could go into the paddock but she had to bring up her colt for inspection, and she got to be a regular nuisance."

Rody Patterson, a well known Eastern driver, will make an effort to convert the famous young pacer Bessemer into a trotter. He thinks there will be little or no trouble in doing so, and feels assured the horse will be good enough for the 2:20 class during the next years campaign. Bessemer is by Voltaire, 2:20½, dam the Mambrino Chief mare Portice out of a daughter of Concord.

The Australian mail brings news of the death of St. Albans, the premier thoroughbred sire of the colonies. St. Albans was by Blair Athol, out of Pandora, by Cotherstone. He was bred in England and sold as a yearling at the Middle Park sale in 1871 to an Australian gentleman. Since he has stood in Australia St. Albans has sired two winners of the Melbourne Cup, Sheet Anchor and Malua, besides such antipodean racing cricks as Coronet, Ringwood, Meteor, Lady Betty, Blink Bonny, Stockwell, etc.

The N. Y. Sporting World says: As the result of an argument between several trainers at Coney Island yesterday, regarding the ability of horses to swim, it is probable several match races will be arranged between racers now at the island. Coney Island creek is to be examined by a committee of the trainers, and if it is found to be suitable for the purpose the races will be swam there in the near future. In arranging the preliminaries for such contests some queer questions will come up for decision.

Bryant and Scroggan, owners of the great colt Proctor Knott, have had a formal separation, and have divided their joint ownings, except as to Proctor Knott and Come to Taw. These two, unless sold, will be raced next year. It is a pity that Sam Bryant cannot own the Futurity winner without being hampered by such an old fossil as Scroggan. A man who would lay $5,000 against his own horse simply to make sure of winning a small sum, is not the kind of person that big-hearted Sam should have as a business associate.

In speaking of yearling trials the Spirit of the Times says that one of the best colts by all odds is a son of Warwick, from Lorilla, by Mortemer, grandam imp. Refreshment. He was purchased at the Haggin sale for a trifle under $2,000, is owned by Mr. Wm. Jennings, of Baltimore, and gives every indication of being able to hold his own in the best company. The best of Mr. Withers' lot is said to be a colt by Uncas—Chamois, and if signs are not untrue will turn out to be the speediest youngster ever bred at Brookdale. I hope to see him carry the "all black" to many a well-merited victory.

Did you see that courtly old gentleman on Kearney street Monday? His hair as white as snow, full beard, and mustache to match, heavy wrinkles in the high massive forehead, sharp but kindly features, with a more than average intelligent face. His brain is clear as ever, but father time has dimmed the bright, clear eye of the past, still seventy years seems to hang lightly on his shoulders, for he is, even now, as straight as an arrow. A bluish grey checked suit, black derby hat, highly polished shoes, the most fashionable color of gloves, turn down collar and black tie completed the outward attire of Mr. Richard Ten Broeck at one time America's representative horseman.

I had a very pleasant chat with Mr. D. S. Fraser of Petaluma this week, who feels supremely happy in the possession of two Anteeo fillies and a Director colt. One of the fillies is out of Nettie Bennett, she by Alexander, granddam Jennie Shepherd by Belmont. Jennie is the dam of Nell Patchen 2:27, and Flora Shepherd 2:30. She now has a colt by her side sired by Dawn 2:19½, he by Nutwood 2:18½. The other filly is out of Clara by Speculation, granddam Dollie Duncan by Wagner. She was bred to Director but proved without foal and will be sent to him again next season or to his son Secretary. Secretary is also the property of Mr. Fraser and it is claimed that as a two-year-old he trotted a quarter in 34. Four thousand dollars has been offered and refused for Secretary, the owner feeling assured he is worth a great deal more. Munro Sanlsbury, Esq., in a letter to Mr. Fraser says that without doubt three months training will make Secretary worth $10,000.

"Raphce" has been kind enough to forward me some gossip from Madera which is very acceptable. At the Fashion stables there, B. M. Downey has five or six horses which are given road exercise, with an occasional spin upon the local track. Mr. Cox has an exceedingly fine chestnut mare by Steinway, dam by Abbottsford, which gives promise of a high turn of speed, and also a bay filly by Cresco, dam by The Moor. W. S. Chalmers, Esq., has a jet black colt by Thad Stevens, dam a Lodi mare, a thoroughbred of rare quality. Mr. C. Curtin prides himself on possessing a handsome roadster. He is by Plumus, sire of Ashley, 2:23, dam by Belle Alta. The same gentleman also has a two-year-old by LeGrand, sire of Grandee, dam by Atherton, sire of Arab; second dam by Dave Hill Jr.; third dam by Williamson's Belmont. Although of tender age, he served twelve mares this season, all of whom seem to be in foal. Several gentlemen interested in horse-racing are talking of building a new track, the old one being only 600 yards. An association of the kind in Madera will enhance the sport, and ultimately I hope to see them announce a regular meeting.

Thursday morning of last week there arrived in New York, on board the Egyptian Monarch, the thoroughbred stallion King Galop, which was lately purchased by the English representative of Mr. S. S. Howland, and by him forwarded to America. King Galop stands fully 16 hands, is a magnificent, well-proportioned horse, a beautiful bay in color, and is by the great Galopin, his dam being by King Tom out of Sunshine. While in England I was given a peep at him in his stable when he was running under the colors of Sir George Chetwynd last year, and found the colt both kind and gentle, and one worth going a long distance to see. He is now three years old, and has faced the starter three times. His first appearance was in a maiden plate of 100 guineas over the Brethby stake-course, three-quarters of a mile, at the Newmarket October meeting, in which he failed to get a place, there being fourteen starters. His second essay was for the Rutland Plate, another three-quarter dash, at the same meeting, when he was again unplaced. The third and last attempt as a winner was in a five furlong race over the Rous course at the second October meeting at Newmarket, in which he was again unlucky.

A friend writing to me from Chicago says, that some of the minor western racing associations are dissatisfied with the raising of weights by the Turf Congress, and gives as a reason that wealthy men will be enabled to buy all the large colts, the only ones fit to carry the heavy weights. Also, that they will be enabled to engage all the heavy-weight jockeys, and thus bar out the poorer members from having an equal chance with the more fortunate ones. From this far-away standpoint I am inclined to doubt the correctness of the above reasoning, and fancy that before the snow flies next winter, all interested will feel that the change was for the best. It is hardly to be supposed that the wealthy gentlemen who are interested in horse-racing are going to form a trust and buy every large thoroughbred that is offered for sale, the idea is simply preposterous, and as to the jockeys, the increased weights will add to their numbers so rapidly that it would be a very unprofitable affair for any syndicate to attempt any such scheme. There will be Kisclands and Proctor Knotts left for the poorer buyers even after wealthy patrons of the turf have bid fancy prices for a King Thomas or a Tea Tray.

There are horses on the Jersey tracks which bear the enphionous names of Don't Know, Can't Tell and No More. Many would-be patrons of the turf who are unable to attend the meetings congregate at the pool-rooms in New York during the progress of the races, and listen to the "caller" as he described the various positions of the horses while the heat is being run. The Sportsman says that one day last week a visitor requested the caller to repeat who was ahead at the half, and the answer speedily came, "Don't Know." Apparently not a whit mystified the questioner wanted to know who was ahead at the three-quarters, and the answer he got was "Can't Tell." One would have thought that this would have silenced all further inquiry, but on being asked about the race in the stretch, the caller blurted out "No More," and after a brief interval, as if to emphasize and accentuate his apparent rudeness, he turned to the individual who had asked about the progress of the fray, and, with a leer, let off in rapid succession, "Don't Know, Can't Tell, No More. Next," and straightway rung up his telephone for the odds on the next race. The last race, on the last day of the Sheephead meeting, was won by a horse bearing the very appropriate name of "Now or Never."

A letter informs us that Matt Byrnes, acting for J. B. Haggin, Esq., purchased at public sale last Wednesday in New York the well known roadster Duff Gordon, the price paid being $1,325. It seems that Jimmy McLaughlin also wanted the horse and the bidding was very spirited between Matt and Mac. At the same sale Mayor-elect H. J. Grant sold his famous trotter Kenilworth (2:18½) to John Scannell for $3,000. Mr. Grant is an enthusiastic horseman but his new duties will not permit him time to indulge in his favorite sport, so he has sold out his entire stable of which Kenilworth was the best. Sweepstakes (2:24) by Kentucky Prince, was bought by the old veteran Gabe Case, the purchase price being $1,400. Gabe will use him on the road and also to drive into town when he wants to call at the Hoffman or the Astor.

Two old-time trotters, Honest Harry (record 2:22½), sold for $196, and Darby (record 2:16½) was knocked down at $327.50. A gentleman present offered $12,000 one year ago for Darby but could not get him for that price. He was afterward sold for $15,000. Robert Bonner has made the first sale of stock from his Tarrytown stables, selling Cartidge, a black two-year-old for $4,000, and $2,000 for a nut-brown Lucy Cuyler weanling.

Fourth Day—Blood Horse Association.

Officers of the day: Messrs. McClure, Wolfskill and Hearst; timers: Messrs. Hickok and Carroll; starters: Messrs. Depoisier and Magher.

Baldwin's day! Yes, it might really be called Baldwin's day, for he captured three of the five events, and, luckily for the others interested, he had no entries in either the first or last race, for in his lucky streak he might have taken every purse. There was a good attendance considering the coldness of the weather, but the ladies balcony was not patronized as extensively as on the three former days of the meeting. As usual, the books, auction and mutual pools were the centre of attractions for those who indulge in "backing their fancy," and a large amount of money must have changed hands on the different results. There are those who only visit the race track occasionally and follow the betting of the favorites, without knowing anything whatever of the sport, and if perchance the horse carrying their money be beaten a cry of fraud is immediately made. On Tuesday just such an occurrence happened in the first race; Notidle was a hot favorite and she was played heavily by the bettors although there was a strong tip out that Index had more than a passing show. Still, the bulk of the public money went in on the favorite, and she was beaten out by half a length. A rumour at once gained ground that Notidle had been pulled, yet the fact is that the jockey made a mistake in not giving the mare her head soon enough, and, as a consequence, lost more money probably, in conjunction with his friends, than any other coterie on the track. There were four starters, the Santa Anita Stable entries being scratched. Mr. Baldwin preferring to have his horses go in the latter race, Jack Brady was reserved for the final, while Oro and Black Pilot were marked on the card as doubtful starters, and did not put in an appearance. Mr. Depoisier got the quartette off all in a bunch, the coal-colored Index jumping to the front with a fine burst of speed, which was checked in a degree by his rider, who pulled the horse to save him. Elwood was a close second, Welcome and Notidle being together at his flank. As they passed the wire Notidle was fourth, the others being in the order given above. As far as the half-mile pole they kept their relative positions, where Notidle was let out a link, in short order taking second place, Elwood showing plainly that he had had enough, fell to the rear, beaten. As they passed the three-quarter mark Index looked as though he wanted to quit, but Holloway eased him just a trifle, and he responded gamely as the pair of leaders rounded into the homestretch, Notidle being then about a length to the lead. The black now made a spurt, and at the seven furlong post was fully three lengths ahead. It was here that Hennessy commenced to ride, and at every jump he lessened the distance between Index and Notidle, but he had not started in soon enough, and lost the race by half a length. If he had turned the mare loose at the head of the stretch he surely would have won, but then bad judgment has lost many a race.

The second race had three out for the money, Flood Tide, Caliente and Bessie Shannon. When the word was given it was to a good start, Monahan on Caliente at once taking a rear position, the other two being neck and neck. At the quarter the Santa Anita colt closed up with his competitors, and the three had it ding-dong, hammer and tongs away around into the turn, where Bessie Shannon bid the others a pleasant journey and fell away behind, the pace being altogether too hot for her. Caliente, after a drive, forged ahead, and as he turned into the stretch was an easy two lengths to the good. All the way down home Hart tried his best to carry Flood Tide to the front, but the son of Flood was not speedy enough, and failed to close up the gap. Caliente won as he liked by a couple lengths of daylight between himself and Flood Tide, Shannon being fully fifty yards behind the second.

The Triboulet Stakes was of course the event of the day, the Baldwin entries being rank favorites against the others. When the horses had received the usual parading in front of the stand, they were taken to the backstretch, where Mr. T. F. Magher was to give them the send-off. After several ineffectual attempts were made to get them away, it was discovered that jockey Cook, on Mollie McCarty's Last, had a broken stirrup, so he returned to the stables and dismounted without asking the judges if he might have permission so to do, and Mr. McClure had to go from the judges' stand to where the horse was to find out what the trouble amounted to. When matters had been arranged to suit all concerned, the remainder of the jockeys being nearly frozen with the long wait, the flag fell, with Moses B. showing his nose in front, Canny Scot second, Laura Gardner third, the balance of the field bunched close up. Haslett had evidently made up his mind that Moses B. had gone enough in him to make a fight from end to end, so he kept the big chestnut well to the fore. As they passed under the wire the first time around, the positions were the same as given above, but immediately afterwards Laura Gardner changed places with Canny Scot, Susie S. being a close fourth. On the backstretch Canny Scot once more headed Laura Gardner, and so continued until well into the turn, where Los Angeles took third place. From the head of the stretch it looked like a foregone conclusion for Moses B., as he was full of running, but as they neared the draw-gate Monahan gave Los Angeles her head, and the game little daughter of Glenelg in four strides headed the leader, landing the Triboulet Stakes for her owner by half a length. Although the time made was not fast, it was a splendid race, Moses B. surpassing his most ardent admirers.

For the fourth event Daisy D. was thought to be a sure winner, but she disappointed her friends in a sad manner, never showing in front once during the race. It seems somewhat strange to the critical observer that Griette should have been overlooked by the knowing ones, for she has stamped herself a mare of rare quality in the eastern handicaps this year, and it is a well known fact that she is perfectly at home with 115 pounds up at any distance from seven-eighths of a mile to a mile and a quarter. In addition to this, the Santa Anita stables never start an entry unless there is more than an even chance for the money, which should have been tip enough for the ordinary taker of odds. Daisy D., who is in foal, did not like the cold cutting wind, and it is probable that she had her last race. Six shivering, shivering jockeys on their mounts faced the starter, and after wasting some time, got off well together, the colors of Extract showing a slight advantage. Before reaching the quarter Edelweiss was piloting her field, Extract being second, any one of the remainder being able to touch the second horse, so close were they together. No change occurred until they entered the stretch, where Griette came from out of the ruck and in a few strides had her field beaten, winning in a common canter by at least three lengths. Edelweiss should have had second place but Hazlett let up on the mare at the gate, while Monahan on J. M. R. bringing his mount through with a rush got the coveted honor by a short nose.

In the next race Coloma could not lose, that is, if you listened to the tips floating round the track it was a moral certainty he would win, and so it proved one of Father Bill Daly's morals, neither one, two or three, yet Coloma should have won. That he has the speed no one doubts, but jockeys have to obey orders, and the owner of the chestnut colt thinks that his horse must be in front from first to last, and therein he makes a mistake, for if Coloma had had the speed in the homestretch that he was made to display in the first quarter, nothing in the race could have beat him. However, he was pumped out so soon that his chances were gone before the half mile post was reached, Jack Brady accompanied the leader as a good second to the half, where he displaced the favorite who fell back into the ruck, Fannie F. trailing away behind. White Cloud now moved forward, and by a steady piece of work finally took the lead just as they all came into view at the beginning of the homestretch. Hitchcock moved along gradually on the big pinto, Welcome and Nerva thundering behind him, but neither had the speed to overcome the two lengths by which he won, Welcome being second and Nerva third. The track was rather lumpy and easily three seconds slow, still with this disadvantage the sport was very enjoyable and gave satisfaction to all except those who lost their money.

Bay District Track.

Officers of the day—Judges H. C. Airhart, F. Vanghan, C. V. Tupper; Timers, O. Hickok, R. T. Carroll, Gen. W. H. Brown; Starter, Lee Shaner; Secretary and weighing clerk, Harry Lowden.

Thursday afternoon a small attendance, considering the good card, assembled at the Bay District Track, many of the "regulars" evidently being satiated with the numerous meetings lately held. A better day could not have been desired, and those who were present felt fully repaid for the trouble taken in going. The betting arrangements were as usual, but the money was not as plentiful as on former occasions. The Judges called up the jockeys before each race and gave them instructions, but owing to the fearful racket made by persons manipulating a gambling wheel, it was impossible for those in the reporter's stand to make out what was said. Mr. Airhart was kind enough to repeat, after the races, to a representative of the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN what he said from the stand. In substance, it was that they were out to race and not simply to air their horses, and each was expected to try and win. If the judges should see anything that looked suspicious, jockey, owner and horse would be ruled off. Some little time was consumed prior to the start in the first race, Murphy who had to ride for the McCarty Bros., not being on hand. When he finally did arrive he was hurried into the pig skin and saved his mount by a few seconds only, as the "irrepressible Dan" was tripping to ride Tom Daly himself. He had backed the entry quite heavily, and was determined to have a run for his money, and also wanted to find out if Daly was good enough for the next suburban. Seven fairly good ones faced Mr. Lee Shaner who had been deputed to give them the word. When the start was effected, Al. Farrow and Jack Brady were slightly in the lead, but the latter fell to second place almost immediately. As they passed the stand Farrow was first, Brady second, with Index a good third, the rest being well up. At the quarter, the pale blue jacket and green sash of the McCarty stable showed well to the fore, but it was only momentary as before the half was reached Farrow and Brady had again collared Daly who at once drew away from the balance of the field. It seemed as though the two were going to have the fight all to themselves, so fast did they come around the turn, but the heavy track caused the two leaders to slacken the killing pace, and the rest were enabled to come into the stretch with still a slight show for any in the ruck that might have enough reserve left. Haslett on Oro, evidently thought he saw a chance for he attempted to close up the gap between himself and the two leaders, but it was no good to try, they were too speedy for the son of Norfolk, Farrow being by far and away a better horse than he was on the race days of last week. As they came under the wire it was Al. Farrow first, Jack Brady second and Oro third. Welcome came home as the riders were dismounting from the horses.

The winner of the former race having been entered at the selling price of $2,000, he was put up in accordance with rule, but no one saw fit to bid on him, so the half-mile and repeat horses were rung up. Minnie R. being scratched, the old time favorite Johnny Grey was put in to make the field of five. Betting was brisk in this race, Daisy D. and Edelweiss bringing even money in the auctions. As the word was given Edelweiss showed her nose in front, being nearly lapped by Daisy D. As they rounded into the turn White Cloud made the running, and in short order cut down the two favorites, Hitchcock bringing the pints with such determination that he was never headed, and won easily in 49 1/2, Edelweiss second, with Daisy D. a close third. On the termination of this heat, betting changed considerably, the field bringing more than the two former favorites combined. A very long delay occurred at the starting post, Mr. Shaner being determined that each should have an equal chance, and fully half an hour was taken up before they got off. Johnny Gray, White Cloud and Minnie R. cutting out the work from the jump, made a hot race of it to the top of the stretch, White Cloud again showing his superiority by taking the lead at that point, and came away as he liked. Daisy D. ran the best she knew how, but was never in it with the leader, gaining second place however, Edelweiss being third.

The third race was for a purse of $300, a mile and a quarter handicap. Moses B. on his performance against Los Angeles last Saturday was stamped a hot favorite, he bringing in the pools as much as all the others combined. The favorite and Coloma acted so badly at the post that it was nearly dark before the starter sent them off. When the flag fell Coloma was in the lead, Laura Gardner second, with Welcome a good third. Before they passed the judges' stand Moses B. had moved up from last to third place, supplanting Welcome. At the quarter post the three leaders were almost nose and nose, Coloma being forced to show himself in front before the half mile was reached, Moses B. and Laura Gardner filling second and third place respectively. Welcome was again urged to do her best, and came up to within half a length of Coloma, the two making a determined race for it around the turn. At the three-quarters Laura Gardner developed a burst of speed that carried her into the stretch leading; and notwithstanding all that Haslett could do it was impossible to beat the chestnut, she winning a grand race by at least two lengths; Coloma was second with Moses B. and Canny Scott making a severe finish for third, the latter being beat by a nose.

To much cannot be said for the management, everything being conducted in a systematic manner. The fourth race was postponed on account of darkness and will be placed on the card for next Tuesday. If the attendance will warrant it, races will be given two days each week during the winter.

Captain W. B. Collier of Caliatoga will soon reach home with thirty-three fine Percherons for his ranch in Lake County. He is bringing them by Palace car from St. Louis. They are principally descended from his noted horse Caesar that was bought for $5,000 in England. Captain Collier has more than once paid $1,500 for a Percheron brood mare, and his present shipment show the superiority that one would expect from the progeny of animals worth such prices as that.

Seven of the new comers to the 2:30 list this year have also beaten 2:20, that being a remarkable showing, and one never equaled. The names of the animals are as follows: Brown, by Combat, 2:18 1/2; Geneva S., by Abdallah Mambino, 2:19 1/2; Guy, by Kentucky Prince, 2:12; Juneau, by Tremont, 2:28, 2:18 1/2; Maggie E., by Nutwood, 2:18 1/2; Mount Morris, by Smuggler, (2:15 1/2), 2:19 1/2; William, by Van Werner Horse, 2:18 1/2.

Trotters Of Former Days.

"How did I become a professional horseman? There is nothing remarkable in the story, but I'll give it to you," said Hiram Smith to a Sporting World reporter.

"I was working for a paper manufacturer at Franklin, N. H. I had always been fond of horses and handy with them, and, learning this, my employer gave me the job of looking after his horses. This suited me exactly, and when he bought a big, sorrel gelding that showed speed I was delighted to work over him and to speed him. He showed so well after a bit that Warren Daniels matched him for $25 a side against a gray gelding owned by a doctor in Laconia. Mr. Daniels and the doctor were great friends and constantly chaffed each other about their horses. After the match was made Mr. Daniels told me that he wanted me to drive Sorrel Dan in the race, and, though I felt nervous enough about it, I consented. When the day came around I had no one to help me, so I hitched Sorrel Dan to an old straight axle sniky, weighing 80 to 90 pounds, loaded on a few things I thought I might need, and started for the track, which was sixteen miles away. The horse was a big, powerful fellow, over 16 hands high and quite handsome, and he jogged over very easy. As to the race, it was all my way. Each of us drove our horses for all there was in him, and there were no rules to restrict yelling, we howled like Comanche Indians. I won in straight heats, but no matter how far ahead I was I yelled at my horse, put on my whip and reeled him along for all he was worth. I got a record of 2:50, and then drove back the sixteen miles the same day, and when I jogged into Franklin I felt so proud that there wasn't a pair of breeches in the village big enough for me.

"This success at the start, following my strong fancy for the trotters, settled the business for me, probably prevented me from owning a paper mill myself some day."

The cork having thus been extracted from his bottled-up experience, Hiram was easily led to speak of some of the trotters he handled in earlier years. "There was Queechy Maid," said he, "a bay mare, 15.2 hands, by Ballard's Cassius M. Clay Jr., dam by the Morse Horse. She was very fast, and had it in her to trot in 2:18. She was one of the meanest I ever drove. She pulled like a steam tug, and she was disposed to pace. Whenever she broke she would catch in pace, and she wouldn't trot until she was pulled to a stand still. However, by patient work I got her into shape, and won some good races with her. Indeed, I won eight races in succession without a break, and thought I had her cured of her meanness. For the ninth race I had a party of ladies on hand to see me win with her, but that seemed to break her all to pieces. She left her feet in the first heat, and she never did catch—in fact I don't believe she has caught yet. Mr. Ballard sold her, after I gave her a 2:25 mark, to Mr. Joseph Harker, for $6,000. Mr. Harker thought he had a world beater, and entered her through the Grand Circuit in 1876. She started at Buffalo, Rochester and Utica, but never trotted a step and got the flag each time. They took her on Hartford, and in disgust sold her back to us for $1,000. When she was returned to me her mouth was in a terrible condition, and her cheeks were cut back so far that when she drank the water would squirt out at the side of her head.

"Really the greatest race horse I ever drove was the gray mare Noontide, by Harold, dam by Pilot Jr, bred exactly like Maud S. She had unlimited speed, and I drove her to her record, 2:20½, at Hartford, in June, 1880. I was hampered by her owner, who wanted to keep her in the 2:25 class, but 2:20½ was no mark for her. On the morning of the day that she made her record I drove her easily in 2:16, and I believe she could have made as fast a mile as was ever trotted. She was the best trotting race horse I have ever seen, but one. She would carry a great burst of speed, say for a quarter, until she tired. She would not break naturally, but as quick as she began to come back to me I had only to take up one rein and she would make a jump or two—not enough for to be noticed or for the judges to kick about, and then she would catch and give me another fast quarter. She would always finish like an express train if I would break her just before she came into the homestretch. Her owner was very mad about it when I gave her the 2:20½ record, but she went lame soon after, and if she had not had the record her value as a brood mare would have been far below what she brought.

"Goldsmith Maid used to make the same kind of break to save herself, but did it without suggestion from her driver, and probably because she knew enough. Noontide wouldn't break, but she would come back to her driver, and so let him know what she wanted. If she had not gone lame 2:03½ would not now be the best record.

"I said Noontide was the best race horse but one I have ever handled, and I'll tell you about that one. Nearly twenty years ago a gentleman, whose horses I handled, was looking for a mate to a bay gelding he had. We saw a team, a bay and a gray, come in drawing a stage and he liked the bay so well for a mate to his horse that he bought them both. The bay was a good horse and won the county purse that year. The gray, however, was the one I speak of. He was flea bitten, but carried a superb mane and tail and was very handsome. Of course we could learn nothing of his breeding. We called him Bristol Bill. The first year I drove him in twelve races and won them all. The next year I started him thirteen times and won eleven races. He got a record of 2:29 over a half mile track, and that was about the limit of his speed, but he could start out to-day at 12 o'clock and trot a beat every half hour until noon to-morrow, and every heat would be within a second of 2:30. Of course he would have to stop to eat, but that was all he wanted. His owner refused $6,500 for him. He trotted a race a week for two long seasons.

"Another good one that I had was the roan gelding Jim, by Lambert, he was a nervous fellow and a bad kicker, but very fast, and with proper handling he was very reliable. I started him at Springfield, Mass., in September, 1881, against a big party of good ones, including Tariff, Arthur, Capitola, George A. and several others, and I had no idea of winning. The night before the race John Turner came to me at the hotel and said: 'Hiram, how fast can you go?' 'I can go about 2:27—perhaps 2:26,' I said. 'That won't do,' said Turner, 'you must go in 2:23 to beat Tariff.' They were keeping the pool rooms open all night then, and Turner put in a lot of money on Tariff, but the next day I won in straight heats, the best one 2:24½. That night at supper Turner wouldn't speak to me, but in the evening he asked me why I didn't tell him I had such a horse. I replied, 'You knew as much as I did about what he could do yesterday, John.' I think he always thought I had deceived him, but the fact was the horse surprised me.

"The day of that race, by the way, was a very strange one, and every horseman that was there will remember it—a queer sort of storm was brewing, and the sky took such a color that everything looked green. It was thick, too, and one could hardly see across the track. Perhaps this was what made Turner bet as he did.

"Another good thing that I had was the black gelding Richmond, by General Lyon, dam the Smith mare, by Old Morrill. He was a little, fine-drawn, light-limbed fellow, but a good actor, and had plenty of speed. I timed him over the half-mile track at Concord in 2:24, and I drove him in eight races, winning all but one. He trotted in some races three years ago, when he must have been nearly twenty years old.

"One of the best youngsters I ever handled was the bay gelding Colonel Pike, by Ballard's Cassius M. Clay Jr. He was 16 hands high, when in February, 1873, he was bought for $200, a big, awkward-looking colt. In September of that year he trotted over Mystic Park in 2:29½, beating a big field of good horses, and was sold on the track for $5,000 to George Rogers of Salem.

"About that time I had Belle Dean, a little black mare by General Lyon, and she was a great race winner. I started out with her in Montreal, and won two races there, taking out $1,500 in gold from the pool-box. Gold was worth about 140 then, and when I cashed in on this side of the line I was very pleasantly surprised to find that I had won $2,100. Such things don't happen to a horseman often enough to get monotonous. That little mare won a big share of all the races she started in, and was a very valuable piece of property. I also had Defiance, a black stallion, by General Lyon, dam the Hoyt mare, by the Litchfield. When four years old he trotted in 2:34, and his owners, a couple of New Hampshire farmers, believed they had the greatest horse in the world, and refused $10,000 for him.

"Of course these that I have mentioned are but a few of those I have had, and I might tell you stories till midnight about Billy D., that went fast with a running mate, and Blanche, and Myrtle and a hundred others, not to speak of those of later years, that every one remembers. In those old times there was plenty of money to be won with a reliable trotter that could go anywhere from 2:30 to 2:40. For instance, I had Lady Kirk, a well behaved bay mare that had no great speed, but was reliable, and for two years I won steadily with her, but did not mark below 2:40. For a contrast last season, I started out on the Grand Circuit with a horse that I thought was a safe winner in the 2:25 class, for I knew he could put in his heats about 2:21, but in the first race they trotted in 2:17, and I had no business there. It takes a very fast horse to win anything nowadays.

"The truth is our trotters are better bred and better trained than they were twenty years ago, and therefore would go faster naturally, but in addition, the mechanical appliances have improved as much as have the horses. The tracks are better and more scientifically laid out. In old times we wouldn't have ventured to drive in a fifty pound sniky, and we had plenty of fool notions that put needless work on the horse. But the world moves, and with it the science of handling horses and equipping them has advanced. Still I believe that the greatest part of the gain in speed has resulted from the better breeding of the horses. In old times, any horse, however much of the dung hill there might be in his breeding, would be taken up, if he had a turn of speed, and developed into the race horse. He had no fast miles in his work, for his inbred blood, as a rule, left him without the courage to go them, though he might show fast fractions of a mile, and in a race with horses as underbred as himself he had an equal chance to win. The addition of choice thoroughbred blood has changed all that of late, and no one will buy or care to have a trotter that is not game to the backbone, and others rarely reach the hands of prominent drivers.

"In the time of Hiram Woodruff, for instance, a trotter was not only worked to harden and develop his muscles, but he was sweated under blankets until he was drawn down to a gaunt razor like appearance that was accepted as the proper condition for a trotter. That idea is not held by any of the leading trainers to-day. On the contrary, the usual and approved design is to keep every ounce of flesh consistent with the work necessary to harden the horse. Any one that goes through the Grand Circuit will notice that when they start at Cleveland the horses will look comparatively fat, and will go faster then when they reach Springfield gaunt and fine drawn."

A Telegram Astray.

The Chicago Herald gives a story of how a horseman's telegram misadvent, roused the wrath of a train despatcher:

The extraordinary action of Trainmaster Garver in clearing the tracks between Wichita and Mulvane in order to come on a special engine to whip Frank Lindwall, a train despatcher, has been explained to the Chicago Herald by the Wichita correspondent of that paper. According to this explanation Lindwall did send Garver a most insulting telegram, but wholly through a mistake in manipulating the switches on his key board. Lindwall was only working temporarily in place of a sick operator, and the mistake was one which could easily occur without special blame to him. Since the explanation has been made, however, wonder at Mr. Garver's extraordinary haste in traveling to Wichita has greatly lessened. The telegram which Garver received was intended for another, and while quite harmless in itself, read by Garver it had a most offensive bearing.

The true cause of the assault, it is claimed, was ascertained only to-day by Billy Galvin and Fred Ladin, two well-known horsemen, calling at the Western Union Telegraph office to ascertain why a telegram which the latter had sent to the former had not reached its destination. It appears that Galvin was at Winfield, Kan., negotiating for the purchase of a trotting mare named Jennie Marvin, an animal that has shown considerable speed at the county fairs in Southern Kansas during the past season, but not having sufficient knowledge of the mare he had telegraphed to Fred Ladin, who is remarkably well posted and could probably give not only the pedigree but the past history of every race-horse in Kansas. Galvin had received the following telegram from Wichita.

Mr. Galvin had no reason to doubt that the telegram was from Ladin, who would naturally not wish to put his name to a telegram affecting the reputation of a horse, with the possibility of making enemies for himself. Galvin accordingly purchased Jennie Marvin, paying $2,000 for her. He tried her speed the day following, however, and found that she could not beat a three-minute gait, and on passing too near her heels, when she balked in the second heat, he had received a kick that knocked him senseless. Subsequent information showed that Jennie Marvin was anything but "all right," and while she held a reputation for making some very fast spurts, owing to her bad temper and other causes she was almost worthless on the track. He came up to Wichita to get even with Ladin, but the latter denied the telegram so strenuously that Galvin postponed his intended vengeance until inquiries could be made at the telegraph office. The telegram which Fred Ladin sent was found in the office, and was wholly different from the one which Galvin received.

After reading the true telegram Galvin went away satisfied with Ladin, but breathing threats of a suit for damages against the Western Union Telegraph Company. The agent of the latter in looking the matter up further, discovered that the telegram sent by Ladin to Galvin had been sent all right, but had been deflected from its true course somewhere in the city. Having heard of the Garver-Lindwall trouble he assumed there might be some connection between this and the disappearance of the Ladin-Galvin telegram. He at once called Garver up and found this to be the case.

Lindwall had, it was learned, received a telegram to be delivered to Miss Jennie McPhee, a most estimable young lady of Anthony, in this State, who is said to be the intended bride of the trainmaster, and was en route from her home to Topeka. Lindwall was instructed to deliver the telegram to her on the train when it stopped at the Union Depot in this city, and also let Garver know how the young lady was. He did so, but in the telegram which Galvin received the "No. 1 on time" referred to train No. 1 instead of the speed of Jennie Marvin as he had supposed. It appears that Lindwall had in some way accidentally thrown the switch of the commercial wire on the board, so as to take the place of the one which he intended to use, and vice versa. He had thus sent Ladin's telegram to Garver instead of Galvin, and, while it would have been of the utmost use to the latter, it can readily be seen that it was likely to give grave dissatisfaction coming to a trainmaster from one of his subordinates, with whom he was not even on terms of intimacy, and referring to his fiancée.

The telegram which Mr. Garver received and which caused his extraordinary ire was as follows:

WICHITA, November 22.—Old boy, have nothing to do with Jennie if you take my advice. I know her well, having frequently had her in my sulky. She has a villainous temper, and has more than once knocked me over the dashboard. At the Abilene Fair in October she kicked Tom O'Brien in the jaw and landed him in the judges' stand. I am well aware that she is fast, but not profitably so. She will never bring you in a dollar as the result of her spurts. Her reputation was bad before going into Harvey's stable, and you can see that she has had hard usage if you examine her flanks and back. They are covered with scars. She is a regular old skate, and cannot be let alone too well. F. L.

When Mr. Garver had read this telegram he longed for a process by which he could telegraph himself to Wichita. But this being impossible, he thought of the next best way of reaching there in a hurry. Ordinary means were altogether too slow for his purpose. He longed ardently for an opportunity to mop the floor with the man who had dared to so vilely calumniate his sweetheart. He was advised by his friends to be calm, but the advice fell upon unheeding ears. He flew to the telegraph instrument and at once gave orders to clear the track for a special engine. A passenger train was side-tracked just after it left here for Winfield, and freight No. 43 was ordered held at a small station south of Mulvane. A mogul engine was ordered out of the round-house, and Mr. Garver, together with an operator to take the place of Lindwall, stepped on board. Just ten minutes from reading the last word of the horse telegram the engine bearing the irate trainmaster was pulling out from Mulvane with orders to keep the throttle wide open. The locomotive flew with lightning speed, but all too slow for the impatience of Mr. Garver, who leaned far out from the cab window in his haste to place his hands upon Lindwall. The thirty miles were passed over in thirty minutes, being about as good time as has ever been made on any railroad track in America.

Without waiting for the locomotive to come to a full stop, Mr. Garver jumped as soon as the Wichita station platform was reached, and rushed with breathless haste into the room occupied by Lindwall. Without a word of explanation he sprang upon the latter like an enraged tiger, and proceeded to wipe the cobwebs from off the ceiling and the dust from the floor, alternately, with Lindwall's body. The latter was wholly unprepared for the attack, but would probably have been able to oppose no successful opposition to the wild fury of the track-master if he had been looking for him.

"I'll teach you who's fast and who kicks men over the dashboard," howled Garver, as he took a fresh swing at the now almost unconscious man.

"I'll bet you know who has scars on her flanks and back, you black-hearted defamer," he screamed, as he hurled Lindwall over the office counter, "and I'll let you know who has come from scrub stock, whoop!" and he again had the prostrate key-ponder by the hair, dragging him about searching for a sufficiently solid object to strike him against.

"Maybe that is the way O'Brien was kicked into the judges' stand," he yelled, as he lifted the almost insensible Lindwall back over the counter with a savage kick, and sprang after him in haste of revenge.

By this time quite a crowd had collected, and several policemen among the number. These rushed to the rescue of Lindwall, and after a fierce struggle with Garver succeeded in holding him until the fearfully punished operator could be borne away to a place of safety and needed rest.

When Mr. Garver had time to catch his breath he put on the new operator in Lindwall's place, and gave orders allowing traffic on the railroad to be resumed.

It is hoped that Lindwall will be able to be out in a couple of weeks. When the nature of the mistake he had made was explained to him to-day he fully exonerated Trackmaster Garver, and it is understood that he will take a position on the road as soon as he recovers fully.

Fannie F. vs Elwood.

Last Friday night, after some controversy about the respective merits of Fannie F. and Elwood, a wager was laid on the result of the fifth race, which was to have been run on Saturday, both horses being entered. One hundred dollars a side was posted as to which would pass under the wire first. When it was decided to postpone the regular card until Tuesday, so positive was each party that they could win the money that it was determined to settle the dispute at once. The horses were brought to the post, Winchell being on Elwood, Hennessy having the mount on Fannie F. When the flag fell the cheatnut colt had a trifle the best of the send-off, but Hennessy quickly brought up the mare, and at the quarter they were on even terms. From there on it was impossible to see the positions of the horses on account of the fog. When well into the home-stretch Fannie F. was seen leading by about a length. Winchell tried his utmost to bring Elwood up on even terms without success, Fannie F. having too much speed left for the gelding to overcome. The judges announced Fannie F. the winner amid a chorus of shouts and cheering from those who had won on the race.

The Fate of the Geldings.

What becomes of the race-horse after he breaks down or loses his speed and is retired from the turf? is a question which is often asked by the thousands who visit the large race-tracks in the vicinity of New York every year. The stallions are invariably sent to the stud if their breeding warrants it, and spend the remainder of their days in affluence. The same may be said of the mares, but the poor geldings generally find their lines cast in hard places, and some of the most famous performers on the turf, whose exploits were hailed with shouts of triumph, have been forgotten and forsaken almost before their luster has dimmed, because they had lost their ability to earn money through breaking down or some other permanent disability. Some of the old stagers pass into the hands of gentlemen who use them for saddle horses, and receive from their owners the most tender care; but there are some that descend to the lowest grade of servitude. Many are broken to harness, and make excellent driving animals, possessing in some instances a lot of speed and ability to go all day, even though their knee-action may be a trifle stiffer than their trotting cousins.

Take the case of Drake Carter, the grand old gelding for which Pierre Lorillard paid $17,500 as a three-year-old, holder of the world's record at three miles, beating General Monroe, Levant, Blue Grass Belle, Fosteral, Ella Warfield, Compensation and Bushwacker for the Autumn Cup at Sheepshead Bay, on September 6, 1886, winning by eight lengths under a pull in the unprecedented time of 5:24. Mr. Lorillard paid the highest price for the son of Ten Broeck and Platina on record for a gelding. He was one of the best distance horses the country ever saw. He was sold at Mr. Lorillard's closing-out sale, three years ago, becoming the property of Mr. Smith, of Toronto, for a small figure. The old fellow had all but broken down, and was useless save for saddle purposes, and in this capacity he was used until a few months ago, when Gates secured control of him. Then the conqueror of some of the best horses on the turf, and a holder of a record, was put into training and participated at the fall meeting of the Toronto Hunt Club, at Woodbine. It was a strange and rather a sad sight to see the erstwhile wonderful performer, once Green Morris' pride and Pierre Lorillard's special favorite, finishing third in such company.

Bootjack, one of the gamiest of Bonnie Scotland's sons, and for years one of the brightest lights on the American turf, defeating the best horses in training at all distances, and winning a fortune for his owners, has had his own share of the ups and downs of the thoroughbred gelding. He retained all his speed and stamina until six years old, when he broke down in front, and after being knocked about greatly finally became the property of Brown Dick, the clever colored trainer who handled Bill Barnes' horses for many years. The old fellow was broken to harness, and did excellent duty between the shafts, showing considerable speed at times. Two years ago Brown Dick thought Bootjack would train again, and gave him a short preparation. He started in a three-quarter dash at the Gravesend track, ridden by Jimmy McLaughlin, and although he finished far in the rear of the winners he received far more applause. He ran once more, when it became evident that he was no longer the possessor of that electrical burst of speed which was wont to enthuse his backers in days gone by. Dick turned the old horse out and eventually parted with him in consideration of a moderate sum, and to-day he is used as a saddle and driving horse by a Kentucky gentleman.

Parole, the splendid old son of Leamington and Maiden, a winner in both England and this country, defeating the pick of horses abroad in various events, was, at the dissolution of Mr. Lorillard's stable, presented to Dr. Norvin Green, of the Western Union Telegraph Company, who used him two or three years as a saddle horse. The exact whereabouts of Parole cannot be learned, but it is said he is now at the Ranocas Farm of Mr. Pierre Lorillard, whose cherry and black he so often carried to victory, and that he will end his days in peace and quiet. He is well along in years now, but with his splendid constitution should celebrate his twenty-fifth birthday. There are turfmen of the old school in America who regard Parole as one of the best thoroughbreds ever bred in this country.

Monitor, that game and speedy son of Glenelg, whose white face was always to be seen in the van, no matter what the company was or how fast the pace was, and whose memory will always be treasured with that of the late George L. Lorillard's famous blue and orange, a color that is regarded with more reverence when it appears at our race tracks nowadays than that of any other stable, will never wear a saddle again. Mrs. George Lorillard is determined that the old fellow shall never know want, and with that end in view has a specially prepared paddock at the Locusts, her farm, near Eatontown, N. J., where he may roam at will. Monitor has a best on record of two and one-third miles, running that distance at Baltimore on October 20, 1880, in 3:44. He had no superior in his day over a distance of ground. Monitor's case is an exception to the general rule. He is remembered in his old days for the fame and fortune he won when in his prime.

Apollo, the winner of the sensational Kentucky Derby in 1883, which got Sam Brown of Pittsburg, into a hornet's nest last spring through his alleged intimations of crookedness on the part of Dwyer Brothers, owners of Runnymede, the favorite for the race, was bought by Dr. Hughes of South Carolina. The doctor used him as a saddle horse and hunter up to a year ago, when he died, and said that he was the best hunter he had ever seen.

Barnum, one of the best of Bonnie Scotland's get, and the only one now on the turf, is still as lithe and active as of yore, and although he has lost much of his speed, occasionally downs a sure thing at some of the half-mile tracks in New Jersey. The old horse and H. J. Woodford, his owner, were ruled off the track by the Brooklyn Jockey Club last spring for suspicious running, and Barnum's racing this year has been confined to the half-mile tracks, Brighton Beach and Clifton. He enjoys the distinction of having participated in more races than any thoroughbred on the turf. Woodford's gold mine, as people call him, is as sound to-day as when he won the Louisville Cup five years ago.

Hickory Jim is another wonderful gelding whose performances entitle him to mention. He has been running in the vicinity of New York for ten years or more, and was an aged horse when brought there from the West. He won a few days ago at a half-mile track in New Jersey, and is apparently good for many years to come. He is said to be twenty years old. This is phenomenal, as thoroughbreds rarely race after six or seven years.

The list would be incomplete without a few words as to the whereabouts of Checkmate, for many years one of Dwyer's mainstays and a head winner for Green Morris. The poor old chap is pulling a stage between two Kentucky villages and bears little semblance of the dashing weight-carrier whose performances are still green in the memory of turf-goers.—Ez.

CATTLE.

Mr. W. H. Babbitt, of New York City, proposes to establish somewhere on Long Island a dairy which shall cost a half million dollars. He will feed and water his cows so as to furnish the purest possible milk, which he will distribute himself, thus insuring its reaching consumers in purity. Part of the plan is to secure his cows fresh each season, buying only sound animals and selling them for beef when they go dry. A huge vegetable farm will consume all manure, etc. The milk will be sent to New York nightly by boat, and distributed from Thirty Fourth Street slip. A number of wealthy men are interested in the venture. The milk will all be hermetically sealed in bottles and stamped, so that it cannot be tampered with before reaching the consumers. The idea is an excellent one, and cannot but be productive of great good. Mr. Babbitt has made a close study of dairy interests, and is probably as well posted as any one in America. No expense will be spared to make it the model dairy of the world.

Economical Methods of Feeding.

Those who feed cattle in a small way are apt to commit errors which larger feeders do not fall into from mere force of circumstances. With a large number of animals to handle it is practically impossible to enter into all the nice details of care for individuals and special preparation of food which by many are supposed to especially conduce to the economical rapid production of grain, and in consequence to largely increase the profits of the feeder, says the Breeder's Gazette. Take housing of cattle, for instance. The owner of a small bunch of cattle feels obliged to tie each animal by itself in order to get the best gain and be able to control the food supply. But is tying up fattening cattle really economy after all? The operation adds immensely to the labor bill, for the manure must be laboriously removed several times a day, and a large amount of bedding supplied if the animals are to be kept from becoming most unsightly from the accumulation of filth.

Quiet is a factor of great importance in fattening, and tying an animal certainly restrains movement, but is it not entirely too enforced in its character? One has but to recall the excruciating fatigue he experiences from standing for any length of time on one spot, as in a crowd, for instance, to realize the great difference between that operation and moving about even in a somewhat restricted manner. In the average cattle shed of the west the temperature is but slightly higher than that without. In view of this fact could not the animals fight cold far better if left each to choose where to pass the night, and the position and direction of the body when resting? After going over the ground thoughtfully one is forced to ask, why not turn the fattening cattle into a small yard enclosed by buildings or fences, or a combination of both, which shall break the cold winds, and at one side of this yard have a shed under which the cattle may go at will to get out of the snow or rain, so located that they can lie down in positions best suited to comfort and rumination and have room enough in daytime to relieve the weariness of limbs and be in the sunshine on bright days? Whether this idea is right or not it is a fact that many of the large feeders, men of careful, close observation, would not tie up their cattle if the work therefor cost them nothing.

The second point on which the small feeder exerts himself in the supposed direction of economy is by grinding and even steaming the grain fed to stock. His old-country ancestors performed one or both of these operations with the great difference, however, that the grain ground was what we call "small grain"—barley, oats, or rye—and that these were high in price while labor was very low relatively. Then "down East," where our small feeder moved from, they always fed meal to worn-out work-steers, and such cattle did remarkably well, according to all tradition, on this diet. The miller, while toiling at his grist liberally descants glowingly upon the great advantages of reducing all grain to meal. If our farmer friend grows weary of paying tribute to the miller he usually falls prey to the sagent of the iron grinder mill and becomes his own miller, but not for long, for grinding soon proves an irksome job, and often before the paint is worn off the mill becomes a silent monument to the inordinate love of the average American for labor-saving machinery and the siren-like seductiveness of the average agricultural machine agent. Any one who knows anything about a steer knows that he prefers whole corn to corn-meal and ear corn to either. It costs an eighth of the corn to grind it and another eighth to take it to and from the mill. Why not feed ear corn at once to the cattle, even if a fourth of it does nothing but find its way into the manure heap?

But no such loss need be incurred. With hogs to follow ear corn can be fed with actual economy besides saving in labor, and experiments carefully conducted show this. Probably meal will finish up a steer better than ear corn, but for the bulk of the feeding there are no trials to which we can point that show in favor of meal over whole corn. A step still further in the right direction is to feed unhusked corn-fodder and all to the cattle.

Such innovations will appall many farmers; they have become so used to doing these things in the most painfully tedious way that they would actually be miserable with the unoccupied time left on their hands by such short-cut methods. The traditions handed down from the fathers are all against it, and they will be slow to yield. But yield they will, though slowly. What we are drifting toward is not more complicated methods of feeding, but big crops to feed, better stock to feed it to, and simple, rational methods of getting feed to the animal.

The Arkansas Valley Range.

The once famous Arkansas valley range which was held to be one of the choicest grazing spots in the west, is to-day fit only for the habitation of coyotes, so far as the range cattle raising is concerned. Its once nutritious grasses have disappeared and barrenness covers almost the entire country there. The herd owners have been seeking other pasturage, and the removal of cattle from that locality goes on as fast as possible, and to such condition have many of the herds come, that even the full grown hardy steer is scarcely able to walk to more inviting pasturage. It is known that if any stock should perchance be left on the range there this winter, they will all be numbered with the things that were when the spring time comes. To such desperation have many of the cattle already come, that, paying no attention to wire fences or other enclosures, they have broken into corn fields in their hunger and are doing a great deal of damage to the farmers' crops. It is anything but an interesting narrative to relate how inexorable are the conditions which, in many parts of the range country, are now surrounding a great industry, and driving it into other channels for safety against almost complete extinction.

Feeding Straw.

According to the German values of the albuminoids, fats and carbo-hydrates in stock foods, the digestible parts of a ton of oat straw have nearly seventy per cent and of a ton of wheat straw nearly fifty-six per cent of the value of the digestible portions of a ton of average meadow hay. While the German valuations are too high for this country, at least for that portion west of New York State, the comparative values given above are not thereby rendered incorrect. But when fed alone oat straw has not seventy per cent and wheat straw fifty-six per cent of the actual feeding value of average meadow hay fed alone, weight for weight. This is because the hay has albuminoids, fat and carbo-hydrates in such proportions that animals can digest nearly all there is of them in digestible form; while in oats, or wheat, or rye straw there is such an excess of the carbo-hydrates, that more than half of them cannot be digested by the mature, fattening animal, and even less of them can be digested by young, growing animals. Animals can digest the carbo-hydrates of their food only in a certain ratio to the albuminoids; whenever there is an excess of carbo-hydrates above this it is not digested; and for this reason when we feed oat straw alone only one-third of its digestible matter is digested. Of wheat straw fed alone the part digested is even less, for in wheat straw the excess of carbo-hydrates is yet greater.

If average meadow hay is worth twelve dollars per ton, then a ton of oat straw is worth eight dollars and forty cents. But if we feed the straw alone the animals can digest only two dollars and eighty cents per ton. And in fact, the straw fed alone has an actual value only to sustain life. Animals cannot make a gain on it, so much must they eat to get a little matter digested. Animals fed on straw alone would starve in time; they could not get digested enough albuminoids to sustain nerves and muscles. Nevertheless, we may easily so feed it as to make every ton of oat straw worth in actual results seventy per cent., and of wheat straw fifty-six per cent. of a ton of average meadow hay. We must feed the straw with some food or foods having an excess of the albuminoids. Brewers' grains, malt sprouts, pease, wheat bran, and oats also have an excess of albuminoids. So has clover (red or white) if cut at or before, the height of bloom; the earlier it is cut the greater the excess. If we take a ton of red clover hay cut just at the beginning of blossom, and put it to a ton of oat straw the mixture will have albuminoids and carbo-hydrates in the same proportion as average meadow hay, hence will have an actual feeding value equal to the same weight of average meadow hay. The mixture will be a better and more economical feed for all but very young animals than either the clover or the straw alone.—John M. Stahl in American Agriculturist.

Dehorning Cows Again.

An exchange gives the following to the controversy on dehorning:

"Seven cows aged from four to ten years, were dehorned in April, and calves from four to eight weeks old. The amount of butter produced the week before the operation was 55 lbs., the week after 50 lbs.; cream and milk used about the same and the feed was the same, except that the week after the hay was much inferior, which from subsequent observations would account for the deficiency in butter. Still if the operation is not performed under proper conditions it will seriously affect the condition of the animal for some time, says an exchange. The animal must be so secured as to be unable to injure itself in its struggles; the operation should be quickly performed and the stumps should be immediately protected from the air.

The last I have never seen advocated, but the animal apparently has continued pain when it is not done. I place the animal in stanchions with a cross piece and below the neck, and a stick on a level with the underside of the head parallel with stanchion, about 20 inches in front of it, with some spikes on its underside. This stick is to place the animal's head upon. I tie a rope around the neck, loop it around the nose, and with a pulley block some distance forward force the head onto the stick before the stanchion and lash it there; the spikes underneath will keep the rope from slipping. Have slings prepared and make them tight under the animal before forcible action is taken, as it is liable to injury by throwing itself while the head is fastened. Be sure to fasten the head so it cannot slip.

Have a small, sharp saw with a stiff back, a can of warm tar and bunches of cotton large enough to more than cover the stump. Saturate one side of the cotton with tar, keep cool, have everything ready and saw. The moment the horn is off put on the cotton. The whole operation after the animal is fastened should not take more than one minute. There is much difference in bleeding. I have had some bleed scarcely at all; others so much that the tarred cotton would become loose. It is best to tie a strip of cloth over the top of the head and stumps for a day or two. Then cut it off. When I consider the ease of the operation, the harmlessness to the animal, the result being that a lot of goring, pugnacious beasts become inoffensive and herd together like a flock of sheep, the subject has passed argument."

Shorthorn and Hereford Characteristics.

The English Live Stock Journal, an unbiased authority, states some valuable facts that every cattle breeder should note:

"The Shorthorn is an all round animal. When well bred and well fed the heifer may be admitted to the male at fifteen months old, producing its first calf in July, at which time it has been brought into suitable condition cheaply with summer grass. It has, in fact, such an inclination to lay on fat when prepared for show that it is considered most likely to breed when early admitted to the bull. If the calves are hand-fed they become strong before winter. The heifers, yielding milk according to the owner's convenience, may either be culled again in the following October, or made off fat at the three years old. The Shorthorn acquires a great weight when well fed as a calf, and may be fattened for the butcher at any age from one and a half to three years. As a milk and beef producer the Shorthorn is unrivalled. The bullocks are in large demand as consumers of roots and straw in the great corn growing districts of the eastern counties, whence they pass into the hands of the Leicestershire and other graziers for feeding off at grass.

The Hereford may be looked upon as essentially a grass-land animal. Good thrivers, they arrive early at maturity, either as fattened calves or young oxen, and are much liked at summer weights by butchers. The steers thrive well in winter upon bay and roots without cake or corn, and come out of winter quarters in good trim for finishing off at grass. The Herefords, as a rule, are not good milkers; they fatten their own calves, and soon acquire a wealth of flesh, which secures for their owners a paying return. Hereford oxen have been fattened off at a great rate in the rich vale of Aylesbury on grass.

To Subscribers.

Look carefully at the date on the label of your paper.

Should this paper be received by any subscriber who does not want it, or beyond the time he intends to pay for it, let him not fail to write us direct to stop it. A postal card (costing one cent only) will suffice. We will not knowingly send the paper to anyone who does not wish it, but if it is continued, through the failure of the subscriber to notify us to discontinue it, or some irresponsible party being requested to stop it, we shall positively demand payment for the time it is sent.

Special Notice to Correspondents.

Letters intended for publication should reach this office not later than Wednesday of each week, to secure a place in the issue of the following Saturday. Such letters should be addressed to the "BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN," because if otherwise addressed they may be delayed until too late. Letters which demand immediate attention may be delayed, and still worse be entirely neglected.

Whatever pertains to the paper should be addressed to it. This will insure immediate attention.

Our Collectors.

Of late we have sent out a large number of bills for subscriptions, overdue. Some of the answers received are rather curt intimations that we want more than our dues, as they have paid already to our agent so and so.

Some Los Angeles letters state that the writers have paid subscriptions to W. C. Fletcher. The management can get no information from anyone now in the office concerning W. C. Fletcher, and letters directed to him have been sent back by the Post Office at Los Angeles. We would like to hear from Mr. Fletcher of Los Angeles, also from J. A. Coleman of San Francisco, with a full report of their collections.

We have recently called in all the receipt books that our various collectors have had, and have given to each authorized agent of the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN a receipt book in which all the receipts are consecutively numbered.

We have lost a great deal of money and have been put to much annoyance by the fact that in a great many cases the dates on the mail list had not been properly changed when payments were made. That fault lies with this office, and we are anxious to remedy such errors.

Please look at the date on the label of your paper now, and if it is not correct, write us at once.

* Sunol, 2:18.

As recently promised we present in this issue a good likeness of the great Sunol. It is a matter of regret that Mr. Simpson is still unable to write an article to accompany this picture, and celebrate another triumph of Electioneer and running blood.

The Fastest Records.

As this time of the year when for nearly the whole country the racing season is over, the best records and the lists of the fastest performers are of great value. While it is yet too early to more than estimate what has been accomplished in the wide limits of 2:30, those which are the best are well ascertained. We give in another column the trotting and pacing records as they now stand. Mand S., Jay-Eye-See, Charus, American Girl, Hopeful and Goldsmith Maid still are chief for all ages from five to twenty, except that Gny, 2:12, wears the crown for eight-year-olds. California has the four best young trotters in Norlaine, Sunol, Sable Wilkes and Manzanita, as well as the pacers Yolo Maid and Arrow. Ed. Rosewater, Yoto Maid, Guy and Sunol are the new comers to the table, and it stands, although were it so arranged as to show the fastest of each sex in the different ages now included therein, several other names would appear.

The Blood Horse Association.

Last Saturday afternoon was by no means a pleasant one, so it had been determined early in the day that the racing programme should be postponed, and notices to that effect were posted in the different pool rooms and also on the newspaper bulletin boards. This action was determined upon at a meeting held in the morning, at which the President was not present, he having gone out to the track, and therefore was not aware of the conclusion arrived at by those who remained in the city. As the time drew near for the initial race Mr. McClure was surprised that none of his fellow officials put in an appearance, and became very nervous. The telephone would not work, and to add to the discomfort of the solitary representative, some five hundred persons began clamoring for the races to begin. The jockeys in the first event, wanted to weigh in, but as there was no one to record their avordupois they had to retire. A carriage was called into requisition and a messenger dispatched for the secretary. While the messenger was away on his errand, by a lucky chance, the Hon. George A. Knight drove out to the track and gave the first intimation there that the races had been postponed, whereupon Messrs. McClure, Hearst and Boots entered the judges' stand and announced that the card would be run off on Tuesday.

Mr. Thomas, acting for E. J. Baldwin, sent the horses Los Angeles and Mollie McCarty's Last around the track to claim the Triboulet stakes. This was done on his own responsibility and without the knowledge of Mr. Baldwin, that gentleman not being out there. To say that Mr. McClure was annoyed is putting it very gently. He told the reporter of the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN that he was downright angry, but when he met the secretary everything was explained and matters were amicably settled. A reporter was present who has neither love for the association nor its officers, and seized the opportunity to vent his spite in a column tirade of ill-concealed abuse. This naturally stirred up the balance of our wideawake dailies, and each have had more or less to say, interviews with prominent persons occupying most of the space used. Tuesday evening one of our contemporaries had still another charge to make, to wit: that the starting judge was interested in one of the pool firms of this city, by insinuation intimating that he was prostituting his office for the benefit of the company with which it is assumed he is connected. The same paper also says:

"In last week's issue of one of the sporting papers of this city the assertion was further made that the owner of the horse Applause had received $400 from the bookmakers to have his horse pulled when he was considered a sure winner. Much less than this would have ruled both horse and owner off the first-class Eastern tracks, and the Pacific Coast Association cannot afford to have it pass unnoticed."

We forbear making any comment on the above, as the Pacific Coast Blood Horse Association does not propose to let it pass unnoticed, and, if we mistake not, some of the reporters will find themselves in serious trouble. Two of the persons alluded to will demand that the association sift these charges to the bottom, so a chance will be given our journalistic friends to prove their assertions.

Noonday in California.

Not long since it was mentioned in these columns that Rookwood, by Wedgewood out of Noontide, had been taken from New England to Kentucky by W. H. Wilson of Cynthia. Mr. Wilson gave him the name of Noonday. Now we learn that Samuel Gamble of this city has farmed this well-bred young horse, and started westward with him, by express to-day. Noonday was foaled in 1883, and is by Wedgewood, 2:19, dam Noontide, 2:20, by Harold, 2nd dam Midnight (dam of Jay Eye See, 2:10), by Pilot Jr., 3rd dam Twilight by Lexington, 4th dam Daylight by imp. Glencoe, etc.

To be out of a mare with a record of 2:20½ should give prestige to any young stallion, even were that mare not by the sire of Mand S., out of the dam of Jay-Eye-See. When added to this maternal line, Noonday's sire has a record of 2:19, and sired Favonia 2:15, and several others of fame. The thoroughbred lines that "back up" this trotting inheritance are beyond reproach.

We learn from one who is familiar with his appearance that he is of good form and style. Besides farming Noonday Mr. Gamble has bought of Mr. Wilson the filly Ida Wood, foaled 1886, by Simmons, 2:23, dam Ida W., by Mambrino Patchen, paying $1,000, and from Z. E. Simmons of Lexington a brown filly by Ferguson, dam by Volunteer.

Winter Races at Los Angeles.

As will be noticed by an advertisement elsewhere, the Los Angeles Track Association announces that they will give three racing days on December 27th, 29th, and January 1st. The races are of a varied character, and the inducements such that horse owners from this section will be tempted to have a go for the purses offered. If the patronage will warrant it the promoters guarantee to give races at short intervals on the same plan now in vogue at New Orleans. Stalls and good bedding will be furnished free, and only the usual price charged for board. At last accounts the track is reported in first-class condition, and with good management there is nothing to prevent the meeting being a success.

San Mateo Rancho Sale.

We again call attention to the sale of dairy cattle to take place at San Mateo Rancho, on Tuesday next, December 11, at 10 A. M. Catalogues may be had on application to W. H. Howard, 523 Montgomery street, or Killip & Co.

Stock For Sale.

When one wants to buy a brood mare, it is best to buy one that has produced speed. Mr. Robinson should obtain a good price for his Prompter mare whose yearling has paced a quarter in 37½ seconds. Mr. Craig's pair of road mares are worthy of an appreciative buyer, while his Harold Cossack is well enough bred to attract attention anywhere. Mr. Fitzgerald's Killarney is a performer of merit, and his son Killmore is desirable. By the way, Mr. Fitzgerald writes us that Killarney's dam is by Eclipse.

Roaring—A Cure.

A valued correspondent sends us the following extract from a private letter, written from Woolwich, England, by a Colonel in the Royal Horse Artillery. If this method proves a successful one, it will be still another addition to a long list of the victories of the knife over diseases that until recently were obscure and incurable:

I have had a most interesting morning at the Horse Infirmary. Fleming, the head of the Army Vet. Dept., has invented what he hopes is a certain cure for roaring, and he has now operated on fifty horses. He was there this morning and explained minutely all to me for about 3 hours. I saw 4 horses operated on. They are first thrown, then chloroformed, then turned on their backs—a cut deep along the windpipe, and the cartilage dissected out—then they put in an electric light and you see on all sides of windpipe. In every case it has been the left side (as was always supposed), but when the throat is opened you can see the right muscle acting perfectly, and raising and lowering the cartilage, while the left cartilage from paralysis of nerve remains immovable across the throat, causing the obstruction, and he feels sure the roaring; and this they wholly cut out. A horse was killed with drag yesterday, so he had the throat taken out to show the whole length of it, and give us a lecture on that and the living animal. He himself says he has not had time to guarantee that it is a perfect cure, as he thinks to properly establish his theory and practice nearly a year should elapse, the horse returning to his ordinary work, fast, etc., etc. and food, but as far as can be at present judged it is a success. The cartilage removed is as big as a crown piece. Several horses from all corps, cavalry from different stations, officers' valuable horses, all come here to be operated on, so it should soon be settled; but it is curious to see the throat wholly exposed, and the right cartilage moving properly, and the left stationary across the pipe as the animal breathes.

Woolwich, England, November 15th.

The Czar.

Emperor of Norfolk's younger brother, The Czar, bids fair to prove one of the same stamp as his illustrious relative, judged by his recent form in California. Last spring a year ago this colt, then a promising yearling, was nearly sold by his breeder, Mr. Theodore Winters, to a prominent Californian, together with all the yearlings then owned by the master of Rancho del Rio. But at the last moment the sale fell through, Mr. Winters reconsidering his then intention of withdrawing from the turf and retaining the young son of Norfolk and Marian. Then Emperor of Norfolk's son arose, and the youngster, now called The Czar, at once became the subject of some high bids. But none of them reached Mr. Winters' reserve price on the colt, and he remained his breeder's property.

This spring the Czar showed some good trials on the home farm, but late in the summer a prevailing influenza in California took hold of him and he went back somewhat. In September last, however, he improved so fast that Mr. Winters started him at the Sacramento State Fair on the 14th, carrying 110 lbs., and ridden by the jockey Fred Carillo. The Czar in his first race showed himself a rasping good youngster. It was the Palo Alto Stake, for two-year-olds, one mile—rather a long distance for a two-year-old at his maiden effort, but then California two-year-olds are nothing if not precocious. In this race he met six opponents, yet so great was his prestige that the untied colt sold in the pools "even against the field." He won by a head from the colt Wild Oats, by Wildside, but the slight margin of his victory was due to the over-confidence of his boy, who was "caught napping" to such an extent that he nearly lost the race.

A mile in 1:44 for a green two-year-old, carrying 110 lbs., was not a bad debut for the Czar, and his owner's retention of the colt in spite of tempting offers was fully justified. Last week at San Francisco, The Czar's second appearance at the Bay District Course, was worthy to rank with any of the two-year-old deeds of his older brother, the Emperor, for whom no route was too short or long, and no weight beyond his ability. In the Equity Stakes, on Tuesday, the 13th, the Czar met seven of the best youngsters of his age now in training on the Pacific Coast, except Almont, by Three Cheers out of Question, the colt who twice ran a mile in 1:42½ at the late Sacramento State Fair.

The race was the Equity Stakes, and The Czar, 115 lbs., was the top weight, many of the others getting allowances of 10 lbs. Starting the favorite against the field, our reports of the race elsewhere in this issue show that the Czar's dead heat with Wanderer II was due solely to the "bungling" of the same jockey Carillo, who nearly lost the Sacramento race. The dead heat was run in 1:15½, a good effort for both colts, and prudent owners would have divided the stakes. But the Pacific Slopers are made of sterner stuff, and as both Messrs. Winters and Garland stuck to theirs, a "run off" was inevitable, and took place after the last race.

This was run in such a dense fog that neither the start nor the finish could be seen until the colts were nearly home. Then The Czar was seen to be winning, and he secured the race cleverly by a length in 1:16, after leading all through, at least so said the two boys after the race. The Czar's only two races therefore, have both been victories, while he has defeated nothing of the class which the Emperor of Norfolk vanquished last year. The Czar's two essays have shown that he is no doubt worthy to tread in the footsteps of his illustrious brother. Mr. Winters has not raced East for some nine or ten years now, but he expects to bring a small but select string east of the mountains next spring. The Czar is not as well engaged East as he might be, the American Derby and Omnibus Stakes appearing to be his principal engagements. Doubtless, however, Mr. Winters will put him in other stakes the first of the year.

R. W. Thomas, who trained the Baldwin stable this season, has retired from the management.

Santa Rosa.

You will kindly favor us by giving us the information we seek, and to settle a difference in opinion between us in regard to the proper name of the two-year-old colt of Theodore Winters. A claims it to be "The Czar," B claims it is "Czar?"

Answer—The Czar.

Los Angeles, Cal.

Will you kindly inform me in your next issue who is the sire of the stallion Mt. Vernon, and what is Mt. Vernon's record? Also, did he win any races last year?

Answer.—Mt. Vernon b b, foaled 1888, by Nutwood, 2:18½, dam Daisy, record 2:33, by Chieftain. Bred by J. A. McCloud, Stockton, Cal. Record 2:21, made at San Jose, Cal., August 18, 1887. In 1888 he trotted eight races.

Alameda County, Cal.

Please give instructions for laying out a mile track, also a half-mile track?

Answer—To lay out a full mile, select a level field of 42 acres; draw through the centre of it a straight line of 440 yards (a quarter of a mile). On each side of this line, and an exact distance of 120 yards 2 inches from it, draw parallel lines of equal length, so that the space between the two outer lines will be 280 yards 4 inches. This being done, a stake should be driven at each end of the center line; a cord should be fastened thereto; extend the cord at right angles for 140 yards 2 inches, until it touches the end of the outer line, and then describe with the extreme end of the cord an outer curve or semi-circle between the ends of the two outer lines. There will then be a continuous outer line, being exactly a mile (1,760 yards) in length, and requiring an enclosure of 46 acres of ground. From this outer line or track set the fence of the course 3 feet in on the straight sides and curves. In this way an exact mile (as near as may be) is preserved for the actual foot track of all the horses. The first distance post is sixty yards from the judges' stand, the second at 240 yards, and the start is 60 yards before entering the turn. The track should be graded around the turns like the track of a railroad or circus, the outer portion highest, so that a horse can extend himself at full speed. To lay a half-mile track, lay off two straight sides, 600 feet each (parallel) and 452 feet 4 inches apart, connected at each end with a perfect semi-circle (radius 226 feet 2 3-16 inches); place the fence exactly upon a line so formed (which is the inside of the track), and the track will measure exactly half a mile three feet from the fence; the outside fence to be placed according to the width of the track desired. If not convenient to obtain an engineer to run the curves, it can be done as follows: Place a center stake midway between the parallel straight lines at each end, take a wire with a loop at the end, loose enough to turn upon the stake, and measure upon this wire 226 feet 2 3-16 inches (the radius of the curve), which from the centre stake, will exactly reach the ends of the straight lines; then describe a semi-circle, beginning at the end of one straight side, putting down a stake every 12 feet, if this is the length of the fence panels desired.

Two-Year-Old Thoroughbreds.

When Mr. George Lorillard's Rambler, in 1881, ran and won a mile and a quarter as a two-year-old it was then regarded as much too severe a task to set a two-year-old, and the colt was never much account afterwards. What shall be said then of asking a two-year-old to go two miles? In England the Feather Plate at Newmarket in October, two miles and a quarter, is generally won by two-year-olds, but in this county, up to the 23d of last month, the race noted as won by Rambler marked the furthest distance successfully compassed by a two-year-old on an American racecourse. At San Diego, Cal., on Oct. 23 last, Four Aces, a two-year-old, by Hock-Hocking—Maid of the Mist, by Norfolk, ran and won a two-mile dash in 3:37. He carried 80 lbs. and beat some old horses. As noted above California horses, both thoroughbreds and trotters, are most precocious, but this exceeds all records of two-year-old racing in America. The colt Four Aces is well bred and his after career will be noted with interest.

The Baldwin Stable.

All of the horses belonging to what is commonly called the Baldwin stable, but more properly speaking, the Santa Anita stable, were removed on Thursday morning from the Bay District track to the home ranch in Los Angeles County. The string comprised Emperor of Norfolk, Los Angeles, Grisette, Mollie McCarty's Last, Volante, Caliente, Estrella, Gannymede and Allahoe. The horses will be turned out for the winter, preparatory to getting them ready in the spring for another heavy campaign. Although there are those who affirm that the Baldwin stable will not go east in 1889, it is almost a certainty that it will.

Starting with the drum is still in vogue on many of the Western race courses, although some of the associations are in favor of substituting the flag for the drum. Starter J. F. Caldwell said recently in Kentucky that it would be a wise move upon the part of the various Western associations to do away with the drum and substitute the flag as a guide to the jockeys. Several times this season, when the boys have been slow to leave the post, he says he has heard them say they never heard the drum tap. With the flag the boys who practice such questionable habits would have no excuse to put up, as when it went down it would be in full sight of every jockey in the race. Having had a large experience in the box, Mr. Caldwell's views on the subject are worthy the attention of the clubs, which still continue, in this respect, to practice the usages of other days.

CORRESPONDENCE.

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN:—Constant complaint is heard of tricks and wrong doing about race tracks for which it appears almost impossible to find a remedy. Some things, and among the very worst, is the dangerous habit of allowing dogs to run at large upon and about the track. Only a few days ago a colt, valued at $3,000 (full brother to Croole, three-year-old record 2:20½), belonging to Dr. Hicks, was frightened by a dog jumping and barking at him on the Agricultural Park track in this city, and caused to run away, collided with a post, and killed himself. Why not positively exclude all dogs from the race-tracks and grounds, and whenever one appears there kill him?

SACRAMENTO, December 4, 1888.

The Best Half-Mile Horse.

A few days ago some gentlemen wrote to a newspaper in the southern part of the State asking which was the fastest half-mile horse in California. The answer given was Johnny Gray. Wishing to find out how our local horsemen felt on the question the following gentlemen have been asked their opinion and given answer as below.

Bruce Cockrill, H. Lowden, A. T. Stevenson, S. B. Whitehead, Vic. Gierro, and Dan McCarthy..... Cyclone
C. T. Boots, James Brown, P. Duffy, E. S. Culver..... Geraldine
J. Courtney, S. Holloway..... Sleepy Dick
B. C. Holly..... Lila Ferguson
P. A. Finigan..... Emperor of Norfolk
Fred Collier..... Gladstone

Among the newspaper reporters the following choices were heard:

S. W. Horton, "Chicago Horseman"; C. E. Trevathan, "S. F. Chronicle"; P. McCaffrey, "S. F. Call"; W. M. Hart, "S. F. Examiner"; Flood Tide

Stockton Half-Mile Races.

For Thanksgiving Day at Stockton a race was advertised, five horses to run a half-mile and repeat for a stake consisting of $25 entrance money for each starter, and $10 for each nomination. The race was however, postponed for a good day and track, and therefore took place on December 3d. A fair-sized crowd was present. The track was very muddy and heavy inside. There were but three starters and the stake was therefore $95. The race was between W. R. Ruggles' Steinman, by Joe Hooker, A. Miller's Betsey and William McAfee's Rackety Jack.

In the choice for positions Steinman was given the pole with Betsey second and Rackety Jack outside. In the first heat Betsey ran in close from the start, forcing Steinman so that his rider pulled back out of the mud and made for the hard ground on the outside where he ran well, but could not head the mare who had the best of the heat from the start-off. Betsey won by an easy length in 51 seconds, Steinman second and Rackety Jack a bad third, being so lame that he was now withdrawn.

In the second heat Steinman had the best position on the outside and he ran hard to win. He was second until reaching a point about 300 feet from the wire, when the filly was being handled easily as a sure winner. Steinman was crowded home and he cleverly won by a length in 51½ seconds, the filly second under the whip.

In the third heat Steinman led from the start and won in 0:52½, with the filly away back.

Frank Morgan.

Mr. S. S. Laramie, of Montana, is at present in the city, and has brought with him one of the prettiest stallions seen in many a day. He is a dark chestnut, about 16 hands in height, of free, easy carriage, well gaited, perfectly developed and superb in general appearance. In disposition he is all that can be desired. He has been named "Frank Morgan" in honor of the family from which he descends. He is by an unnamed son of Morgan General Jr., first dam by Romeo, he by Green Mountain Morgan, the blood lines running in direct on both sides to the great Justin Morgan. The stallion is at present in the hands of C. W. Welby, who feels a natural pride in handling the reins over the most magnificent carriage horse in San Francisco.

Excursion to Bakersfield.

It is very rarely the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN feels called upon to say a good word for excursion parties and auction sales of land, but such a chance to purchase small homes at reasonable prices has probably never before been offered in California as is this week announced in our advertising columns. Several large blocks of land have been placed in the hands of Messrs. Briggs, Fergusson & Co. for sale to the highest bidders. The blocks have all been subdivided into small holdings, as it is the desire of the present owners to have the prospective purchasers settle there. Bakersfield, from its geographical location, is the railroad centre of the Southern San Joaquin Valley, and the A. T. & S. F. Co. are at present working towards that point. The late difficulties arising about the water supply have been amicably settled, thus enabling those who buy property to obtain all the irrigation that may be required. Artesian wells have also been sunk, furnishing millions of gallons of water per day. In close proximity there are natural gas and petroleum deposits, mineral land being also in abundance. Lumber is easily procurable. The acreage is suited for fruit orchards, alfalfa or general farm land. The title is perfect, as the government has issued U. S. patent for the same. A perusal of the advertisement will amply repay one for the trouble, and probably be the means of inducing some of our readers to visit Bakersfield on the 16th inst.

A long distance race for $250 a side will take place at Los Angeles on December 25th between Henry Peppers, a colored jockey, and Alfred Garcia, a Mexican jockey, who formerly rode for E. J. Baldwin. The boys will ride thirty miles.

The famous broodmare Reina Victoria has again changed owners. Two years ago she was knocked down to Mosher & Seacord of Galesburg, Ill., at the Glenview sale, the purchase price being $7,025, which was, up to that time, the largest figure ever paid for a trotting breed broodmare. Reina Victoria was in foal to Pancoast when taken to Illinois, and the following spring dropped a foal that sold for $5,700, when the Mosher estate was disposed of on the 15th. Reina Victoria also brought $7,250 on that occasion, being purchased by T. C. Jefferson of Lexington. Last Saturday, when the mare arrived at Maple Ridge Farm, she was met by an agent of W. P. Ijama of Terre Haute, Ind., and bought, the figure being $9,000. This will transfer the dam of Princeton and Euclid to Warren Park.

Two Year Old Winners Of $5,000 And Upwards In 1888.

We give below a table of two-year-olds that have $5,000 and over in stakes and purses in America in 1888. There are twenty-eight who have earned such honors, against twenty-two in 1887, an increase of six. The twenty-eight have won 104 races, and $349,653. The twenty-two last year won 115 races, with $253,618.50. While the number of races are eleven less than in 1887, the value of the races increased $95,934.50.

Emperor of Norfolk headed the list in 1887, with twelve races and $37,020, while Proctor Knott heads it this year with six races and $69,780.

The twenty-eight winners are by twenty-three different sires. Imp. Charlie, Princess Bowling and Senorita, and Imp. King Ernest sired three, Auricoma, Minion and Mollie. From the promise shown by the get of imp. Prince Charlie, his death is a great loss to the breeding interests of the country. Champagne Charlie was campaigned from East to West, won eleven races and $12,520, Princess Bowling seven races and $9,175, and Senorita two races and $8,860, total for the three $48,645.

Of the two-year old winners this season of $5,000 and upwards in the above list. The following were sold at auction when yearlings; the amount each brought is also given below: Salvator $4,500; Aurania $4,100; The Ionesca $3,000, Bud 1-bist $2,500, Fresno $2,100, Reporter $2,000 Senorita $1,050, Liberty and Oregon $1,000 each, Radiant and Gipsy Queen $950 each; French Park $500, Tipstaff and Proctor Knott $450 each, Madstone $375, and Diablo $210. The remainder were not sold publicly at yearlings, and were raced by their owners and breeders.

The most exciting runaway of the season on a trotting-track took place during the recent meeting at Trenton, N. J. The horse that figured as chief actor was Crescendo. He had won the first heat of the 2:27 class in 2:24, and the second in 2:26½. The race was conceded to him by common consent. In the third mile, just after the word was given, Louis R's sulky got mixed up with Crescendo's, and when the latter's driver was thrown clear out on the track the stallion set out on a wild run, with a pair of bright yellow wheels flying about him in all directions. After getting anchored half way up the back-stretch, Crescendo jumped the hedge, sulky and all, and ran around the rough ground outside. Here he soon forced the vehicle clear, and with the harness slapping about his heels came flying down the wagon path towards the grand stand. There was a general scurrying of spectators, and many a dignified Jerseyman cut a ridiculous figure in his efforts to get out of harm's way. One of them, a tall individual in his best bib and tucker, made a dash for the hedge, when he slipped and came full length upon the ground. He crawled forward and tried to get through the hedge, but it was so thick that after forcing his head through he stuck fast, and as Crescendo's flying feet came thundering past him the badly-scared victim made wild and frantic efforts to curl his long legs close up to the bush so that he would escape being trampled upon. Crescendo dashed into the hedge surrounding the clubhouse, was caught on the barb-wire fence and turned a neat summersault back upon the track where he had started. When he was got up and examined it was found that the lucky horse was comparatively unhurt, and the plucky Driscoll resumed his seat behind him and eventually won the race.

Mr. Arrin Hickok has removed Lillie Stanley, Mortimer and Mount Vernon from Oakland Park, and will keep them for the present with the balance of his trotters at the Bay District Track.

Mr. Jas. A. Dustin thinks he can pace the b. h. Almont Patchen in 2:11. His present record is 2:15.

The pacing colt Adonis has lost an owner and gained another. Mr. Arrin Hickok, within a few days, has purchased from A. B. Gonzales the latter's half interest in the now famous pacer, and may in all probability take him east next season to work the big circuit.

B. Goldman, of the Occidental cigar stand, has raffled off his chestnut horse, Hy Dutch being fortunate enough to win it.

The Dwyer Bros. have sold the celebrated horse Lea Tray, the price being $2,500.

Lady Dexter, sister of the famous trotter Dexter, is, since the death of her brother, the oldest representative of the family. For many years she has been in the brood mare ranks at the Stony Ford farm in New York, but is now barren.

Luella, a daughter of Hero of Thordale, is in one respect the star brood mare of the present season, as she is the only one having two daughters to make records of 2:30 or better this year, they being Diplomacy 2:28½, and Dora Cossack 2:29, both by Don Cossack.

Rye Instead of Oats For Horses.

Is it better to sell rye at 50 cents a bushel and buy oats at 40 cents than to have the rye ground for horses?—C. F. B., Poughkeepsie, N. Y.

No. At the prices named by C. F. B., rye 50 cents and oats 40 cents per bushel, rye is much the cheaper food, as may be deduced from the following table of composition and digestibility:

	Oats.	Rye.	Winter rye.
		Pounds or per cent.
Water.....	14.3	14.3	8.7
Ash.....	2.7	1.8	1.8
Digestible protein.....	9.0	9.9	10.8
Digestible starch, sugar, etc.....	43.3	65.4	70.3
Digestible fat.....	7.0	1.6	1.6
Nutritive ratio.....	6.1	7.0	6.8
Feeding value per cwt.....	$0.94	1.08	1.16

It appears that American winter rye is a little richer in digestible substance and digestibility, owing, no doubt, to its containing less water. The digestibility, never having been determined under American conditions, can only be taken with considerable allowance and then only relatively. From this table it appears that rye at 60 cents would still be cheaper than oats at 35 cents.

Rye being a much heavier grain, and containing nearly one-fourth less hull than oats, should be ground and mixed with nearly its own weight of cut hay moistened enough to hold the rye meal; otherwise it might form a heavy indigestible mass in the stomach, and produce colic. If the horses are at all constipated on this mixture, a little bran or oil meal will suffice to keep the bowels in a good healthy condition, but this will hardly be necessary if the horses are at work, or exercised regularly.

The amount of feed depends so much upon the constitution, age and work of the horse that the feeder must be largely guided by his own judgment, observing, however, to feed about as many pounds of the ground rye as he would of oats, but not so many quarts by nearly half. We should begin with about 10 pounds of cut hay and increase, or diminish, according to the apparent need of each animal, giving all that would be eaten up clean. Less grain would be required with clover hay, and about one-fourth more should be added if straw constituted part of the ration.—Rural World.

Rough Riding in Australia.

Prizes Awarded the Worst Horses, Not the Best Riders.

Speaking of rough riders in Australia, a writer on The Melbourne Sportsman says: A prize for a defect is, I fancy, an anomaly peculiar to Australian agricultural shows, and, after witnessing the display of buck jumping last Friday, I feel strongly inclined to ask, cui bono? A prize for proficiency on the part of the rider one could well understand; but as that proficiency is only recognized when coupled with infirmity (either in temper or constitution) of the horse best ridden, the encouragement of buck jumping savors somewhat of barbarism. Five confirmed buck jumpers, ridden by five of the best rough riders in Victoria, entered the arena and performed (that's the word, as each had evidently been taught the art of bucking,) in turn. If the horse speedily tired of bucking he was, to all intents and purposes, out of it. If he persistently and viciously maintained his eccentric contortions in his struggle to rid himself of his rider, he rose proportionately in the opinions of the judges. The prize, in short, though ostensibly given to the best rider, was really won by the worst horse. The intricacies of "pig jumping," "propping" and "bucking" all presumably enter into the calculations of the judges when the merits of each of the competitors are weighed, and the horse which in his own person is endowed with most of these defects, coupled with a display of a little extra madness and mulishness on his own account, usually gets the prize. If when saddled up he refuses to buck, the spurs are prodded into him, and on Friday, where these instruments failed or were not requisitioned, lads and men followed him about waving a coat or white cloth in his face, with a view of frightening him into bucking. There was of course some admirable horsemanship displayed; but it doesn't always follow by any means that the best rider gets the prize. Bullock, the winner, is a massive foot constable from St. Kilda. He has a seat like a Centaur, and is unquestionably a skilled horseman. He was mounted on a skilled buckner, and was awarded first prize, Mr. A. Watson, who, as a horseman, is, perhaps, second to no man in Australia, was on a better, or rather worse buckner. He wasn't in a bucking humor, and consequently got no prize. Now, surely if this buck jumping business has any tendency at all it's in a wrong direction. Why, in the name of all that is irrational, should such an equine defect be nurtured?

How People Bet In Different Sections of the Country.

"The way the people in the different parts of the country bet is a continual source of amusement to one from the opportunity it affords of studying the different phases of human character," says William Riley, the well known Chicago book maker. Mr. Riley is good authority on any subject connected with betting, as he has been in the business a number of years and has made books on all of the principal tracks of the country. He has always claimed Chicago as his home, but now he has opened a billiard room in partnership with George Slosson in this city, and he is now a regular New Yorker. Although he has gone into the billiard business it is simply from a love for the game, and he still continues his book making business.

"The most noticeable thing about the bettors of this country is the entire absence of fear of welcoming they display," said he. "Of course, we have never had any of it to speak of in this country, and that accounts for it; but at the same time you would naturally suppose that when a man wished to place $100 or $500 bet he would go to some person he knew. Such is not the case, however, at least I have not found it so. Now, this year I made a book at one of the Eastern tracks, and as it was my first appearance in this locality for some time, of course I was comparatively unknown. Well, in spite of that, men whom I had never seen or heard of before, would come up and lay me $100, $500, or a $1,000 and go away without ever thinking whether I would be there when they got back or not. They hardly knew what a welcher was, and consequently had no fear of me.

"Latonia is fast becoming the biggest betting course in the West, outside of Chicago, and it is not due to the betting fraternity either, but to the rich Hebrew merchants of Cincinnati. Every one of them is a born bettor and when they are assured that they will have a fair run for their money, they will put up large amounts. Now, I never carry markers while making a book, as I claim that the bookmaker gets the worst of it in every instance. Why during this past season I have lost at least $5,000 that way. In Cincinnati, however, I depart from my rule, and I have never yet lost a cent by doing so. I have had men come to me there, hand me their card and tell me they only brought $100 to the track with them. They had lost that and wanted to bet on the remaining races. I would look at them and say all right. At the end of the day they might owe me anywhere from $100 to $1,000. I would go to my hotel that night and never trouble my head about the matter at all, and the next morning my money would be sure to be ready for me.

"Louisville is the best place in the country for backing youngsters. Every man is a breeder and thinks his horse the coming one, and so backs him himself and gets all his friends to do the same. At the spring races there I have had eighteen or twenty horses on my board, and instead of making any odds against any one, would just put up 10 to 1 and take your pick. Of course, some would be backed heavier than others, and then I would cut the figures down, but not one of them would run unbacked, and they would carry anywhere from $100 to $5,000 just in my back alone.

"Nashville is another place where the betting is good. The races there may not be run any fairer than they are in the East, but the people think they are, and that is everything. President Fogg and Secretary Gilcock are natives of the State, have lived there all their lives and are known by every one. They are breeders themselves, and the mass of the people feel sure that every race is being run on its merits. With this feeling they go up to a stand and place their money with a cheerfulness and conviction that they will win that is surprising. The most of them are not large bettors, but they love a thoroughbred, and it is a duty with them to have money on every race. That is what makes betting so good at Nashville. It is not the large sums that are put up, but everybody, men, women and children have at least $2 on every race."—N. Y. Sporting World.

Commenting on the evolution of the thoroughbred, the Sporting World says: So far as beating 1:40 for a mile is concerned, I think that there are at least half a dozen horses around here that can do it if asked and prepared for such. He cites the record of 1:40. It was made by Snyvesant in a race. Now, what could Hanover, Kingston, not to speak of other fast ones of lesser note than they, and higher standing at a distance than Snyvesant have done, had they been asked? What, for instance, could Tremont have done had an accident not disabled him? What could Hindoo have done, a colt whose maximum of speed the Dwyers themselves did not know, because, when he was himself, there was nothing in training that could make him extend himself? Why, the other day, when Glory, with 85 pounds up, ran a mile in 1:42 over the three-quarter mile track at Clifton, Daly said that if the association would hang up a purse of sufficient value he would start the filly to run in 1:39! No, the evolution of the thoroughbred is by no means near its completion.

ROD.

Among the Redwoods.

CHAPTER IV.

A New Acquaintance.

Philip possessed but little of the deliberateness that marked his friend; if there were matters about a pistol which he hastily fished out of a coat pocket he was for seating himself directly in front of the fire, when Dick asked him in an amused way what object there could be in making himself a target, and suggested that they stretch out under one of the near redwoods and keep watch.

This struck Philip at once as the right plan, and still grasping his pistol he followed Dick and crouched down beside him. At first all was painfully still; then came a crashing and stamping, followed sometime by cracking and sometimes by remonstrant tones, until Dick was convinced that three or four drunken mill hands were trying to make for the camp fire, and began casting about in his mind as to a proper course when they should reach it. But before he had arrived at any definite conclusion there came a wonderful crashing almost in front of them, and as Philip, wild with excitement, jumped to his feet, a beautiful Jersey cow burst into the opening before the fire. One swift, terrified glance she threw towards the red flames, and then plunged headlong into the thick brush at the right, leaving our friends masters of the field, but with modified nerve regarding their powers of discernment.

"I don't care, I'm certain I heard some one speak," said Philip, in a tone that implied fear of ridicule, though he found great comfort in the immediate reflection that Dick, not he, was first to sound the alarm. Before Dick could answer or get up there came a new rustling, and they could just catch the words, "Where you gone to now, you tarral fool?" followed by the exclamation "Gosh!"

Peering cautiously into the opening Philip saw emerge from the shadows a thin, yellow-haired young man in blue overalls and a sack coat. His question was evidently addressed to the cow, his exclamation to the fire and impromptu table.

"Looks harmless, suppose we tackle him," said Dick, stepping out suddenly. Philip followed at a short distance, completely relieved of anxiety, and contending with an immoderate desire to laugh.

"Good evening, my friend," Dick's voice was deeply, wonderfully insinuating.

"Good evening, sir," said the new arrival, looking sideways at Philip's pistol and doffing his hat.

"Do you live around here?" asked Philip, stepping nearer and laying his weapon down in a confused way on the remnant of bacon.

"Yes, sir, just a thru or two up the ridge." And then evidently thinking one question merited another, the rustic demanded suddenly, "Seen my cow?"

"Why yes, she interviewed the fire about five minutes ago. I should think you would fear losing her." Dick was examining the young man's face carefully, and lamenting its weakness on the general ground that a man's face should be strong.

"No, I've no fear o' that now. She's on the home track and knows the way. I never knew one o' her kind so fond o' gittin' off afore. She learned a trick o' leavin' her bell wherever she likes, and that's what's the worst of it. You see she don't rightly belong to me, and I wouldn't like to have her turn up miasin'."

It was impossible that either Dick or Philip should be acquainted with the history back of this statement, but both saw how nervously the poor fellow turned his hat in his hands, and what a swift red showed in his cheeks, and Dick at least drew conclusions not so far from the truth as a less imaginative person might.

Philip was thinking of something else. It had just occurred to him that here was a person who might know the man Selden, and before the young stranger had regained composure, he put the question. The red in the cheeks deepened visibly, and a pair of ordinary light blue eyes grew more intense as the answer came "yes," and then a modifying clause.

"That is if you mean the one I do, a kind o' tall thin man, not very stirrin', but with a heap o' sense about books."

"He's the man," said Dick, "How far did you tell us he lived from here?"

"The rustic was mystified at the form of Dick's question, but answered in what he mentally termed a smart manner.

"Well, I'm so used to walkin' it I've lost the meanin' o' how far it might be."

"It isn't ten miles, is it?" Dick's tone was sharp and declared his intention of knowing what he could find out.

"Oh, Lord bless you, no," said the young man hastily, and using a family formula. "If it's two and a half my feet ain't no good for messin' in."

Philip's delight at hearing this prompted him to laugh or cry, or do something else equally without weight or intention. There really was such a place then, and Dick was not playing off a scheme. And better yet, it was near enough to be reached before to-morrow noon. With difficulty he restrained himself from hugging his friend because of the third party who seemed in not the least haste to depart.

"Let me see," said Dick, feeling he must make amends for his sharpness, "What did you tell me your name was?"

"Guess I haven't told you yet, have I?" and the mountaineer looked cunning again, but changed instantly at something in Dick's face. "I don't mind tellin' you though, it's Rob Morrison. My father worked round these mountains many a year 'ore he was killed in Dan Tanner's saw mill. I'm workin' in the mill now. We've got a little place up on the mountain right next to Mr. Selden's. I don't expect he'd a got along very well if it hadn't been for my mother. His place is a mighty fine one for these parts. Nothin' in Santa Cruz accordin' to my notion that beats it. Maybe your thinkin' o' goin' there?"

"That's just what's in our minds at present, my friend," said Dick, snavely, "and if you will tell us how far ahead the Bear Creek road is I'll keep you in mind the rest of my life."

"Let me see," said Rob, meditatively, and then adding in a more sprightly way, "You wouldn't like to go right on with me now, would you?"

Philip was about to say "certainly, why not?" but Dick was too quick for him, and said "Oh desr, no!" as though travelling over the mountains accompanied by mud and dampness was the most delightful thing in the world.

"Just tell us how far the road is from here and we'll come on at our leisure," he added, with a sidelong glance at Philip, "or tell me, is there any other road that crosses the mountains hnt it?"

"No, sir, not as I know on about here."

"Then the first one we come to is the road?"

"Yes, sir."

This information given, Rob stopped leaning against the tree he had used as a support for the last ten minutes, and exclaiming "Gosh! I guess they'll think I'm lost! Beas must be pretty high home now!" put on his hat and turned to go. Dick kept him a moment trying to impress on his mind the necessity for silence regarding their intentions, adding carefully that of course they might yet change their plans.

Poor Philip listened with rising hair to the latter remark, and was ready to sink into a fit of melancholy when he said good night, and saw the willing but loosely constructed scion of the Morrisons depart. Dick was disproportionately merry. Wished Rob back with his cow, hoped his boots were equal to the depth of the mud, and ended by telling him what good friends they would be should they meet again.

"Come cheer up, Phil," he said, stepping back and laying his hand affectionately on his friend's shoulder, "cheer up, we're on the right track now, and to-morrow will see us homsed."

"To-morrow, to-morrow, to-morrow," said Philip, as he put his pistol out of sight and threw himself down in front of the fire. "Do you think that we might possibly not see to-morrow?"

"Well, no. 'It's hardly my way to travel about with such cheerful reflections. Then he sat down Turk fashion next to Philip, and put his hands on his knees. "What a specimen that fellow was," he said, smiling and looking into the flame.

"Of what, cheerful reflections?"

"No, of the proud family to which we belong—man."

"Oh, human beings run in straits. I've seen lots of fellows like him in the same rank." Philip's way of stating his case was not so good as the case itself.

Yes, but it's none the less astonishing every time you see one, Phil. It has always seemed odd to me that a man can live among scenes like these and not in a measure partake of the grandeur and intensity of them. What's the cause of it?"

"Because he lives in another world."

"You mean his thoughts are so small and commonplace that even nature becomes so to him and so loses her influence. That calls to mind Carlyle's peculiarity, who, you remember, would never go with a party of sightseers to any noted spot because he had no patience with their jabbering. The whole must be a silent draught for him or he'd none of it."

"I fancy that's too much the other way."

"Yes, but we're all as we're born and bred. That's the reason, Phil, though I'm sometimes tempted to exclaim and deride that I never can fully condemn. Thackeray wisely makes Esmond say, 'I look into my heart and think that I am as good as my Lord Mayor, and know I am as bad as Tyburn Jack. Give me a chain and a red gown and a pudding before me and I could play the part of Alderman very well, and sentence Jack after dinner. Starve me, keep me from books and honest people, educate me to love dice, gin, and pleasure, and put me on Hounslow Heath with a purse before me and I will take it.' That's the idea exactly. And worse than all, a fellow can get on Hounslow Heath ready for crime, mentally and morally, without being there physically."

"Yes, Dick, that's to me the great compounder of evils."

"Let's stop Phil; we're getting gloomy. Our morals are making us sad. There's something wrong with them. I've no doubt, now, little Morrison has a simpler, better code. I've my eye on a branch yonder that I want for the fire."

Dick went after his branch and Philip roused out the cups, scraped the remainder of the food into the baskets, and spread out the blankets for night. It was his way to do for Dick as well as for himself, and the quiet, unostentatious goodness was appreciated.

"Thanks, old boy," said Dick, tossing his branch on and making the flames shoot up. "Let's have a pipe before we roll in."

They sat before the fire a long time puffing rings of smoke into the soft night air, and talking in a confidential, easy way, sometimes of experiences almost forgotten, sometimes of those they hoped would come to pass, Dick always changing the subject as it threatened to drag out too long, and became thin through too much reduction.

But pipes, like everything else, lose their charm after a while, particularly when sleep steals the keenness of the enjoyment away, as it was now doing for the second time in the case of Phillip.

"This won't do, old man," he said, at the end of his last nodding spell, "I'm tired out. We'll mend the fire again and then I must say good night."

In less than half an hour after this he was fast asleep, his closely cropped blonde curls pressed tightly against the green twigs that formed his pillow.

With Dick it was otherwise. For a long time he lay looking out between the tree tops, and thinking, now of worthy things and again of things small and wearying, like details of business, unsuccessful efforts, and all the hard experience of his thirty years of life.

Even while these things were uppermost he was conscious of something more wearing back of them; at last like a shock it, too, came, and banished peace. 'Twas but the memory of a face, yet it made his wish for day almost a prayer.

SAN FRANCISCO, Dec. 4, 1888.

Do Fish Sleep.

Doctor Hamilton, discussing the rod fishes Fanna and Flora of the British Islands makes some very interesting statements in reference to the question, "Have fish the power of sleeping?" The series of articles by the Doctor, appearing in the English Fishing Gazette, would well repay close reading. He says:

Muller (Elements of Physiology) says: "The excitement of the organic processes in the brain which attends an active state of mind, gradually renders that organ incapable of maintaining the mental action, and thus induces sleep, which is to the brain what bodily fatigue is to other parts of the nervous system. The cessation or remission of mental activity during sleep in its turn, however, affords an opportunity for the restoration of integrity to the organic conditions of the cerebrum, by which they regain their excitability. The brain, whose action is essential to the manifestation of the mind, obeys in fact the general law which prevails over all organic phenomena—that the phenomena of life, being particular states induced in the organic structures, are attended with changes in the constituent matter of those structures. The duration of the periodical state of sleep, and the time at which it occurs, are dependent partially on external and partially on internal causes."

"The causes determining duration of sleep and waking are seated, however, in the organism itself. The periodical recurrence of sleep and the waking state is, therefore, essentially connected with something in the nature of animals, and is not dependant on the simple alterations of day and night. The sleep of animals is a phenomenon dependant on a change in the animal part of the organism alone. All the functions of organic life—namely, the processes ministering to nutrition, with all the involuntary movements attending them—pursue their ordinary course. Even the involuntary movements of the animal system of muscles, such as those of respiration, and many other movements of the same kind, do not partake of the repose of sleep. The organic system has its period of remission and rest, but these are not coincident with the sleep of animal life, and are very different for different organs."

"All the phenomena of organic life, and indeed all the phenomena presented by the animal body, with the exception of the true animal functions which are under the influence of the mind, obey a law of absolute necessity, and the nutrition and maintenance even of the organs of animal life are not dependant on the operations of the mind or intellect."

"We may, therefore, regard sleep and the waking state as the result of a species of antagonism between the organic and the animal life, in which the animal functions, governed by the mind, from time to time become free to act, while at other times they are repressed by the organic force acting in obedience to a law of creative nature."

"Sleep, in a greater or less degree, as Aristotle correctly remarked, falls to the share of all animals. Some even dream—the dog, for instance, barks in his sleep. In some the periods of sleep are less distinct and regular; and this is particularly the case in the cold-blooded animals. They, however, appear to be subject to states analogous to sleep. Frogs, which croak a part of the night during summer, become quiet after midnight, especially when the pairing season is passed."

"Insects and spiders are often found in a lethargic or torpid state and it is probable that all animals in which no regular period of sleep and waking have hitherto been observed have an equivalent for sleep in the state of inactivity and rest, which they from time to time present."

Dr. John Davy (The Angler and his Friend, p. 74) says: "As to sleep, fish, I believe, do rest and steep their senses in forgetfulness," and this probably more by night than by day. I am led to this conclusion from observations on very young fish. These about the darkest part of the night, when confined in glasses so as to be easily seen, I have noticed immovable, resting on the bottom of the vessel, and quite regardless of an approaching object, not stirring until they have been almost touched; so different in this respect from their manner when awake by day. Perhaps their hours of rest vary in some measure according to their age and wants; probably old and large fish, like the larger carnivorous beasts—the lion, the tiger—rest by day and then sleep; we know that night is their principal feeding time."

The late Mr. Manley (Notes on Fish and Fishing, page 15) asks: "Do fish sleep? It may be presumed to start with that they do, otherwise they would form an exception to all vertebrate animals. I need hardly say that the fact of their having no eyelids to close would be no bar to profound sleep." At page 16—"Query: Do they swim in their sleep as somnambulists walk in their sleep? But as to the facts whether they sleep or not at night, or whether they take an occasional nap or siesta by day—what is the evidence? No one, as the proverb suggests, ever 'caught a weazel asleep'; and I do not know of any one who ever caught a fish asleep. A friend of mine, a good angler and ardent naturalist, adduces as evidence of fish sleeping the fact which, he says, he has established by experiment and observation—viz., that for above six hours during the night in winter, and about two in summer, no sound of fish moving is to be heard, and none are to be taken by any bait, with the exception of eels, which are clearly nocturnal in their habits. He says also that he has constantly taken chub with a white moth all through the early part of the summer's night, but that the fish have suddenly ceased rising just two hours before dawn, and have remained quiescent until the dawn had quite broken."

We think that fish would be more often found asleep if anglers's observations were directly applied for the purpose of ascertaining this. We ourselves, on two occasions, have caught fish asleep. Once, on the Kennet, we, with a friend, noticed a large trout lying near the bank, a little out of the stream of shallow; as we came up to him, although a bright day, he never stirred. We got close to him, threw a fly over him, of which he took no notice. We threw the shadow of ourselves and rod over him; no movement. We then got exactly opposite to him, so close we could count all his spots, and he appeared as if he was steadily looking at us. His fins were acting steadily all this time. We again threw our shadows over him, waved our rods and arms; he never moved. We then, with the end of the rod, gently touched him, and it was not till after rather a strong push did he wake up and dart with great velocity across the stream.

TRAP.

San Jose Tournament.

The Garden City Gun Club of San Jose has been quiescent for so many months that it was thought to have disbanded, but the tournament given under its auspices on Thursday, Friday and Saturday of last week, proved that its seeming lack of vitality was merely suspended animation. The club advertised its shoot freely, made ample preparations for the reception and entertainment of visitors, and attended closely to all details of the meeting. If there was any neglect or inexperience to be noted it should be attributed to the comparative newness of great tournaments to the San Jose Club. The weather was perfect and those who were present speak warmly of the kindness of their hosts. The live birds used had been cooped too long and were dufferish in consequence. They did not fly freely, and seemed very hungry. The trapping of the Blue Rock targets was not properly done. The trappers were little boys who skylarked too much.

The event of the meeting was Mr. Frank J. Bassford's score in the Selby Championship Match, in which he broke 49 single Blue Rocks from five traps and 49 out of twenty-five pairs, a score which has never been equalled in America or any where else. Mr. Bassford shoots an old Scott ten bore, that patterns about 256 No. 8's in a thirty inch circle at 40 yards, out of an ounce and a quarter. The gun does not begin to shoot with many of those opposed to it, but patterns evenly and shoots hard. Mr. Bassford has practised at Blue Rocks a great deal, and shoots them all when at about the same distance from the traps. He is very quick, and accurate, with any fire arm and is perhaps as good a shot as any in America. He best Captain Bogardus some years ago and has outshot Champion Crittenden Robinson upon several occasions. His win of Thanksgiving Day makes the second of the four necessary to give him the Selby medal as individual property. So many matches were shot that to note the interesting features of each would require too much space and a summary only is given. Messrs. Chas. J. Haas and Austin B. Sperry from Stockton, Doctor S. E. Knowles, Major S. S. Kellogg and J. S. Fanning from San Francisco and Messrs. J. M. Bassford, Jr., Henry A. Bassford, Frank J. Bassford, Abe. Bassford, T. H. Buckingham and Charley Reams from Vacaville were in attendance.

The Vacaville contingent believed that a team match was listed and came prepared to defend the reputation of Solano, but were compelled to be satisfied with bagging all the stakes, medals and purses. To Messrs. Frank E. Coykendall, Joseph Delmas and J. Portal of the home club is due the credit for the tournament.

The shooters were prompt in reaching the grounds at the Bridge House on Thursday and no time was cut to waste in arranging the first match, the Selby Championship of Central California, of 50 singles and 25 pairs of blue rock targets, 5 traps, $10 entrance. Prizes, Selby medal and 40 per cent. of entrance to first, 30 per cent. to second, 20 per cent. to third and 10 per cent. to fourth. The scores were:

SECOND DAY.

Friday was pleasant until the afternoon, when a wind blew and a heavy mist settled down over the grounds.

Considerable "modocing" was done, to the great annoyance of the shooters.

The first match was a handicap, those using 10 bores standing at 30 yards, while the 12 bore men were placed at 25 yards. The match was at 12 live birds, $5 entrance. The money was divided by Messrs. Fanning, Reams, Greer, Buckingham and Frank Bassford. The scores:

H. A. Bassford, 30 yards, 5; J. Fanning, 40 yards, 11; G. Anderson, 30 yards, 2; J. Trafton, 30 yards, 5; C. Reams, 30 yards, 11; F. E. Coykendall, 30 yards, 10; Greer, 28 yards, 11; Buckingham, 28 yards, 11; F. Bassford, 30 yards, 11; Pixley, 30 yards, 5; F. C. Bassford, 30 yards, 5; Meyers, 30 yards, 3; H. Bracker, 30 yards, 1; C. J. Haas, 28 yards, 10; Sperry, 30 yards, 4; J. Delmas, 30 yards, 7.

The second match at 6 live birds, $2.50 entrance, 5 shooters, was won by J. S. Fanning, Mr. F. E. Coykendall second. The third, a freeze out, $5 entrance, went to Mr. F. E. Coykendall, with 9 kills, Mr. C. J. Haas going out on his ninth bird.

The fourth at 15 single Blue Rocks and 5 pairs, $2.50 entrance, was won by J. Bassford, H. A. Bassford second, Messrs. Fanning, Reams, Coykendall and Taylor dividing third and fourth. Score: J. Delmas, 19; J. S. Fanning, 20; C. Reams, 20; A. B. Sperry, 16; G. Anderson, 18; F. E. Coykendall, 20; J. Trafton, 17; R. L. Scott, 18; H. A. Bassford, 21; Pixley, 17; B. L. Greer, 15; L. C. Meyers, 16; J. Bassford, 24; J. Portal, 19; Buckingham, 19; S. A. Taylor, 20.

Fifth was at twelve live birds. $5 entrance; four prizes. Messrs. Haas and Trafton divided first and second; F. J. Bassford, H. A. Bassford, Fanning, Reams and Fleming divided third and fourth.

Score—F. J. Bassford, 11; Coykendall, 10; Trafton, 12; Delmas, 3; Haas, 12; Sperry, 5; Fleming, 11; Pixley, 8; Greer, 7; Buckingham, 10; Reeves, 11; Corey, 10; Taylor, 10; H. A. Bassford, 11; R. S. Scott, 10; C. F. Fleming, 11.

THIRD DAY.

Several of the shooters had gone home on Friday evening, but those who remained enjoyed a delightful day, and shot six matches, of which a summary is given. Major S. J. Kellogg won the freeze-out with which the tournament concluded for the day, breaking 15 straight Blue Rocks, Henry Bassford quitting with 14.

First match, $5 entrance, 12 live birds—Buckingham 6, J. F. Greer, 8, Pixley 7, Portal 6, Coykendall 11, B. L. Greer 2, F. J. Bassford 10, C. J. Haas 10, Fanning 10, Reams 10, H. A. Bassford 11.

Second match, $5 entrance, 12 live birds—B. F. Bassford 11, Fanning 11, Coykendall 11, H. Bassford 10, Scott 9, Delmas 9, Trafton 9, Kellogg 10, Portal 3, Anderson 3, Greer 3, Pixley 4, Haas 10, Buckingham 10, Reams 5.

Third match, $5 entrance, 10 live birds—C. F. Bassford 9, Fanning 4, Coykendall 9, Delmas 9, Haas 9, Buckingham 1, Trafton 3, H. Bassford 1, Kellogg 2, Reams 10, Greer 6.

Fourth match, Blue Rocks, $2.50 entrance, Hurlingham rules, 15 birds—Fanning 14, Coykendall 11, Buckingham 14, Pixley 10, Trafton 13, H. A. Bassford 14, G. H. Anderson 11, Reams 11, Haas 12, Portal 12, F. Bassford 14, Kellogg 11, Delmas 12.

Fifth match, 15 single, 5 double birds, $2.50 entrance—Anderson 23, Coykendall 18, H. A. Bassford 21, Fanning 20, Buckingham 16, Haas 21, Kellogg 19, Delmas 20, Trafton 17, F. Bassford 22.

Mr. A. B. Sperry has challenged Mr. Frank J. Bassford to shoot for the championship of Central California and the Selby medal representing that honor now held by the latter.

Mr. C. H. Mason's New Book.

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN:—I received a short time since "Our Prize Dogs" which was offered by the author Mr. Mason, for the best pointer in any class at our show in San Francisco in April last, and which was won by my dog Tom Pinch. The volume far exceeded my expectation both in size and beauty of finish. After carefully reading it I am satisfied that it should find a place in the library of every owner and breeder of first class dogs. The many fine illustrations are frequently referred to for comparison, thus making one to more readily understand what the author intends to convey. I consider it a valuable acquisition to my canine literature. J. MARTIN BARNEY.

DUTCH FLAT, December 1st, 1888.

Hon. Saburo Fujii, His Japanese Majesty's Consul, who is a keen sportsman, and who has done much to increase interest in sport among the Japanese, kindly permits us to make an extract from a letter received by him from Mr. Taniguchi, who took with him to Japan a pointer bitch bred by Mr. William Schreiber, of this city. Mr. Taniguchi's remarks will strike a responsive chord in every owner of a good dog. There is authority for the statement that it is "Easier to give than to receive," particularly when the gift takes the form of a finely-bred and costly puppy, and the possible receipts are coin. Mr. Taniguchi says: "The pointer is doing very well indeed. I named her 'Cali' from California. I have shown her to Mr. Aoki, who thinks very highly of her. I am puzzled how to train my dog. Could you obtain for me a good book upon the subject. I am asked by a great many sport men for pups from my bitch (for nothing). Don't you think this is too hard for me who has paid a large sum in hard cash for the animal?"

"Our Prize Dogs."

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN:—My valued friend, Mr. Charles Mason, has been kind enough to send me a copy of his book "Our Prize Dogs,"—as a present—and I have dispatched a messenger with it to you, hoping you will refer to it with your graphic and forcible pen. It needed not this memoir from my accomplished friend, to bring him to memory, as the golden hours of "Auld Lang Syne," when he and I exchanged views over our favorites, comes often back to me.

And what a splendid volume of dog-love he has given to American breeders and sportsmen! How instructive and entertaining! Mason writes with the pen of a master in the art of judging. For it is an art to judge dogs well, and to be able afterwards to put on paper one's opinions, in clear, terse language, convincing and interesting at the same time. We The details he has given us are really amazing, when one comes to think of the work necessary to be done. I don't think there is another man in this country, capable of so graphically, learnedly, lucidly, and dispassionately dissecting the merits and demerits of dogs as Mason. He gives the why and wherefore when he finds faults or virtues. Every dog referred to by him stands before you in the flesh, and is tangible. That is where his power is. He has rare eyes for form, the perceptive faculty is grandly developed. And so if he did not stand, as I always claimed for him, the best all round judge in America, before this book was born, he certainly does now, nevertheless and masterful.

Let our lovers of dogs send for this book at once, and after careful study of the criticisms of the various prize-winners they will see wherein their own excel or are defective. I claim for it that it is, as far as it goes, a text-book upon all points necessary to make a perfect dog. When I say "as far as it goes," I mean concerning the breeds and specimens of which it treats.

I would have counselled Mason, had I stood by his elbow when he was judging and writing, to put down more complete measurements of the large dogs and the greyhounds.

Now for the pictures. How beautiful and life-like some of them are! As for instance those of the famous mastiff Minting, the pointer bitch Rever 3rd, and Scotia, the collie. They are simply perfect as works of art. Minting has few defects. He is probably the grandest mastiff alive. His pastures, as shown in the picture, look a little light, but otherwise he looks grand, and a mastiff all over. I am sorry a better picture was not obtained of that wonderful greyhound bitch Mother Demerke. This one does not show her to advantage, but sufficiently for our greyhound men to see some of her nubstone points.

I never cared much for collies, but upon my word that art-type of Scotia has made me fall in love with him. Is he not the type of a true guardian of flocks, eloquent with dignity, intelligence and courage? The picture of Revel 3rd represents the only one I ever saw, taken from a photograph, which gave me an idea of what I sought in a pointer. Look at that depth of chest, at those powerful loins, at the wideness between the eyes, at the grand pose of head and neck; look at that perfection of a tail, or stern—if you care to be more technical—how short and straight it is!

It is in the tails our pointers here are so defective, for they incline to the slope of a sickle, on many of them.

That picture of "Revel 3rd" shows what I call "quality." As for the printing and general "get up" of the book it is beautiful and impressive.

You sit down to a ten-o'clock breakfast at a friend's shooting box, with three or four jolly good fellows, after a day's sport with the hounds, and a night of dreams of clever horse-ship, and the trim, pretty, bright-eyed, white-capped serving-maid puts before you a dish of massive silver, inlaid with gold. She lifts the cover, and lo! and behold a royal Saut de venison, fit for Olympian Gods.

And you turn over the sumptuous apparel of this book, the "Forest and Stream Publishing Company" have so skillfully and tastefully planned, and lo! and behold, the contents are luminous companions for the refined workmanship of the outside.

Let us give author and publishers grateful thanks for the genius displayed in presenting such a volume to the American gentlemen who believe in dogs and their noble qualities.

Yours faithfully, STUART TAYLOR.

SAN FRANCISCO, Dec. 6, 1888.

Horses in Japan.

Dr. H. E. Stockbridge, of Illinois, arrived in this city on Sunday last from Japan, where he has been in the employ of the Japanese government. On enquiring if there was anything peculiar about the native horses that would interest the readers of the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN, the Doctor proceeded to narrate how the horses are bred and sold in the Principality of Hokkaido, which is the extreme northern island of the group: He says the horses breed at will, all running in a wild state on the semi-salt marsh lands, eating a grassy-looking substance, but which in reality is a reed. They grow fat and plump on the nutritious herbage, and are caught while in this wild state by the natives and tamed ready for sale.

The hairy men of Hokkaido have many times been written about, but nothing has ever been stated about their horsemanship abilities as far as the writer can learn, so the statements of Dr. Stockbridge as to what he has seen them do was particularly interesting. The natives of the island are evidently closely allied in kin to the sacred people of Burmah, but while the latter are looked upon in the light of deities in their native country, the Aino, or hairy men of Japan are looked upon much as the blacks are in Australia, a worthless lot of barbarians, of thieving propensities, and without any good traits to recommend them to those of the civilized class. The women weave a species of cloth from the bark of a tree and sell the same in Sapporo, the principal town of the island. The males catch horses and devote their time to training, preparatory to selling them. The riders far surpass in ability anything that is known outside of their own country, being superior in every respect to the cow boys of the western plains, or the bushmen of Oceania. They strip to the waist, the lower part of the body being covered with a garment made of s-kay, a sort of deer skin, the naked portion of the body exposing to view a thick covering of hair resembling that on the back of a Newfoundland dog. A rope is put into the mouth of the horse, with a loop around the lower jaw, and with this primitive affair the Aino jumps to the back of the now furious animal, who kicks, jumps, twists, and in every conceivable manner tries to throw his rider. The latter hangs on to the bare back of the horse with a skill that would excite the envy of Buck Taylor, his companions watching the spectacle with stolid indifference, knowing that the man is bound to master the beast. The horse will have to undergo this same ordeal for several days until he is considered gentle, when the last and finishing touch is given before he is offered for sale. This consists in the native mounting the back of the horse and standing upright, in the same manner that our circus riders do. His behavior while ridden in this style, must be of the best, or he is not considered fit for the market, but when he has passed through this stage of the proceeding, the month of the Aino begins to waver, for he sees a prospect of money in the near future. Like all people who are without the pale of civilization, these hairy people have but one aim or object in life, and that is to get money enough wherewith to purchase Sake. Sake is to the Aino what whiskey is to the Indian—it is his all. He has no thought for anything else, and while his money lasts, he simply lives on the native intoxicant. The horses when broken are sold at prices ranging from eight to fifteen dollars, at which they find ready sale. In size they are a trifle larger than the Shetland pony, and yet not quite as large as the bronco. They are a hardy, strong-limbed, well-developed class of animals, never seeming to tire in work, and when well broken are exceedingly willing.

"Oh, he can trot in 2:17 when in shape." How frequently is this remark heard about horses whose speed does not even approximate the time indicated. The remark is made without the slightest idea of what is involved in the performance. A horse to trot at the rate of 2:17 must have an amount of speed and endurance that can scarcely be comprehended when limited to an animal. His gait must be perfection, so that the least possible time is expended in gathering. He must make about thirty-nine feet to the second, and maintain this rate throughout the mile. He must make on an average thirteen yards every second and do it 135 times. There can be no vacillation, no halting in gait, no weakening of the muscles, no faithlessness; in short, there can be nothing lacking in physical condition or in training if this tremendous rate of speed is attained. To enable a horse to accomplish the stupendous feat two things are absolutely essential: unflinching gameness and perfect development. One is as essential as the other. Out of thousands of trotters that have appeared and passed away in the last fifty years, or of those that are active on the turf at the present time, how many have reached the 2:17 which is talked about so glibly? Just forty-nine. Lest the uninitiated should question this statement it may be well to give the list of those which have trotted in 2:17 or better, with their sires.

Australian Blood-Horses.

While sauntering through the stable-yard at the Bay District track, a few days ago, the attention of a representative of the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN was called to a magnificent dark brown colt, who, from his action, looked as though he wanted to impress the spectator with his fine quality and bearing. A question elicited the answer that he was a named son of Fergus, the first dam Alsace, she being by Airedale out of Consul. Fergus is by Irish King out of The Rose. An introduction to the owner, Mr. Newton, followed, and he was kind enough to give the reporter some information which may be of interest to our readers. The above-mentioned colt is 15.3½ in height, and is as snappy a looking two-year-old as one could wish to see. Mr. Newton purchased him in Australia, along with several others, about eight months ago, and brought them here for speculative purposes. As yet he has only sold two, Senator Hearst being the fortunate purchaser. They are: a chestnut colt, white stockings on hind legs, by imp. Somnia, out of Maid of the Hills, she by The Drummer, out of Atlanta. Drummer was the sire of Sapphire, Faro and Masquerade. Atlanta was the dam of the celebrated Lady Clifden. In looks the colt equals anything that imagination can fancy in a thoroughbred. Very bony, powerful, exceedingly full across the chest, well developed, stands 15.1, and as gentle as a kitten.

The second purchase of Senator Hearst's is a bay colt, by Kingsborough, out of Fleetwing. Kingsborough is a winner of the A. J. C. Derby, Champagne Stakes, St. Ledger, etc. The colt was foaled January 2, 1888, and is 15.1½ hands high. His temper is of the best, all the importation being remarkable in this regard, none of them are disposed to be ugly.

Among others that Mr. Newton has in his stable is one, a perfect picture of what a racehorse should look like, he is a beautiful bay colt, by imp. Cheviot out of Scrap, dam of Morceaux, Scrap was by Rungpinner, who was a sister to Sylvia, dam of Goldborough and that game son of Musket, Martini-Henry, who was the crack Australian three-year-old in 1883. Cheviot is by Adventurer out of Grey Stocking. In height he is 15.1½, and can show a quarter better than 25 any day.

Another one deserving attention is a bay colt with three white feet and stripe down the face, by Mariebyrning out of Fair Duchess, dam of Double Dutch and sister to Craig Miller, who was sold in England for $22,500. He is a beautiful looking colt as, in fact, they all are, takes to his work kindly, although the exercising any of them get is not severe, just enough to harden them up and keep them in good condition.

Mr. Newton has several others, all of them being in good condition and worthy a visit from the lovers of thoroughbreds.

The once famous race horse Freehand, that for three years, under the riding of Isaac Murphy, was the undisputed champion of America among his kind, is now in daily use before the buggy of his owner, Edward Corrigan of Kansas City, and takes very kindly to the job. The old idea that race horses are such delicately-organized creatures that after having taken part in the contests of the turf they scorn to perform manual labor is all nonsense, but it is undoubtedly true that they are ordinarily of little account for harness purposes. The truth of the matter is that when the days of the race horse are over he is, in nine cases out of ten, a cripple, and such animals are of little account for driving purposes. But that thoroughbreds can be broken to harness is well known, and in fact "Lucky" Baldwin, who is a good deal more of a horseman than some people give him credit for being, has for years pursued the practice of having all his thoroughbreds broken to harness while they are young, and the result is that all his famous race horses, Volante among the rest, can be exercised in harness if desirable, as it sometimes is when the animals get sick of the monotony of track work, and are sure to be benefited by a change. It is a well known fact that working runners in harness is much less likely to break them down than the ordinary system of galloping with a boy on the horse's back, and a good many handlers of thoroughbreds who graduated from trotting stables use this knowledge to advantage.

Robt. Steel of Cedar Park Stock Farm near Philadelphia, Pa., has bought from Diston & Kilgore fifteen head of brood mares and youngsters. This is the largest private sale of trotting-bred stock ever made in the State of New Jersey. Following is a list of the animals included in the sale:

Tips and Toe Weights.

A Natural and Plain Method of Horse Shoeing.

.....WITH AN APPENDIX.....

Featuring of the Action of the Race Horse and Trotter as shown by Instantaneous Photography.

By JOS. CAIRN SIMPSON, Author of Horse Portraiture.

"Round-hoof'd, short-jointed, fetlocks shag and long."

—Shakespeare.

Tips and Toe Weights.—We have received from Mr. Joseph Cairn Simpson, Editor and Proprietor of the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN, San Francisco, Cal., a copy of his book entitled "Tips and Toe Weights. A Natural and Plain Method of Horse-shoeing, with an appendix treating of the action of the racehorse and trotter as shown by instantaneous photography. Toe and Side-Weights." Mr. Simpson has had many years of experience in training trotters and runners, and is besides a most able, pleasant writer on matters pertaining to the horse. His "Horse Portraiture" was one of the first and best works on "training" we ever read. For several years he has been experimenting with tips in the hope that they might be made to serve every purpose of a full shoe and act as a preventive of the many hoof ailments entailed by the ordinary method of protecting our horses' feet. These experiments have abundantly demonstrated that tips will accomplish all he had hoped for, and we believe every horseman who reads the result of his experience will conclude with us that Mr. Simpson has inaugurated a revolution in shoeing that will prove of incalculable benefit to both horse and master. We are a willing convert to tips as against full shoes, and reading the plain, unbiased reports of actual trials by the author of "Tips and Toe Weights," together with the knowledge that the common system of shoeing has caused more suffering and done more damage to horses than can be traced to any other source, has had much to do with our conversion. We would not take $50 for this book and be without it, and on behalf of the "most faithful friend to man" would urge every reader of the "Sportsman" to secure a copy of it and test the value of its teachings. Price, in paper, $1; cloth, $1.50.—Western Sportsman and Live Stock Journal.

"Tips and Toe Weights." a natural and plain method of horseshoeing, is the title of a very clever, ingenious and practical book from the pen of Joseph Cairn Simpson, the Editor and Proprietor of the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN. The author in his introduction presents "his little volume with apologies," he had no need to do so, every chapter gives evidence of careful thought, his arguments are well worked out, the results of his experiments are placed in the most perspicuous manner before his readers, and his researches into the past show that he is at once an enthusiastic and voracious student of the horse. His great argument on tips receives its strongest endorsement from his famous colt Anteeo, whose history from his first shoeing to the time of publication is exhaustively treated. The opening chapter is a plea for a better system of shoeing, and each succeeding chapter is a step on the ladder towards that final conclusion which the author has arrived at. He brings history, theory and experiment into play to support his argument, and whether the horseman believes in his conclusions or not, he will not quit the book till he has read it through, for in addition to the perfect knowledge of the horse which the author possesses, he surrounds it with a literary charm, which holds the audience to the last sentence. We heartily commend "Tips and Toe Weights" to the attention of the public.—Chicago News.

Tips and Toe Weights.—J. C. Simpson has been prominently identified with trotters for many years, not only as a writer on the subject, but as an expert handler and developer. He has given a great deal of study to horses' feet, and the best way to improve their action. After experimenting for a number of years, he has put the result of his researches and practice in book form. This work, entitled "Tips and Toe Weights," claims to be a natural and plain method of horseshoeing. It treats of the action of the racehorse and trotter, as shown by instantaneous photography, and gives the subject of tips and toe weights a thorough ventilation. The work is meeting with a large sale, and is deserving of a place in every horseman's library, no matter whether he agrees with the ideas advanced or not. Send orders to the San Francisco News Company, or to the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN, San Francisco, Cal. Mr. Simpson is the Editor of the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN, which is a weekly journal devoted to the interests of breeders of fine horses, etc., and the advancement of all legitimate sport. It is the chief medium and representative of the breeding interests on the Pacific Slope.—N. Y. Spirit, May 10th.

Tips and Toe Weights.—Jos. Cairn Simpson of San Francisco, California, has just published a book by the name of "Tips and Toe Weights" which is almost worth its weight in gold to every horseman. He does not believe in the rigid, unyielding iron shoe that gives no play or expansion to the horse's foot. He has found that shoes are unnecessary, and everybody knows they are hurtful. He is a believer in the use of iron or steel tips to protect the toe of the foot. By their use, and without ever having put a shoe on Anteeo he trotted when four years old in 2:20½. He claims that for ordinary use even on macadamized roads tips are all that are required; that that fearful cause of lameness, contraction, is entirely avoided by the use of tips. We are going to use them, and advise others to do it in the manner he recommends. Send $1.50 to him and he will send you the book and it will be as good an investment as you ever made for the money.—Coleman's Rural World.

Since the book was published, Anteeo gave still more convincing proof of the efficacy of the system, trotting a public trial in 2:20½, and showing half-miles in 1:08 and furlongs in 16 seconds while a four-year-old. The best evidence of the genuineness of the trials was his sale for $10,000, with other parties ready to take him at the price. Anteeo, two years younger than Anteeo, never wore a shoe, and wing to an injury to his foot when a foal it was the universal impression that he never could trot fast. He did well as a yearling and two-year-old, and this past season, when three years old, he won the Occident Stakes, $1,221, in which he got a record of 2:29½, last half in 1:33½; first money in purse at Sacramento, $500; second money at Stockton, $150; the Stanford Stakes, $1,672; and the Embury, $870, making a cash return for the season of $1,514. I am satisfied that if he had been shod with full shoes when first put in training he would have been hopelessly crippled.

In the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN will be given a complete history of the treatment of Anteeo, showing with exactness the trials and results. I have made arrangements with an eminent microscopist to make full examinations of the horny deposit in wall and sole, and all the tissues which compose the foot of the horse, which will be incorporated in the forthcoming articles in the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN. Fully convinced by practical results, that this part of the anatomy of the horse is not understood as thoroughly as the other portions of the frame, I anticipate valuable accessions of knowledge from the revelations of the microscope.

Jos. CAIRN SIMPSON.

Grim's Gossip.

A monument is to be erected over the grave of the famous old brood mare Green Mountain Maid.

The only sister to Foxhall in America, was sold at public sale in Lexington, Ky., last Tuesday.

It is estimated that the horses who started for the Lancashire Plate this year in England are valued at $500,000.

Pony racing is becoming very fashionable in England, a regular stud book has been started and the new fad is at fever height.

Races have been announced for several days this week, but owing to the extremely bad track they have been postponed until next.

The BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN is under obligations to Mr. Harry Cohen of Eureka, and Mr. Seamans of Los Angeles for favors extended to the office.

Dailey D. has been taken from the track by Mr. R. B. Cockrill, and sent to the home stable. She will be run no more, being in foal to Ironclad, son of Woodburn.

The winner of the Futurity Stakes for 1889 will receive about $75,000. There are almost a thousand entries for 1891, and the secretary estimates the stakes at $100,000.

I have heard of an auction sale of a horse at Ashland recently in which the purchaser's accepted bid was 9,000 pounds of potatoes, a relic of pioneer days' methods when traffic and barter were the rule.

The pacing race announced to take place at the Bay District Track last Saturday was, for some reason unknown, postponed. Those who attended and paid admission were justified in grumbling.

The trio returned from Eureka Monday with their thoroughbreds and report a fairly successful meeting. It is currently rumored that W. H. Babb had $5,000 more when he returned than when he started.

R. De Lancie, Treasurer-elect of Butte county, was in the city Wednesday. "Dick" was one of the member of the now extinct Oroville Gu. Club and loves dearly to see a good race.

That excellent filly Gorgo, by Isonomy, dam the Flirt, which has been in the stable of Senator Hearst for the past season, will shortly be brought back from the East, to take her place at Palo Alto.

Mr. G. A. Wiley arrived from Kentucky on Wednesday, and reports his late purchases now on the way here. The valuable consignment of horses will arrive here Tuesday next in charge of Sam Gamble.

The once popular jockey, Lloyd Hughes, will wear the Preakness colors next summer. He was a great favorite during the time of Spinaway, Harold, Sensation, &c., but has not ridden for several years.

It is said of Taxgatherer that he has a habit of turning his head and scanning the figures on the book-maker's boards as he goes to the post at Clifton, and if they are long against him he is sure to land them.

Snapper Garrison thinks favorably of taking a trip to England after the next racing season. If he should make the visit, a mount or two on the other side may make an improvement in his present style.

One of the smallest colts ever foaled by a mare of standard size, was recently dropped by a mare belonging to Martin Lawless of Houlton, Me. The youngster weighed but twenty-five pounds, but is as lively as a cricket.

"Doc" Burwell, assemblyman elect from Butte County, has been a guest at the Lick House this week. His California Dexter colt he reports in good condition, and will take him to Sacramento for use during the session.

It is proposed to send the Prince of Wales a team of high class American trotters as a present. If he will use the team all the young bloods will be desirous of owning trotters, and thus open up a new market for American breeders.

Notwithstanding that California is now the leading state in the Union as the home of trotters, San Francisco shows fewer good teams than any city in the country. Of the few there are, probably Capt. Griffith has the best, with Capt. White's team a good second.

The old hay horse Barnum, has changed hands, or rather I ought to say that his running qualities have been disposed of, H. J. Woodford selling to J. D. DeLong. It is a pity that the honest old son of Bonnie Scotland could not have been transferred into better hands.

Turf writers in the East have all good things to say about Belvidere, and speak of him as the equal of Firenze, Kingston and Hanover. He will have to be a twenty pound better horse than he was in the fall to equal either of the three, and will have to be handled with better judgment.

Some of the members of Los Angeles Turf Club wish to disband and form a new corporation. This will not be done however, a large majority being against it. Extra efforts are now being made to increase the membership. A meeting to elect officers will be held this (Saturday) evening.

I wonder which California Association will be the first to offer purses for single dash trotting races. The very successful meeting at Fleetwood Park this fall shows that the public desire contests of that sort, and without doubt many Pacific Coast Associations will gratify their patrons by giving events of that kind.

A queer bet against Elkwood for the Suburban was laid recently by Mr. Thayer, a bookmaker. The bet was $1,000 to $10. The stake has not yet been closed, and there is no certainty that Elkwood will be in it. But the taker won a big winter wager last year on the chestnut for the race, and he is playing to repeat.

The case brought against Professor Oscar R. Gleason, horsetamer, by the Society for Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, at Philadelphia recently, was decided by the magistrate in Gleason's favor. The complaint stated that his methods were unduly severe and cruel; but the court didn't see it in that way.

Messrs. Withers and Cassatt have under advisement a plan to remove the Monmouth Club from its present quarters at Long Branch to another location near Elizabeth, N. Y. If this is carried into effect, a track and all that appertains thereto will be built to surpass the one now under way by the New York Jockey Club.

Now do not start and doubt my following bit of gossip, for it is true: Captain Machell has refused ten thousand pounds sterling for the yearling filly Riviera, an own sister to Seabreeze and Antibes. Just think of it, $50,000 offered and refused. Even in this day of fancy prices, the sum mentioned seems too large to warrant belief.

If you have no particular interest in any horse in a race, if none of the starters belong to yourself or a friend, or is trained in a stable about which you know something, if you have no knowledge of anything that is running, leave it alone. There will be another race in half an hour, or at any rate other race days are coming, wait for that.

Mr. C. W. Aby, manager of F. Gebhard's stock farm in Lake county, is at present on his way East to purchase a carload of the best brood mares that money can buy. As Mr. Aby says, he is a thorough cosmopolitan and has no favorites but he will select from winning strains of blood and have the very best stock procurable. He will return about the 15th of next month.

Last week I mentioned that probably some wealthy breeder might attempt to buy the celebrated Commotion, if the Australian horses now here proved a success. Information comes that an American has tried to purchase him from the Hon. W. Pearson, but the latter would not take less than 20,000 guineas for him and the American would not give that price for the son of Panic out of Evening Star.

Cincinnati is to have a new racing association. The old Buckeye racing track, which has fallen into disuse and decay, is to be purchased and fully equipped as one of the finest race-courses in the country. A large number of gentlemen prominent as patrons of the turf will be interested in the new venture, and it has encouragement from the outside which is of the most responsible character.

At a meeting of the stockholders of the Dixon Driving Park Association, held on Monday, Dec. 3rd, the following directors were elected: Gilbert Wright, William Amos, J. A. Hardy, S. G. Little, P. R. Willot, R. Hall, S. T. Mowder, Wm. Vansant and H. Eppinger. G. Wright was elected president, and J. Rochford secretary. J. W. McFadyen, who has so acceptably filled the office of president since the organization of the society, positively declined to serve any longer.

Last Tuesday a large attendance assembled at the San Mateo Rancho, the occasion being a sale of registered Short-horns. The prices paid were very fair, although some of the prominent strains were sold very cheap. E. J. Baldwin purchased several head, other prominent buyers being Henry Cowell, E. Rea of Gilroy and J. F. Judge of San Francisco. In all 108 head were sold, the sale footing up $8,029.50.

Mr. William Van Tassel, of the firm of Tassel & Kearney, the leading horse dealers of New York, fell down an elevator shaft one week ago yesterday, and was so badly injured that he died within two hours.

Mr. Van Tassel was one of the best known horse dealers in the city of New York, and was in every respect a self made man. He started life as the driver of one of the old time city stages, and by unswerving perseverance gradually arose to be a representative man in his business.

The Executive Committee of the National Association of Trotting—Horse Breeders are in session in New York. The following officers were re-elected for the ensuing year: W. I. Mall, president. Leland Stanford of California, first vice-president; I. V. Baker, Jr. of New York, second vice-president; L. D. Packer; secretary, and J. W. Gray, treasurer. The new Board of Censors are Guy Miller, D. F. Norris, W. B. Dickerman, E. G. Doolittle and F. H. Pratt, all of New York.

The entries for the double event to be run over the Coney Island Jockey Club's course at the meeting next June are all in, and they number 109. The race is for two-year-olds over the Futurity course. The first event will be run on the opening day, five and a half furlongs, the second event on the last day being six furlongs. Among the entries are six from the Haggin stable and three nominated by Mr. E. J. Baldwin.

It seems rather strange, yet no less true, that the three-mile pacing record stood, as it now is, for forty-five years, Oneida Chief making the distance in 7:44 on August 15, 1843. The pacer, James K. Polk, at Centerville, L. I., on September 13, 1874, travelling the distance in exactly the same time. With the many famous pacers now in this country it will be surprising if this record is not wiped out before long. California alone can furnish at least half a dozen who would lower it at the first attempt.

Orrin Hickok has received from Mr. Wilfred Page, of Sonoma County, two very fine colts which are to go into training, preparatory to sending them around the circuit next season. One is called Electric, a fine, large, brown two-year-old, sire Electioneer, dam Manette, a daughter of Nutwood, and full sister to Manon and Woodnut. The other, Peep-o-day, is a very large chestnut yearling, and those who have seen him go, speak of him as a phenomena for speed. He is by Dawn, dam "Savage Mare," an inbred Boston and Kentucky hunter. Sonoma expects to hear good news from these youngsters next summer.

The Sporting World says: "Jockey Palmer was made a happy youth on Friday night. He was awarded first prize at the Passaic Church fair and elected the most popular rider in this section. He was given a saddle, bridle and whip for the 2,600 votes he received, which were paid for at the rate of 25 cents each. Ossler was his strongest opponent, and the latter did his utmost to win. Money was literally shovelled in for tickets by both boys and their friends, but the Palmer party was the strongest. Ossler was not allowed to walk home in despair, as he was presented with a pair of riding boots; and Bergen, for third prize, was given a pair of baby boots. The church people netted over $2,000 by the competition."

Owners of race horses in Great Britain are complaining bitterly of a proposed law which is now before Parliament, and, if passed, will compel all owners to pay a yearly license of $25 for each horse. The idea has been borrowed from Mr. Pitt, who once proposed that a tax of $5 should be paid for every horse entered to start for any race or match. When the matter came before the House of Commons Lord Surrey (afterwards Charles Duke of Norfolk) advised Mr. Pitt to alter this tax, and to substitute instead $25 on the winning horse of any plate of the value of $250. Mr. Pitt adopted the suggestion of Lord Surrey in 1784, but by no means in accordance with the views of "Jockey of Norfolk," as he did not abandon his original proposition, but annexed the other to it, so that owners had to pay two taxes instead of one.

A Chat.

Learning that Mr. Ten Broeck was to have an article in this week's BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN, I thought it would pass a pleasant half hour or so if I could see the Nestor of the American turf and talk over daye gone by in England. While deliberating how best to meet the old gentleman, a note was handed me inviting "Grim" to have lunch at the Palace that afternoon at 2 o'clock, and signed R. Ten Broeck. When I saw the name what a flood of recollections came pouring into my mind! Epsom Downs, Goodwood, Newmarket, Ascot and Doncaster, with the many happenings incidental thereto, one reminiscence after another being drowned out as each fresh wave of thought brought forward some old end almost forgotten story or scene. Needless to state at 2 sharp I was shaking hands heartily with him of whom it was once said, "He is credited by the United States to the court of Newmarket."

I particularly wanted to ask my host a question which I have often asked myself and yet felt I could not answer, so while indulging in whitebait I said "Mr. Ten Broeck, what horse in your opinion, is the best you have ever seen?"

Without a moments hesitancy he answered, "Ormonde."

Now that was just the answer that I had expected, for the magnificent bay colt numbers his admirers by the millions, still I cannot help thinking that Martini-Henri, by Musket out of Sylvia, which I saw in Australia, was, before he broke down, fully the equal of Bend-Or's famous son. Be that as it may, we talked over Ormonde's victory in the 2,000 guineas at Newmarket, when both Minting and Saraband were favorites over the Duke of Westminster's horse, Minting being a shade better than even money. Saraband quoted at 3 to 1, Ormonde obtainable in any snipe at 7 and 8 to 2. George Barrett had the mount on Ormonde and simply held up the balance of his field to ridicule, winning in the commonest kind of a canter by two lengths from Mr. Vyner's Minting, Prince Soltykoff's chestnut colt Mephisto being a most lamentable third. Yet Minting was a first class race horse in every particular and without an Ormonde in the field would have swept everything that year before him. As Napoleon had his Waterloo so Minting had his Ormonde.

"Then," said Mr. Ten Broeck, "do you remember his Derby win, where he was pitted against The Bard and St. Mirin, there were only nine starters, two of which started at 500 to 1 against and two others at 1,000 to 15 against. Still the best odds laid by the pencilers were 4 to 9 about Ormonde, and how he did cut down his field, when Archer turned the corner with him the race was as good as over, yet Charley Wood, on The Bard, tried all he knew how to win. Down they came thundering toward the judges' stand, but the great invincible would not be headed; he won as he pleased by almost two lengths, the Duchess of Montrose's entry, St. Mirin, a had third." Then, of course, I had to tell how I saw him start at Ascot for the St. James Palace Stakes with the enormous odds of 100 to 3 on, again winning easily.

"Of course," said Mr. Ten Broeck, "after Archer began to ride the marvel, many attributed his successes to the excellent jockey, but in the Hardwick Stakes at Kempton Park Archer was on Melton, the Derby winner of 1885, with G. Barrett on Ormonde. But it is only a repetition of the same story, Ormonde won by two lengths in very hollow fashion."

Then we talked about how he won the St. Leger, the Foal Stakes, the Newmarket St. Leger, the Champion, where numerous bets were laid at 100 to 1 on his winning. I then told my entertainer what Billy Hayward said to me last summer, that Blair Athol was the best horse he had ever ridden, which evidently recalled a story.

"Did I ever tell you how I nearly lost $30,000 on Blair Athol?" said Mr. Ten Broeck. On receiving a negative answer, he continued: "Well, you see his owners were poor, and the horse was really controlled by the bookmakers. The public had backed him heavily, and I, knowing that the field had no show against him, put up £6,000 on him to win. The knights of the book wanted to scratch him, but were afraid of a public exposure, as so much money had been put up by one person, so I received several quiet intimations, first from one and then from another, that the horse was sick, that he was lame, that he could not go the distance, in fact, there were so many reasons why he could not win, that I commenced actually to pity the colt. At last I was told plainly what was intended, and a chance given me to hedge so as to cover my money, but it was a narrow escape, and after that I was always careful what horse I backed."

"Tell me, Mr. Ten Broeck, how you won the Goodwood Cup?"

"Well, you see, I had two entries for the Cup, Starke, ridden by Fordham, and Optimist, with Edwards, up. I gave them instructions to alternately make the pace, the two miles and a half, giving them an opportunity to do so."

I also told them not to make the pace too hot, but simply to keep The Wizard, which was the favorite in the betting, moving along, and that in the final furlong whichever of the two was best was to make the run out. Well, they got off all right, first one and then the other, pressing The Wizard, but he managed to keep well in front until they were well into the last quarter, and from thousands of throats came the cry, The Wizard, The Wizard. Edwards called out to Fordham that Optimist had shot his bolt, so Starke was sent for the prize so eagerly sought for by the leaders of the English turf. In the last twenty yards Fordham headed The Wizard, and finally beat him out by a head. You can imagine what a long breath I drew when I found out that such a classic event had fallen to the American stable. The following week I won the Brighton stakes with Optimist, he rounding to, in splendid form, after his hard race for the cup.

"Of all the many trainers you had, which one do you consider the best?"

"I have never seen the equal of Pryor. He was the superior of any man in handling horses, that I have ever known. He could always be depended on to bring his horse to the post fit to run for a man's life, attentive, careful, shrewd, a complete master of his business, I can hardly imagine his peer."

"Next to Ormonde, what horse in England struck your fancy?"

"I should say that next to Ormonde, Gladiateur, the Derby and St. Leger, winner of 1865, was the horse I fancied most. He was a very large colt standing fully 17 hands and had a fearful stride, I have seen him in a mile and a half race, when he looked to be at least a hundred yards in the rear of his field, but he cut them down as though they were standing still, yes, next to Ormonde I should say the noted French horse was the best."

Harry Wilkes has been returned to the Siro Brothers by Dr. Sheppard as an entirely cured horse. His weak leg is reported all right, and there is every reason to hope that after his long rest the gallant little gelding will be fit to contest the free-for-all races of 1889; against the best of them, and to lower his present record, 2:13.

The Australian Turf.

MELBOURNE, Australia, Oct. 25.—While many matters of importance have occurred here since my last letter, yet the all important subject discussed by lovers of sport just now is the peculiar in and out running of a mare called The Nun, and its consequences. In fact, the ruling off of The Nun, together with her owner and jockey, for an indefinite period, which in plain English means life, has supplied the sensation of the season. And as Sydney Tattersall's has declared off all bets made on the mare for the Sydney Handicap, both the betting and racing authorities seem to have been satisfied as to the existence of a fraud. As each of the enquiries were held with closed doors very little of the evidence has been made public, but bit by bit it has oozed out, and the facts in the main are these: The Nun has, right through her career, been regarded as the most mysterious mare—her reputation, indeed, has been better than her best performances; and holding the opinion, rightly or wrongly, that she very rarely spun, the race going public only needed the slightest hint that she would be a certain trier in a certain race to at once fasten on to her and make her the hottest of hot favorites. They got that hint on Thursday, when the owner himself vouchsafed the information to a couple of Melbourne gentlemen, one of whom he asked to execute a commission for him. Now backers of horses like to execute commissions in connection with mysterious mares like The Nun. They feel flattered by the confidence reposed in them, and having the hint from the stable direct, seize on the opportunity to invest a good deal of their own money in addition to the commission. In the case in point the commissioner appeared to have been hampered with one or two conditions, a portion of his instructions being to the effect that it would be advisable for him to put the money on with certain bookmakers (named). I wonder this didn't strike him as being rather an unusual proceeding. As a rule, in executing a commission the instructions are: "Put on so much for me and get the longest price you can." In this case, however, the gentleman who acted as commissioner was enjoined to look out for certain bookmakers and bet with them; and I am rather surprised that (if these really were the instructions) he didn't smell a rat straight away. Anyhow, the moment the money was seen going on in earnest there was such a rush to back The Nun that she speedily was installed first favorite, and at one time touched 2 to 1. Backers fairly toppled over one another in their eagerness to "get on" at any price. But strange to say, when the horse were on the way to the post The Nun commenced to go back in the betting, and the more money was piled on her the farther she receded in the betting, until, when the flag fell, 5 to 1 was her price, and before she had gone a hundred yards 10 to 1 was offered against her. She ran nowhere in the race, and her backers, more particularly the commissioners entrusted with her owner's sweet confidence, awoke to the fact that they had been "done."

As the mare has been ruled off the course by the stewards, she is now scratched for all future engagements, and those who have backed her for any other race, lose, of course, their money.

The next move made by the parties interested in this famous mare was to dispose of her by auction with her stable companions. The preliminary arrangements were completed, and on Monday last she was brought up for sale.

The first bid for her was $1,000, and the price was quickly raised by fifteen till $2,000 was reached. Ten guinea bids was then the order of the day till $2,250 was announced. All the persuasions of Mr. Archie Yulle could not induce anyone to go one better, and the mare was withdrawn, with an intimation that $2,625 would buy her.

Attracted probably by curiosity and a morbid desire to have a last look at the most sensational mare of the season, a very large crowd congregated at Tattersall's bazaar when the disqualified animals, The Nun & Co., were announced to be sold. Out of the hundreds present I don't suppose there were half a dozen intending purchasers in the ring, the majority, as I have said, being attracted thither by reason of the mare's record and the subsequent Sydney scandal.

After making all due allowances for gush, the impressions of Messrs. Haydon and Clibborn, the respected secretaries of the Victorian Club and A. J. C., who have recently returned from a trip to Europe, are unusually interesting, and their personal will, I think, afford your readers an idea as to relative merits of the race horse here and in England.

Mr. Haydon reports emphatically that there is not a shadow of a doubt that in all matters pertaining to horse racing we can teach English people a great deal. This fact he ascribes, very properly, I think, to the existing Conservatism in high quarters at home, which is more noticeable in connection with horse racing than anything else. The general arrangements in all departments, from the laying out of the courses and paddocks to the catering, suffer by comparison with the facilities afforded for witnessing and enjoying the races in Australia. The only respect in which English courses are superior to those of Australia is in the picturesque nature of their surroundings. This, I fear is a natural advantage which will for many years be denied the majority of Australian courses, though, for my own part, I never visited a race course in England or France which, for sublimity of surrounding scenery and magnificence of situation, approached the Elwick course, near Hobart.

For months past I have had occasion to lament the lack of betting on coming events until the post is reached. Mr. Haydon says that precisely the same state of affairs exist at home. He says: "There appears to be a growing inclination to leave betting, except in the big races, until the post is reached; and the betting does not start on the other events until ten minutes before the race, when the numbers of the starters are hoisted. The amount of betting done in fifteen minutes is said to be tremendous." This, in itself, furnishes another illustration of the superiority of the Australian system to that in vogue at home. On all decently regulated courses in these colonies we know the starters at least five and twenty minutes before the flag falls, and the confusion and complication created by a return to the English style—more particularly to the ready money men—would be incalculable.

Mr. Clibborn, in his views of the superiority of Australian racing to its English prototype, is even more emphatic than Mr. Haydon.

An Australian race course crowd has always borne the reputation of being a particularly good-humored body of individuals, but until he has visited the race courses of Europe one fails to understand how wonderfully docile and tractable Australian race goers really are. Mr. Haydon, in his interview, tells us that while a handful of police suffice to control the crowd at Flemington, a regiment is insufficient at Epsom, and a battalion even with difficulty maintain order at Longchamps.

Mr. J. J. Miller's most recent importation in trotting stallions, Red Wind by Red Wilkes—Carrie Norman, together with Architect, by Contractor—Constance Howe and Honestus, by Honeety—Fright will do service at the end this year at the Bayswater Stud Farm, near Ringwood. For the first named the fee is 12 guineas, for the latter two 6 guineas. Only a limited number of mares will be taken.—From the Sporting World.

The Three-Year Olds.

Below will be found a table giving the three-year-olds winning $5,000 and upward on the American turf during the past racing season. It will there be seen that 30 performers won such distinction, and these colts and fillies won a total of 211 races, worth the large amount of $417,505. In 1887 23 three-year-olds won $5,000 and upward and they captured 155 races, worth $354,740 50. The table follows:

In 1885 the largest winning three-year-old was Wanda, she winning $30,380; in 1886 The Earl, he winning $41,805, while in 1887 Hanover headed the list, he winning $89,872.50. In 1888 the two and three-year-old winners of $5,000 and upwards won 315 races and $757,153 in public money. In 1887 the forty-five two and three-year-olds which earned like distinction won 270 races and $603,459. Of the winning owners in 1888 that figure in the list, E. J. Baldwin profited largest, Emperor of Norfolk and Los Angeles winning for him $70,315. Sir Dixon and Bella B. earned $61,120 for the Dwyer Brothers, while Prince Royal, George Oyster and Raceland placed $59,810 to Angnet Belmont's credit. For the Chicago Stable, Maebeth II., Huntress, Santalene and Lela May won $38,761, and Gorgo and Surinam enriched Senator Hearst $10,973. All the others in the list belong to separate stables.

Uniform Scale of Weight.

The committee appointed by the Turf Congress to have finally finished its labors and decided on establishing a uniform scale of weights for the United States. The following resolution was passed:

Resolved, That the scale of weight for age, adopted by the American Jockey Club, Coney Island Jockey Club and Mount Pleasant Park Association on May 1, 1885, be raised four pounds, and be adopted as the standard weight for age scale of weights for the United States, without any allowance for geldings.

Which will make the schedule as follows:

A New Way to Control Refractory Horses.

Professor R. H. Harrison, of the veterinary school of Harvard College, says Wallace's Monthly, has completed some interesting experiments of the new device for controlling refractory horses. A valuable trotting horse, which formerly went under the name of Gray Eagle, and which has a record of 2:22, was sent to the school for treatment of a fractured jaw, which was the result of an attempt to control him. The animal had the habit of taking the bit in his teeth and bolting. Dr. Harrison contrived to connect the bit by two small wires along the reins with a small galvanic-faradic battery, which he carried in the buggy. It was so arranged that the driver could give an electric shock of greater or less intensity to the horse, but which would not do the animal any injury. Dr. Harrison took care to use the contrivance only with the use of the words "whoa" and "steady." The trial was an immediate success. The horse, after two or three shocks, at once became docile, and obeyed the driver's commands instantly. A final trial was given the horse under trying circumstances. He came to a halt from a 2:40 gait, or to a walk, with equal docility, on the driver's order. He was tamed under conditions which ordinarily would have frightened him and caused him to bolt, and the result was equally satisfactory.

A Stallion's Prestige.

The adage that nothing succeeds like success is in no instance better illustrated than in the case of stallions, and it may also be said that their success is the only gauge by which the public judges them. Not a year passes but there is a sensation in the matter of trotting stallions. In the days long since gone by it was Rysdyk's Hambletonian that came to the front with a bound when Dexter showed himself tar and away the fastest trotter of his day, and from that time until the day of his death Hambletonian was the premier trotting stallion of the world, being so great in his own state as to practically overshadow his sons that got trotters, and the heads of other families that in the absence of Hambletonian would have been far better known than they were while he was getting his list of forty sons and daughters that have beaten 2:30. It is true that during the last years of Hambletonian's life his son Volunteer attained distinction as a sire of trotters, and in some respects his get are to-day the best in the world, it being doubtful if their equals as campaigners have been produced; but for all that the fight between Hambletonian and Volunteer was always a lively one, conducted with considerable bitterness on both sides, and and there is no doubt that one result was to keep good mares from Volunteer at a time when had he been given them his list of 2:30 representatives would have been materially increased. Harry Clay, whose friends had made an injudicious fight on Hambletonian, also suffered thereby, and he was but little heard of while Hambletonian and Volunteer were making their reputation, and these were the leading trotting stallions until 1876, or thereabouts. Although Blue Bull was doing great work for a pacer, and Almont, Belmont, Happy Medium, and a few others were getting trotters in more than the ordinary numbers, but little had been heard of George Wilkes, the horse that was destined to eclipse them all. It is true that he had been a famous trotter in his day, and had at the time mentioned been in the stud for a number of years, but his time in the breeding ranks has been passed in New York State, and under conditions that were unfavorable. May Bird, that made a great showing down the Central Circuit line in 1876, was the first of the get of George Wilkes to perform in such a manner as to attract general attention to him, and by this time the horse had been sent to Kentucky, where he sired the most of the sixty odd trotters that have placed him at the head of the list of trotting stallions, besides getting sons without records that are siring fast trotters every year, and daughters that are producing trotters.

George Wilkes died at the zenith of his fame, so far as ante-mortem success can be called a zenith, and the next stallion about which there was a furor was Dictator, and there is little wonder at this, for Jay-Eye-See, Phallas, and Director came out in one season, and it the performances of this trio, that obtained records, respectively, of 2:10, 2:13½ and 2:17, were not enough to set a man on fire with enthusiasm, it is difficult to see what would be, for three gamer trotters never lived, and between them they managed to make a sensation about their sire, the like of which had never been seen in the history of any stallion, either trotter or runner. The result was the sale of Dictator at a long price—much more than would have bought him five years before that—and since then he has been standing in Kentucky at a $500 fee and getting all the mares he wants, although there have not come from his loins, so far as the records show, any more sons that are worthy to rank with the three mentioned. But the men who breed mares to Dictator at a fee of $500 know that the power to transmit extreme speed at the trot is there, and with this fact established beyond a doubt there will be no trouble in filling the book of the brother to Dexter for as many seasons as he shall live. It is the same with Kentucky Prince. When Mr. Charles Backman bought this horse there was not a few critics who were sure that the owner of Messenger Duroc had paid too much for him. The horse did not have luck on his side after passing into Mr. Backman's hands.

That his get are animals of high nervous organization is well known, and for this reason care and intelligence must be used in handling them. Critics assailed the family on the ground that its members were unsteady. But the season just closed has sent Kentucky Prince to the front in such a style that hereafter he will be practically a private stallion, and next season he will serve a limited number of mares—and these must belong to former patrons of the horse—at $300. The Kentucky Prince boon began when Guy went so well in his first race at Detroit, shutting out every horse that started against him and making a record of 2:16. In the meantime Guy's full brother, Fred Folger, had been showing the down Easters the quality he was made of by winning a lot of good races and getting a mark of 2:20½. Spofford went a mile in 2:16½ one morning in his work at Cleveland, and this was commented on in the press, all of which helped matters. Then Guy kept going faster and faster until he had placed 2:14½ opposite his name before the summer was half over. Later in the season he trotted two miles on separate days in 2:12, giving him the fourth-best record of any trotter in the world, and before this was done Spofford had won the $10,000 stake at Hartford, while Cypress and others of the get of Kentucky Prince had beaten 2:30, and in nearly every instance shown such speed as to warrant the belief that with another season's handling they would do the mile close to 2:20. All this showed beyond the possibility of doubt that Kentucky Prince was a great sire, and how he is practically made a private stallion.

Everybody remembers how Phil Thompson and Mande Messenger brought Red Wilkes into notice. Of course in these days any son of George Wilkes would do well in the stud, but it was not so when Phil Thompson, as a two-year-old, showed that he could beat 2:30, and was the fastest trotter of his age that had up to that time been bred in Kentucky. That he was no counterfeit was made apparent the following summer when at Chicago, in the third heat of a race against a good field of four-year-olds, he reduced the three-year-old record to 2:21, and it stayed there for quite a while. This sort of work attracted attention to his sire, Red Wilkes, and it is within the recollection of many men that almost without exception the critics pronounced him a very coarse horse. They were not sure, you see, that Red Wilkes was going to prove such a great sire although Phil Thompson was a great colt, and they wrote of the horse just as they saw him. Now, when a decade had gone by and the position of Red Wilkes is so well assured that his fee is $300, with a full book all the time, these same critics are enthusiastic in their praises of the personal appearance of Red Wilkes, although it is manifestly impossible that the size of the stallion's head should have decreased or his general make-up radically altered. When the phenomenal two-year-old, Axtell, came out last summer and began beating 2:30, of course the public wanted to know what his sire, William L. looked like, and were at once regaled with glowing accounts of what a fine-appearing animal he was. Now on this point authorities differ. A breeder in whom the writer has implicit confidence says that William L. is a coarse horse, just as all the critics said Red Wilkes was when he had only Phil Thompson to represent him in the 2:30 list. It is no discredit to a horse that he is coarse, and if he be a successful sire it does not hurt him in the least—and on general principles it is better to tell the truth about stallions. —Breeder's Gazette

The National Association Reviewing Board at Work.

In accordance with a time-honored custom, the Board of Review of the National Trotting Association commenced its annual December meeting at the Fifth Avenue Hotel in New York on the evening of December 4. During the day there was a gradual gathering of horsemen interested in the various cases on the docket, and by 8 p.m., when the Board was called to order, there was a strong muster of the fraternity. The Board meets distinctly as a court, and, as its name implies, to review the action of the associated members composing the National Association in their administration of the trotting law. Expulsions, suspensions, fines, and the various matters connected with the payments of premiums or entrance moneys are all acted upon originally by the individual members of the association, or are brought up on complaint, application or appeal by individuals. These meetings of the Board of Review are really the final vindication of the trotting law, and from its action there is no appeal, except an appeal for mercy to the same body.

For years past Judge Grant of Iowa, as President of the Association, has presided at the meetings of the Board here; but on this occasion his former seat was occupied by Major P. P. Johnson of Lexington, Ky., his successor. Major Johnson is a bright-eyed, square-headed, pleasant-faced gentleman, with a full brown beard, and he presided with dignity and ease, despatching the business before the Board promptly, but without acerbity of manner.

Col. A. Loudon Snowden, of Philadelphia, Vice-President of the Association, sat at Major Johnson's right hand, and throughout the session last evening was among the busiest members of the Board. It was evident that he was no fifth wheel, as vice-presidents are apt to be. He seemed posted as to every case that was called, and was active and shrewd in his suggestions when witnesses were examined.

Mr. W. H. Strickland, of Bangor, Me., sat in the Board for the first time. He is a portly, gray-bearded gentleman, with a firm but genial face, and seemed to adapt himself very naturally to the novelty of his position. Mr. John L. Mitchell, of Milwaukee, was another newcomer to the Board, but from the start an active member. He is a solid-looking gentleman with a bushy beard, and is a magnate in financial matters in the Northwest. The other members present of this Board were Mr. David Bonner of New York, and Mr. M. J. Payne of Kansas City, both of whom are veterans in this service. Mr. M. M. Morse, the painstaking secretary, was of course present, alert and courteous as ever. Altogether the Board was an imposing body in appearance, and well worthy to represent the great body with the management of which it is charged.

The docket is a comparatively small one, showing less than 80 cases, against 125 a year ago, at the last meeting in this city. The most notable case of the evening was that of the National Trotting Association against Frank L. Herdic, the well known pool-seller. The matter arose from his alleged complicity in the defeat of Loretta F. by Charley Hogan, at Rochester, N. Y., in August, 1887. After the race, Tuft, the driver of Loretta F., and Frank Wiedhoff were expelled, the one for pulling the mare, and the other for complicity in the affair. Frank Herdic was also accused of a part in the job, and the matter was brought before the Board at its meeting in Chicago last August, but its consideration was postponed until this meeting, as Herdic was unable to be present at the spring meeting. The evidence against him was the written statement of the expelled men. Every one that has attended the trotting meetings is familiar with the peculiar and persuasive eloquence that has gained for Herdic his title as "King of the Auctioneers," and his appearance before the Board excited much interest. He was as eloquent and voluble as ever, but he was evidently very much in earnest, and his testimony in his own behalf carried with it the conviction of his honesty. After explaining that he did not sell the pools or have any interest in them at Buffalo or Rochester, and that he always went to the races, he said that at Buffalo the week before he saw Loretta F. trot against Charlie Hogan, and saw that the mare only beat him by a nose. At Rochester Loretta F. sold in the pools at $25, to $11 for the field. "Murphy was up behind Skylight Pilot, and Budd Doble behind Charlie Hogan," said he, "and I knew they would win if they could. Taking it altogether, I thought the field would win, and I knew there would be a horse race before it was beaten. Without consultation with any one I invested something over $100 on the field. Just after that Wiedhoff came up and asked me what I was doing. I replied that I had bought the field against Loretta F., and he told me he had $175 the other way. After talking with me about it he decided to follow my plan, and together we put on more money. I drew out over $400 as the result. I never saw Tuft until I saw him in the sulky, and had no communication with him directly or indirectly, and I never paid him any money in connection with the affair. I was simply a looker on, accustomed to bet a little money on the races, and I followed my own judgment, formed in advance. It I had considered it a sure thing I would have bet ten times what I did." This testimony very flatly contradicts the written statements of Tuft and Wiedhoff, but it was given with convincing clearness and force, and seemed to impress the board very favorably. A decision in the case will be reached in executive session.

A Consolidation.

It is said the absorption of the American Jockey Club by the New York Jockey Club will soon be effected. The papers necessary to the deal are now in preparation but have not been passed yet, and the parties in interest decline to make public the details of the transaction. In a general way, however, they are this: The New York Jockey Club, in which J. H. Morris is the moneyed man and of which Leonard W. Jerome is president, will take possession of Jerome Park next spring and hold its first meeting there on the usual dates of the American Jockey Club's meeting. The New York Jockey Club in the deal will assume all the American Jockey Club's obligations as to stakes already closed and to close, and undertake to carry out next spring as literal a programme as the American Jockey Club had intended to offer. Whether the consolidated clubs (for the deal virtually amounts to a consolidation) will race under the name of the American Jockey Club or the New York Jockey Club is not yet aunounced. After the spring meeting Jerome Park is to be abandoned, and the fall meeting of the consolidated club will be held at the new track now building in West Chester.

The New York Jockey Club, by going into this arrangement, is a distinct gainer, as it secures a place in the Eastern circuit of racing associations both for the coming year and the future without a serious clashing of dates with other clubs now holding meetings. Its new track could hardly be got ready for a spring meeting in 1889, as there is much work still to be done on it. The grandstand, the largest and finest structure of the kind in the world, will probably be finished by the first of next month. The building of the stable, clubhouse, paddock sheds, and the various appurtenances of the track will probably take all summer, but the track will certainly be ready for the two weeks' meeting in October, which will wind up the racing season in this State.

Where Was It?

This item has been going the rounds of the Western Stock journals as having happened at Visalia, Cal. Our Eastern exchanges as having occurred at Ansonia, Conn.:

An Ansonia (Conn.) man was recently beguiled into trying the speed of an unknown mustang on the Derby Driving Park. The animal was brought out with a blanket and halter in place of saddle and bridle. All being in readiness, he rode up the track and came down under the wire on an easy canter, with a sort of see-me-ride look on his placid features. The crowd shouted "Go!" and at that moment a change came over that pony. He straightened out and commenced to fly. The rider was astonished, but thought he would quiet down before the quarter was reached. But the pony continued to go, and when he rounded the upper corner the rider dropped the halter and seized the mane, clinging on for dear life. The half was made in 1.10, and as he passed the stand, cheered for his fine work, an agonized-looking face was turned toward its occupants, and a faint cry of "Help!" was heard. Up the back stretch flew the pony, the cry of "Stop him! Stop him!" sounded by the rider, only increasing his speed. On the upper turn it seemed as if the rider would be unhorsed, but his arms clasped around the pony's neck held him fast. As he reached the home stretch it was only a question of durability of the muscles of the rider's arms whether he would pass under the wire with the pony or not. It was a fearful tension, as the power to hold on by the lower limbs was gone, and the rider's body was strung out at each jump, acting as a whip to the pony, who came like a whirlwind under the wire, making the mile in 2:15, and the last quarter in 30 seconds. The rider's friends stopped the pony. The pony's record was lowered 30 seconds.

Among the horsemen present at the recent session of the Board of Directors of the N. S. H. B. A. was that master reinsman James H. Goldsmith, who was on hand to look after certain winnings of the pacer Silverthread, that had been withheld because of protests. Within the last few years Goldsmith has attained to very high rank among the great trainers and drivers, and many good judges of such matters consider him the peer of any driver living. Certainly, between him and his brother John, who is equally famous on the Pacific Coast, the Goldsmith name is not likely to lose the prestige on the trotting turf which their father, the late Allen Goldsmith, and his wonderful mare, Goldsmith Maid, obtained in years long past. Goldsmith says that he is very busy, having about twenty-five horses under his charge.

The roan mare Libby S, 2:19½, by Walker's Corbeau, dam by Bell's Dreunon, is one from whom great things had been expected; but she had a bad leg, and all the last season was under the care of Dr. William Sheppard, at Gravesend, L. I. She has been returned to Goldsmith perfectly cured, he says, and finer than ever, as he expects to demonstrate next season. That busy campaigner Gean Smith is wintering splendidly, and after all the hard races of the year seems entirely uninjured and full of promise. The same may be said of Silverthread, William and the speedy young horse Lever. He speaks highly of the seven-year-old stallion Augustus, by Volunteer, dam Susie, by Hampshire Boy. Susie was a famous campaigner, and had a record of 2:21 when very few trotters had reached that figure. He will be a great race horse, Goldsmith says. Other promising green ones are a five-year-old by Marksman, a young mare by Volunteer, a two-year-old by King Wilkes, from a daughter of Sweepstakes, and a yearling by Heptagon, dam by Virgo Hambletonian. There is no doubt that Goldsmith will have next season one of the most formidable stables that will go through the Graut Circuit.

Frank Herdic, according to the Sporting World, has just returned to New York from a visit to Georgia, and is very enthusiastic in his expressions about the Southern horsemen generally, and those of Augusta especially. This singularly attractive and beautiful little city, with a population under 30,000, has a club, whose leading spirit are J. J. Cohen and Sheriff Daniels, and it has invested $150,000 in its track, grounds, and buildings. Everything is handsome and well arranged, and the track, a full mile, is, according to Herdic, equal to that at Hartford. The soil is what is called "craw flish"—swamp land drained. The footing is firm, but very elastic, and over it a horse cannot become sore. It is equally good for running or trotting, the lightest harrow alone being needed to change it. The grand stand seats 4,500 people, and the people turn out enthusiastically whenever the flag flies at the track. In that region a winter climate equal to that of California is found, and a circuit, commencing at Richmond, Va., and including Augusta, Macon and Columbus, Ga., will be established for next winter, so that both runners and trotters can keep to the track, if they desire, all the year round, and, according to Herdic, who is certainly a competent judge, will find every convenience for work or sport that the northern cities can afford. There is, moreover, a very earnest desire on the part of the people to attract the Northern horsemen and their stables, which desire is evidenced by the hearty hospitality that is shown everywhere.

They are beginners, it seems, in trotting matters, and have much to learn about racing so far as the conduct of meetings goes, but they will learn quickly, and they are very much in earnest to gain and maintain a reputation for fair dealing and for hostility to crooked work. At the first meeting, at Augusta, two "ringers" that had come on from Dallas, Tex., were exposed and promptly and severely punished.

The advantages of the Georgian climate for wintering horses are becoming known to Northern horsemen. Mr. Foler has twelve from the stables of Mr. C. F. Emery, of Cleveland, Ohio, at Augusta. Wm. E. Weeks has several at Columbia, S. C., among them Sir Walker Jr., and Lady Wirschip, and here and there one will run across other familiar faces and horses.

General Lymphangitis.

Read by Dr. J. P. Klench, V. S., before the California State Veterinary Medical Association, December 13, 1888.

There has been, for the last five or six years, existing amongst the equine species of California, and more especially amongst the mules, a general constitutional disease, which has proven fatal in nearly every instance, and that has caused death after several months of loathsome suffering and of pitiful distress, unless the owner, having lost confidence in the final curability of the affection, concluded to destroy the animal, for the sake of humanity or for self-protection. This affection has not been, to my knowledge, submitted to a diligent study by any practitioner, nor has there been any particular description given of it by the Veterinarian authors with the exception of a few practical records, that appeared in some veterinary publications.

I had the good fortune of following several cases in various localities of two counties from the very first start of the disease to the time the animals were destroyed, and took careful notice about the origin and the progress of the various symptoms, as well as of the pathological lesions after death. I am glad to have the opportunity to lay my opinion before a meeting of Veterinary Surgeons for their critical perusal.

Causes.—The Causes are mysterious and can hardly be defined. Up to five or six years ago this affection was little known and has perhaps never been noticed before. Long continued rains and a subsequent inundation of the lower lands around Stockton, caused the atmosphere to be moist, the nights chilly with heavy fogs that seldom cleared away before noon. Thus it was, that five or six months after that flood, this disease made its first appearance in the mules of Mr. Fisher of Robert's Island near Stockton, and all along the tules and rivers; but soon the affection spread out over the whole valley up to the foothills, so that hardly any ranch in the whole San Joaquin Valley was spared. Other localities of the State suffered from the same danger, and from that time until to-day, this mule affection appears and disappears in the different counties, and seems to be permanently located in our State.

Work, care or feed cannot be accused of having any influence in the development of this disease, as animals have been observed to be attacked while in pasture or at rest in the stable and joining corrals, and receiving a very substantial nourishment.

The question of contagion might be considered as causative, but must be rejected as doubtful, until evident proofs are brought forward, based on direct inoculation. My own experience is rather a proof against the contagious character of the affection as I will relate it later, when I speak about the diagnostics. In the majority of cases, the disease was in all certainty of a spontaneous origin, and could not be traced to any particular direct cause by the owner. It seems rather to be due to a special climatic influence that had the same effect in distant lying localities of the state at the same time.

Physiological works tell us that the secreting organs or glands are far less active in mules than in horses, and daily experience teaches us that in general mules will perspire and urinate less than their equine companions in the same team. A similar fact has been noticed concerning the salivary and intestinal glands. This circumstance explains why mules require less water than horses for daily use, and their muscles and tissues are more dense, more hard, more tenacious and resisting. It also tells us why the blood of the mule is less deprived of its impure deleterious elements, and therefore induces me to consider this impure condition of the blood as a possible cause of this disease.

Symptoms.—They are regular in their expression and affect but two modes of eruption. The disease might break out on the legs and the body, or in the upper passages of the respiratory organs. The first indication of the disease will be dullness, loss of appetite and falling off in general condition, which might take place two or three weeks before any other symptom appear. Swellings will then be noticed on one or several legs, causing lameness, or on any other part of the body, sometimes they affect the upper parts of the limbs more than the lower parts, and generally send out one or several cords to the nearest ganglion. They are painful, more or less oedematous, of firm but not hard resistance, and will be covered in a few days with numerous lymphatic cords, especially when they are located over the muscular regions of the hind legs, neck and breast. In a few days more, these cords, soft on pressure, become knotty; every lump becomes soft, opens and forms an ulcer, giving exit to yellow-whitish fluid, resembling thick coagulated lymph. These ulcers, located on the lymphatic vessels, evacuate a great amount of fluid, coming from two, four or six more buttons, situated on the same vessels. After the opening of the abscesses, the lymphatic vessels retract, generally remain soft, so that they can hardly be felt. Such buttons as are located on hard underlying tissues, like joints or bones, are small, and situated in the germ of the skin, containing only a little fluid. The tumors on the muscles are located deep, cause a great deal of pain when the animal contracts the muscles, and take eight to ten days to reach the skin. They are large and form a regular cavity.

It is noticeable that when a great many abscesses have opened the animal shows relief, his appetite improves and his movements are easier.

The sores resulting from these abscesses are red, rough, bleeding easily, with smooth border, injected and swollen, but not indurated, and secrete good matter. Most of the sores will heal, but seldom conglomerate, unless there be a whole portion of the skin falling off by dry gangrene. The smaller sores will cover with a brown sticking crust, upon the removal of which I never noticed the wound to have the tendency to become larger in circumference or deeper at the bottom. The large abscesses on the muscles will, after being opened with the bistoury, often close and fill up again. The fluid running out of the abscesses in vessels always retains the same character, unless farcy complications arrive, as will be shown later. These wounds generally undergo a healing process, and many will cicatrize in the first period of the disease when the animal is yet possessing his natural strength and vitality, while at a later stage general debility reduces the vital powers, and retards and obstructs the cicatrizing process. Especially is this the case when the affection narrows the respiratory passages and seriously interferes with the proper aërication of the blood in the lungs.

It has been observed in all cases that in a few days after the appearance of the first abscesses, more lumps will daily form on different parts of the body and pass through the various stages of tumor, abscesses and running sores, so that in a short time the animal is literally covered with cords, lumps, abscesses and suppurating wounds that give the most disgusting sight one could have of a living animal.

But in the meanwhile complications arise in the form of gangrene of the nasal membrane. This symptom very often appears before the abscesses on the skin and constitutes the second mode of eruption of this disease.

At first there will be a light watery discharge for a few days; membrane is red, congested; then a large brown crust will be seen sticking to the nasal septum, caused by the drying up of the matter secreted from the surface of a large wound; the nasal discharge is heavy, white, foamy, matter, mixed with blood and serosity, of a bad odor or not, falling down without sticking to the borders of the nostrils. Inside of nasal cavity there will be discovered sores of various sizes, from that of a pea to that of two or three fingers, extending far upwards in the cavity; sometimes parcels of membrane hanging loose or being only partially detached; the cartilage bare, necrosed, thin, and of a dirty bluish green color, and most often pierced through so as to cause communication between the two cavities. All these sores are red, injected, with a rough, soft bottom, bleeding easily, with borders congested and tumefied. The membrane of nasal wings is smooth, tumefied, shining, and often ecchymotic. Every day the sores are increasing in surface. Sometimes small spots will be noticed, greatly resembling a glandered ulcer, but upon closer examination I could never detect any induration; nostrils are sometimes only a little swollen; very seldom does the conjunctive membrane show any modification. Intermaxillary glands soft, long, or very large, painful, irregular, knotty on their surface, two and three glands existing at the same time. All are movable and free of any adherence with bone or skin. Respiration will be very laborious, wheezing, on account of the oedema glottidis.

During all this time the animals have a shining, lustrous coat, skin loose, and hair smooth and glossy. They eat little, and grow poorer from day to day, so that at the end of one month or so, if he is allowed to live, he becomes entirely emaciated. But some keep in good condition for a long time, and have a tolerably fair appearance yet after five or six months.

Post Mortem Examination.—The following is the correct description of the lesions found in the mule of David Kerr, near Modesto, killed August 1, 1888, with a bullet in the head. An artery was struck, and death was caused from loss of blood. Large, solid coagulum of black blood in the trachea and bronchia. Lungs, liver, spleen and kidneys in a normal condition. Bronchial ganglion lightly tumefied; two intermaxillary glands swollen, soft, loose, resembling a lymphatic vessel duplicated and full of coagulated lymph and located right under the tongue. Several buttons in the derm, hard, a few of them beginning to soften. Nasal cavity.—Membrane of both sides rotten, gangrened in toto; the lower part of septum pierced; cartilage bare to the width of 1½ inches by 3 inches long; parcels of membrane, oedematous, congested, and ready to sequestrate; here and there a spot more or less wide, having the appearance of an ulcer; but the borders are red, smooth, irregular, not indurated; fold of nasal wing a little oedematous, but membrane smooth and regular. Inferior turbinated bone full of suppuration and partially gangrened and congested; the superior turbinated bone less affected, only a few spots attacked by gangrenous ulceration. In larynx, one spot, affected by dry gangrene, mucous membrane less vascular, but tumefied; small spots of the size of the head of a pin, like beginning of necrosis. All muscles of the body diminished in volume, of black, very black color, the intramuscular connective tissue very dense, while the adipose tissue between the muscular fascioli is totally absent. A great deal of fat was found outside and between the layers of abdominal muscles; large adipose tissue in the mesentery and around the large intestine as well as on the costal regions. I was surprised to see the intra-muscular absorption so great, while the adipose tissue remained abundant in other parts of the body. In the meantime, the mule appeared, while alive, to be entirely emaciated. He was sick for about five weeks.

DIAGNOSTIC.

It is very difficult to form a positive diagnosis of this affection on account of its recent origin and the numerous points of resemblance to other diseases, and above all, the Glanders and farcy. I cannot deny that many animals are found where the benign and malign types exist together, and the farcinous character becomes the most prominent symptom. In order to avoid too many misunderstandings, I will as briefly as possible describe the principal, typical characters of the chronic Glanders and farcy.

They are represented by buttons, cords, tumors, swellings, which all are at first painful, enveloped in an oedematous infiltration that is absorbed in a few days. Then they become hard, firm, indolent, after that soft, and in 2, 3 or 4 weeks will open and form an ulcer. All these lesions pass through the same pathological modifications, and acquire therefore, a perfectly uniform character, common to all glandered and farcy lesions. It has been admitted by all Veterinarian authorities that the morbid element of Glanders and farcy is deposited by nature in small spots or nodules, which are found in the skin (farcy) or in the mucous membrane of the respiratory organs, or in the tissue of the lungs and other organs (glanders), and cause a total degeneration of the local tissues which always will mortify in one piece and then form an ulcer (when in contact with air, or become encysted (when in the viscera). The cellular tissue enveloping these nodules is at first inflamed, and in a few days becomes hard, dense, indurated, causing the adherence of all parts concerned, whether it be located around an ulcer, of either nasal cavity or skin, or around a cord, button, or any kind of tumor or gland. This is so reliable and constant a symptom that I would consider it as the infallible basis of all differential characters with other diseases and state, that whenever this induration does not exist around an ulcer, button, cord or tumor, or gland, there is not, nor can there be, chronic glanders and farcy.

The buttons have the size of a lentil, hickory nut or olive. The largest ones are subcutaneous, the lentil-like ones are located in the derm, and conglomerate. When they are entering the skin becomes adherent to what remains hard in the button, which is only so in the center; the hair falls off and vitality ceasing, the skin mortifies in one piece or by morsels, and the wound produced is an ulcer.

The cords are long, flexuous swellings, located in the subcutaneous tissue or in lymphatic vessels, coming especially where large veins run close to the skin, and concentrating generally towards the ganglions. They always start from an ulcer or an accidental wound.

The tumors are similar to the cords, only of larger dimensions, are found especially on costal and cervical regions. They seldom open and exceptionally form ulcers, but remain soft cavities.

The ganglions, or tumors, or glands are round, hard, of irregular surface, adherent and of very dense indurated tissue, which sometimes forms abscesses; in that case, the lent of the gland forms a very hard kernel with an ulcerous, fistulous opening. I will mention as a farcinous tumor the indurated tumor of the testicles and their envelope, called carcoele.

The swellings are found in the limbs, affecting one or several joints, and in a short time the whole leg; after the inflammatory period has passed, they become hard and covered with white cords and small buttons, and of course later with ulcers. At the same time other cords will emanate from these swellings to the corresponding ganglion. This cordeous appearance is the principal character which will distinguish the farcy swellings from other spontaneous oedemas of the hind legs, but due to different causes.

The ulcers. All the above functions will finally produce ulcers. They are regular, circular, with indurated borders; bottom of ulcer always shows small indurated granulations of a pale leaden color, and have a tendency to increase in depth and circumference, and are refractory to cicatrization with a few exceptions. (The fluid running out of these abscesses is albuminous, oily, but dries up and forms a brown sticking crust. Often ulcers close to others, join together and form one large ulceration.)

General Appearance. The hair is staring, without lustre, falling off easy on mane and tail, coat dry, adherent; and soon symptoms appear in the nose, characterizing the chronic glanders.

Nasal Cavity. In light farcy affection nothing might be found in the nasal cavity except a pale colored membrane. But later on a discharge will take place from both nostrils, or but one, and that generally on the left side. The quantity of the nasal discharge is of very little importance; but when the discharge is thick, of a dirty gray color, mixed with a greenish or sanguineous aspect, and leaving brown crusts, sticking, gluey, attached to the borders of the nostril, it is characteristic of glanders. Nasal membrane pale, of leaden color or marbled; sometimes one or several ulcers are noticed on the septum or under the nasal wing; these ulcers are small, circular, like punched, with indurated, turned up borders; bottom rough, pale grayish, indurated with a tendency to increase. Under the fold of the nasal wing membrane thickened, yellowish or purple, rough, with hypertrophied follicles, and often one or two milary tubercles that are very characteristic. Almost in all cases there is a peculiar unpleasant odor manifested with the expired air, which would recall the odor of a rotten onion. Whenever the disease has progressed so far as to affect the lungs, we will hear a singular cough, dry, short, aborted and never repeating. I used to call it the glandered cough.

The pathological lesions after death are many milary tubercles in the lungs, containing a fibrinous, purulent or calcareous substance according to the period of their formation. Sometimes several tubercles unite, become soft and form a vomique. On the inferior border of the lungs can be formed an induration of white or grayish, seldom of red color; this also can become soft in the center and form a cavern. Nasal Cavity. Besides the above lesion already described, more or less ulcers or ulcerous erosions. Seldom ulcers penetrate to or through the septum; turbinated bones contain a purulent thick, fetid matter, the osseous lamellae are deformed and often showing one or several ulcerations. Sinuses, mucous membrane thickened, and filled with caseous, thick matter of bad odor, and often ulcers on larynx.

All farcinous tumorous glands and swellings are formed by dense indurated cellular tissue, hard to cut, and containing a few small abscesses. Lymphatic vessels or cords filled with pus and enveloped by indurated cellular tissues.

In acute glanders and farcy we notice farcy buttons and ulcers appear on the skin at the same time, then the glandered lesions in the nasal cavity; all morbid formations pass through their various phases in a few days, and give exit to a yellow fluid mixed with blood; the ulcers produced have irregular borders, reversed, injected and tumefied, bottom red, dead color, secreting a serous, yellowish fluid, that seldom dries up nor forms crusts; glands swollen, soft, oedematous, free of adherence, often absent; nasal discharge, double, thin, yellowish-colored matter and mixed with blood. Nasal membrane injected with a yellowish infiltration, or covered with petechiae. Nasal ulcers isolated and circular, or conglomerated, forming a large, irregular wound, borders tumefied and injected, bottom of ulcers granulated, red and bleeding on the slightest friction. Sometimes this ulceration penetrates to and through the nasal cartilage, establishing a communication of both cavities. All ulcers enlarge in a short time, and between them the nasal membrane is infiltrated with a fibrinous or albuminous substance, that becomes soft and causes the ulcerous destruction of the membrane on a very large surface, exactly similar to a gangrenous effect.

There are always lentil-like buttons that mark a beginning chancre. Acute glanders always causes death in four or six days.

In former times the glanders and farcy have been considered by the most prominent lights in veterinary science as of a tuberculous nature, and the milary deposits in the lungs were admitted to be entirely similar to those of tuberculosis. The microscopists made great efforts to discover some marked difference between the two diseases in the intimate nature of the abscess, its formation and its contents, although well knowing the great difference of the symptoms in both affections. All admitted, however, and the same opinion is prevailing still at the present time, that the specific product of glanders is a small nodulus, of the size of a cent, composed of round cells and connective tissues these noduli degenerate and form cavities or ulcers according to their location. Prof. Bouley had such a confidence in the metastatic character of those tuberculous deposits in the glanders that, whenever he was called upon to examine a suspicious horse that showed only a bad nasal discharge, and an adherent intermaxillary gland, without any visible ulcer, he invariably condemned such horse as affected with the confirmed glanders, when he found one or two milary tubercles on the membrane under the nasal wing; that, said he, is an evident proof of the existence of milary tubercles in the lungs.

But since that time veterinary science has made great progress. Bacteriology was unknown in our medicine, and in its infancy in human pathology, and no bacillus was ever thought of being the true element and constitutional principle, the living animal of the glanders. It is to day admitted by all the veterinary authorities that the glanders cannot exist without the presence of this bacillus, which is found only in the glandered deposits like tuberculous abscesses and ulcers. It is also conceded and proved by inoculations that the bacillus is the only possible element of contagion.

Let us look now for the favorable conditions for the development of the glandered bacillus. It has been proved by statistics that the glanders and farcy acquire an extreme degree of extension in moderate climates, and that extreme cold and very hot weather destroy the vitality in the bacillus. Hence it is possible the fluids within or without infected stables may provide suitable media for the bacteria to retain their vitality outside of the animal organism. According to Krabbe, there occurred in 10,000 horses in Norway, from 1857 to 1873, six cases of glanders yearly, in Denmark 85, in Great Britain 14, Sweden 57, Wurtemberg 77, Prussia 78, Servia 75, Belgium 138, in the French army 1,130; in the Algerian Army 1,848, which show that glanders increase in frequency as we go from a northern to a southern climate. (Am. Vet. Rev., June, 1887). Now as the climate of California is about similar to that of Southern France and Algeria, and as the manner in which the police laws are executed here in California is far less strict than in the European countries, we can affirm that the glandered virus finds a suitable place in our State to retain its complete vitality wherever it is produced, like barn floors, barn yards, manure, straw, stacks, pools of putrid water, and even pastures, and no rough winter will ever come to destroy the same. The glanders and farcy have been reported as causing very great ravages amongst the equine species in almost every county in California, and thousands of horses and mules have been destroyed as victims of this contagious disease. When I consider the great resisting vitality of the glandered bacillus I am led to believe that it is impossible for this State to get rid of this contagious element within the next few years, especially as there is no authority existing in this State that has the legal power to enforce a proper and complete disinfection of the infected premises, besides burning the body of the diseased animal.

From the nature and the location of the pathological lesions after death, I would infer that the disease affects only the lymphatic vessels located in the skin and the upper parts of the respiratory organs; while the intestinal mucous membrane and the lungs do not show the least morbid modification, and the trachea and bowels are only slightly affected. There is consequently a good reason for the theory that the disease enters the body through the lymphatic vessels, which absorb some mysterious irritating element; a congestion follows; causes a partial or total coagulation of the lymph, a dilatation of the vessels and the vasa form of their canals. Morbid changes must naturally follow this condition, and produce the isolated gangrened sores on the skin and large mortified places on the nasal membrane.

I do not believe in the presence of any microbic element in the nourishing fluids, nor in any modification in the chemical or physical elements of the blood, nor in any disturbance in the physiological functions of any organ or system of organs as connected with primitive origin of this disease until reliable proofs appear to advance a different opinion.

From the above description of the differential symptoms, I form the following conclusions as relating to the possible glanders. 1st. That the mule disease in California is, originally, not the chronic farcy, on account of the complete absence of induration in all the pathological formations. No hard, adherent intermaxillary gland, no indurated nasal ulcer, no chronic glanders, no hard, indurated cords and ulcers on the skin, no chronic farcy. 2d. That, although there exists a very great analogy of symptoms, it cannot either be the acute glanders and farcy, because the mules resist this affection many months, and the horses even longer, while the confirmed acute glanders causes death in from four to six days without fail. When farcy causes death, the post mortem examinations will always show the lesions of acute glanders in the nasal cavity and lungs, as also of suppurative arthritis. On the contrary I have never discovered any lesion of metastatic or inflammatory origin in the lungs nor in other viscera of the several mules I have examined after death.

On the other hand it is an admitted fact that the acute glanders and farcy select in preference animals of a sanguine constitution, and especially the jackasses and mule, stallions and well-bred horses, which are naturally more excitable than the phlegmatic, cold-blooded horse. It has been repeatedly proven that chronic farcy inoculated from a horse to a jackass, never developed the chronic glanders but always the acute form, and caused death in from four to six days. Now the mule has evidently inherited a portion of this natural aptitude to contract the acute form in all internal diseases, and, indeed, mules suffering from a chronic internal affection are very, very scarce. It is well known that thousands of mules were affected in this State and lived for several months, some of them even keeping up a good condition for a long time, so that this circumstance must disprove all idea that the violent poison of acute glanders and farcy exists in this affection.

I will consider now the question of contagion which undoubtedly highly characterizes glanders and farcy. The main objections I find against the supposed contagion are: 1st. The fact that many animals are attacked in a very short time at one place and in different premises of the same county. 2d. The outbreak of the disease all over the body in a violent manner (which is only possible in the acute glanders) seems opposed to the idea that the multiplication of the bacillus requires time and slow progress, as is the case in chronic farcy (which disease is not indicated by the existing symptoms.) 3d. That no evidence is known of the existence of a real, living contagious poison. 4th. That the cessation of the disease at every place after the affected animals were destroyed, proves that the disease was located in the individual organism. 5th. That no reliable evidence of direct contagion has been reported, but rather the proofs of non-contagion. 6th. The fact that, in the majority of cases, this disease is spontaneously developed without any known cause, while the glanders are considered to be the product of contagion.

If this disease is not the glanders, what then is its real nature? It is very easy to ask this question, but rather difficult to give it decisive answer. I am convinced that the affection is located in the lymphatic system, and consists either in a certain modification of the lymphatic fluid or in an inflammation of the vessels. I always had, and still have to-day, a great doubt as to the inflammatory character of this disease, for I never could notice any great modification in the anatomical structure of the ganglion and vessels that would be proportioned to the vast extension of the disease over the whole body and for a long time.

I leave the further study of this question to more competent men than I am, and who have at their disposition sufficient time, capital and the proper instruments to carry out their investigations successfully for the benefit of our science.

I must not forget, before closing the diagnosis, to mention the circumstance that frequently local lymphangitis affects the intramaxillary and inguinal ganglions and that the first one very often terminates into chronic glanders, if proper care is not taken to effect a speedy cure. The lymphangitis in a posterior leg is always of a more inflammatory type, generally it terminates well and remains of a benign character. It also happens very often that accidental wounds or wounds consequent to an operation are followed by ulcerous lymphangitis on their peripheries, that constitutes local farcy; it is easily cured, but if neglected, is liable to poison the whole system and degenerate into general farcy.

It thus appears, that lymphangitis whether local or general, can be of a benign character at the beginning of the disease, and in the course of time affect a farcious type and become glanders and farcy.

In support of my considerations about this disease; I will now relate several cases, as briefly as possible, and earnestly vouch for the veracity of every one of them.

To be Continued in our next.

A Great Four-Mile Race.

The readers of the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN will naturally wonder at such a heading for an item in a "hoss" paper: yet still it is a reminiscence of the early days, all of which are dear to our elders, and eagerly sought after by those who are of later date. It was hanging up in the office of this paper when the attention of the writer was first called to it, and at once he thought of the excitement created at the time, when it was first known on the street that Norfolk and Lodi were going to have a contest for the supremacy of the Californian turf. By the way, a synopsis of the history of the three sheet poster would not be out of the way here. As is well known the editor of this paper has been a potent factor in racing matters for many years, and shortly after starting the B. and S. he was presented with the poster, it being a relic of former days. For several years it hung in the old office and then disappeared, without, as it seems now, any one missing it. In the course of time the offices were removed into the present commodious quarters, and there being a vacancy on the wall someone suggested that the poster would fill up the space.

Then commenced a hunt, that lasted for weeks. The cashier, animated by the spirit which all true sportsmen possess, offered out of his own pocket a reward for the discovery of the missing poster, but even that failed to bring it to light. One day a gentleman visitor asked about the relic, and was informed about its mysterious disappearance. "Why," he said, "Mr. Hinchman would give five hundred dollars for it." "Yes, I have no doubt he would give a thousand." During the afternoon the office boy asked the cashier what it was that the gentleman wanted to give a thousand dollars for, and was told. Inside of ten minutes the long lost poster was brought to view, Willie, the aforesaid office boy, who had but lately come to work for the paper, never having heard of the loss.

He told how he found it tucked in carefully behind an old file of the paper, and of course did not know its value from an historical point, and had never heard of the reward for its finder. When brought from its hiding place, manager, cashier, book-keeper and subscription clerk, the dog man, cow man, rod man, rifle man, dairy man, the trotting-horse man and the thoroughbred man, even the advertising agent stood in a group, all silent, permeated by a feeling of reverence, caused by looking upon "The poster." But to the races. Of course the great interest centred in the big event. The ground was one mass of human beings, everybody who could get away from business was present, and betting was indulged in to a remarkable degree, Mr. Killip alone holding almost $300,000 on the result. Without going into the details of the race, suffice it to say that Norfolk won after a hardly contested battle. One gentleman informs me that although he left the track at five o'clock it was ten before he reached Montgomery and Market streets. The thoroughfares were literally jammed with vehicles of all descriptions.

Owing to some blunder, Mrs. Theo. Winters and family was refused admission to the track unless they paid, which so incensed the owner of Norfolk that he refused to run the big race on the last day, so arrangements were made whereby the series would be concluded at Sacramento. At that place another large crowd filled the enclosure, the race being the sole topic of conversation throughout the State. The result was the same as before, Norfolk winning easily. It was intended to have the winner continue on for an extra mile, to beat his sire's record, but the moment the race was virtually over, the carriages from the field at once filled up the track, and Harvey, the rider, was signalled to pull up. The two heats stand unequalled for time up to this date, 5:27½, 5:29½.

The poster alluded to is the only one known to be in existence, and is an interesting relic of a great equine contest.

W. P. A., Sacramento.

Will you kindly in your next issue tell me what is the fastest time on record for 100 yards in a foot race.

Answer.—The fastest time as given by record books is 9½ seconds, by George Seward, on the Trnnpike road, Hammer-smith, England, September 30, 1844. It has been accepted as correct by numerous authorities, but there is no positive information that Seward ever accomplished the feat in the time stated. In fact the newspapers of the following day say he made it in about 10 seconds. Some years afterwards a sporting journal stated Seward had beaten 10 seconds, then it was given as about 9½ seconds, until finally it has been given in later years as 9½, with really nothing to hear out the assumption that he came anywhere near that time.

J. S. T., Prescott, Washington Ty.

Was Crichton sired by imp. Glenco?

Answer, Yes.

From Richard Ten-Broeck.

In our issue of Dec. 1 we published an article by George Crichton (the "Krik" of the Turf Guides), concerning the Goodwood Cup. Mr. Ten-Broeck writes us to correct certain errors occurring therein.

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN:—Being here with my family for health and repose, my attention was called to an article in your paper referring to the running of Prioress and Pryor for the Goodwood Cup, in 1857. The statement being erroneous, I will correct it; and will give the why my horses were sent to England, and the wherefore of their running for the Goodwood Cup.

I will diverge to refer to incidents about Fashion and Boston race in same paper, to illustrate judgment of my mentor, Col. William R. Johnson of Virginia. Before the race I called at his room at the hotel on Union Course, Long Island, and said, "Col., who will win?" He replied, "It is a toss up." I then said, "How fast can Boston run four miles to-day?" He replied, "From 7:32 to 7:33." Fashion won in 7:32½.

In 1854 I had Arrow, and Pryor, (bred by me) and Lexington (purchased). The latter won the State Post Sweepstakes of $20,000, beating Lecompte (named for Louisiana), Highlander (for South Carolina), and another (for Alabama). Subsequently Lecompte beat Lexington, four mile heats in 7:26, the fastest time ever made up to that date. But as the jockey pulled Lexington up by mistake at the end of three miles, losing one hundred yards, I proposed the same race the succeeding week for $10,000 which was declined by the owner of Lecompte.

Prior to 1854 I sent my stable of horses to Canada where they ran nine times, winning nine times. The expense of the trip surpassed the amount won by $1000, as the Canadian purses were small. At Caledonia Springs I engaged Brown (subsequently my trainer) as a stable lad. Then I sent horses to Havana. This was a taseo, as the Habaneros said they would as soon see engines run on a railroad.

There was no racing in the north. In the south, there was only Lecompte, who would not run, so I determined to seek fresh fields in England, and started Stewart, (an excellent man, and formerly trainer to Col. Wade Hampton of South Carolina) with Lexington, Pryor and others to New York, where to give Lecompte another chance to run, I sent a rodomontade article to the N. Y. Spirit of the Times saying Lexington could beat the world, 4 mile heats, $10,000 a side, or could run faster 4 miles than any horse had run for $10,000.

John Minor Botts, member of Congress from Virginia, put up $2,500 as a forfeit on Time, I the same on my horse, which I sent back to Natchez, Miss., to his former trainer, Mr. Ben Prior, deferring the English pastures for the next year.

Lexington won in 7:19½.

Captain Minor, I, and others were timing in the judges stand. Captain Minor said, "he will lose at the end of the first mile, no horse can run four miles at that pace." "The wish is father to the thought," I replied. "He is not running yet, he is only cantering."

Lexington subsequently beat Lecompte, which I then bought and again started my caravan for my Mecca, Mr. Morris having one-fourth in the venture. I sent Palmer in charge of the horses, accompanying them to Glasgow, the law prohibiting horses on passenger steamers to England. The wherefore of the running for the Goodwood Cup, is, that Gilpatrick on Prioress led about 50 yards during the first mile, instead of waiting as ordered. There had been an accident over the same course, and this so demoralized Gilpatrick, that when the horses in the rear came up at the end of the first mile he pulled out of the course, losing 100 yards, when he again pulled in, and pursued them looking on, instead of winning, as he might have done! I had declared to win with Prioress, Prior only being started to make pace for her! I paid $25,000 for my losing on this race. Then I sent Palmer and Gilpatrick back to America, installing Brown in charge of horses. Lecompte and Prior soon died, increasing my debit to some $30,000, which reached about $100,000 in October. Milton Sanford had the pertinacity of a Down Easter, his mother said she hoped Milton would win in England, otherwise he would never return. I, as a Knickerbocker, being more prudent, arranged to start home with my household gods in November.

I had but ten pounds on Prioress when she won the Cesarewitch.

The American horses in England won the Goodwood Cup, the Stanford Cup, the Goodwood Stakes, the Ascot Stakes, the Brighton Stakes, the Great Yorkshire Handicap, all long distance races, also the Bentinck Memorial Stakes, four miles and a quarter, various three-year-old races, and a number of Match Races, two being for gentlemen riders, owners up.

I bred two of the horses I took to England, and bought two, these four being the only good ones. I paid all expenses, directed all trainers, except Mr. J. B. Pryor, (who was unsurpassed for capacity and integrity). I nothing extenuate, or set down aught in malice. Let the American public be content as I am. I had a good time and I paid for it.

RICHARD TEN-BROECK.

MENLO PARK, December 10, 1888.

A Reminiscence.

"Mr. Killip, please tell the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN something of interest." When the question was asked the well known pool seller and auctioneer, he was sitting in his Montgomery street office seemingly lost in thought. The voice of the reporter evidently recalled the fact that it is now 1889 for the genial old timer answered:

"Well, that is strange, I was just thinking about a race that took place here, many a year ago, I'll tell you how it was. Bill Woodward was one of a class of sports we had in Frisco during the palmy days, when money was easier to get than water is now, and you couldn't put up too much for Bill he'd call you every time. Bill he took a notion that no horse could trot twenty miles in an hour and used to blow around among the horsemen, offering to back his opinion on that particular idea, until one night when quite a crowd was gathered in one of the popular sporting resorts, Bill again turned loose on his hobby bantering any one to take him up. Col. Dickey was just pouring out some whiskey into a glass, he hesitated, set down the bottle again, and turning to Woodward said, 'Bill, how much will you bet on this twenty-mile proposition of yours and what odds will you give? Come up here and take a drink and we'll talk it over.' Bill half filled his glass while the Colonel was calling for a little sour in his, and after imbibing to that always new toast of 'here's luck,' they settled down to business. Woodward offered to wager $5,000 to $1,000, that no horse in the state could trot the distance in the time mentioned, while Dickey thought if the odds were a little better he might possibly find a plug (as he termed it) that could perform the feat. After a long debate Bill staked $5,000, against $600, and the money was put up.

Col. Dickey got hold of a mare called Mattie Howard, put her in training for the big event, the public in the meantime displaying a more than usual interest in the result. Woodward bet at least $20,000 on the race and many friends who valued his judgment wagered as much more. The race took place on December 7th, 1871, at the old Agricultural Park. There was not a very large crowd in attendance considering the amount depending on the outcome, but every man present had bets for or against the mare. When you consider it was only a half mile track, it seems marvelous that a horse without any known pedigree could go the distance. However she managed to win for her owner in 59:30½, landing him a very large winner. Poor Bill! He's joined the great majority and Col. Dickey is now a resident of Besten.

Skin Grafting.

T. Asheton Smith writes to the Canadian Sportsman:

The above subject, as connected with veterinary surgery, should, I think, possess interest for both the profession and the horse-owning community. It appears, however, to have received little attention from either.

I venture to enter into the following details of the process, in order that any practitioner who has occasion to perform the operation may escape the discouragement and failure which attended my first attempt.

The subject of this experiment was a Waller pony, which met with an accident, skinning the near fore-leg on all sides, from knee to fetlock. I have no hesitation in saying that, but for the success of the treatment, the results of the wound would have necessitated her destruction.

Seeing the case about an hour after the accident, I strapped up what skin remained with adhesive plaster, and put her in slings. Within three days, however, the skin had sloughed off, exposing bone, tendons, ligaments, etc., and it was evidently impossible that the skin from the edges of the wound (fully twelve inches apart) could have supplied material to cover the lesion. I then determined to try grafting, though more than doubtful of success, as I had never heard or read of its employment in veterinary practice.

During the time the mare was under treatment, which was about two months, it appeared that the grafts "took" better, as the wound advanced in size. I, therefore, consider it likely that the want of success which attended my first efforts was due to: 1, The freshness of the wound; 2, The coarse nature of the skin I was then employing, taking from the inside of a horse's thigh; and 3, Lack of experience in the process and of knowledge as to the best methods.

On subsequently trying the skin of a frog and that of a chicken, for purposes of transplantation, I obtained some successful grafts from each; but as the latter "took" more freely, I confined myself to its use exclusively.

I will now proceed to describe what I found to be the best process, as follows: By way of preparation, the wound should be dressed with an antiseptic, preferably, a solution of bichloride of mercury (1 in 5,000) in water, firmly bandaged, and left for two or three days undisturbed. This will level the granulations and obviate the necessity of cauterisation, which should be avoided.

Then, having procured the chicken, a minute point of skin from the side of the body under the wing, is raised with a fine forceps, snipped off with a pair of sharp scissors, and placed on the thumb nail. With a sharp scalpel it is then divided into portions—the smaller the better—which serve as grafts.

The point on the wound where the skin is to be renewed, is gently scraped with the scalpel without drawing blood; and, with the point of a silver needle or probe, the grafts are pressed in between the granulations. When a sufficient number have been applied, the whole wound is freely powdered with iodoform covered with a piece of gutta serena protective, (which is non-adhesive), and over all a long bandage of bichloride gauze is firmly rolled. In this state it is left undisturbed for a week.

The appearance of a successful graft is unmistakable; as it presents a characteristic small white speck with faint radiating lines.

It is important, when teasing the skin on the thumb nail, to avoid delay; for evaporating quickly deprives it of its natural moisture, and renders it dry and useless. It is also inadvisable to wash or cleanse the skin before removing it from the chicken, and it should be borne in mind that as the epithelial layer is all that is required, as little connective tissue as possible should be taken, and absolutely no fat, which rapidly decomposes.

I believe that so simple an operation might be frequently performed with great benefit, in those cases we not unfrequently meet with, where a large "sit-fast," from a saddle or harness gall is removed with the knife, and the wound, though it readily heals, is constantly breaking out afresh; the lost skin being replaced by a poor and inadequate substitute.

A Model Horse Farm.

A correspondent of Colman's Rural World has been visiting some of the great Kentucky centers of horse breeding, among them Abdallah Park, near Cynthiana, of which farm he says:

My first visit Wednesday morning was to W. H. Wilson and Abdallah Park. For advertising to the public the park has the advantage of location over any breeding establishment in Kentucky, and the sagacious and energetic proprietor has taken advantage of the opportunity offered by building a most imposing and attractive stable 400 feet long, which, in full view from the cars, seem to be a combination of stable and grand stand, with a well appointed mile track in the foreground. In immense letters is printed upon the stable fronting the railroad, "Abdallah Park." As the Kentucky Central Railroad passes within a quarter of a mile of the building one can readily perceive the great advantage of location to Mr. Wilson.

Arriving at the stable one finds the most convenient and best arranged stables for training and breeding purposes to be found in Kentucky. Mr. Wilson has here had for service many noted sires, but we doubt from among them all he has had one whom time will prove the equal of his Wilkes horse, Simmons, full brother to Rosa Wilkes. In his last purchase Noonday, by Wedgewood, dam Noonday, by Harold, out of the dam of Mand S., he has a horse of royal breeding, and will undoubtedly prove a great success bred upon the mares Mr. Wilson will mate with him. Simmons has already given proof of his powers of transmission, as he has seven two-year-olds with records from 2:39½ to 2:59½; five three-year-olds with records from 2:29½ to 3:00; four four-year-olds with records from 2:26 to 2:51.

The appointments at Abdallah Park are most complete, and Mr. Wilson will undoubtedly keep abreast of the times and make a grand success of an enterprise, the foundation of which he laid many years ago when he brought George Wilkes to Kentucky.

The Sale of Ormonde.

A few days ago the daily papers contained a telegraphic communication from New York stating that the well known English stallion Ormonde, by Bend Or, dam Lilly Agnes by Macaroni, had been sold to an American for $85,000, Senator Hearst being the presumed purchaser. Mr. Hearst denies that any one has received authority from him to buy Ormonde, and knows nothing whatever about the matter.

From private information obtained the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN is rather inclined to doubt the truth of the sale, and it will probably be denied when the English newspapers get word of the rumor. The big buy is one of the features of Eton Hall, and is looked upon as the most important attraction in that quaint and historical home of the Duke of Westminister by the thousands of tourists who annually visit it in Cheshire. Less than three years ago twenty thousand guineas was offered for Bendigo, the game son of Ben Battle—Hasty Girl, and refused, his owner considering him worth more money. If his assumption was correct Ormonde must be worth at least twice as much, for in his veins runs the blood of Doucester, Stockwell and The Cure, lines which are simply unapproachable. If he ever leaves his present ownership the price will be found to be much more than that reported.

Guy.

Mr. Parlin writes to the Kentucky Stock Farm as follows:

"The honor of trotting the fastest heat to date during the present season belongs to Guy. Guy is a black gelding, about fifteen hands high. He is very deep from the top of the withers through the heart. His barrel is of good length. His hips are long, and his quarters remarkably strong for a horse of his size. He was bred at Stoncy Ford, N. Y., and foaled in 1880. His sire was Kentucky Prince, by Clark Chief, son of Mambrino Chief. His dam was Flora Gardner, and she was twenty years old the season Guy was dropped. "Flora Gardner was by Seely's American Star, he by Stockholm's American Star, son of Duroc, by imported Diomed, out of Sally Slough, by Sir Henry. The latter, it will be remembered, was by Sir Archy, son of imported Diomed, out of a daughter of imported Diomed. The dam of Flora Gardner was by Bay Richmond; second dam by Diamond, son of the famous race horse American Eclipse, by Duroc. From this appears that, though his speed inheritance on the maternal side was very strong, it did not come through channels noted for manifesting a strong trotting instinct, but rather the reverse. His sire, Kentucky Prince, is not remarkably strong in trotting lines, at least he was not standard by breeding. Clark Chief (his sire) gained no distinction as a trotter. Perhaps it was for lack of opportunity, however, as he died when but ten or eleven years old. He was by Mambrino Chief, and his dam, Little Nors, was by Downing's Bay Messenger, out of the famous Mrs. Candle, a very fast trotter in her day.

"Considering his limited opportunities and early death, Clark Chief must be rated as one of the best sons of Mambrino Chief. He got Croxie 2:19½, Woodford Chief 2:22½, Blanche Amory 2:26, John E., 2:28½, Governor 2:30, and Lady Prewitt 2:30. Not less than eight of his sons, including Kentucky Prince, have produced trotters with records of 2:30 or better. His daughters are even more distinguished for producing speedy offspring than his sons. At the close of last season nine trotters in the 2:30 list were credited to Clark Chief's daughters, including Phallus 2:13½, Majolica 2:15, and Wilson 2:16½.

"The dam of Kentucky Prince was Kentucky Queen; second dam by Blyther's Whip, son of the thoroughbred Blackburn's Whip. Morgan Eagle was by Hale's Green Mountain Morgan, dam by Callender; second dam by Crown Prince, a son of Sherman Morgan. Callender was by American Eclipse, son of Duroc, by imported Diomed; dam Princess, by Sir Archy, the most distinguished son of Diomed. Some of the get of Kentucky Prince have the reputation of being hot-headed. This is just what might reasonably be expected, particularly if they were not from dams with a strong trotting inheritance. This particularity of temperament should be borne in mind by young breeders who are getting into the Kentucky Prince strain. It can doubtless be easily overcome by crossing with animals possessing the Clay-Hambletonian or Vermont Black Hawk combination.

"It has been known for several years that Guy possessed remarkable speed, but owing to a highly nervous temperament and a lack of sufficient trotting instinct to control his action, he has not been conspicuous upon the turf until the present season, although he made a record of 2:17 to pole with Clingstone in 1885. His first appearance this year was at Detroit, Mich., July 24th, in the three-minute class, where he met Editor, by Princess; Geneva, by Monroe Chief; Repetition, by Red Wilkes; and J. W., by Nighthawk. It took but one heat to decide the race, and in that Guy got a record of 2:16½, all the others distanced. Four days later he tried titles with Prince Wilkes, winning first and second heats in 2:17½, 2:16½. He lost the next three heats, however, in 2:17½, 2:34½, 2:20½. His next appearance was at Cleveland, O., August 23d, for a special purse of $2,500, his only competitor being his full brother, Fred Folger. Guy won in straight heats; time, 2:18½, 2:19, 2:18½. He defeated Prince Wilkes and Rosalind Wilkes at Buffalo, N. Y., August 8th and 9th, in straight heats. Time, 2:20½, 2:14½, 2:16. This is the best race he ever won. He defeated a large field, however, at Fleetwood Park, September 19th, winning the $5,000 Morrisania Stake in short order. Time, 2:23½, 2:20½, 2:23½.

"Three days after the above event he started to heat 2:13½, the best public time ever made at Fleetwood, by Mand S., and accomplished the feat in 2:12½. On Monday, October 29th, he was started at Cleveland, O., to beat his Fleetwood performance, and went to the quarter in 33½ seconds, passed the half in 1:05½, was at the three-quarter pole in 1:38, and reached the wire in 2:12. The second quarter was trotted in thirty-two seconds and the middle half in 1:03½. There are many who believe that with another season's handling he will discount the record of Jay-Eye-See, 2:10. He certainly has the speed to accomplish the task, but whether it can be controlled or not is a problem that time will solve.

"Guy is another of the many instances where, like Mand S., 2:08½, Jay-Eye-See, 2:10, St. Julien, 2:11½, Patron, (five-year-old) 2:14½, Sable Wilkes (three-year-old stallion) 2:18, Axtell (two-year-old stallion) 2:23, Sunol (two-year-old filly) 2:18, and Norlaine (yearling) 2:31½, remarkable trotting speed has resulted from combining trotting strains from Messenger and other sources, to control the action, with Diomed strains, which furnish the power, will and endurance to carry their possessor to the front. Analyze the breeding of the winners, young men, and profit by the lesson which they convey."

CATTLE.

Prepotency.

An opportunity is given to present some interesting excerpts from a work on "Theory and Practice of Cattle Breeding," by Mr. William Warfield, soon to be issued by the Breeder's Gazette Company.

We have seen that the ideal law of inheritance is an equal mingling in the offspring of the natures of the parents. This, however, is rarely to be met in practical breeding. For various reasons—greater vigor of race or individual character, for example, in one parent than the other—the ideal is seldom attained. The young animal nearly always shows a closer resemblance to one progenitor than the other. The facts are very many, and the classification of them is as yet incomplete and the deductions drawn from them tentative. Many theories have been advanced to explain the observed facts. But the incompleteness of the data upon which the speculations rest is well shown by the fact that the theories are conflicting and at times directly contradictory.

Out of this chaos of speculation and out of the immense number of observations made in the formulation and buttressing of the deductions of this and that class of thinkers a general skepticism as to such laws of special organic influence in all cases of a single character has grown up and the theories have largely given way to a general support of the doctrine long a favorite with stock-breeders, of prepotency.

Prepotency is the superior influence of one parent over the other in determining the character of the offspring.

Prepotency is usually treated as (1) prepotency of breed, race, species, and (2) prepotency of the individual. The one is general and the other special, the same law plainly acting in the same way in both classes. The division, however, has a special and very real value to the stock-breeder.

No better illustration of the operation of this law in both classes can be given than those afforded by cattle-breeding. Thus the short-horn was early recognized as a breed having singular power of fixing its character on other breeds. Says Mr. Darwin: "The truth of the principle of prepotency comes out more clearly when certain races are crossed. The improved short-horns, notwithstanding that the breed is comparatively modern, are generally acknowledged to possess great power in impressing their likeness in all other breeds." This faculty has been called by a recent writer "free power," from the readiness with which it is transmitted, and after many investigations and experiments he concludes that the short-horn possesses this "free power" in a higher degree than any other breed of cattle. It is this quality which has given them such a great reputation for crossing with the common native cattle of many countries for the purpose of improving them either as beef or milk producers, or as the general-purpose cow of the small farmer. So great is this influence on other breeds that the first cross often produces even from very inferior cattle a beast scarcely inferior to the best of the improved breeds. Indeed I have myself known prize animals in the show-yard that were by short-horn bulls out of native or "scrub" cows. And when put to pure-bred bulls this excellence is maintained without perceptible alteration, and many of the most successful show animals in Great Britain and America have had very short pedigrees.

While this "breed prepotency" is thus in an eminent degree possessed by the Short-horns, among them certain animals exhibit the individual prepotent power in a high degree. Thus the bull Favorite (252), which Mr. Collins bred into his herd as deeply as possible, making as many as three successive crosses with him, was of great vigor and of great prepotency. Under my own observation have come some very notable cases. Thus in the fifty-seven years since the herd was founded at Grasmere in 1831 by my father there have been twenty-seven sired uses upon it for a greater or less period. Out of these thirteen were marked successes and were for years used as stock bulls, and out of these six showed a high degree of prepotency. They were Oliver (2387), in use from 1833 to 1840; Goldfinder (2066), from 1836 to 1841; Cossack (3503), from 1841 to 1844; Young Comet Halley (1134), from 1844 to 1847; Renick 903, from 1847 to 1856; Muscaton 7057, from 1865 to 1873; and Baron Butterfly 49371, from 1883 to 1887. These bulls were all animals of an unusual capacity for impressing their own excellence upon their get. Oliver, the first in the list, belonged to the old Powell stock and came to Kentucky at a time when Short-horn bulls were chiefly used for breeding cattle for the beef market. The steers of his get were famous for their size and their extraordinary capacity for taking on flesh, accompanied with the greatest fineness of bone. So great was their bulk and so great the fineness of bone that it was found almost impossible to drive them, as the custom of the day was, to the Eastern cities, which then as now were the great consumers of Kentucky beef.

His breeding was no less excellent in his own harem, where the cows were Short-horns of the best strains. From him were bred a large number of prize-winners, all of which showed their descent very plainly. I have seen few, if any, bulls that were superior to him as a sire, but he was not remarkable for individual fineness. He was, in truth, somewhat plain, but possessing some most desirable qualities, and it was the fact that he transmitted these often to an even higher degree than he himself possessed them which made him so valuable as a sire and so good an example of prepotent influence. Goldfinder, Oliver's younger contemporary and successor in the headship of the herd, was a very unusually fine bull and successful in the show-ring everywhere. He made a broad mark on the herd by the general excellence of his calves, and won great repute by the phenomenal excellence and wonderful show-ring success of some of his get, chief of which was the cow Caroline. This cow was shown from the time she was a calf at many exhibitions and never once beaten. After Goldfinder came Cossack, a very fine bull of Booth breeding, and the first to bring to many Kentucky breeders a true realization of the high excellence of Booth cattle. He was very prepotent, and perhaps has honor enough in having sired Buena Vista 299, the sire of Mr. Renick's great cow Duchess, and thus grandsire of the great bull Airrie 2478, himself a grand sire; and in being through Duchess the progenitor of the favorite line of Renick Rose of Sbarons. Next Comet Halley Jr., or Young Comet Halley, as he is also called—a good bull and a good breeder, chiefly notable for his remarkable prepotency in getting milking stock. His calves were fine examples of the transmission of what are called "secondary sexual qualities"—that is qualities by their very nature peculiar to one sex and a concomitant of that sex by an animal of the opposite sex. Comet Halley, the sire of Young Comet Halley, was deeply bred in milking strains, being by Frederick (1060), Mr. Whitaker's celebrated sire of milkers, and from the famous Nonsuch, or Golden Pippin, tribe of Mr. Colling, while on his dam's side he was sprung from the admirable milking strain of the Illustrations. His breeding thus gives us an insight into the factors which go to build up the force of which prepotency is animal excellent indeed, but by no means extraordinary himself, breeding with the utmost certainty and regularity cattle of really phenomenal character. I could readily name a long list of prize-winners sprung from his loins, such as Mary Magdalene, an unrivaled cow, massive and deep fleshed, whose ankle bones, even when she weighed 2,225 pounds, could be spanned by an ordinary man's hand, and who bore her rather gaudy red-and-white coloring with the dignity of a perfect form, but it would in this place be a mere unspeaking catalogue. One instance I shall quote as a single example of his impressiveness as a sire.

My father had an old brindle milk cow with upturned wide horns, a coarse, mean brute, of the true "scrub" type. This cow was bred to Renick, and produced a red heifer calf of extraordinary quality. I was a young man in those days, and I told my father that I was going to take the old brindle cow's calf and beat all the pure-breds. Of this he was skeptical. But the calf grew out finely and proved invincible, being, so far as any could penetrate, of the most perfect Short-horn type.

After Renick came Muscaton, with an interval of good but not specially notable sires. Muscaton quickly gained for himself a National reputation. The herd had grown in number and repute so that this celebrated bull reaped much from the sowing of his predecessors. He was certainly phenomenal, not simply as a breeder, but in that his bull calves displayed a large degree of the same power. For that reason I have not included in this list 2d Duke of Grasmere 13961, his son by Grace, a Rose of Sbaron cow, and used in the herd from 1874 to 1883, because his influence was little more than a continuance of Muscaton's impression. It would be impossible to enumerate even a partial list of the prize-winners this bull got. His period fell at a time when there was great interest in cattle-breeding, when the exhibition were thronged, and the whole country was acquainted with cattle matters. His reputation under these circumstances flourished, and such calves as London Dukes 3d 6th, London Duchess 4th, Maggie Muscaton, Jubilee Muscaton, Duchess of Suther 6th, and many others spread it everywhere.

Under very different circumstances Baron Butterfly of the old Barmton Rose family came into the herd's oblique place. But though during the years that he was used cattle circles were deeply depressed, he won a wide reputation. For evenness and absolute certainty that he would make his mark on his get he has rarely been equaled. Certain marks he almost never failed to transmit; so that it was scarcely difficult to pick out of a large number of cattle those sprung from him.

This somewhat extended account of personal experience seems to me valuable, as it illustrates out of a record of many years the way in which this prepotency of an animal manifests itself. Out of twenty-seven sires only five or six possessed it in a marked degree. Each one of those twenty-seven was chosen with the utmost care and prevision, with a view to securing not only high merit, but fine breeding capacity. Thirteen were successful breeding bulls, but all except those named did not make a strong and nearly invariable mark on their get. When bred to cows of vigorous constitution the offspring was as likely to show a clearly mingled likeness or a decided likeness to the dam as to the sire. The few had so great power of procreation in the line of the general rule that "like begets like" that it was wonderful that a calf did not resemble rather than it did resemble them.

The Dairy.

A good deal of the silliness we used to hear about cows being great for cheese that were not up to grade as butter producers, has been chased into its hole and the hole drawn in. It takes about thirty-five pounds of butter, thirty pounds of caseine, thirty-two pounds of water, and three pounds of ash and salt to make 100 pounds of merchantable, standard cheese. These elements have to be in the milk, if they ever get into the cheese in the natural way; for they don't come from the skies either through prayer or the assurance of a man who doesn't know what he is talking about. Still the advocate of the "cheese cow" "bobs up serenely" once in a while.

Two prominent firms in the cheese trade are authorities for the statement that adulterated cheese cannot be sold as finest full-cream cheese, but when fresh, if well made, an expert could not tell it from a good skim cheese. It is made largely in Western factories of stearine, oleo oil, cotton seed oil and skim milk. The cream is first extracted from the milk, and then it is sought to return fats of a cheaper quality. A considerable quantity of rancid butter is used in the manufacture of this cheese. It looks better than skim cheese while it is new, for it does not dry up and crumble like skim cheese, and so long as it is kept in a cool place is good to deceive.

Another thing seems to be wholly over-looked by those who talk of creamery—that they ought to get cream collected and butter made as cheap at a 150-cow factory as where the cream of 2,000 cows is received. It actually costs about as much to go through the motions of a little factory as one four times as large. When a factory is started the proper way to do is not to stand aloof to see how it is "going to work," but to push ahead, join forces and see how successful it can be made from the start. The help is needed at the beginning. When a successful start is made, and some momentum attained, the running of a creamery is not a gigantic effort, but attracts, because it not only makes labor centralized, which always cheapens production, but gives better returns, and when established it is as hard to get farmers to go back to butter making as it would in cheese districts to get them to abandon cheese factories and go back to farm cheese making.

When an ounce of salt is evenly distributed through a pound of butter well charged with water, the salt in due time will draw the water to itself and form a quantity of brine, which will be greater or less according to the per cent. of water present. If the butter, after being properly worked, is kept at the same temperature at which the making and working are done, little or nothing will be seen of salt on its surface, but if it is set in some place like a cool and dry cellar, where its temperature will slowly fall, the butter will shrink as it cools and slowly squeeze the brine out upon the surface. The dry air will take up the moisture from the brine and leave the salt to incrust the butter. This is the most effectual way to bring about such a result.

If the butter is cooled quickly after having stood long enough to have the salt take up its water, as when put in cold storage, it will shrink rapidly and crowd the brine to the surface so much faster than its moisture can dry away, and it will collect in drops and trickle down to find a lodgment in the space made vacant by the butter shrinking away from the sides of the package that contains it. This leaves the surface cleared of crystallized salt or nearly so. Another way for preventing the liabilities of crystals of salt from gathchurn in granules the size of grains of rice, and after washing off the buttermilk let the butter lie in a saturated brine for an hour or so. By reason of the very large extent of surface exposed to contact with brine, the water will be so effectually drawn out of the butter that when it has been firmly pressed into a solid mass the brine will escape thoroughly, and there will not be enough left to make a show of salt upon the surface of the butter, even when rapidly cooled. Simply granulating the butter and salting and pressing it into solid form as soon as it is worked will not prevent salt from forming on its surface when slowly cooled. Another method which is absolutely sure is to keep the butter covered with brine till wanted for use or sale.

Thinks America Must Import

Editor Alexander Macdonald of the Mark Lane (London) Express, who had been traveling about this country for some months, is a close observer, and writes to his home paper quite freely his impressions of what he sees. Among other opinions he has formed he seems to be convinced that the quality of American cattle cannot be kept up without importation from the mother country. On this point he says: "The young stock shown at the fairs were of a higher order of merit than I expected to see; yet it would be presumptuous in the extreme for America, the young growing country that she is, to claim independence in the matter of stock breeding. I have not yet concluded my inquiries with regard to this point, but already it seems doubtful whether or not she could raise to maturity such good stock as she imports. A little ingenuity may enable her advocates to establish a very readable and feasible plea in the affirmative. She has the soil in its essential varieties, and probably the climate, but there is an inexplicable 'something' which she must learn and overcome before she can elevate herself to the British platform in the matter of stock breeding."

Our English visitor claims to have found several prominent American breeders of a similar way of thinking; yet we are satisfied that such an opinion on this side of the Atlantic is rather exceptional. He speaks in the highest praise of our cattle up to the age of two years, but thinks that beyond that age the outcome is disappointing, and that the standard of English maturity and development is not reached. Those of us who have not stood among English herds on English soil have of course had no good opportunity of making a direct comparison; yet it will seem to the average American stockman that our distinguished guest is claiming a good deal.

Butter Hints.

Without a good, all glass dairy thermometer, there is so much guess work that in Winter, at least, you are sure to run afoul of that rocky question, "Why doesn't the butter come?" This question admits of page after page of answers, but it is sufficient to say here that one reason why it doesn't come is because the temperature of the cream is not right. The thermometer will tell you in a much better and cleaner way than your finger.

The best butter "cloth" is parchment paper. This is practically air, water and grease proof, and does not stick to the butter. It is cheap, strong and very convenient to use for prints or rolls, and looks much better than muslin. When you wrap your butter in parchment paper consumers cannot speculate as to whether the butter cloths began life as part of shirts or sheets. Yes, I know things can be washed clean, but it does not need a vivid imagination to weave an unsavory history out of the warp and woof of some butter cloths.

Never touch the butter with the hands; use wooden paddles made of oak, ash, beech or poplar, never of pine, as it will flavor the butter. A piece of inch board 12x4 inches will make a good paddle. Make the blade five inches long, leaving seven inches for the handle, which should be of the thickness of the board and shaped to fit the hand. The blade should be three-fourths of an inch thick at top, tapering off to a rather thin edge. Making the whole smooth with fine sandpaper. You will need two of these paddles, and can then handle the butter without any difficulty, and it will be better for the butter.

In printing, if a square box print is used, or a lever printer, the lumps of butter can be shaped better with paddles than with the hands. In making rolls, the difference is still more in favor of the paddles, as they can be made up square, with sharp corners, will look better, and are more convenient to cut from. In taking the butter off the print, it can be easily done with the paddle and leave no mark; whereas, if done with the hands there are apt to be finger marks left, and the one who buys the butter may wonder if the maker's hands were clean; then he wonders if he dips his hands in the milk while milking, and if he tries the temperature or acidity of the cream by putting his fingers in it and wiping it in his mouth, and in a little while repeats the process with the same finger. I say the consumer may indulge in this strain of thought, and finally conclude that he will get creamery butter in future. But if you can tell your customer that nothing but metal, glass or wood comes in contact with your cream or butter, and the butter confirms your assertion, he will become a permanent customer if your butter is all right otherwise, especially if you tell him that creamery butter represents the average cleanliness of perhaps forty or fifty dairymen.

The Paso Robles Leader says: "Mr. R. M. Shackelford will sow in a few days twenty acres of Italian clover for pasturage. It is similar to alfalfa, but has the advantage of having a woody fibrous root, which is not palatable to gophers and squirrels. Like alfalfa, the roots sink deep after water, and will grow a good crop on dry land and keep green throughout the year. The experiment will be watched with interest by our farming community."

In the journal of the British Dairy Farmers' Association, lately issued, Professor John Nathorst, of Sweden, gives some interesting particulars as to dairy education in Sweden. He says that in the year 1851 the Swedish government appointed two traveling dairy teachers for the whole of Sweden, paying them at the rate of $1000 a year, and also giving them free tickets and $150 per month when traveling. If a dairy maid desires to improve her practice, the teacher will go to the farm, staying as long as he is wanted, in order to instruct her in either butter or cheese making, and at the same time he will advise the farmer how to feed the cattle so as to produce the largest quantity of rich milk and the best butter. At the age of 65 years these teachers are pensioned

"Sunol, the Wonderful Two-Year-Old."

The December number of Wallace's Monthly has just come to hand. Under the above caption appears the following very pungent and characteristic article upon California's last young phenomenon, the Palo Alto filly Sunol.

The idea of a two-year-old going out and trotting a mile in 2:18 takes away one's breath. The filly Sunol, by Elec-tioneer, and out of Waxana by Gen. Benton, has done it, and we have no doubt has done it honestly. This filly is standard bred, and now she has made herself and her dam standard by this remarkable performance. The breeding of the maternal line beyond the Benton mare, Waxana, is, to say the least, extremely uncertain. Waxana is registered as by Gen. Benton, dam Waxy, said to be by Lexington. As we remember the story about Waxy, the owner died and the pedigree was lost, as the mare was taken across the plains to California, and all that was remembered was that she was by Lexington and thoroughbred. As a kind of support to the theory that Waxy was thoroughbred, it is stated that she was the dam of Alpha, quite a noted racer, that won the fifth heat of a five-heat race in 1:45. On the strength of these representations Governor Stanford bought her and put her in the breeding stud. We have no doubt he believed these representations to be true, and we have no doubt he still believes them to be true.

In considering whether these representations are true we must be governed by precisely the same rules that would apply if the claim was that Waxy was by Hambletonian. We must know by whom the mare was bred, and this must be confirmed by Lexington's books. How can we know she was by Lexington unless we know by whom she was bred? The story that the pedigree was lost on the plains is an old acquaintance that we have met with probably a thousand times before. The story that the mare was certainly by Lexington is even more familiar to us. It was a very common "dodge" for more than twenty years, and it is still practised, to represent unknown animals to be by some one of the most famous horses of his day, and Lexington came in for more than his share. An illustration or two of this Lexington "racket" may serve a good purpose, while on this topic.

Away back in our early experience as a writer and investigator of horse subjects we had a neighbor who was very enterprising, but not very scrupulous about telling the truth. He had two or three young stallions by Green's Baebaw, and in order to place them on what he supposed was a higher plane than any of the other sons of that horse he openly and persistently maintained that the dam of his horses was by Lexington and was thoroughbred. After working this dodge for all that it was worth and not succeeding in getting any considerable patronage for his horses, we suggested to him, one day, what we supposed was the matter. We told him he had been unfortunate in the selection of the blood of the dam of his horses. "The Lexingtons," we said confidentially, "are all going blind, and people are afraid to breed into that blind strain." The very next week he fortunately made the discovery that the old mare was not by Lexington, but by Glencoe. After this version had been well circulated, and he supposed well established, we asked him one day about the age of the old mare, and when we told him that Glencoe had been dead several years before the mare was foaled, he flew into a towering passion and said, "It is a d—d pretty state of things when a man can't make a pedigree to suit his own horses!"

In the very first issue of the Monthly we quoted the following from the Live-Stock Record of Kentucky:

"Those who think purely thoroughbred horses cannot be trained to trot fast are referred to the bay gelding Ben Starr, a son of Lexington, out of a thoroughbred daughter of imp.
Hedgeford. When three years old he acquired a record as a runner in 1:44 in a mile dash at Lexington, Ky., and shortly after this was put in training as a trotter, and scored a full mile in a race in 2:30. He met with an accident a few days ago, straining a cord in one hind leg, but is now said to be all right and able to trot in 2:25 or better."

This appeared in a reputable journal, and if we had not throttled it on the spot it would have come down to us as a fact in horse-history and experience. The editor had no hesitation in giving the sire and the dam, and when we asked him for the breeder he was mum. He had no doubt as to the performance at his own town of a mile in 1:44, but could not tell the time or circumstances of the performance. He knew that the horse that ran in 1:44 was the same as the horse Ben Starr, but he did not know by whom he was owned or developed into a trotter. The horse Ben Starr was a noted "ringer," and at one time he was called "Lexington;" and this seems to have been sufficient evidence that he was a son of Lexington, and that he had run a mile at Lexington in 1:44.

The running performance of Ben Starr, a mile in 1:44, has something suggestive about it when we think of Alpha winning a fifth heat in 1:45. We have been searching a long time for this five-heat running race, but we have not been able to find either the place where or the year when it occurred. We are not prepared to say that it never took place, but if it ever did, we are exceedingly anxious to know where and when. In racing history it is very seldom we find a contest extending to five heats, and we will say frankly that we don't believe that any such race ever took place where the fifth heat was run in 1:45. Considering the absence of all facts and circumstances connected with this unheard-of five-heat race, we must treat it as wholly mythical, and as having been "made up" for the purpose of selling the dam Waxy, to Senator Stanford. What was the sire of this wonderful filly Alpha, by whom was she bred, and where is she now? Did she ever exist anywhere except in the imagination of the parties selling her dam?

It is not worth while to spend any time in discussing what the pedigree of Waxy may or may not have been. The rule laid down by the Breeders' Association for our guidance is very plain: "Whenever we reach a cross in any pedigree where the breeder of a dam cannot be given, the pedigree must be cut off at that point." Now, until the breeder of Waxy and something of her history can be given, we are in duty bound to enforce the rule and write her down "unknown." The pedigree of the wonderful Sunol, therefore, must appear in the following form:

Sunol, b m, foaled 1886, by Electioneer, 125; dam Waxana by Gen. Benton, 1755; g d Waxy, pedigree not traced. Bred at the Palo Alto Stock Farm, California. Two-year-old record 2:18.

We had registered Waxana, the dam of Sunol, as non-standard in Volume VI, and given her dam as "Waxy, said to be by Lexington;" but upon a careful examination of the question again we have concluded that there is nothing to justify even a "said to be" in the case. Owing to the great distinction which this filly has won, it is unfortunate that we know nothing more about her inheritance than the two standard crosses which she possesses. It is better, however, to know no more, than to know something that is not true.

In the absence of our editor-in-chief, the assistant editor can say but little concerning Waxy. The time of going to press is too near at hand for her to inquire into the particulars of this mare's history, and establish the identity of Waxy with Alpha's dam. But as for the races of Alpha, a few minutes' search in the American Turf Register and Racing Calendar finds the two summaries following, which we offer to Mr. Wallace with the remark that they are found on pages 144 and 195 of the volume for 1874. The first one gives the 1:45 record, which was in the fourth heat, not the fifth, as stated in most articles on Sunol, and the second gives the same owner, color, sex, name and pedigree as in the first, with the addition of the dam. Further particulars will be given when we receive the answers to certain inquiries already sent out.

Kentucky Shorthorns.

J. W. Pruett and S. D. Goff of Winchester, Ky., have just brought to this coast a consignment of seventy first-class, pure-bred shorthorn cattle. These are in good, strong breeding condition, and represent such reliable and deservedly popular strains as Young Mary, Young Phyllis, London Duchess, and others of like prominence. Next week an advertisement will appear giving full particulars.

Volunteer Dead.

As we go to press a telegram announces the death, at thirty-four years of age, of the great Volunteer, sire of St. Julien, 2:11.

Prince Mambrino.

An excellent five-year-old stallion is offered for sale in this issue. Prince Mambrino is well bred, his sire has a record of 2:28 and is the sire of Lady Ellen 2:29, whose dam, like that of Prince Mambrino, possesses the Belmont blood. 2:48 without training is sufficient evidence that Mr. Saxe's young horse has the natural speed that his pedigree would lead us to expect.

Junio vs. Jim L.

Mr. T. H. Griffin, who now has the control of Junio record 2:22, has issued a bold challenge to Jim L., for a match.
Money talks, and Mr. Griffin says his money is awaiting the answer from Jim L.'s owners, and he will cover any amount of stake from $2,500 to $5,000.

Gossiper Record.

Paragraphs have been going the rounds of the papers to the effect that the horse in question has a record of 2:22, and it is in order to state the facts of the case. Gossiper was at the Bay District Track during the stallion races in October of this year, and Miss Wilson went to look at him. Having a filly (by a brother in blood to Simmons) out of the dam of Gossiper, she was anxious to have Mr. Durfee's young stallion get a record somewhere near the limit of his speed, and offered a Toomey sulky in the name of her father, W. H.
Wilson, if 2:18 should be beaten. The announcement was made from the stand that Gossiper would start to beat the three-year-old record 2:18, for a Toomey sulky offered by W.
H. Wilson of Cynthiana, Ky. The horse came out and made a mile in 2:22, having broken and swerved badly on the home stretch. Mr. Durfee came out with the colt for another attempt, but as the races for the day were finished, and the crowd was departing, he did not start. As the matter stands, Gossiper has only a record of 2:29, and is therefore eligible to start in the 2:30 class.

Our Race Tracks.

The BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN has sent out to prominent breeders and trainers a set of questions in reference to the building and care of tracks, and received a number of answers hereto. We shall from week to week publish them, so that our readers may have the benefit of the experience of those who own tracks or make their living by using them. The first received was from Matt Storn, and consequently is the first on the list. The question given are as follows:

What length of track do you consider best for a stock-farm, one mile, $\frac{3}{4}$ mile or $\frac{1}{2}$ mile?

What dimension of stretches and curves do you think preferable?

What grades on turns and widths are best?
What soil have you? Is it necessary to top your track? If so what do you use, and how much?

Do you drain your track, and if so, how?
What effect do the short tracks have on horses when they go on mile tracks?

Have you ever seen tried Mr. W. B. Fasig's kite-shaped track? if so what do you think of it?

What shaped track do you consider the best?
What care do tracks require in your part of California?

Mr. Storn says: I consider that all tracks should be a mile in length when it is possible to spare land enough. In my experience I have found that horses trained on what are known as short tracks do not do so well as those trained on a full-sized course. Another reason that I could also give against short tracks would be that youngsters wear out much faster on the half and three-quarter tracks than they do on the longer ones.

I have no hesitancy in stating that quarter stretches and quarter turns are by long odds the best of anything I have yet seen. At Sacramento they had to change the old course, as has had to be done on many other courses, where the stretches have been longer than the curves, because horses are liable to go wrong in trying to make short turns at a high rate of speed, and consequently owners are timid about allowing their colts and fillies to start on what they consider dangerous tracks.

The grading on the turns should be the same as builders of railroads use on turns of an equal length. Tracks that are made on that calculation I find preferable to any other. In regard to the width, I should say by all means make a running track the same breadth all the way around. Because, nowadays, races are run at all distances, and one has to start horses at almost any part of a track, but for trotting, where starts are always made at the wire, I should say make the homestretch the widest.

In answer to your next question, of course I have to say, I do not own a track, so cannot report about the soil, but from my experience, the proper thing to top a running track with is loam mixed with sand. One will have to be guided by the quality of the loam as to the quantity of sand necessary. For trotting a clay mixed with sand is in my opinion the best, as it packs quicker. As to the amount of sand used, the same answer will hold good as given about the loam. How much of a top, needed for a track, is altogether a question of what kind of ground one is building a track on. It would be impossible to answer, as what would apply in one section of the State would not do for another.

Drainage is a very important factor in building, and every care should be taken to lay out the course, where you can have proper drainage. The Bay District Track is the best location for natural drainage that I ever saw. In ordinary level places dig a deep ditch on the inside of the track all the way round, and have drain pipes so located that the water will run from the ditch as soon as it commences to fill. Keep the ditch at all times as dry as possible. Of course some cannot do this, but the ditch of itself will be found to assist materially in draining the track.

If I had to build a track it would be my first endeavor to get turns and stretches equal distances, the same as the Sacramento track now is, but I should also add thereto straight shutles for the short distance races, in the same way the Futurity course is laid out at Sheephead.

I would use this kind of track on account of freedom from danger, considering the safety of the horse paramount to all else. At the present day owners have to pay such enormous sums for yearlings and promising two-year-olds, that the injury of even one means in many instances the loss of a small fortune. If Proctor Knott had been hurt in the early portion of this year, it would have meant a loss to Bryant and Scoggins of almost $70,000, and if anything goes wrong with King Thomas Senator Hearst would lose his investment of $40,000. Therefore the risks must be lessened as much as possible, and in my opinion turns on tracks should be avoided as much as possible for training or racing young horses. As is well understood we do not exercise horses in preparation as fast as they have to go in contests, we cannot do so, the danger is too great as tracks are now built.

Your last question is a very important one and requires careful consideration.

There are many Superintendents who do not understand enough about tracks to fit them for the position. Men holding such positions should be thorough horsemen and have no hobbies. Tracks should be levelled every day with a scraper, to fill up the holes made by the hoofs, and well watered every other day, except in very dry climates, then water is required every evening, the scraper and the harrow to be used every morning. Trainers should be allowed the privilege of exercising the horses when ever they want to, on a heavy track as well as on a dry one. Some Superintendents will not allow trainers to use the track when it is muddy, still it is necessary for the man in charge of the stable to find out what his horse is good for, whether he be a mud horse or not. Look at "Once Again," just sold at Lexington, the price paid was $6,000, yet on a good dry track any ordinary low class horse can out speed him, still on an extremely heavy track he is fit to travel with the very best of them. Notices should be posted on all tracks that dogs are not allowed within the grounds. I have seen several accidents occur from dogs being around, and think that none whatever should be allowed to pass the gate.

I have examined a plan of the Fasig track and must confess it suits my idea of what a trotting course should be. The idea is an admirable one and is worthy of close attention from those about to build a track. It might not answer for running, unless two long shutles were placed at the end.

Yours respectfully,
M. STORN.

Record Breaking at Los Angeles.

LOS ANGELES, December 9th.

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN:—If yesterday had been made to order for racing it could not by any means have been improved on, it was in all respects an ideal Southern Californian day. I am sorry to say that the attendance was rather limited, for the character of the sport was of the highest order and merited a large crowd. The local paper here of this morning attributes the paucity of attendance to a lack of advertising, of that, however, I know nothing, having been here, as you are aware, less than twenty-four hours.

The track was in much better order than I expected to see it, and credit is due to the indefatigable Mr. Ryan for the excellent condition to which he had brought it. Messrs. McGregor, Fletcher and Woods occupied the judges' stand, while as timers, that good horseman, J. D. Yeomans, of Buffalo, and Messrs. Newton and Durfee held the watches.

The first race was a special match for $250 a side, between that namesake of the great English thoroughbred Sir Archie, and the now famous Alcazar. Knap McCarthy is the fortunate owner of the pacer Sir Archie, who has been and still is recordless, but from the speed developed yesterday Knap has a very useful campaigner, who should do a great deal more than pay for himself this coming season. Of Alcazar but little need be said, his fame is already general, and now that he has cut down his record to 2:20½ his value is very much enhanced. He is like all the Sultans, they never retrograde and constantly improve.

First Heat—Quite a number of false starts were made before the word was given. When they did get started the pacer showed a bit to the fore, but the advantage was of short duration, for he broke badly, Alcazar coming well to the front in a few strides. As the pair flew around the backstretch the trotter had a full ten lengths to the good. McCarthy here showed a wonderful burst of speed with Sir Archie, and at the three-quarter post was almost on even terms with Alcazar. The latter trotted very level, and would not allow the pacer to gain a lead, and after a fine brush down the stretch beat him out by a length. Time, 2:24.

Second Heat—The pair were given a splendid start, with Alcazar showing a trifle the most speed, which, before the quarter was reached, carried him two lengths before the pacer. Before reaching the half, which was made in 1:12½, Alcazar broke, allowing Sir Archie to make up the lost ground. As they passed the post the pair were nose and nose, Maben very quickly causing the trotter to again catch his stride. From the half home the son of Sultan showed marvelous speed, he making the last half and winning the race in 1:08. Time of heat 2:20½.

Third Heat—Another good start was effected, and the pair travelled prettily together away round to the half, Maben holding Alcazar well in hand for the burst home, as the trotter was so far superior to the pacer that the result was never in doubt. He won handsily in 2:26½. I timed the last quarter and made it 33 seconds.

After the usual recess Mr. Maben brought out on the track a fine looking yearling filly by Stamboul-Posie, which for looks and action would be hard to beat. She is a beautiful brown bay, and moved with a step which is perfection itself. She has been named Murtha by the owner, Mr. Rose, and was announced to try and beat farther time for a mile, the specified allotment being three minutes. The first quarter was made in 40 seconds, while the second was an improvement on that, the filly being timed to the half in 1:18½. Of course it could now be easily seen that the man with the scythe was nowhere, for the youngster was moving along magnificently. The three-fourths was recorded in 1:58, with easy indication of a splendid performance, but unfortunately the filly broke coming down the homestretch, causing a delay of at least three seconds. Maben gathered her quickly together, and she came from the seven furlong post in good shape, passing under the wire in 2:41½.

The celebrated $50,000 stallion, Bell Boy, the property of C. C. Seaman Esq., of San Diego, was then driven by Sam Caton, to beat his two-year-old record of 2:26, made at Lexington in 1887. That he is very short of work is evident to the eye of any observer, and that he can beat the time made to-day is so convincing that I feel pleased to think Mr. Seaman will start him again on Monday to lower the record obtained yesterday afternoon. When he was tapped off the young stallion struck a fine gait, making the quarter in 35½, and moved with such speed and precision that I ticked off 1:08½ for the half. Here he made a bad break, going all to pieces, and it took considerable time for Caton to get him down to his gait again; however, he stowed the colt and finished leisurely in the moderate time of 2:37.

A second attempt was more successful, Caton handling him with rare skill, keeping the stallion at his best, until he reached the last 200 yards, when the bay once more left his feet, but the driver caught him immediately, landing him a victor over time in 2:23½.

SUMMARY.

C. C. Seaman's b h Bell Boy, Electioneer—Beautiful Bells....Caton 2 1
Time 2:26.....
Time, 2:37, 2:23½.

All the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN readers will remember Irma, who lowered the two-year-old pacing record last year at Lexington, going the mile in 2:24½. From what I can learn she has been "off" lately, and was sent here to see if a mild climate would be beneficial to her. That the change has been of value to the filly goes without saying, for she showed up in good fettle yesterday, but there is still room for improvement. The ever-popular McCarthy handled the ribbons, and at the word was off like a shot. During the mile (which was completed in 2:24) the filly broke twice, which was a very unusual thing for her to do last season, she having gained a splendid reputation for steadiness in hard races, and by her action surprised those who know what she is capable of doing. The quarter was made in 37½ half 2:11½, three-quarters 1:46, mile 2:24.

The excellent card terminated with a trot between Mr. McCarthy's Lena Wilkes and J. L. Rose's Nehushta. The latter is an untied three-year-old, by Stamboul-Neluska, of a rich bay color, with white star in forehead, and has a good turn of speed.

First heat.—On being given the word they started away; Lena going rapidly to the front and was never headed during the heat, winning handsily in 2:33½.

In the second heat Nehushta proved her ability by coming in first by a short half length. Time, 2:37½.

The third heat was the best and most hotly-contested of the three that were trotted, the Stamboul filly leading to the half in 1:13½, where she broke and Lena Wilkes took the lead. When Nehushta caught her gait once more a pretty race occurred from the three-quarters home, the daughter of Wilkes proving the better of the pair by taking the heat in 2:30½.

Owing to darkness the race was postponed until Monday, after which I will again write you, in hopes that my next letter may contain the news of another break in Bell Boy's record. I am sorry to inform you that Alcazar pulled up lame after his magnificent trial, and Mr. Rose has decided not to speed him again. This determination on the part of the owner takes from the track a promising performer, but his progeny will transmit a name, without doubt, which will in time to come be as historical as those to which we now look back with such pride.

LEMOORE.

SECOND DAY.

Monday, December 10th.—I was more than amazed to-day on going to the track to note the extremely small attendance, there being but a handful of spectators present, although I must confess, of the eighty or ninety who were there, most of them were representative men. Dr. Schwartz has finally arrived in the city of the Angels, and looks much better than when I saw him in San Francisco two weeks ago. He has enjoyed his trip very much indeed, and, like all others, has only good words for our wonderful climate. It was but natural that the doctor should be present, his ownership of the pacer mare Irma causing him to have more than a passing interest in the events of the day. As usual L. J. Rose Esq. was on hand with a hearty hand-shake for the representative of the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN, and, by the way, he is rather well pleased to think that Miss A. L. Wilson did not buy Murtha, the Stamboul-Posie yearling filly, to which she took a fancy when last at Rosemeade. I am informed that the price has gone up considerably since then. Mr. Seaman was also on the grounds, a little anxious in regard to Bell Boy, for, be it known, the justly celebrated son of Electioneer has not had near work enough to put him on edge, and I may say here that before the year closes, if weather permits, the colt will be again sent to try and beat the present three-year-old record. That he did nobly to-day no one will deny, but still he looked a trifle stiff; he was not limbered up to that condition which is necessary for him to display his utmost speed, and I verily believe he will cut the 2:18 notch, bar accident, before the first of the year. The officers of the day were: Judges, Messrs. Woods, McPherson and McGregor, while as timers there were Messrs. Rose, Smith, Adams and Durfee. When Mr. Rose's horse was a starter he stepped down and out from his official position.

Sam Caton warmed up Bell Boy with a preliminary jog and was finally given the word, being accompanied by "Knap" McCarthy who piloted a runner to assist the youngster in his work. With an easy stride he moved round to the quarter in 36 seconds and to the half in 1:10. From the way he had worked so far I imagined he was going at a 2:16 gait and was surprised on hearing the time, and this convinces me that with the requisite amount of training necessary he can eclipse the record. But I am digressing, away on the back stretch and round into the turn he moved with a precision that was admirable, and it was really a treat to watch the performance. 1:46, said Mr. Rose, when the bay had got to the three-quarters, and I then knew that he was going to make still another record for himself. As he came into the homestretch Sam urged him just a little more and the magnificent animal responded grandly coming under the wire in exactly 2:20 the last quarter being completed in 34 seconds. To say that Mr. Seaman felt gratified but feebly describes the situation, he was more than pleased at the result and has every reason to be. Yet, I am satisfied that the colt has not reached his limit, and that seemed the opinion of almost everyone present.

The following is a tabulation of Bell Boy's pedigree:

Electioneer 1..... Sire of 27 in 2:30.	Hambletonian..... Sire of 42 in 2:30.	(Abdallah..... Sire of 3 in 2:30.	(Chas. Kent Mare.....
Beautiful Bells..... 2:29½. Dam of Hinda Rose, 2:19½.	Green Mountain Maid..... Dam of Elaine.....2:20 Prospero.....2:20 Dame Trot.....2:22 Mansfield.....2:26 Storm.....2:26½ Antonio.....2:28½ Miranda.....2:41	(Harry Clay, 2:29..... Sire of 2 in 2:26.	(Shanghai Mary.....

			(Nettie Clay.....

As "Knap" brought out Irma, I thought I noticed just a slight feeling of envy on the face of Dr. Schwartz. Could his filly do equally well? That was the question. The look was not there long, for McCarthy drove the daughter of Nutwood in splendid form. She is improving every day and is gradually getting over the indisposition from which her speed has suffered this season. As the word "go" was given she started at a lively clip, reaching the quarter in 35 seconds, and the half in 1:09½. The driver eased the filly on the third quarter, taking three seconds longer for it than for the second, but coming in the stretch he extended her for all she was worth in her present condition, and covered the last quarter in 33 seconds, making the mile in 2:20. This is a wonderful performance for a filly who has been "off" all summer, and is extremely creditable to McCarthy, who has brought her to her present condition.

The fourth, and as it proved, the final heat of the postponed three-year-old race was then trotted, but was not exciting, as Nehushta acted in very bad form, going all to pieces in the back stretch, McCarthy's Lena Wilkes winning in hollow fashion. The following is a summary:

Challenge to Jim L.

I hereby challenge the owner of s. s. Jim L. for a match race 3 in 5 to rule, to come off over the Bay District Race Track, San Francisco, Cal., within 90 days from date, for the sum of $2,500 to $5,000 a side. I name the b s Junio 2:22 against the said Jim L. in said race. Said race to take place on a day hereafter agreed upon. This challenge shall hold good for two weeks from date, and any money placed in the hands of C. H. Hinchman, Bay District Race Track, S. F., as a forfeit, will be promptly covered.

T. H. GRIFFIN,
Bay District Race Track.

San Francisco, Dec. 15, 1888.

California State Veterinary Medical Association.

The annual meeting was held last Thursday afternoon in the office of the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN, president Thomas Bowhill in the chair. There were present Drs. Thomas Maclay of Petaluma, A. M. McCallum of Sacramento, C. B. Orvis of Stockton, C. Masero of San Francisco, H. A. Spencer of San Jose, F. A. Neif of San Francisco, N. H. Woodruff of San Francisco, J. P. Klensch of Santa Rosa, P. P. Parent of Fresno, and W. C. D. Morrison of Los Angeles.

After the routine business of reading minutes, etc., was disposed of, Dr. Klensch, of San Jose, read a lengthy and interesting paper on "General Sympangitis."

The society then went into the election of officers for the ensuing year. Thos. Maclay of Petaluma was chosen President, W. E. Morrison of Los Angeles Vice-President, A. M. McCallum, Sacramento, Secretary, and W. H. Woodruff of San Francisco, Treasurer.

The meetings of the society have heretofore been held quarterly, but by the unanimous voice of the members present it was deemed best to hold the regular meeting every fourth month, and upon motion such an order was made.

Drs. Bowhill, McCallum and Klensch were appointed a committee to arrange for the incorporation of the society, and also to draft a bill, to be presented to the Legislature, providing against active practice by incompetent quacks.

Proposals for membership were received from Drs. Egan, San Francisco, F. Cowper, Los Angeles, J. Oliver, Los Angeles, and Wm. Rowland, Pasadena. Drs. Maclay, Bowhill and Masero were appointed upon the Board of Examiners for the coming year.

The association then adjourned to meet again in this city on the second Wednesday in March.

A "Pointer" for Blacksmiths.

A beautiful and high-spirited horse would never allow a shoe to be put on his feet. When any one tried to shoe him he resisted all efforts, kicked aside everything but an anvil, and came near killing himself against that. His owner was on the point of consigning him to the plough, where he might walk unshod, when an officer lately returned from Mexico, took a cord about the size of a common bed-cord, put it in the mouth of the horse like a bit, and tied it tightly on the animal's head, passing his left ear under the string, not painfully tight, but tight enough to keep the ear down and the cord in place. This done, he patted the horse gently on the side of the head, and commanded him to follow, and instantly he obeyed, perfectly snubbed and as gentle and obedient as a dog, suffering his feet to be lifted without making resistance, and acting in all respects like an old stager.—Ex.

10,000 GIVEN AWAY!—The proprietors of "Holbs' Little Vegetable Pills" make a very liberal offer in our advertising columns to more thoroughly introduce their "Little Wonders." It will pay you to read it.

THE KENNEL.

Dog owners are requested to send for publication the earliest possible notices of whelps, sales, names claimed, presentations and deaths in their kennels, in all instances writing plainly names of sire and dam and of grandparents, colors, dates and breed.

Eastern Field Trial Club Events.

The present has been much the most successful year in the history of the Eastern Field Trial Club. The affairs of the club have always been most carefully administered and it has grown into a very strong institution financially, as well as in other and more important respects. Its annual trial meetings at High Point have come to be looked upon as by far the best trial gatherings in America, whether as to number of starters, quality of dogs, number of attendants, size of purses, or excellence of judging. We should be very pleased to give a detailed report of the recently concluded meeting of the club, did space permit, but under existing conditions must be content to give an abstract merely.

The annual meeting of the club was held at the Bellevue Hotel High Point, on November 24th, those present being J. Otto Donner, Jno. Simpkins, O. W. Donner, Royal Carroll, H. B. Duryea, J. R. Henricks, F. R. Hitchcock, Robert McCook, Hervey Merriam, I. N. Cochran, C. C. Gray, George T. Leach, J. O. H. Denny, P. Lorrillard, Jr., E. R. Coleman, H. A. Carey, W. A. Coster and proxy of Mr. Godeffroy.

The following ticket for governors for 1889 was presented and elected: B. F. Wilson, J. O. Donner, J. R. Henricks, F. R. Hitchcock, J. O. H. Denny, Robert McCook, H. B. Duryea, Herbert Merriam, D. C. Bergundthal, Jas. L. Breese, O. W. Donner, I. N. Cochran, P. Lorrillard, Jr., Geo. T. Leach and W. A. Coster. The officers elected are as follows: President, J. Otto Donner; vice-presidents, Jas. L. Breese and F. R. Hitchcock; secretary and treasurer, W. A. Coster. Mr. B. F. Wilson's name, first mentioned for re-election as president, was withdrawn, Mr. Henricks, acting for him requesting it, as it was impossible for him to attend the meetings with any regularity.

THE MEMBERS' STAKE.

The first of the stakes run off was the Members' Stake, on Nov. 15th, 16th, and 17th, Messrs. Francis R. Hitchcock and J. M. Taylor being judges. The weather was bad on the first day, better on the second, and very good on the last. Fourteen good sensible shooting dogs, handled by as many thorough sportsmen, of as rare quality as the world can afford, made the stake an interesting one. The winner, Gloster, is champion of America, and has been often mentioned in these columns. He won, as before, by superior caution. The winner of second, Brandon, a bigish orange and white, we did not particularly fancy in 1886. He seemed to lack snap, but has probably developed since. Third went to Dashing Noble, a little brother to the California Kennel's Sweetheart and Janet. Dashing Noble, when we saw him in 1886, had a lot of go in him, great power and courage, and very pretty style. He has had much experience since. He is a fine dog. Among the beaten dogs there were some that, before the fact, we should have selected as probable winners. Nat Goodwin, for instance. As nery, high strung, and likely a field dog as is often seen, was beaten by Brandon, after a heat of 45 minutes, in which little positive work and no demerits were scored. One Nat Goodwin is worth a dozen Brandons. Ruby Bucklelew, another beaten one, had the misfortune to be drawn against Nat Goodwin in the first series and was shut out. The stake was well handled, the judging averaged well, and it was a most pleasant event.

THE DERBY.

Second of the events was the Derby, always the greatest event of the year, and in no wise less so this year than heretofore. The judges were Messrs. J. Otto Donner, John R. Henricks and J. M. Taylor. The stake consumed three days, Nov. 19, 20 and 21, and was exciting throughout. It was won by Orlando, a Roderigo—Bo-Peep, belonging to that invincible little coterie of gentlemen who form the Memphis and Avenir Kennel. Another dog of the same ownership and breeding won third in the stake, a showing which speaks louder than words for the excellence of the blood lines going in the kennel, and for the training to which the dogs are subjected. It is no new thing for the Memphis and Avenir of their dogs were not placed. The weather for the Derby was not good, alternating between slushiness and freezing, but despite drawbacks very much brilliant work was done. We have sometimes thought that bad conditions were best, because then the dog which is undeniably best, shows it clearly. There was less false pointing and utter heedlessness shown by the puppies than have been usual, and the disposition to jockey and attain success by unfair means was not so noticeable as it was a few years ago.

THE POINTER STAKE.

The pointer stake brought out the best dogs of the short-head breed in the county, and they were judged by three first rate men, Colonel Arthur Merriam, John R. Henricks, and H. B. Duryea. Colonel Merriam is as good a judge of field work and of working dogs as lives, and Mr. Henricks is also a veteran field trialer and a grand good man. Mr. Duryea's experience is not equal to that of his colleagues but he is a close observer, particularly since his dog Robert le Diable won in 1886. The general opinion was that the pointers did not show as high excellence as the setters which were run later in the setter stake. The weather was only fair, there being too much wind, and the air being rather too cold. Dexter, winner of the stake was handled by Mr. Hart Height who handled Robert le Diable two years ago.

CHAMPION STAKE.

The same judges officiated as in the setter stake, and the work of the dogs was very good, all conditions being favorable.

In the first series Jean Val Jean beat Bob Gates easily in 45 minutes, having much the best of the place, style, range and nose.

The other brace of the first series, Ollie S. and Bohemian Girl made a pretty showing, both being very keen and of high quality, but the snap and certainty of Ollie won for her after an hour and a quarter of as good work as is ever seen.

The final between Jean and Ollie was a closely contested heat, and was won by Jean, by superior style, giving him the championship of America for 1888.

English Private Coursing Decadent.

Our very pungent and readable editor Clement, of the London Shooting Times, an eminent authority in all kennel matters, has a way of going to the bottom of every thing which he discusses that is refreshing, even if it is a little startling at times. Recently in writing of private coursing in England, he said:

"It is a surprising thing, but private coursing in England is as near as can be an extinct sport. Years ago, and not so very many years either, plenty of town and country gentlemen kept greyhounds for their own private enjoyment, and when a hare or two was wanted for the larder, they sought forth with a brace of long-tails, and had their fun out. Then came a change o'er the scene, in the shape of very many public coursing meetings springing forth in almost every district, and this, in two ways, brought about about a very sensible reduction in the number of private coursers. Firstly, the man who kept greyhounds was talked into joining in the public sport, either for the fun of the thing or in the hope of making money by winning either stakes or bets; and secondly, the large body of public coursers (i. e., the owners of the long-tails and the betting men who patronized the meetings), decisively tabooed private coursing as a detriment to public meetings, by reason of diminishing the number of bares. In fact, it was a common thing at the market-town 'ordinaries' for private coursers to be chaffed most unmercifully, and in and out of season.

Now, if there is anything a countryman dislikes, it is being chaffed. Ridicule, it is said, kills, and chaff certainly has swamped the sport of private coursing. The following was the usual modus operandi:

"Farmer Jones, do you know that your neighbor here present, Mr. Blank, killed seven hares, the other morning, in his meadow?"

"No?"

"He did. Didn't you Mr. Blank?"

"Quite correct," says Blank unsuspectingly?

"It may be correct, sir, from your point of view," then would the first speaker gently remark, "but what about our meet, next week? There won't be a hare left in the parish if you go on at this rate."

Thereupon the whole table looked askance at Blank, who felt jolly small, and showed it. He then either joined the club or disposed of his greyhounds, and thus his private coursing was at an end. Some men, however, had sense enough to stick to their own enjoyment, and stick to their dogs, but then came the Ground Game Act, and that effectually knocked private coursing on the head. There are not now a hundred men in England who course for the fun of the thing—the more the pity."

Sales.

Mr. H. K. Silvey, Truckee, has sold to Mr. J. M. Bassford, Sr., Vacaville, a black, white and tan English—Gordon setter dog by Dorr—Phoebe.

Mr. W. M. Burckhalter, Truckee, has sold to Mr. Geo. W. Pettier, Tuscarora, Nev., the setter Dwight by Dorr—Dooris,

The pack of foxhounds owned by Mr. Dan Murphy, near Gilroy, has been making some nice sport recently since the rain. Two weeks ago they ran a coyote to Martin's Ranch and when Mr. Murphy and his huntsman reached the ranch they found the coyote perched on the roof like a rooster, with the pack baying below. The huntsman Wilson, went up and dislodged the coyote, the pack receiving him with open mouths and quickly breaking him up. The hounds have been out six times and killed five coyotes.

The sympathy of the fanciers will go out toward Mr. DeMott, because of the deaths which have cut his string of eight field trial entries down to three. Since losing Donna and Haroline, three more have died, including Mr. John Bergez's English setter by Harold—Janet, Mr. DeMott's own puppy of the same litter, and another. However, no blame can properly be imputed to Mr. DeMott, and those who had dogs in his hands will send others to him.

Mr. George T. Allender left on Thursday for Bakersfield with eight setters and pointers. He has through the kindness of Messrs. C. E. Lechner and W. E. Houghton, secured a fine training ground and excellent accommodations near the town. His string completes the list of Derby entries, all of which are now being trained at or near Bakersfield.

The dogs taken to Bakersfield by Mr. Allender on Thursday last were, Mr. L. J. Rose Jr.'s Point and Rush, Mr. Wm. Schreiber's Nestor and Laddie, Mr. Jas. E. Watson's Old Black Joe, and Mr. P. D. Leuville's Roberta, all pointers, beside Shot Hunt and Buddie K, English setters belonging to Mr. Chas. Keating. The dogs all looked finely, Mr. Rose's Point in particular being fine drawn and looking the winner.

The directors of the Pacific Coast Field Trial Club have not yet selected all of the judges. They have secured Mr. R. T. Vandevort, a most competent man, and a first rate choice. The rules require two more, who should be chosen at once and announced. There is no lack of persons willing to judge, and some even seem anxious to act, but it goes without saying that the latter are wholly without experience, and quite unfit.

Fanciers of the large breeds may consult the advertising columns with profit this week. The "St. Bernard" offered is veritably a monster, by far the largest dog ever brought to the State, and is said by his importer to be of pure breeding. He can be seen at any time, and should be examined by Mr. Albert Hoepfner, Mr. Jas. E. Watson, Colonel Taylor, Mr. Manning and others who go in for big dogs. The dog is very young, and will have less of the Leonberg character as he grows and fills out. The Dachshund offered is a rare good one.

Among the Redwoods.

CHAPTER V.

An unpleasant development of the muscular idea.

The full strength of hope clings fast to morning. At her advent things which in the night season were full of horrors become the faintest mists of imagination; tragedy turns itself into comedy, and grim goblins are slain by merry brownies. Philip had scant need of those happy sprites—the brownies, but, perhaps, for that very reason they came to him about six o'clock the next morning in the form of little wandering sunbeams that touched his eyes and made him awake. He was never a man who stretched and yawned and showed ill-temper because his sleep could not be prolonged indefinitely, but rather an alert and pleasant early riser, whose rosy appearance proclaimed him refreshed by a night of dreamless sleep.

On awaking his first movement was to turn and look for Dick; but neither Dick nor sleeping place was there, the latter having been transformed into a roll of blankets that appeared ready for an immediate start, and the former, for the present, being about some other business than napping.

"The old rascal!" said Philip, standing up and giving himself a shake. "I wonder what he's at now?"

Not an easy matter to determine for the moment, though Dick had left an explanatory note on the stump beside the coffee-pot. The piece of paper, being small, did not come under Philip's notice until some minutes after, when annoyed by the thick dampness that still clothed the underbrush, he resolved to stir up the fire and heat some coffee. A first reading of the scrawl made him shiver, though it was neither tragical nor pathetic, but stated quite simply that Dick had gone down to the Lorenzo to "splash;" a second made him laugh.

"Splash!" he said contemptuously, throwing a stick on the fire. "Splash!" This is all the cold water I want just now."

He went to the pail yet standing about half full, where Dick had put it the night before, took out what might be needed for other purposes, and dipping his long hands in the clear fluid, dashed a goodly quantity over his face and head. There was a gleam of white teeth between full red lips as he applied a rough towel vigorously to his cheeks, and nature never showed richer or better blended coloring than shone in his face when the rubbing was finished. With the aid of a comb and a pocket mirror he completed his toilet, well pleased that his dark flannel shirt still had claims to respectability, and delighted with the becoming shade of a negligent blue silk tie. Was Philip vain? Not very; no more, probably, than are you. But there were times when he enjoyed a full, sensuous remembrance of the very fine physical qualities with which he had been endowed.

Dick was quite as fond of himself, believe me, but he liked to affect scorn for pocket mirrors and the men who used them. Coming back now from his "splash" he looked sharply at Philip, and uttered a derisive "Humph!"

"Good morning, you old dude," said Philip, rearranging his necktie and making a great pretence of admiring himself in the glass. "Good morning, how do you feel?"

"Never better, said Dick," laughing because Philip had beaten him at his own game, and tucking some towels in among his traps, "Just a little repentant about my temperance now, that's all."

"Some whisky would not be bad this morning. Oh that like juvenile Barry I had 'a pint' under my girdle."

"I think you'd be none the better for that," said Dick, "claret's poor stuff in the morning."

He had helped himself to coffee and was rapidly finishing his portion of the remaining provisions.

Philip soon became engaged in a similar occupation, and jests and sallies helped to eke out a breakfast that bore a family resemblance to those of the eighteenth century partaken of by frequenters of Grub street. But the composure of the night before was gone, and a longing to be off showed in every movement. Only the packing was done better if possible than it had been yesterday, and a spice of regret mingled with their feeling for the dying fire now scattered into useless brands.

The morning air came clear and invigorating from the mountain tops, and promised a fair day. Of yesterday's storm nothing remained excepting two or three white clouds that served to make the blue of the heavens deeper. The denizens of the forest chirped and sang and barked their early greetings to the sun; and from the towering redwoods breathed a spicy odor that the best sack never knew. Our friends were far better with just a mouthful of it under their girdle than they would have been buoyed up by a glass of prime old Kentucky. I cannot say they felt it so, although they went along Bess' trail with heads erect and sure steps, as needing nothing further.

They had not gone a long way when there came to them most distinctly the humming and buzzing that appertain to a town. Cocks crowed, dogs barked, wagons rumbled, and children freighted the air with echoing shouts.

Dick now for the first time recollected that in his last talk with Mr. Seldon the latter had mentioned a town on the opposite side of the river called Lorenzo, and added that it was much the better way to ride along the road that passed through it, and on to Boulder Creek Hotel, past the Post Office, and so on up the Bear Creek road, instead of trying the camping plan, as the walking on the other side was execrable.

"And here we are, of course, on the wrong side of the river following a cow trail!" thought Dick to himself. "Richard Foote what a mess is thy intellect!"

Philip's thoughts were so confused and disturbed by his loud whistling that he might almost be said to have none; and so long as the trail held good and a certainty appeared at the end of it, he cared little for all the towns in Christendom if he were not asked to stand the clatter of their dogs and the stares of their old women.

This opinion he expressed to Dick, somewhat later, when the trail without any apparent reason began to lead upward through an almost impassable lot of brush. The unbroken way straight ahead appeared so much better that Dick was at a loss to account for the cow's manoeuvre, and as they walked along could do nothing by way of solution but attribute it to her gender. He had just reached this agreeable point of reflection and announced it to Philip, who joined in the laugh and deemed it very good, when the reason suddenly confronted them in the shape of an almost unbroken cliff about twenty feet in breadth.

Philip, not at the time being especially interested in them, wished all the members of that gender (excepting those related to him by ties of consanguinity) in the flames, while Dick stood frowning at the rock as though he were some mighty Jove at whose sign it would remove.

But remove it did not, and Dick at length, tired of frowning, said to Philip:

"Well, old man, shall we try crawling across it, or go back?"

"If we could rid ourselves of these bundles, and if the Lorenzo did not flow right at the base of it, I should say crawl."

At this expression, without any word of reply, Dick took off his bundle of blankets and pitched it recklessly ahead. It found a resting place in the top of a low oak on the other side.

"Good boy, Dick," cried Phil, "do mine the same." Dick tried, but alas, for human intention! The compact roll dropped into the San Lorenzo between two boulders.

"Amen!" said Philip, laughing, "we must crawl now."

"I think we must," answered Dick, "come, help me tie on the rod case, and I'll help you with yours. And now, Phil, let me go first, and if I meet with no accident you come on."

Philip made no reply, and Dick thinking the matter settled started on his hands and knees across a little crevice that showed on the face of the cliff. His teeth were set and his nerves at full tension for he expected every minute to meet with something that would hurl him into the rushing stream below. And it matters not how much a man may fancy death would be a release, or how in a moment of vapors he may think he longs for it, let him once look it squarely in the face, and he draws back. Dick thought of this when the rod case slipped to one side and caught in a bunch of grass. He felt himself impeded and as his onward movement ceased the weight fell heavily on his hands into which the rocks ran little points that caused the blood to start. Grimly he held on until the grass came out by its roots and left him free. The sudden loosening sent his feet down, and for an instant he thought he must drop, but in desperation he found a new hold and drew himself painfully over the worst part of the cliff. He knew he was safe now, and his first thought was that he would call back to Philip not to try it, but on rising to his feet what was his horror to behold Philip struggling along fully three feet below where the rock looked far looser and more dangerous. He could see what intensity there was in his friends grasp and knew it would not do to speak, scarcely to move.

All the red was banished from Philip's cheeks when, at last he gave his hand to Dick, and streams of perspiration were stealing down his face.

"That was a pretty neat pull, old boy," he said when he found himself seated on the other side. Then for the first time he noticed Dick.

"Who would have believed that Dick Foote could get pale. How your hands are cut up! You won't be able to fish for a week."

"I have n't a word to say about anything," answered Dick, seating himself beside Philip, "when a man has it demonstrated to a certainty that he hasn't as much sense as a cow, it's time for him to stop talking."

"Dick, if ever we go on another excursion, and adopt prohibition views at the start, I know what will happen. We'll be found dead in the woods. Oh, for some prime old Irish, Scotch or Kentucky to take this trembling out of my knees!"

"Too late now, old boy! I wonder if we could have waded the stream?"

"No, sir, that stream just there is a long way too deep for either you or me. We might have gone up the mountain, though."

"Really? You're getting along too fast. I think I'll go down and rescue the blankets. Do you suppose there's any further object in carrying these rod cases around on our backs?"

The laugh that followed this was a good tonic, and Dick, freed from his incumbrance went down to the stream. The way was easy and as the blankets were still wedged in between the boulders he had little difficulty in extricating them. While he was gone Philip got the other roll out of the oak and all was once more ready for a start. It was manifestly impossible for Philip to shoulder his roll again, so the two were fastened on a stout stick and Dick and he carried it between them.

Some distance beyond they were delighted to strike again into the trail.

"Home again, home again" sang Philip at first sight of it. "Yes, and to stay," added Dick. "Why not follow this instead of going on a search for the road? We'll probably find ourselves in the back yard; but when people have gone through what we have they should not be sensitive."

Of course this was another mistake, as the road lay not very far ahead and was much pleasanter to walk on; but they were now in the close aisle of a virgin forest, where nothing was to be seen overhead but green boughs, and where yellow, sticky mud prevailed under foot, and to turn aside from a beaten path required more courage than either possessed at the moment, as they toiled on up, up, until Philip demanded of Dick if he thought his friend Seldon lived in Heaven.

Dick's answer was a deep, ringing laugh followed almost in the instant by the bark of a dog.

"Evidently the next pleasant thing we encounter is an animal of the dog species. Well, I'm ready for anything from a pug to a royal Bengal tiger."

Dick had made a discovery which prevented him from replying. This was that the trail suddenly revolved itself into two. At first he became puzzled then he decided to take the one to the left and go straight on, Philip, of course, followed, and a little later they found themselves in the much sought road.

"I feel that we're all right now," said Dick cheerily. He felt no such thing but was really more mystified than ever. "I wonder if the innocent told?"

"How should I know," answered Philip looking intently along the road. "Do you think that's the place we're looking for?"

"It is," said Dick venturing on the assertion though in doubt himself.

PETRONELLA.

Death on Fish.

J. A. Gooding, of the Mokelumne river, informs us that many fish are dying in the Mokelumne river, and that the cause of the destruction is the water which comes from the Copper Mine, a short distance above Lancha Plana, on the south bank of the river. The water being low in the river, the drainage of strong copper water from the works is sufficient to turn the whole stream a light green and poison the fish for miles below. Mr. Gooding says the poisonous copper water kills fish six miles below the dam, and that the other day he saw several large salmon and numerous small fish dead on the banks; also that carp, in a reservoir on his place, which is four miles below the mine, are being killed by the water run into the pond from the river. He thinks that some means should be taken to keep back this copper water when the river is low. In high water it could be turned into the river without damage. If the present practice is continued, Mr. Gooding is of the opinion that there will be no fish in the river to test the ladder which is now being built for their accommodation at the big dam.

A Week's Sport.

Western sportsmen can have no adequate conception of the privations, annoyance, and expense to which their unfortunate Eastern brethren are subjected to secure a little sport. They must travel many miles, support preserves, and even then have no assurance of first rate fun.

A recent description of a visit by members to one of the best of the shooting preserves on the Atlantic seaboard is interesting, both because of the glimpses of sport and because the personelle of the party is so amusingly touched. The writer says:

A party of old sports and crack shots from the old members was organized, and the Nimrods, with a pick of well trained red Irish setters, led by Old Chief, who has carried off the first prize in many dog shows, and his half-brother Dash, a noble fellow and well known on both sides of the Atlantic for his hunting qualities; Rosy, Reddy, You Be and Tommy, met at the foot of Deshrosses Street one day last week and boarded the steamboat City of Boston of the Norwich line, bound for New London.

Foremost in point of manly beauty, perhaps, was the well known Park row lion tamer, Herr Hermann Reiche. He was clad from head to foot in tiger skins (trophies of his "Bengalish" prowess), and looked not unlike a white and civilized Umslopogass. He carried a gun in one hand, and a red Irish setter—by a string—in the other. A Kafir servant, bearing on his shoulder two heavy, bearskin valises, followed him down the gang plank. Right on the heels of the dark-hued African retainer followed a short portly gentleman who wore a bristling black beard and a gawey smile on his face. He wore a Dolly Varden "fore and after" hat set carelessly on the back of his head. On his fat but shapely legs he wore dark velvet knee breeches, red worsted stockings, and a pair of short rubber boots. The effect was weird and interesting. His coat and waistcoat were of milk-white corduroy, with here and there a dark red spot, reminders of past hunting experiences. His name was J. M. Fuchs of 29 Warren street, and he too led an Irish setter.

Behind Mr. Fuchs walked a short, swarthy man, clad in a full suit of brindled corduroy, and a jockey cap of the same material. He walked in an atmosphere of pharmaceutical odors. He was Max Wenzel, the Hoboken druggist.

But the observed of all observers followed in his wake. He was in personal appearance a pocket edition of the late Mr. Shakespeare, his beard was cut the same as William's. His forehead was high, and so was his coat. The latter was of the cavalry jacket pattern, and the tails of it did not reach below the small of his back. His boots were rubber, and were also high, and he was in for a high old time. He walked with his hands sunk deep in the side pocket of his high old coat, and he held his head high in the air. His hunting hat was of the Derby pattern and fitted him neatly, being well held up off his shoulders by his shell-like ears. A breech-loading shotgun was carried under his right arm. He was Dr. H. Gelback, a practising physician of the city of Hoboken.

Then came six other Hobokeners of less prominence, perhaps, but of undeniable picturesqueness. There were also four New York merchants whose names at their own request are withheld from the knowledge of a cold and unsympathetic public—they didn't bag a feather on the trip. The entire party, including the dogs and the reporter, numbered twenty-one.

The trip to New London was with the exception of one circumstance, uneventful. The circumstance referred to was the scallop eating feat of Mr. Max Wenzel. He managed to get on the outside of 786 scallops in the unequalled time of two hours and nineteen minutes, thereby breaking the record.

A 6 o'clock the next morning the party boarded the little tug Skip Jack, Capt. Nash, and steamed from New London toward Fisher's Island. Mr. Reiche devoted himself to an examination of the bottom of the sound leaning persistently over the side of the tug for this purpose during the entire trip. His pale face when he reached the island showed plainly the extent to which his brain was taxed by his commendable efforts to increase his store of hydrographical knowledge.

The island was reached at 7 o'clock, A. M., and a two mile walk over a frozen country road, and bramble patches, up hill and down hill, brought the party to a neat little two-story Queen Anne cottage on the summit of a hill overlooking the island. Here the hunters were greeted with warm hospitality by Capt. Darrow and his good wife, and were soon enjoying a good breakfast. Having done ample justice to the repast the dogs were turned loose, the guns were shouldered, and the party started out on their first morning's hunt. After walking about 100 yards, the picturesque Doctor from Hoboken, in his high rubber boots slipped over a briar vine and the first shot was claimed by him and allowed.

After picking up the remains and covering his wounded hand with court plaster the hunt was resumed. The dogs quartered beautifully in every direction, their red-gold coats glistening in the sunlight as they bounded through the high grass. It was a picture that would fill the hearts of men less sportsmanlike than were those in the party with enthusiasm. Old Chief was the first of the dogs to scent game. He trailed his birds beautifully for twenty feet and then suddenly stopped as if he had become petrified. His left foot was drawn up under him, his tail became rigid, his eyes were dilated, and in this position he remained with his nose pointing in the direction of the concealed birds until the gunners came up to where he stood.

"Charge!" yelled the apothecary to the other dogs, and down they all dropped as if they had been shot. Ten of the hunters assumed positions around Old Chief with their guns in readiness. It was an inspiring sight. A cluck to the dogs, a sudden "whirr," and ten guns went off simultaneously. The next moment a fine covey of partridges might have been seen flying swiftly off in a sou'-sout'-westerly direction, while Old Chief's face assumed an expression of supreme and unalloyed disgust. Never a word spoke the sportsmen, but they did they reload their several guns and glance with cealed contempt at each other. Again the dogs put off in direction.

"Flash is on a point!" yelled the portly Mr. Fuchs, breedtaneous rush was made in the direction of the loudset of the first attack was given, and with in the reach man managing to kill his bird. Unfortunately, nately, however, they had all picked out the same partridge, and when the smoke cleared away all they saw was a number of brown feathers floating away on the fresh morning breeze.

"Dead bird!" called out the Park row lion-tamer, who imagined that he was the only one who had shot. The dogs began to hunt through the brush, but after five minutes' search Rosy managed to retrieve one broken partridge leg, and ten men shouted in chorus, "I hit it!"

After this experience it was seen that no good results were likely to be obtained by hunting in squads or battalions, and the party broke up in twos and threes.

The reporter meandered off with Herr Hermann, the lion subduer, and the little modern Hobokenese prototype of the immortal W. Shakespeare. He was sorry a little later that he had not followed his first impulse and gone off to die alone in the howling wilderness. It would have been easier than being slowly bled to death by means of homeopathic doses of No. 10 bird shot.

This trio selected a gamey-looking spot covered with a thick undergrowth, and sent Rosy and Reddy in to look for game.

"Bang! Bang!" came the reports in quick succession from two guns from behind a small clump of bushes close by, and "Ouch! wow! I'm killed! Take 'em out!" yelled the reporter, as he felt the stinging of a half dozen bird shot wounds and noticed blood beginning to trickle down the back of his hand. It was the pharmacist and one of the less prominent but equally picturesque Hobokeners who had shot recklessly at a German hare which they had accidentally started up. The Jersey gentlemen apologized, and the sport went gaily on.

The game was very plentiful, and dozens of coveys of quail were flushed during the morning, while any quantity of hares and a few English pheasants were seen. When the hunters assembled at the house at 2 o'clock for dinner, it was found that one quail, two owls, one muskrat and a small hare had been bagged during the morning.

In the afternoon the men got down to business and actually succeeded in getting seventeen quail, five hares and three partridges, and the only accident of any consequence was the loss of the left ear lobe of the pharmacist.

About a hundred yards from the house was another cottage, which had been fitted up temporarily for the sleeping accommodation of the hunting party, and thither almost immediately after supper, being completely tired out with their unwonted exertions, they wended their several ways. It was bitterly cold. The moon was high in the heavens and cast its silvery light on the scene. A far off the sea was breaking on the shingled beach, and Nature on Fisher's Island was at her best.

If there had been any woods on the island the cold north wind would certainly have moaned through them, but as it was the place was soundless. Herr Reiche stood out all alone on the bleak and cheerless sand hills and softly warbled a plaintive song in the sad, sweet accents of the Burmese. He said that he had learned it many years ago while tiger hunting in India. It was very beautiful. Later, when he turned his footsteps toward the house and discovered that he had accidentally been locked out, he sang in a different strain, but the wearied sportsmen had all fallen asleep, and they did not hear him. He slipped in through the transom over the door and silently sought his cold, cheerless couch near the roof. Soon he, too, fell asleep, and when he awoke found that his moustache had frozen solid during the night and was stuck fast to his nether lip.

For four days did that noble band of hunters pursue the nimble partridge and the elusive hare, and with such success that unless the island is restocked there will be nothing to shoot there in the future. The correct returns of the four days' sport is given below:

Quail	238	Owls	3
Partridges	73	Muskats	1
Hares	52
Ducks	44	Total	411

The Riverside Sportsman's Club will hold its annual medal shoot on January 1st. An all day shoot has been arranged for New Year's day. The entrance to the medal shoot will be $2, divided into five monies.

The Value of Lexington and Boston Blood.

Each recurring year emphasises stronger and stronger the value of this blood in producing great race horses. We were particularly struck with this fact in glancing over the two and three-year-old winners this year of $5,000 and upwards. There are twenty-eight two-year-olds who have won $5,000 and upwards, and out of this number only two have not a cross of this blood, Gypsy Queen and the King Ernest—Mimi filly. Many of the others have one and two crosses of this blood.

Of the thirty three-year-olds who have won $5,000 and upwards given in another column, only three, Hypocrite, Defense and imp. Gorgo have none of this blood, the rest have from one to two crosses of either the Lexington and Boston blood. The two and three-year-old winners of $5,000 and upwards number fifty-eight. Of these fifty-three have the Lexington and Boston blood and only five do not possess it. The total winnings of the two and three-year-olds amount to $767,158.50, of which amount the representatives of this blood won $723,780.50, leaving only $43,378 to the others.

This year is not an exception to the rule. In 1887 twenty two-year-olds won $253,710.50. Of this number only three did not have this blood, Kingfish, Fitz James and Satan, now call Defense. Twenty-three three-year-olds won last year $354,740.50, and of these five did not have the Lexington or Boston cross, Stuyvesant, Florimere, Libretto, Flageoletta and Bronzomarte. There were forty-five two and three-year-olds in 1887 who won a total of $608,459. Of those forty-five, thirty-seven had from one to two crosses of Lexington and Boston blood, and won $518,324, leaving only $90,235 to the representatives of other blood.

The two and three-year-olds of 1887 and 1888 who have won $5,000 and upwards number 103. Ninety of these have the Lexington and Boston cross, and have won $1,242,104. Thirteen do not possess it and have only won $133,510, a fraction over a tenth of the others. These tables can not be called accidents, but must be founded on merit, and would doubtless hold good for years back. If tried by the time test the same rule holds good. There are twenty three tables given of the fastest time on record from the half mile and the fractions up to four miles, twenty have been won by the representatives of the Lexington and Boston blood, the only exception being the 1 3-16 of Joe Cotton, 2:00 1/4, mile and a quarter of Dry Monopole, 2:07, and mile and five furlongs of Exile, 2:48 1/4. So tried by the money and time test they stand largely at the head.—Live Stock Record

CORRESPONDENCE.

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN:—Some time ago some one enquired about the breeding of the horse Granger, and I understand that the question has never been answered. Granger, bay horse, bred by Josiah Evans, got by imp. Hercules, (son of Kingston and daughter of Toscar by Bay Middleton), 1st dam by Stockbridge's Chief (sire of Abe Eggington); second dam by a son of Cook's Whip. Mr. Evans brought the Whip mare to California. She was a black mare about 15 1/2 hands high, and one of the finest mares in the valley when I came here in the spring of 1876. Respectfully,

W. M. WILLIAMSON.

Thoroughbred Sale.

The following telegram has been received by the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN from Mr. L. M. Lasley, and is dated Lexington, Dec. 11th. "The auction sale of the Melbourne Stable took place to-day, several of the lots bringing phenomenal prices. Once again b c by Onondaga—Black Maria, who stamped himself a rare good mud horse this season was sold to Milton Young of the McGrathiana stud, for $6,000. White Stockings, 2:16.

It is now pretty well settled that White Stocking 2:16, that has been campaigning all over the country from Kansas to New York, and thence to Dallas, Texas, is by Allen St. Joe. J. J. Gardiner, of Valley Falls, Kas., writes to Mrs. R. A. Dills, our chief editor, under date of November 7th: "Allen St. Joe is the sire of White Stockings 2:16. I know this to be a fact. He was bred and raised at St. Mary's in Kansas, and sired by Allen St. Joe before I got him. I have sold three of his get this fall, all out of very common mares, for $1,080." We congratulate our friend Gardiner on this piece of good luck. A 2:16 performer is a fine prop to Allen St. Joe. Ethan Allen went to Kansas over twenty years ago, and his blood courses through the veins of a great number of the states' best horses, amongst them the distinguished Allen St. Joe. Blood will tell.—Midland Stock Farm and Speed Ring.

A correspondent of Dunton's Spirit says: "After investigating the matter thoroughly I find that White Stockings, 2:16, is surely and without doubt sired by Allen St. Joe, son of Ethan Allen. Allen St. Joe was owned by our Congressman, Hon. Thomas Ryan. The horse was in my charge from a yearling until he was seven years old. At that age I sold him for Mr. Ryan to J. J. Gardiner, of Valley Falls, Kas. He is a beautiful light bay, full sixteen hands high, and is a great show-horse. He received first premium at Leavenworth as a two-year-old in roadster class, beating a very large field. He could trot better than 2:00. He was also one of the five colts that received first premium at Kansas City for the get of Ethan Allen. As a four-year-old he trotted over our half-mile track in June in 2:42. Mr. George Young, who owned a large farm sixteen miles from St. Mary's, kept Allen St. Joe on his farm one season. He now tells me he bred him to several mares from and near St. Mary's, and his brother, Dick Young, who resides four miles from St. Mary's, says also White Stockings is beyond question sired by Allen St. Joe. I am now thoroughly satisfied White Stockings is a son of Allen St. Joe.

The Horse's Eye.

To be able to examine the eyes of horses with certainty, a thorough acquaintance with their structure is necessary. If when a horse is trotted with a free rein, he is seen to extend his nose unduly, to move his ears rapidly, to shy when passing different colored objects, and to plant his forefeet with something of uncertainty, faulty eyes may be suspected, and a specially close examination of them should be made. In examining the eyes of horses it should be seen that they are neither too flat nor too convex externally, as from either form defective vision ensues. Abnormal forms are best seen by looking at the eyes across, from a position close by the shoulders, corner or outer sections of the eye are, when the organs are sound, perfectly transparent. Any white streaks, specks, or cloudiness in these, or in the interior structures of the eye, indicate that they have been inflamed, and are very liable to become so again. To detect white specks, etc., the eyes should in a clear light be looked to in front, and from close by the cheeks behind. When examining for white deposits in the eye care should be taken that no white article of clothing, etc., be upon or near the person of the examiner, as it may be reflected in the eye and deceive him. Special attention should be paid to the pupils in examining the eyes of horses. They are the apertures through which light passes into the interior, and in horses are oblong in shape and stretch across the front of the eyes.

Except in some white or cream-colored horses they are generally darker in color than are the irises surrounding them. Dark colored, hair-like processes appear round their edges when they are examined in a clear light, but they are not defects, as some suppose. In healthy eyes the pupils contract and expand with the amount of light they are exposed to. If the horse is placed in a shady place they are large and dilated; but if he is moved into a glaring light, they contract until they are nearly closed. In testing for this the examiner should put the horse in a clear light, and then place the hands over his eyes for a minute or so. With the light thus excluded the pupils—if the eyes are sound—will dilate and again visibly contract when the hands are removed, and the light suddenly allowed to fall upon them. If no contraction of the pupils occurs when this test is fairly tried, the horse will be blind from paralysis of the optic nerves. This may be the case, and yet nothing is to be seen amiss when the eyes are looked into. Contraction of the pupils on the sudden admission of light is the most reliable test for this eye affection. One eye only may be affected, hence the test should be applied to both. Small worms are sometimes seen in the aqueous humor of horses' eyes and these affect their sight.—P. E. Island Agriculturist.

Twenty-five cents is the regular price for a single vial of the Pills, and is in no sense a payment for the guess but for the Pills. To any person who wishes to make five guesses they can do so by sending us $1.00, the price for five vials, and we will send five vials of pills.

We make the above Grand and Unprecedented offer as an advertisement for our Little Vegetable Pills, known wherever used as a Valuable Medicine, and our experience is that any person using them once will recommend them to their friends, and this is the reason we can afford to give away $10,000 in cash presents to more thoroughly introduce them. The jar will be opened and pills counted in the presence of uninterested persons and presents awarded on April 30th, 1889. Should no person guess the correct number of pills the jar contains, the one guessing nearest will receive the present of $1000. Should two or more persons guess the actual number, then the one whose guess is first received will get the first present of $1000, and the next will be entitled to the second and so on.

Grim's Gossip.

Johnny McLaughlin, the celebrated Eastern jockey, now weighs 137 pounds.

The Petaluma races will take place in August. The 26th is the day set on which to start.

The "Caulfield Cup," one of the Australian classic events was won by a horse named Chicago.

The San Jose races will take place next year in the week commencing Sept. 2d, and continue to the 7th.

In a trotting race at Eureka lately, Poscora Hayward beat Idaho Patchen for a purse of $400. The fastest heat was made in 2:37.

The owners of fast horses in Livermore have turned Lizzie street into a race course, and on Sunday afternoons speed their horses.

Jay-Eye-See is progressing finely and will be as well as ever before long, his complete recovery being simply a matter of time.

Dan Dennison has taken Hardee, Blue Bonnet and Dave Douglass to Los Angeles. They will be entered in the holiday races there.

The following California-owned horses are still eligible to the Kentucky Derby of 1889, Caliente, Ganymede, Gladiator, Carriente and Almont.

W. H. Babb has an idea that Boggs is one of the fastest half-mile horses in the State, and would go into a sweepstakes for a single dash or repeat race.

The Calaveras Citizen says U. S. Gregory, of Ione, has sold his race-horse Barney G. to Marion Biggs Jr. It is understood that the price paid was $1,000.

The two leading English jockeys for this season are Fred Barrett with 542 mounts and 108 wins, and J. Watts who had 458 mounts, with a total of 105 wins.

Jim L., Adrian and Altoona, are being wintered at the Salinas race track. C. Rodriguez is exercising the two first, while Alex Sweeton is attending to the wants of Altoona.

Mr. Seals will transfer his string of trotters from the Oakland track to the Bay District, during the coming week. The well known driver, M. McManus, have the horses in charge.

Grissette, Mollie McCarty's last and Estrella, of the Santa Anita Stable, will all be bred to Grinstead. This will lower Mr. Baldwin's racing string, unless he has some two-year-olds to take their place.

Owing to the action taken by the Turf Congress, reference to bookmakers, the Western Alliance will be broken up, and the money at present in the treasury be divided equally between the members.

Budd Doble has returned to Chicago from his business trip through New Mexico, so now we may expect to hear the rumors flying thick and fast that he will shortly arrive in California with Johnston.

Marcus Daly, Butte City, Mont., has recently purchased for $15,000 the bay mare Favonia, record in 1887, of 3:19, and we believe 2:15 this year, by Wedgewood 691, dam Fadette, by Alexander's Abdallah.

Why cannot a half-mile and repeat race be made up among the many short cracks now on this coast? Cyclone, Typesetter, Lida Ferguson and Geraldine would make a great field and betting would be terrific.

Captain H. B. Blagrove, a prominent turfite from the East, is registered at the Palace. "Cap" tells me he will visit all the principal breeding farms on the Coast, and may probably start one here himself.

At a meeting of the Los Angeles Turf Club last Saturday, it was decided to hold a winter meeting in April or May. If a sufficient number of horses can be secured from the northern part of the State a meeting will take place in the middle of April.

At Central Point, Jackson County, Oregon, the boys are getting rusty, and say that San Francisco and Los Angeles shall not have all the racing to themselves, so they have announced a meeting for Christmas day. Three events are on the card.

The owners of the trotter Dewdrop have used big talk in and around San Luis Obispo about the speed of their horse, until finally Harry Seig who owns the stallion Commodore Nutwood, has issued a challenge to the Santa Maria parties offering to go them three in five for $500.

That ever bright and pungent writer "Black and Blue" is making a determined fight in the Mail and Express to have the prices of admission to the eastern tracks reduced. He also thinks that the programme should be given free and the price of edibles lowered.

I am pleased to hear that the Misses Nellie and Neva Winters, daughters of the well-known horseman, are recovering from an accident in which they nearly lost their lives. A horse that one of them was driving ran away, and both the young ladies were thrown out of the vehicle.

Mr. C. O. Seaman has made arrangements with the directors of the Pacific Beach Driving Park at San Diego, by which he will trot Bell Boy on Christmas day, to beat his present record of 2:20, made last week at Los Angeles, with a good day and good track he will beat it sure.

The Nevada State Journal says: "Theodore Winters has two promising colts that came out victorious in the recent races in California, one of which, it is said, he refused $18,000 for." Please tell me, dear Journal, which one it was, for I dislike to miss local items, and that one has escaped me.

Jockey Garcia who has a thirty mile race on hand with Peppers will ride the old timer, "Suspenders." The old horse ran a quarter and repeat, in 2:31, 2:21, at the Agricultural Park in 1883. He must now be over ten years old. Peppers will ride three horses. Telephone, Consuelo and Gladstone.

Many persons suppose that the horses run at the winter tracks are owned by men of no reputation. This is a mistake, as there are several horses now at Clifton which belong to representative stables, notably, Village Maid, the property of Congressman W. L. Scott, the owner of the Algeria Stud Farm.

Race goers who frequent the short tracks East are not treated to very fast time. On Monday last, at Clifton, the following time was made in the different events. Three-quarters of a mile 1:31; seven-eighths of a mile 1:51; six and a half furlongs 1:55; six and a half furlongs 1:51; one mile 2:13.

Dubois Bros. of Denver, Col., have bought the seven-year-old Superior, 2:19, paying $10,000. He is by Egbert, dam Mary (dam of Benefactor, 2:28), by Woodford Mambrino, 2:21; 2nd dam Belle by Alexander's Norman; 3rd dam Vic, dam of Dainty, 2:26, and Mattie Graham, 2:21, by Mambrino Chief.

The new stake book of the Coney Island Club is a very handsome one, and far surpasses anything of the kind ever before issued. The cover will pay a compliment to California, inasmuch that the great finish for the Futurity stakes of this year will be represented, Mr. J. B. Haggins's Salvator having the second place.

Ormonde and his stable companion Ossery will in all probability go to South America. If the deal should fall through, John A. Morris of New York will become his owner. Mr. Morris is the gentleman who is putting up the money for the new race track in Westchester county, which will eclipse all courses at present in this country.

John Splan is going to write a book, and I am certain that it will be a good one, for Jack never does things by halves. He has no equal on the turf as a story teller, he has been eminently successful as driver and trainer, he has handled some of the best horses ever put in harness, so his effort will probably be a most interesting one.

The Nevada State Journal claims that Nevada hay being cured without being exposed to either rain or dew, it is said to be the best obtainable in the United States. It is regularly shipped to the Atlantic States to be used in feeding valuable racing stock. In the alfalfa hay there is so much saccharine matter that hogs eat it greedily and fatten on it as readily as on corn.

On Oct. 4, 1885, Mr. J. W. Mackey shipped to this State from Lexington, Ky., for J. B. Haggins, Esq., thirty-two fillies and sixteen colts, all yearlings. In looking over the roll of honor I find that of the entire lot, which cost $41,710, only one has made an appearance on the turf this year, and that one, the marvelous mare, approximately termed the Queen of the turf, Firenze.

"True Briton," Senator Hearst's Australian, horse is at Sheepshead Bay, under the charge of Matt Allen. All of the sporting press speak of him in tones of praise, and promise that he will make a name for himself. King Thomas is in good condition and takes his exercise first rate. He is large and fat, but has evidently captured the eye of most of the touts, for they never tire of mentioning him.

The cost of running a racing stable is something enormous. I have tried to figure out how much clear gain the Haggins stable can show for the season's work, but figure it as I will, there seems to be a loss of almost $100,000, notwithstanding the winnings show the grand total of over $120,000. I have not had the hardihood to ask Mr. Haggins how much he is out on his venture, but simply sum up from my own experience.

In February of next year seven carloads of trotting horses will be sent from this State to New York to be disposed of at auction. Three of these will be from the farm of the Hon. L. J. Rose, three from Mr. W. Corbitt's San Mateo Stock Farm, and one from the breeding establishment of Mr. G. Valensin. Eastern buyers will then be able to make their selections from the blood of Stamboul, Guy Wilkes or Sydney.

Martin J. Hernin of New York has offered $1,000 to be ridden for in a special race at Clifton by Jockeys Taylor, Bergen, McCarthy, Palmer, Ossler and Cullen; Taylor to ride Bonnie S.; Bergen, J. J. B.; McCarthy, Wahoo; Palmer, Specialty; Ossler, El Trinidad; and Cullen, Brian Born; the distance to be one mile and an eighth, the money to be hung up in front of the judge's stand, and the jockey winning the race to receive the purse for his own personal benefit. There are to be no books made on the race.

Hill Top Farm, Jacksonville, Bourbon county, Ky., has shipped through Messrs. Treacy & Wilson, of Lexington, to Palo Alto, the fine bay filly Cynthia, foaled 1886, by Lord Russell (brother of Mand S.); dam Mary Hatch by Dictator; second dam Jennie W. by Almont. This filly will be bred early in the spring to Electricity, by Electioneer, out of Midnight (dam of Jay-Eye-See), and will probably remain in California to be bred to Stamboul, the great son of Sultan, the following season.

It is a rather remarkable coincidence that whenever Lafitte wins a race somebody falls in a fit. Not a laughing fit either, but real genuine convulsions. Twice at least this thing has occurred recently. Yesterday a man toppled over just outside the betting ring when the horse shot past the winning post.—Sporting World.

The same thing was noticed at the Coney Island, J. C., fall meeting. One day about the middle of September, in a purse race, Ocean and Amalgam were selling equal favorites, Lafitte being ten or twelve to one, when on the latter cantering home easy, a gentleman within ten feet of me fell in a fit, and it was remarked in my hearing by officers present that whenever the gelding won some one was sure to fall.

Odd names are given horses occasionally, and it is a matter of much moment in some stables to provide a cognomen for the unnamed youngsters. Sam Brown of Pittsburg has in his string the well-known two-year-old Reporter, which to many seems a peculiar name for the colt. I will tell you how he came to be so called: Captain Brown and several friends were inspecting the stables, when they came to the stall of this now great 2-year-old, which, by the way, was sired by Enquirer. After commenting on the animal's grand appearance the party fell to discussing an appropriate name for the youngster. One of the party said: "I have it. Call him Reporter. He is an Enquirer, you know." A more suggestive name could not have been proposed, and Capt. Brown adopted it at once.

My old friend, Ex-Mayor Nolan of Albany, N. Y., has formed a partnership with J. S. Campbell, late of the Chicago Stables. They have purchased already, Insolence, 4 years, by Glenelg, dam Impudence; Cassius, 2 years, by Longfellow, dam Southern Belle; Lamont, 2 years, by Bannock Lath, dam Adventurer; Minaret, b f, yearling by Glenelg, dam La Polka; Can Can, ch yearling by Charlie, dam La Esmeralda; Duchess May, b f, 2 years, by Virgil, dam Lava, Brown Princess, b f, 2 years, by Prince Charlie, dam Nannie Black; Reece, h f, 2 years, by Glenelg, dam Echoless.

The horse Cassius is a prominent candidate for the next Kentucky Derby, and Minaret is a full sister to Lucky Baldwin's famous mare, Los Angeles. There are also in the stable the following well-known horses now running in the South: Tudor, Oarsman, Clay Stockton, Longlight, Kirkman, Lovelace, Bourke Cockran and Kentucky Ban.

OUR FUTURE CRACKS.

The Two-Year-Old Form of This Season Re-vised.

"The Tipster," so well known as a contributor to the English Sporting Press, is in San Francisco, and writes the following for the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN.

The form of the two-year-olds this season is particularly interesting, as with one exception there is no really unbeaten colt in the whole category—in fact, no "Tremont" first this year "and the rest nowhere." French Park, the unbeaten one, has been run so close that we can gauge his merits within a pound or so, and the best of the year must be puzzled out by going carefully over all the running of the youngsters and giving reasons for your final conclusions.

The Nashville Meeting being the occasion of the debut of Proctor Knott, who won the West Side Stakes in a canter, claims my first attention, but more of him hereafter. He only beat a very moderate field. Laura Stone, a fair filly, won the Ivy Leaf Stakes. At Washington the Youthful Stakes was won by Holiday, 107 lbs., Seymour, 110 lbs., second. The filly won in a canter in the fast time of 49½ seconds for the half mile. She also put the Brentwood Stakes to her credit, defeating a very moderate field, carrying 112 lbs. five-eighths of a mile, in 1:03. Now comes the Baltimore Meeting. Buddhist, who had run under the name of the Emma Hanley colt at Washington, carries off the Claghugh Memorial and Patapasco Stakes and clearly proves his superiority to Holiday and his ability to go on any kind of a track.

At Lexington, the great French Park made his bow to the public. A big strapping youngster, with perhaps a bit too much of daylight under him for my fancy, though he may let down and grow out of it. This colt put the Distillers and Breeders Stakes to his credit without an effort. In the first race he got very badly off and yet mowed down his field one after another and in the end won easily. Lioness, a very fine filly, won the Wilgus Stakes but her inferiority to French Park was amply demonstrated in the Breeders Stakes in which that colt defeated her easily. Lioness followed up her Lexington victory by putting the Hurstbourne Stakes to her credit at Louisville in which she met nothing of any account.

Proctor Knott, at the same meeting wins the Alexander Stakes, running five-eighths of a mile in deep mud in 1:04½ squandering his field. Once Again, a fairly good colt being his nearest attendant. This horse's running in the Runnymede Stakes wants explaining as Champagne Charlie whom he had always beaten easily defeated him on this occasion, Lioness being the winner. It is fair to presume that he was a little off at this time as his next two essays were by no means up to the form he afterwards showed.

Brooklyn Spring Meeting claims my next attention. Oregon, a fine looking colt belonging to the Dwyer Bros. defeats Buddhist, the dual Washington winner, easily, and makes us suspect another Tremont, especially as he wins the Hudson Stakes with a 5 lbs. penalty as easily as he did the Expectation. French Park puts the Bedford Stakes to his credit, beating nothing of any moment. Fides, the after sensational dead heater with French Park, wins the Clover Stakes, and then we come to the two-year-old race of the meeting, viz, The May Stakes. As this was a very important race in determining future form, I will give the names and weight of the first three in full, and likewise a fuller description of the race than usual. Oregon 122 lbs., French Park 120 lbs., Holiday 112 lbs. French Park won by a short head, a dead heat for second place. In this race French Park got very badly off and clearly demonstrated that he was at least 5 lbs. better than Oregon who had all the advantage at the start, as had Holiday who made running to the stretch when a ding-dong race ensued between the three. The latter horse afterwards put the Tremont Stakes to his credit, but beat nothing. After this he went lame.

Luton Meeting claims my next attention. The funny named Kee-Vee-Na in the Clipsetta Stakes presents Princess Bowling with ten pounds and wins by a neck, but the defeated one later on shows her ability to give her conqueror on this occasion a like beating with the weights reversed. The Harold Stakes, won by Once Again, sees the second defeat of Proctor Knott who carried 117 lbs. to the winner's 103, but as such cattle as Gymnast and Hindoo craft were second and third no notice need be taken of this running, particularly as Proctor Knott in his next essay shows an improvement of a lively nature, being defeated by Lasson, giving him 13 lbs. by a neck only with a big field behind the pair.

St. Louis Meeting comes next on the list and introduces us to the fairly good colt Liberty, who, after being defeated by Champagne Charlie in the Southern Hotel Stakes, run in the mud, puts the Real Estate Stakes and the valuable Futurity Stakes to his credit. Bootmaker in the latter Stakes, a moderate horse, being second, time, 1:16. Liberty, after running in the Hyde Park Stakes at Chicago, disappears from Goodwin's Guide, so it is fair to presume that something happened to him and he was put out of training.

The Surf Exchange Stakes brought out the much talked of Heron, by Harry O'Fallon. Rumor had it that this horse was a flyer, that he in fact could catch pigeons and was as fast as a ghost. He certainly somewhat justified this opinion by winning his first race easily. But this maiden effort exhausted all his strength as he never won afterwards during the entire season and was finally sold by Mr. Guest to the Chicago Stable.

The Vestal Stakes saw Lioness once more to the fore, but as she had all she could do to beat Laura Stone a short head, giving her five pounds, she must be rated as only second class.

I will now move East again and go through the performances at Jerome Park. This meeting was chiefly remarkable for the dead heat between French Park, the unbeaten, and Fides, a filly belonging to A. Belmont. Fitzpatrick's over-confidence on the crack was the reason for this, as the colt should have won easily. The stakes were divided. The Sequence Stakes brought out only two runners and French Park defeated the Faverdale colt easily, giving him ten pounds. The Encore Stakes was more interesting, and it was in this stake that French Park showed that he was away ahead of anything that had yet run East, as he gave Holiday ten pounds and ran away from her. This was this great colt's last effort, as he went lame immediately afterwards, and did not run again during the season. He is now the property of D. Gideon, being sold to that gentleman by auction for a little over $12,000.

The Coney Island Jockey Club meeting followed immediately after. Buddhist opened the two-year-old hall by winning the Form Stakes beating a fair field easily, Singlestone and Brussels being second and third. Brussels, belonging to the Dwyer Bros., is an especial favorite of mine, but was ruined by early running, being a big, large-framed colt, he wanted plenty of time. If he comes out blooming in the spring do not forget him. He is a lot better than he has shown. The Surf Stakes was won by Reporter, a nice level colt with lots of quality, quite at the top of the second class, and sure to train on. In the Zephyr Stakes Holiday, 107 pounds, defeated Buddhist, 115½ pounds, clearly demonstrating that she is a good filly when carrying a light weight. This should be borne in mind for the future. Aurnia was the best behind the pair. This latter filly won the Spring Stakes in her next essay, beating a moderate field. She is a big, slashing filly, and one of great promise, but unfortunately did not train on. For the June Stakes Diablo shows his ability to defeat something better than purse horses, as he beat Aurnia and other fair animals easily in this race. The Good-Bye Stakes, won by the moderate Flood Tide, winds up the two-year-old form at the meeting, which was entirely devoid of anything of a sensational character. Buddhist and Reporter were the two best that ran and trained on.

The Washington Park meeting at Chicago saw Proctor Knott once more in his old form. The horse ran away from Bootmaker, Heron and Co., in the Kewwood Stakes, and made them all look like mules. Princess Bowling won the Lakeside Stakes, defeating Lioness easily and some others, but met her match in the Quickstep Stakes in which Galen made her and fourteen others lie down, running the one-half mile in 48 seconds. Of this colt, more later on.

Caliente won the Hyde Park Stakes, beating a moderate field. And now for MONMOUTH PARK.

As a rule this is the most important meeting in the Calendar to gauge directly the two-year-old form of the season. The prizes are rich and so arranged with penalties and allowances that you can guess pretty correctly how to place them 1, 2, 3. The meeting this year was chiefly remarkable for the continued success of the "all black." Mr. Withers introduced us to two-year-old after two-year-old that fairly dazzled us with their excellence, yet still kept some others in his stable that could race. But to resume. A. Belmont put the Independence and Atlantic Stakes to his credit with the aid of Lady Margaret, whose reputation had preceded her. In the first race she had a flying start, and Buddhist giving her thirteen pounds ran a remarkable race. The second performance of this filly was a far better one than the first, and stamped her as above the common. False starts in her next performance ruined her temper, and she soon disappeared from notice.

In the Hopeful Stakes the Faverdale colt began to show his true form, as he defeated Diablo, Reporter and other good performers in a canter. Sorrento, without doubt, a real good horse, won the July Stakes in the mud after being nearly left at the post. I may say that this colt was one of the most abused and unlucky animals in training. He should have won lots of races instead of only putting three to his credit. The Lassie Stakes was won by the Belinda filly, afterwards called Auricoma, who showed her heels to Lady Margaret and five others. The constant breaking away of the latter filly in this race was, I think, the cause of her early retirement. She never forgot the grueling she got.

Hitherto I have only taken cognizance of stake races, but Eric, in the Free Handicap Sweepstakes, struck me as being such a good colt that I pause to mention him. If he does not turn out a more than fair three-year-old I shall be much mistaken. He was simply galloped to death, or would have shown up far better than he did. A gamber bit of horse flesh never looked through a bridle. He is now the property of Mr. A. J. Cassatt.

In the rich Tyro Stakes Reporter beat Ransom and seven others, running in 1:17½ in the mud. Faverdale colt ran as if he was short of work in this race. Mr. Cassatt at last broke the ice with his two-year-olds by winning the Colleen Stakes, with Felicia II., who, in receipt of 12 pounds, managed to beat Auricoma three-fourths of a length in 1:16½, a bad lot being behind the pair. The Optional Stakes was won by the good-looking Groomman, who is sure to improve with age, and then I come to the Sapling Stakes, in which Tipstaff defeated the Faverdale colt when in receipt of ten pounds from the latter. This race, in my opinion, was thrown away by Mr. Withers trying to win with the Cadence colt, who was unequal to the task. "After running" certainly seems to favor that idea. In the Sunbright Stakes the "all black" was once more to the fore by the aid of the Cyclone colt; a line bodied horse and very fast. He is, though, only a second rider. The field he beat on this occasion was very moderate.

The Red Bank Stakes was yet another victory for Mr. Withers, as the Minority filly, afterwards named Minion, beat Senorita, who got badly off, and eight others. The latter filly is by far the better of the two. For the Camden Stakes Mr. Haggin at last broke his run of bad luck by winning with Ransom, who had won a purse race at Jerome Park in the spring. He defeated ten moderate ones; Chemise, perhaps, being the best of the lot. This brings me to the Junior Champion Stakes, which was won in the easiest possible manner by Proctor Knott, in fact the race was all over after three furlongs had been traversed, and he romped in, in the fast time of 1:14. The race for place honors was a good one, the Faverdale colt just outlasting Fresno and beating him a head. Salvador was next. Reporter was left at the post. The August Stake was a recapitulation of public form, and was won by Fresno in a canter. The sturdy little Diablo carrying 5 lbs extra being second. Reporter again got badly off in this race. For the Criterion Stakes we had by far the most exciting race of the season, as a sheet could almost have covered the first six. Senorita, almost left at the post, finally caught her field and won by a short head from Eric in 1:15½. She ran this race in about 1:14½, and stamped herself as a first-class filly. There is no filly in the country more capable of improvement than she is, and as she has not been abused look out for her next year. Auricoma put the Select Stakes to her credit, beating Tipstaff, Sorrento and others easily, the latter being left at the post, and then the "all black" finished its victorious career by the Faverdale colt winning the Home Produce Stakes and the Carteret Handicap. In this latter race he carried the top weight, 121 lbs., and defeated Fresno, 119 lbs., and seven others, a good performance.

AT SARATOGA.

Princess Bowling won the Flash Stakes, beating the Dwyer disappointment, Servia, who was second, and a lot of platers. Gypsy Queen put four stakes to her credit one after the other, viz., the Spinaway, Saratoga, Tennessee and Misses, Diablo and Lioness being the best she showed her heels to. These four stakes amounted to the nice little sum of $11,845. Caliente won Virginia Stakes, defeating nothing worth mentioning, and Lioness won the Kentucky Stakes in poor time. Apropos of this last filly, she looks far better than she goes, and I cannot help thinking that she was not particularly well handled during the last season.

Proctor Knott came on from Monmouth Park after his Junior Champion victory, and in the Equity Stakes showed Seymour, Gypsy Queen and Co. just where they belonged by running away from them.

This brings me to the three days' meeting of the Brooklyn Jockey Club. Sorrento won the $2,500 sweepstakes, carrying 115 lbs., in the fast time of 1:15, Diablo being his nearest attendant. Madstone in a purse race showed fairly good form, and with that remark I will proceed with

THE CONEY ISLAND, J. C., FALL MEETING.

Mr. Withers opens the ball by winning the Sapphire Stakes with the Dawdle colt in 1:14 2/5, seven moderate ones being behind him. And now I come to the great Futurity Stakes, won by Proctor Knott, 112 lbs., by half a length, Salvador, 103 lbs., second, Galen (villainously ridden) 115 lbs., third. The third horse was unquestionably the best horse on the day of the race and should have won it. Proctor Knott ran a trifle stale and was not the colt he was in the Junior Champion. Being dead game, however, and well ridden, he just got home. He is an undeniably good horse, but will not stand rattling. In fact Mr. Bryant showed excellent judgment in turning him out after this race. The Belles Stakes was won by Senoma, Lioness (now thoroughly jaded) second, with nine others of no account behind them. Fresno won the rich Autumn Stakes, giving Diablo (second) 7 lbs., and the rest of the field a lot more. Time, 1:15. The winner is undoubtedly a good colt, but ran very in and out on several occasions. The Dash Stakes was won by the much run Champagne Charlie, a tough second rater, and then Salvador put the Flatbush Stakes to his credit with a lot of the best of the weights, as on public form he was bound to do. Madstone put the Gleaners Stakes to his credit after having won three purses and a sweepstakes earlier in the season. He is a fairly good colt and is sold to Mr. Cassatt. The Great Eastern Handicap was won by Diablo, who revelled in the mud and heat a large field. Fresno could not act in the going and is no mud horse. The Campaign Stakes was the last two-year-old stake of the meeting, and was won by the over-galoped Eric, who ran the gamut race of the season. Once Again perhaps ought to have defeated him. Madstone was third, giving the winner 7 lbs.

The Louisville Fall Meeting calls for but little comment as the moderate Champagne Charlie won both the two-year-old stakes, beating only a very ordinary lot. I will move on thereto to

THE BROOKLYN FALL MEETING.

The Prospect Stakes was another victory for the Faverdale colt, who was more than at home in the mud. Diablo, the cast iron horse being second, and three others behind the pair. Time 1:17½, a good performance, considering the track and weight carried. The Algona Stakes was won by the same colt, Senorita, who crowned him close, being second. She was coming very fast at the finish and would have beaten him in a few yards farther. Fresno swerved in this race, ran into the mud near the rails and finished third; at one time he seemed to have the race at his mercy. The Laurel Stakes introduced us to another of A. Belmont's two-year-olds, viz.: She, who took the track at the fall of the flag and won all the way. Auricoma, the best filly in the race, was second and Madstone third. In the Willow Stakes, Senorita showed that she's victory partook somewhat of a fluke as the Belmont filly was beaten by her in a trot. Salvador showed a taste of his quality by defeating Senorita and Madstone in a canter in the Maple Stakes, thus showing that the colts are far ahead of the fillies. Diablo won the Holly Handicap carrying the same impost he did in the Great Eastern, Radiant being second. This ended the meeting.

THE CHICAGO FALL MEETING

saw that good colt Galen twice to the front, once in the Flight Stakes, in which he carried 120 pounds and ran five-eighths of a mile in 1:01½, squandering his field, and again a purse race which he won with equal ease.

AT JEROME PARK FALL MEETING

Mr. Withers introduced us to two more of his two-year-olds, viz.: the Mimi filly and the Majority colt. The first put the Nursery Stakes to her credit and then ran well up carrying her penalties, and the latter, a very improving horse, won a purse in handsome style. He has the making of a real good colt and will improve vastly on this performance if all goes well with him. Salvador won the Tuckahoe Stakes with Mimi filly second, and also put the great Titan Stakes to his account; the All Black being once more second with the Cyclone colt who I have already mentioned favorably. Fresno was behind the pair. The next little Radiant won the Champagne Stakes through the bad jockey that rode Champagne Charlie making him a present of the race. Diablo beat Fresno in the Pelham Handicap, and scored a lucky win, the second should have got the money. Cyclone, Holiday and others were behind the pair. The Keurico Handicap was the last two-year-old race of the meeting, and was easily won by Fresno who defeated Diablo far enough in receipt of a pound over the Titan course. The meeting proved Salvador to be a thorough race horse, Fresno not far behind him in merit, and the rest, with the exception of the Majority colt, (who was very backward) all in the second class.

AT LATONIA.

Galen gave one more taste of his quality by winning all he went for. The rest of the two-year-olds, with the exception of Come to Taw, call for no special mention. This latter horse showed great improvement, but is not in the first rank.

AT BALTIMORE.

Reporter showed he was a thorough stayer by winning the Central Stakes over a mile, carrying 115 pounds, in 1:45 on a fair track. Gypsy Queen was second and Brussels third. He won easily. Nothing else that ran in the two-year-old line calls for comment.

AT WASHINGTON.

The Bertha B. colt showed us that he was a race horse, and is the only one that up to the time of writing claims any especial mention. He was kicked by a stable companion when lit to run, some weeks ago, or would have paid for his keep long before this. He is a very level, good looking horse, and for all that is known at this moment about him may be nearly in the first class. In any case, he should not be overlooked in any race next year in which he has any the best of the weights.

I have nothing further to say of the other meetings, so will proceed to sum up the horses in order of merit, beginning with the colts.

Proctor Knott on his Junior Champion and Futurity running is undoubtedly entitled to the premier position, and Galen on his running in the latter race comes close behind him. I then like Salvador, Faverdale Colt, French Park, Fresno, Oregon, Buddhist and Reporter in the order named. Of the fillies Senorita, Auricoma, Mimi filly, Lady Margaret and Lioness showed the best form, but as I said before, they are always behind the colts. The first named filly, Senorita, is capable of so much improvement though, that she may rank with them next year. The Majority colt is almost an unknown quantity, but I took an especial fancy to him. Amongst the dark division, I like the Lisbon-Belle Meade colt belonging to Capt. Brown of Pittsburg, the best. Dare Devil, in A. Belmont's stable, and the Sweet Home colt in Mr. Withers' will also bear watching. THE TIPSTER.

The National Trotting Association.

Board of Review—Official Report.

A regular meeting of the Board of Review was held at the Fifth Avenue Hotel in the City of New York, December 4, 1888, pursuant to notice and in accordance with the By-laws.

Present: Judge P. P. Johnston, president; Colonel A. Louden Snowden, first vice-president; William H. Strickland, of the Eastern District; David Bonner, of the Atlantic District; M. J. Payne, of the Central District; John L. Mitchell, of the Western District; and M. M. Morae, secretary.

The meeting was organized at 7 p. m., President Johnston in the chair, and adjourned on the evening of the 6th.

The following resolution was adopted:

Whereas, it is a matter of public notoriety that Thomas Axworthy has abandoned his responsibilities in this country and is now a fugitive from justice in foreign lands.

Therefore, be it resolved, that we now proceed to elect a member of this Board to fill the vacancy we hereby declare to exist by reason of the conduct of said Axworthy.

Whereupon the Board, in accordance with the By-laws, appointed G. M. Fogg, Esq., of Nashville, Tenn., to fill the vacancy thus created.

The Chairman of the Auditing Committee presented a report of receipts and disbursements, which was accepted.

The Secretary and Treasurer's report was then submitted. It had been printed and sent to all members.

It appears that there was on November 1, 1888, in the Treasurer's hands of moneys belonging to the association, $16,322.40, of Trust Funds proper, awaiting distribution by order of the Board and under Rule 52, Section 3, there was $3,010.95.

The resolution of the last Board, directing cases to be first considered by the District Boards was rescinded, it having been found impracticable.

The secretary presented a list of new members admitted by the President to membership since the last meeting in May up to December 1, and said admissions were approved.

It was ordered that the membership in the Fifth class, for which heretofore the dues have been $25, be changed, and that sum shall entitle members to extend their aggregate disbursements for speed premiums to $3,000.

It was then determined that the Board should meet on Wednesday, May 1, 1889, at Chicago.

The following list of the Pacific Coast members for the year was presented:

Agricultural Association, District No. 11, Susanville, Cal.
Agricultural Association, District No. 13, Marysville, Cal.
Agricultural Association, District No. 17, Nevada City, Cal.
Amador and Calaveras Agricultural Association, District No. 22, Yone, Cal.

The following is a list of the cases considered and the action taken:

1,585. The National Trotting Association (by T. J. Vail, Secretary), vs. W. B. Wright, Lachine, P. Q., Canada. Application for an order.

Continued to the next meeting at request of respondent.

1,642. Wm. B. Smith, Hartford, Conn., vs. H. E. Bridge, Boston, Mass., and the b m Ada B. Application for an order as to the eligibility of the b m Ada B. at Derby, Conn., Sept. 8, 1887, in the 2:45 class.

It was alleged that the mare Ada B. had obtained a faster record than 2:45, and under the name of Fairy Queen, Evangeline and possibly others. The evidence identifying her as the same under different names and at different places seeming inconclusive, the case was dismissed.

1,648. Frank R. Hayden, alias John Smith, Island Pond, Vt., Ex parte. Application for removal of expulsion.

Temporary re-instatement continued until the next meeting of the Board.

1,744. E. B. Sackett, Chicago, Ill., vs. Peoria Fair Association, Peoria, Ill. Application for removal of suspensions of the b m Modjeska.

The case was decided by the Western District Board, but for informality was continued to the next meeting.

1,749. The National Trotting Association, vs. Frank Herdic, Williamport, Pa.; James Boardman, Jackson, Mich., and Frank Weithoff, Detroit, Mich. Application for an order as to the alleged fraud in pulling the b m Loretto F. in a race at Rochester, N. Y., in August, 1887.

Mr. Herdic appeared before the Board and made a statement under oath that he had no connection, either directly or indirectly, with the fraud, and no other conclusive evidence appearing, the case against him was dismissed.

1,754. M. M. Morse, Secretary, ex parte. Application for an order as to the liability of Frank R. Hayden for the entry of the gr m Hattie M., alias Fanny Knox, at Derby and New Haven, Conn., in 1886. Case continued by request.

1,755. M. M. Morae, Secretary, vs. Frank Starr, Baltimore, Md.; J. M. Smith, Woodsborough, Md., and the b m Alice Peyton, alias Lady Stevens. Application for an order as to the liability of the b m Alice Peyton, alias Lady Stevens, under Rule 6. Case dismissed.

1,756. The National Trotting Association vs. the b g Sherman, in the matter of a "no time" race at Newton Falls, Ohio, in June, 1887.

At the last meeting in May this case was referred to the Central District Board, but failing to take action thereon it is continued.

1,757. O. S. Roberts, Lynn, Mass., Ex parte. Application for removal of expulsion.

At the last meeting the applicant was granted temporary re-instatement, and is now made permanent.

1,758. Babcock Stock Farms, F. G. Babcock, Proprietor, Hornellsville, N. Y., vs. Niagara Falls Trotting Association, Niagara Falls, N. Y. Complaint and application for an order as to the decision of the judges in the 2:35 race, July 5, 1888.

The evidence discloses that on July 5th, the horses Medora, Butcher Boy, Confidence and Blaine, competed on the grounds of respondent, in a race of five heats, it being won by Medora. The Association alleged fraud and collusion between the drivers of Medora and Butcher Boy (which is denied under oath by the former), to let Medora win, and after the race was finished the pools and race were declared off and entrance money refunded.

It is held that if fraud was suspected the race should have been trotted out as provided in the rules by a change of drivers, and that the order of the Association or judges declaring the race off after it had been trotted out, was illegal and void, and all parties are reinstated in their rights as though such action had not been taken, and the premiums must be paid to the horses according to their rank at the finish.

The Association is given until the next meeting of the Board to conform to this judgment.

1,759. M. M. Morse, Secretary, vs. R. J. Fleming, Brooklyn, N. Y., and the b k m Darkness. Application for an order under Rule 6.

At the September meeting of the Charter Oak Park an entry was received from R. J. Fleming giving simply the color and sex of the horse, but no name. The entry competed in the race under protest, winning $225.

It is adjudged that it was illegal and void, and that the horse could not win any money under such entry. It is, therefore,

Ordered, That premiums held under protest must be distributed to her competitors according to their rank, and that the entrance money be returned.

1,760. Caaper M. Sanger, Milwaukee, Wis., vs. Eaton Rapids Driving Park Association, Eaton Rapids, Mich. Application for the removal of the suspension of the br g Dick Johnson.

In 1884 one S. K. Stontenburgh sent the entry of br g Dick Johnson to the Eaton Rapids Driving Park. At that time the horse was owned by Walter Johnson, who makes affidavit that he did not make the entry himself nor authorize any one to do so. The horse has been owned for some time by Mr. Sanger, and upon this state of fact it is ordered that the money deposited under protest be returned to him.

1,761. R. M. Jobe, Baltimore, Md., Ex parte. Application for an order. Continued to the May meeting for further evidence.

1,762. A. B. Green, Willimantic, Conn., Ex parte. Application for an order.

The applicant's gr m Belle Jefferson was second in a heat at Willimantic, Sept. 28, 1887. The winner of the heat was set back to third place for running, and his time inadvertently recorded for Belle Jefferson, no time being taken on the second horse. The fact is attested by all the judges and timers.

Decided that the record of 2:32½ was improperly given to Belle Jefferson, and that under the circumstances no time should have been given to either horse.

1,763. M. M. Morse, Secretary, vs. b g Champion John L., alias Prince. Application for an order.

Continued, and secretary instructed to investigate for further information.

1,764. N. Belland, et al, Chicago, Ill., Ex parte. Application for an order under rule 15. Continued to the May meeting for further proof as to the claims of different parties.

1,765. M. M. Morse, Secretary, Ex parte. Application for an order to reimburse the Gentlemen's Driving Park, Martin & McAndrews proprietors, Baltimore, Md., for moneys expended. Application granted.

1,766. S. M. Clement, Colon, Michigan, ex parte. Application for an order to settle whether the gr g Silver Cloud was eligible in the 2:38 class at Council Bluffs, Iowa, in July, 1888. Continued for further proof.

1,767. M. M. Morse, Secretary, vs. H. C. Cressler, Tipton, Iowa, and the b s Hambletonian Bashaw. Application for an order. Continued, and defendant cited to appear at the next meeting of the Board and show cause why he should not be punished for trotting his horse out of his class.

1,768. Frank Wirick, Tipton, Iowa, Ex parte. Application for an order under Rule 15. Application continued, it being dependent upon decision in case No. 1,767; and also as to the rights of parties who first gave information.

1,769. M. Hicks, Holyoke, Mass., Ex parte. Application for an order.

It appears from the affidavits of the judges and timers that the 2:29 record won by the b s White Cloud was erroneously given to the b m Susie W., and the case was ordered to be stricken from the docket.

1,770. John Trainor, Baltimore, Md., Ex parte. Application for an order.

Mr. Trainor was represented by his attorney.

Mr. Trainor protested the horses George B. and Volonica as not being eligible to the race which was for county horses. After the race was over he protested Cabash, alleging the entry had been taken after entries closed. It appears the applicant's horse Allen Thurman with two others were distanced by Cabash. Regarding the protest against the latter the original entry was before the Board, and was dated and post-marked on the day of closing entries. As there was a requisite number of entries and starters, and as Mr. Trainor started his horse and was not distanced by a horse not eligible, it is seen that his claim for return of entrance is not valid, and the application must be denied.

1,771. John F. Miller, Baltimore, Md., Ex parte. Application for an order. Continued to the May meeting.

1,772. L. H. Broome, Trenton, N. J., vs. New Jersey State Agricultural Society, Newark, N. J. Application for removal of the suspension of the br m Kimball Maid.

Mr. A. Dunham and his father came before the Board and both swore positively that the former had full authority to enter the mare Kimball Maid at any and all meetings where he chose to. The application was therefore denied.

1,773. Charles Records, Boston, Mass., Ex parte. Application for an order under Rule 15. Continued for further investigation.

1,774. George Carville, St. John, N. B., Ex parte. Application for an order as to the ruling of the judges in the three-year-old colt race at Fredericton, N. B., October 6, 1888.

The applicant's gr s Speculation competed in a race for three-year-olds against the b f Clayola, ch f School Marm and the b g Johnston. The race was mile heats. The first heat was won by School Marm, at the conclusion of which a protest was entered to the judges against the driver of Speculation for loud shouting. When he was called to the stand and informed that if he persisted in it they should be obliged to inflict punishment therefore. The second heat was won by Speculation, in which there was no complaint, although it is alleged some shouting was indulged in, and the driver was again called to the stand and cautioned, notwithstanding which it is alleged that finding he had lost his position as the leading horse in the third heat, he commenced and continued shouting until School Marm broke into a run, Speculation finishing about two lengths ahead. The judge took the heat from Speculation and gave it to School Marm, which finished second. It is claimed by Mr.

Carville that there was no more shouting done than was necessary to encourage his colt to put forth his best efforts, and in any event the judges had no power to inflict punishment greater than that prescribed in Rule 47.

It is held that the judges are the sole arbiters of the actual incident of a race unless fraud or intentional wrong is proven, and therefore their decision must be and is sustained.

1,775. J. Roas Mossgrove, Steubenville, Ohio, vs. Western Pennsylvania Agricultural Association, Washington, Pa. Application for removal of suspension of the ch g Judge Lynch (pacer).

The ch g Judge Lynch was entered in the free-for-all pacing race by some one signing himself Cuth Countryman. The letter itself bears evidence of fraud, and both the driver and owner of the horse make affidavit that they do not know the party in whose name the entry was made, and that they never gave him or any one else authority to make it. The application is, therefore, granted.

1,766. J. Ross Mossgrove, Steubenville, Ohio, vs. Agricultural and Mechanical Society of Harford County, Bel Air, Md. Application for removal of suspension of the ch g Judge Lynch (pacer). Application granted for reasons stated in case No. 1,775.

1,777. Alex. Lewis, Salt Lake City, Utah, ex parte. Appeal and application for an order. Continued at request of applicant.

1,778. Peter Schatz, Bellevue, Pa., ex parte. Application for removal of fine imposed on A. K. Mann by the judges at Albany, N. Y., August 30, 1888.

After considering the evidence presented the decision of the judges is sustained, and the application is denied.

1,779. George Hossack, Lexington, Ky., ex parte. Application for a re-hearing of case No. 1,629.

No relief granted at this meeting, but the application ordered to be placed on the docket for the meeting in May, 1889.

1,780. M. J. Francis, G. Itkins, Jersey City, N. J., vs. T. Lillis, M. V. Murphy, Jersey City, N. J., and the b m Floretta, alleged to be the b m Miss Legacy by Legacy. Application for an order.

The evidence produced seeming to be inconclusive, the Board decline to act on the case, and it is continued.

1,781. John Casler, Adams, N. Y., vs. Antwerp Union Agricultural Society, Antwerp, N. Y. Application for removal of the suspension of himself and the b s Prince Allen.

The society advertised a race for three-minute horses and four-year-olds, entries to close August 21st. For some reason they held them open to the 22d and notified all the parties, and all agreed to stay in who had entered. Mr. Casler wrote on the 21st that if it was a race for three-minute horses alone he would enter his horse Prince Allen, but if it was a race for both three-minute horses and four-year-olds he would not enter, and states his reason to be that he wished to trot his horse for reputation, and if the four-year-old Tricotine was allowed to enter he would have no chance. He presents an affidavit by his son that he heard his father say to Mr. Johnson, the Secretary at Watertown (giving no date of conversation) "that if Tricotine was entered he would not enter his horse Prince Allen;" that the secretary said Tricotine was not entered and entries had closed; that his father then told the secretary he would start his horse. Also affidavit of Ward N. Emmons that he heard Mr. Casler say about the time for entering horses for the Antwerp race that if he entered Prince Allen he would make a conditional entry. Mr. Casler also presents his own affidavit that he made his entry conditioned upon Tricotine not starting. He also presents affidavit of Jeannie Wilson, telephone operator, that at his dictation on the 22d she telephoned the secretary to "enter my horse according to my letter and no different." On the other hand Mr. Johnson, the secretary, says Mr. Casler did write him the conditional entry stated, but that when they met in Watertown on the 22d, he told Mr. Casler he "would not accept the conditional entry sent. That it was a race for three-minute and four-year-olds, and he (Mr. Casler) then and there made his entry straight in presence of J. T. Cornwall, who is the starter for most of the races in that section." This statement is attested by Mr. Cornwall.

It is held, first, that there is no conditional entry recognized in the rules, and, therefore, the written entry on the 21st, and which the secretary informed him was rejected was void.

Second: That the postponement of the closing of entries to the 22d, notice of which was given and to which all assented, created a new race, in which Mr. Casler was free to enter or not.

Third: That the positive testimony of the secretary attested by Mr. Cornwall, that Mr. Casler did, on the 22d, make the entry without conditions must govern, and the application is, therefore, denied.

1,782. John Casler, Adams, N. Y., vs. E. A. Kenyon, Adams, N. Y. Complaint and application for removal of suspension of himself.

In 1881 the Oneida County Agricultural Society, at Rome, N. Y., ordered the suspension of John Casler and the b g Lyman. The claim, so far as the horse is concerned, has expired by limitation, as per Section 7 of Rule 51. Mr. Casler had the horse Lyman in his care for the owner. It is in evidence that Mr. H. S. Howe desired Mr. Casler to enter the horse at the above Society's meeting but Mr. Casler told him he only had the horse in charge and had no authority to enter him without the consent of the owner. Mr. Howe did, however, enter the horse in Casler's name, claiming that he had authority from E. A. Kenyon, brother of H. O. Kenyon the owner.

The application for removal of suspension is granted.

1,783. Dick Wilson, Greenfield, Ind., vs. Columbus Driving Park Association, Columbus, Ohio. Application for removal of suspension and return of money paid under protest.

Mr. Wilson claims the entry of Hattie was made by his brother, R. J. Wilson, and that his own name is D. L. Wilson, but acknowledges he is called Dick Wilson and so signs his letters. The Secretary of Columbus, Ohio, identifies him as the person from whom he received the entry. The application is denied.

1,784. James B. Backhouse, Ashland, Ohio, ex parte. Application for an order as to the record of the gr g Newton B. at Ashland, Ohio, Sept 8, 1887.

This application was made on June 8, 1888, the owner claiming the horse's record was 2:30 while it was given in one of the turf publications as 2:29. The former appears correct and the horse now having a much faster record the case is dismissed.

1,785. E. W. McGinnis, Beaver, Pa., ex parte. Appeal and application for an order.

The Society at Beaver, Pa., advertised a race for horses that "never trotted for a premium." Mr. McGinnis protested certain horses as not being green horses, they having trotted in a race where no purse or premium was offered, but for the benefit of the track.

It is held that whether they were green horses or not is not raised by the conditions, but whether they had trotted for a premium. No allegation being made or evidence produced that they had it is adjudged that they were eligible.

1,786. Frank Hannas, and John A. Hann, Scranton, Pa., ex parte.

Application for return of the recording fee of the b m Pet Hann, alias Kitty H. The evidence being incomplete the case was continued.

1,787. M. B. Lockwood, Freehold, N. J., ex parte. Application for removal of suspension of the ch s. O. S. B., alias No Name, ordered by the Board in case No. 1,417. No sufficient reason is found to disturb the former decision and the application is denied.

1,788. Cleveland Driving Park Company, Cleveland, Ohio, vs. L. F. Hunter, Warren, Ohio. Complaint and application for an order.

The case is continued and Mr. Hunter is ordered to be summoned before the Board at the May meeting in 1889, to answer to the charge of the Cleveland Driving Park Company that he has given currency to false charges against it.

1,789. W. A. Ogdon, Philadelphia, Pa., vs. Cortland County Agricultural Society, Cortland, N. Y. Application for removal of the suspension of the b g Billy Kid or Kedron (pacer). Application denied.

1,790. T. B. Cook, Binghamton, N. Y., ex parte, application for relief of the b m, Kitty Frazier from the effect of alleged false time at Marathon, N. Y., Sept. 22, 1886, Sept. 22, 1887, and Cortland, N. Y., Sept. 29, 1887.

On May 27, 1888, the owner of Kitty Frazier sent his check to the treasurer of the National Trotting Association to provide for a possible suppression of time at places not named, with request to hold the same for a time, which was done. After which he entered and trotted her in the 3:00 and 2:45 classes, and was finally protested at Sherburne, N. Y., as having obtained a record of 2:38 at Cortland, N. Y., Sept. 29, 1887, and also of 2:40 at Marathon, N. Y., Sept. 22, 1887.

The secretary at Sherburne telegraphed the secretary at Cortland and received for answer that her record was 2:38. Subsequently he wrote to the owner that not having the record book at hand he took the record from what appeared in "Wallace's Year Book," but that on looking over his Member's Book he found her time there was 2:49. The owner also presents affidavit of the judge and timers that the best record, according to their knowledge and belief, made by the said mare Kitty Frazier, on said track, in September, 1887, was 2:49. The record of 2:38, printed in the Turf Journals, has stood without question from 1887 to 1888. The original report of the race is in the office of the National Trotting Association, as taken and recorded by a special supervisor at the time, and giving the exact time of all the heats and the winners thereof, and showing the first heat to have been trotted by Kitty Frazier in 2:38.

It is held that the time of the mare was misrepresented at both Marathon and Cortland, and that the mare Kitty Frazier acquired a record of 2:38 on Sept. 29, 1887, and it is ordered that all moneys won by said mare in slower classes since the said record or bar was obtained, must be deposited with the treasurer of the National Trotting Association for distribution to her competitors according to their rank, and that she be suspended from National tracks until this order is complied with.

1,791. H. C. James, Waterville, Me., ex parte. Application for relief of the b. m. Maud M. from the effect of alleged false time at Fairfield, Me., Aug. 15, 1885. Application granted.

1,792. S. V. Reed, Rochester, Pa., vs. P. McLaughlin, Rochester, Pa., and the b. m. Fanny M. (pacer), in the matter of alleged false time at Beaver, Pa., Sept. 24, 1886.

In this case it is alleged that the b. m. Fanny M. (pacer) obtained a fraudulent record of 2:29 at Beaver, Pa., in 1886, when her true time was 2:32. It is supported by the affidavits of E. S. Weyand and P. E. McFarland. The record having stood for two years, and being now supported by the affidavits of the judges and timers, that the time recorded was the correct time of the heat, it is ordered that the record of 2:29, given by the judges, be sustained.

1,793. The National Trotting Association vs. Blair & Kingmen, Delaware, Ohio, and the ch. m. Kitty B. Application for an order. Also the matter of an alleged "no time" race at Mechanicsburg, Ohio, Sept. 9, 1886.

Defendants have filed affidavits of the judges that to the best of their knowledge there was no suppression of time, but no record is presented, and no time stated in the evidence.

It is adjudged that Rule 41 was violated, and the penalties therein must be enforced.

1,794. E. C. Herring, Dayton, Ohio, and the National Trotting Association vs. the gr. m. Mose-agate, protest as to the eligibility of the mare in the 2:50 class at Springfield, Ohio, and application for an order as to the misrepresentation of her time at Urbana, Ohio, Sept. 7, 1887.

It was charged that on Sept. 7, 1887, the gr. m. Mose-agate won a race at Urbana, Ohio, wherein the time of one heat was 2:44. The secretary sends a transcript of the record, giving the time of all the heats, which is supported by the affidavits of the judges and timers, showing that no heat was trotted faster than three minutes.

Decided, that the protest is not sustained, and money retained must be paid to the owner.

1,795. The National Trotting Association vs. the blk. e. Ben Wright, in the matter of an alleged "no time" race at Lagrange, Ind., Sept. 30, 1885.

The defendant was represented by an attorney. The evidence showed that the driver asked the judge to be sure and give the time as he wanted a fast mark for his horse, but they refused, saying that at the request of the other drivers they had agreed to give no time. Notwithstanding the refusal of the judges to give the time he continued in the race to the finish and won it. The fact is not disputed that the time was suppressed, for which a fine of $100 having been paid, as per Rule 41, and as there seems no fraudulent intent on the part of the driver, the disqualification from the right to compete on members' grounds is removed.

1,796. The National Trotting Association vs. the br. m. Lady Winehip in the matter of an alleged "no time" race at Pottersville, N. Y., Sept. 24, 1885.

The secretary of the track certifies that no time is allowed to be given. No evidence appearing to the contrary, the Board is satisfied that the time was unexpressed in violation of the rule, and the penalty having been provided for by the present owner, who had no connection with the fraud, it is adjudged that the disqualification be removed.

1,797. The National Trotting Association vs. the b. m. Lynde, in the matter of alleged false time at Holyoke, Mass., July 5, 1888. The charge, not being sustained by sufficient proof, is dismissed, and the fine ordered to be returned.

1,798. The National Trotting Association vs. the a. g. Sand Boy (pacer), in the matter of an alleged "no time" at Mt. Gilead, Ohio, October 8, 1885.

The judges' "Class Book" records no time, and there being no defence and no intentional fraud appearing it is decided that the fine was properly imposed, and that the disqualification be removed.

1,799. The National Trotting Association vs. the b. c. John Ferguson, in the matter of alleged "no time" race at Fergus, Ont., Can., Oct. 14, 1887.

Adjudged, that the race in question were not "no time" races, and the penalty deposited under protest must be returned.

1,800. The National Trotting Association vs. the blk. g. Captain George, in the matter of an alleged "no time" race at Oswego Falls, N. Y., Sept. 14, 1887.

Two of the judges send affidavit that the time was not suppressed. The "Class Book" from the secretary reads "no time given," and no time is given by the judges. From this, with the other evidence and statements, it is adjudged that the race in question was a "no time" race within the rule; that the fine was properly imposed, and that the disqualification be removed.

1,801. The National Trotting Association vs. the m. s. Brophalus in the matter of an alleged "no time" race at Wellsboro, Pa., Sept. 28, 1883.

The Secretary sends affidavit that the time was not taken and recorded on any records of the Society previous to 1884. After considering all the evidence it was determined that the time had been suppressed; that the fine, as per Rule 41, had been properly assessed, and the disqualification be removed.

1,802. The National Trotting Association, vs. the b s Victor Prince, in the matter of an alleged "no time" race at Fonda, N. Y., September 1, 1887.

After duly weighing all the evidence, it is adjudged that the time of said race was suppressed and fine properly assessed, and the horse ordered to be reinstated.

1,803. Nate Briggs, Palatine Bridge, N. Y., ex parte. Application for relief of the b m Princess, and from the effect of an alleged "no time" race at Fonda, N. Y., September 1, 1887. Some evidence and same decision as the preceding.

1,804. The National Trotting Association, vs. the blk g Giles B., in the matter of an alleged "no time" race at Kingston, Ont., Canada, July 13, 1886. Case not sustained and ordered dismissed.

1,805. H. C. Cressler, Tipton, Iowa, ex parte. Appeal and application for an order.

On August 23, 1888, McGregor Boy, Mountain Girl, and Hambletonian Bashaw contended in a race at Maquoketa, Iowa, wherein Mr. Cressler alleges that Mountain Girl should have been distanced, thus giving his horse Hambletonian Bashaw second money. The testimony is conflicting as to whether Mountain Girl was outside of the flag or not. The evidence shows that the judge thought McGregor Boy crowded her on the turn, causing her to swerve and throw the driver from his sulky and they let her start again.

In accordance with long usage and former decisions, the Board held that the Judge's ruling as to the actual occurrence in a race must govern, and their decision is therefore sustained.

1,806. Thomas J. Echols, Crystal Springs, Ga., ex parte. Application for removal of expulsion of the b g John G. Continued to the next meeting in May.

1,807. The National Trotting Association vs. the gr g Silver Thread, pacer. Application for an order.

The gr g Silver Thread, pacer, was formerly owned by Frank Weithoff, who was expelled at the May meeting. The horse appeared at several meetings of members and competed and his winnings were retained under protest. It was shown by bill of sale and other evidence that he was sold to another party previous to the expulsion, and his winnings are, therefore, ordered to be returned.

1,808. Frank Starr, Arlington, Md., Ex parte. Application for removal of expulsion. The application was granted upon the payment of a fine of $100, and promise of reformation.

1,809. E. G. McLucas, Brownfield, Me., vs. West Oxford Agricultural Society, Fryeburg, Me. Application for removal of suspension. Case continued at the request of the Society.

1,810. M. M. Morse, Secretary, Ex parte. Application for an order to distribute certain moneys.

Secretary was authorized to distribute to parties as their interests may appear.

1,811. S. C. Shoaf, Pulaeki, Pa., vs. Lawrence County Agricultural and Horticultural Society, New Castle, Pa. Application for removal of suspension.

Mr. Shoaf was fined $100, and suspended until paid on July 14, 1880. He made application to President Johnston for temporary re-instatement under Article IV of the By-Laws which was granted, and it is now made permanent.

1,812. W. J. Walworth, St. Clair, Mich., vs. Narragansett Driving Association, R. I. Application for the removal of suspension. The application is denied.

1,813. Lewie Shepherd, Chattanooga, Tenn., vs. Tennessee Fair Association, Nashville, Tenn. Application for removal of the suspension of Oakland Stock Farm, B. S. Ozias, Lewie Shepherd and the br s Brown Mark. The evidence is voluminous, but the board after considering it in all its bearings, decided that the application must be denied.

1,814. W. W. Richardson, Akron, Ohio; J. W. Fraeier, St. Claireville, Ohio, and J. R. McMullon, Ex parte. Appeal from the decision of the judges in the 2:35 race at Ravenna, Ohio, September 27, 1888.

It appears there were six horses started, and Senator Crouse won the first two heats, being fourth in the third. The judge rang the bell for the fourth heat, and Senator Crouse not appearing, the horses were given the word and the heat was won by Clifford. There is no evidence to show that the proper time had not elapsed, and the starting judge claims he knew that Senator Crouse had not answered the bell and that he was not there to start with the others. The race was then postponed till the next day. The judge, or a part of them, were not the same as the day before, and they allowed Senator Crouse to start again, although he was declared distanced the day before, and although protested by the other drivers.

The appeal is sustained and the money is ordered to be distributed as though Senator Crouse had not started after being declared distanced by the judges on the first day.

1,815. Jerome Holcomb, Scranton, Pa., ex parte. Application for removal of fine and suspension. Application denied.

1,816. M. M. Morse, Secretary, vs. Martin Demarest, Jersey City, N. J., and the b m Belle Parie, formerly Aileen Almont. Application for an order.

The evidence discloses that the respondent bought the b m Aileen Almont, record 2:25, of R. F. Myers, of Dayton, Ohio, in February last, and competed with her in the three-minute and 2:50 classes at Derby, Conn., the following June 26th and 28th, and at Hoboken, N. J., July 12th and 21st in the 2:31 and 2:29 classes, winning in all $365, under the name of Belle Parie. She was entered in the name of J. Robertson, as owner, and M. Demarest, driver. It is ordered that Demarest and the mare Aileen Almont vs. Belle Parie be expelled.

1,817. Charles A. Greer, Altoona, Pa., ex parte. Application for an order under Rule 15.

Information was in this case sent to the office of the association on June 30, 1888, from Derby, Conn., while Mr. Greer's information and application was not sent till November 19th following. The application is, therefore, denied.

1,818. A. J. Trippstein, Harrisburg, Pa., vs. Montour County Agricultural Society, Danville, Pa. Application for removal of suspension of himself and the b g Harry B.

It seems the secretary at Milton, Pa., was the secretary for the Circuit, and there is a misunderstanding as to what horses were entered at Milton only, or what horses were entered for all the meetings. The applicant claims to have entered his horse only at Milton, and there being no entry returned with the order of suspension, as per Rule 51, Section 6, the application is granted.

1,819. H. B. Phillips, Pottstown, Pa., vs. Montour County Agricultural Society, Danville, Pa. Application for removal of suspension of himself and the blk g Bob Ingersoll (pacer.) Same decision and for same reason as in case No. 1,818.

1,820. S. J. Faux, Wilkesbarre, Pa., vs. Montour County Agricultural Society, Danville, Pa. Application for removal of suspension of himself and the b g Charley F.

The evidence discloses that the applicant (as he claims) did not know when the entries closed, and sent his entry two days after entries had closed. His application is, therefore, granted.

1,821. A. G. Duckson, Sand Bank, N. Y., and E. E. Smith, Syracuse, N. Y., vs. O. D. Fisher, Seneca Falls, N. Y., and the b c Lapland alias Hattie's Boy alias Boney, and the b s Jim B. Application for an order.

Messrs. Duckson and Smith protested Mr. Fisher's entry of Lapland on the ground that he had trotted under the above names without paying the recording fee, and they also protested the colt Jim B. as being owned or controlled by the same party or in the same stable with Lapland. As to the latter, the evidence clearly shows that Mr. O. L. Fisher does not own Jim B., nor was he owned or controlled wholly or in part by him or kept in his stable. It is clear, however, that Mr. Fisher did compete with the colt Lapland on non-association tracks under the names of Hattie's Boy and Boney, claiming that he thought he had a right to, as they were not National Association tracks.

It is ordered that Mr. Fisher be required to pay $50 recording fee, as per Rule 6, Section 4; that the money won by him be distributed to the other horses in the race meeting to their rank, and the horse be suspended until this order is complied with.

1,822. Lewis S. Ellis, Eminence, Ky., Ex parte. Application for removal of fine and suspension.

Mr. Ellis had entered his filly in the two-year-old purse race at the Kentucky Agricultural and Mechanical Association Fair at Lexington. His entry went lame, and having paid his entrance money he thought it sufficient, and did not draw out in writing, as per Rule 17, Section 1.

Considering the circumstances, and with the assent of the President, who inflicted the fine, it is ordered to be remitted.

1,823. Thomas S. Turrell, Medina, N. Y., vs. Agricultural and Mechanical Society of Hartford County, Bel Air, Md. Application for removal of suspension of himself and the e g Encophalus.

The applicant claims exemption from payment of the entrance money because the association in the Circuit furnished msty oats, and in consequence his horse got "off."

Held, that the reason is inadmissible, and the application is, therefore, denied.

1,824. D. H. Johneton, Jersey City, N. J., vs. Hugh Grove, Lima, Ind., and the s g Young Frank alias Frank P. Application for an order under Rules 6 and 14. Continued for further evidence at request of the plaintiff.

No further business appearing the Board adjourned.

M. M. MORSE, Secretary.

New Racing Rules.

CINCINNATI, O., December 19th.—The American Turf Congress met for business in executive session this afternoon. Two changes were made in the rules by the committee, viz:

First—It raised the scale of four pounds, with the usual allowance for mares, but not for geldings.

Second—It required that sealed bids shall be deposited in all selling races within fifteen minutes after the race, which bids shall be opened by the presiding judge, who shall divide the surplus between the second horse and the association.

The association admitted two new members, the Overland Park Club and the Kansas City Club.

Racing dates were fixed as follows for the spring meetings of 1889: Louisville, May 9th to 18th; St. Louis, June 1st to 15th; Kansas City, June 17th to 22d; Chicago, June 22d to July 20th; St. Paul, July 23d to 31st.

The Congress also adopted a rule that all members of the Turf Congress should disbar all persons expelled by either the American or National Trotting Association for fraud during the continuance of such expulsion.

Bay District Association.

Officers of the day: Judges, Capt. H. B. Blagrave, Les Shaner and E. S. Culver; timers: R. T. Carroll and W. Appleby; starter, T. Atchison; secretary and weighing judge, H. Lowden.

The very bad weather, which continued for two weeks, made necessary postponement after postponement of the card which was at last run off on Thursday afternoon. The indications of rain no doubt kept many from attending, the audience being a very slim one. The track was far from being good, in fact, the horses were not allowed any exercise on it until Wednesday, consequently several of them were not as fit as they should have been. Only three penicillers were ready for business, even the "mutuel" box remaining closed. However, there were chances enough for the ordinary bettor to take the odds, and as three out of the four events fell to "long shots," some at least left the track feeling happy. Tom Atchison was the starter, but as such was not a success, Index in the first race being almost left at the post while in the last race, when the flag fell, Bogus had a lead of two open lengths.

For the first race on the card Oro was scratched, leaving four only to face the flag. When the word was given, which was delayed considerably by the actions of Index, Welcome had the advantage, keeping it for a short time only, as Brady made a rush and took the post of honor before the stand was reached. Index, at the half, tried to regain lost ground and moved up to third place, but it was only a momentary change, as Kildare was given his head and regained the position with ease. Brady had the race well in hand from the start, and was never headed, Welcome not being fast enough to push the son of Wildidle.

Time, 1:56½.

The betting: Auction pools—Brady $25, Index and Kildare $6 each, Welcome $5. Book betting—Brady 4-5, Index 4-1, Kildare 4-1, Welcome 4-1.

Jack Brady as favorite having won with such comparative ease, a rush was made to get on the good thing for the second race, Al Farrow. From where the reporters sit, it looked as though the favorite was pulled, but in conversation with the judges they seemed of a different opinion, and a rumor was current that Carillo lost a good deal of money on his mount. That his action was suspicious, was evident to every one who watched the race closely. The start was a good one, Coloma being the first to show in front. All hands took the extreme outside of the track, the going there being preferable to that closer to the rails. At the quarter Nabean was leading his field by two lengths, the balance bunched that distance behind. Before the half was reached, Coloma quit badly showing want of work, for he is ordinarily a better horse than he proved himself yesterday. Nabean made a game effort, and although Farrow was a good second, won easily by a length, Coloma being away in the rear.

SUMMARY.

Same day.—Handicap for all ages, one mile.
Elmwood's Stables' b. g. Nabean (3), Nathan Coombs—Gypsy, 83 pounds
M. T. Walters' b. h. Al Farrow 3, Connor—Della Walker, 112½ pounds
..... Carillo 2

..... Hennessy 3
Time, 1:48½.

The betting—auction pools: Farrow $25, Coloma $17, Nabean $4. Book betting: Farrow 4-5, Coloma 8-5, Nabean 8-1.

A three quarter dash, light welter weight up, was next on the programme, and had originally six entries, but owing to some misunderstanding Mr. McCarty's Tom Daly was not brought to the track, he being stabled out on 26th street. Black Pilot was not thought to be in good form, so Mr. Davis scratched his entry. Of the remaining four Gladstone and Brady were the ones selected to carry the bulk of public money, first one and then the other being favorite in the betting.

Gladstone was in the lead as soon as the flag fell, and was never headed. Naicho B. evidently did not like her heavy weight, and fell dismally behind long before the half mile post was reached. Hill tried hard with Index, but the best he could do was to land him in second place, which he kept to the end. Brady was a sad disappointment to his friends, for he had won so easily in the opening event that many considered he had this race at his mercy. However he prefers light to heavy weight, and was never better than third.

SUMMARY.

Same Day.—Light Welter-weight handicap. Three-quarters of a mile.
N. A. Covarubias' sl. g. Gladstone, 4, Reveille—Margaret, 143 lbs.

The betting—Auction pools: Brady $30, Gladstone $25, field $29. Book-betting: Brady 7 to 5, Gladstone 7 to 5, Naicho B. 3 to 1, Index 8 to 1.

The last race of the day was a complete surprise to the "talent" who had made up their minds that Bogus was a sure winner. There were two changes in the betting before the race occurred, which shows how "tips" will influence the fraternity who patronize the pool box. One pool was sold, Bogus $25, Susie S. $28, field $64. Another, Bogus $15, Susie S. $4, field $30; and still another, Bogus $25, Susie S. $18, field $54. Bogus was at least two clear lengths in front when the flag fell, but in short order resigned it to Kildare. As they came into the home stretch, whip and steel were applied profusely, but the former winner Nabean, outlasted his opponents and landed the purse for the Elmwood Stable, by half a length from Minnie R., Kildare on the outside, being well up for third place.

SUMMARY.

Dr. Schwartz in Los Angeles.

The sporting reporter of this Los Angeles Tribune says:

"One of the best informed men on the breeding of the pacer and trotter it has been our good fortune to meet is Dr. Schwartz, the owner of the celebrated pacer mare Irma, and many finely bred brooding mares. This doctor is already an enthusiast on the advantages to be derived from wintering in California, and thinks that the improvement of Irma since coming to Los Angeles has been marvellous. Irma, when she first arrived here, was in very poor condition and had a nasty cold, but is now almost restored to sound health, and if the weather permits so that she can be exercised, I believe that she will still lower her record—2:20—four or five seconds.

"Have you seen Stamboul?" I asked the doctor yesterday.

"Yes, I paid a visit to Rosemead last Wednesday. Stamboul is the handsomest and most perfectly gaited stallion I ever saw. He is a happy blending of the Hambletonian and Sultan type, with a leaning rather to the Hambletonian side of the house. I was most agreeably surprised to find a horse after the bruising races he had, with such a perfectly clean and sound set of legs. The Stamboul yearlings are a marvellous lot of youngsters. All of them can show quarters in 40½ to 45 seconds with the greatest of ease. I must say, however, that the Alcazar yearlings are, if anything, more perfectly gaited. They went with as little friction as the get of any horse I ever saw."

"Have you seen any other stallions during your sojourn that impressed you favorably?"

"Yes, I like Del Sur. I didn't expect to find such a good horse. He is shamefully overlooked in my estimation, and if I were looking for a brood mare stallion to get fillies for a complete outcross to our continuously accumulating Hambletonian blood lines, I wouldn't know where to make a happier choice than Del Sur. I would especially recommend such a stallion to some of the older stock farms of Kentucky or New York, which are already sufficiently supplied with the popular families of Wilkes and so forth, and where a new blood element would come in advantageously, especially for the introduction of sound, clean, hard legs. I shall certainly recommend the purchase of Del Sur to my friends in the East."

Los Angeles Turf Club.

An enthusiastic meeting of the members of the Los Angeles Turf Club was held at the parlors of the St. Elmo Hotel, Saturday night, says the Los Angeles Tribune. The following officers were elected: President Dr. K. D. Wise; vice-president, H. E. Rose; treasurer, Myron F. Farble; secretary, H. T. Rodman; trustees, C. A. Durfee and E. Ryan. The following new members were admitted into the club: L. H. Mayberry, Dr. J. Edwards, P. Haack, J. W. Robinson, E. L. Ryan, B. F. Wood, Thomas Hughes, J. M. Hale, Elias Williams, E. Adams, O. H. Lockhart, H. I. Rodman, H. W. Heusch, J. A. Aguirre, W. M. Fletcher, J. F. Donnegan, L. Rickabaugh and Richard Gird. Another meeting is to be held next Saturday evening at the same place, when the date for the winter meeting will be decided upon. It will most possibly be held in the middle of April.

Is Inbreeding Necessarily Injurious?

BY CLIFFORD FITZPATRICK, M. D.

I have read with pleasure, in the October number of the Monthly, the article by Cecil Hampden Howard on "Hereditary Influence."

I am a novice in the study of the breeding problem, and, having made a small start in the breeding of the trotter (being governed by theory developed by reading), I would, if I am wrong, like some practical breeder to start me on the right theory.

I have no hesitation in accepting the oft-made assertion that "like begets like;" that "a thoroughbred cock and a thoroughbred hen beget thoroughbred chicks;" and am equally confident that a fig-tree can't produce thistles.

The point on which I desire light is this: Are consanguineous unions necessarily productive of a depraved or devitalized progeny? If such is the fact, I have failed to profit by my reading. By the article referred to, it will be seen that nervous diseases and their accompanying evils must necessarily have been developed, and the intensity of their progenitors' disease augmented.

I am cognizant of a case where a college professor, whose father had died of cancer of the stomach, married an estimable lady whose father had also died of a cancer of the stomach. If they can expect anything but that their progeny will have a malignant cachexia, their hope will predominate over their reason. The conclusion must be inevitable that if the father and mother both inherit diseased constitutions (and especially if the disease has developed in them), their offspring will surely be diseased—possibly not at the time of birth, but the elements of disease will be there as a potential energy, only waiting for some excitant to give it full development.

Should a man about to marry be as exacting in the selection of his wife as the Messrs. Stout and all advanced breeders are in the selection of their breeding-stock, and should women exercise the same thoroughness, can any one imagine that the children would be anything but healthy? Should there be a failure, it would in all probability be due to a lack of thorough investigation and the law of atavism asserting itself.

Undoubtedly an out-cross would be beneficial to the one whose blood was contaminated, as the diseased tendency might by that means become extinct; but when both parents inherit either physical or mental disease, their progeny must have the elements of disease intensified in them, and they will be more than fortunate should they escape its dire effects.

We should be careful not to confound "consanguinity" with hereditary pathological propagation. Rysdyk's Hambletonian was a production of consanguinity, and it remains for some person to establish as a fact that he was lacking in ability "to procreate a numerous and better race." The Israelites were the direct production of consanguineous union, and in fourteen generations from their origin they became six hundred thousand fighting men, and their vigor was unquestioned. On page 272, Vol. II., "Reference Handbook of the Medical Sciences," may be found an article by Charles F. Withington on "Consanguinity" that will well repay one for carefully studying it. This able and conscientious writer takes the tenable ground that close incestuous unions presuppose moral degradation, which must necessarily manifest its effects in the physique of the children; it certainly is not logical to assert that the large percentage of idiots among the children is due entirely to consanguinity, and not to intemperance to any extent.

In Dr. Bemis' statistics, quoted by Withington, it is shown that the percentage of insanity, epileptics and scrofulous diseases is far greater from the marriage of third cousins than from those of either first or second cousins. M. Dally also states that "Two families continually intermarried for five generations, no marriage being in a more distant degree than first cousins, except two of second cousins. The total number of branches, direct and collateral, was one hundred and forty. There was not a single case of deaf-mutism or idiocy, but there were two cases of consumption, one caused by a cold; and one case of senile insanity, in a woman of sixty-eight. It should be remarked that there was no predisposition to disease in the family."

Again, we have the testimony of M. Bourgeois. The family in question is his own. A genealogical table is given covering seven generations. In one branch of the family of five successive generations four married their cousins, and the offspring of the fourth successive consanguineous marriage consisted of six children, all healthy save one, who is defective mentally—a defect, however, ascribable to an accidental traumatic injury. The founder of the race himself married a kins-woman, and among the descendants seven others have married cousins. Indeed, of the sixty-eight unions that have occurred, all feeling more or less the effect of consanguinity, but one has been infertile, and that infertility was due to disease of the mother, who was an alien.

On the husband's side, moreover, it was necessary to ascend three generations to reach the first union of cousins. Among the two hundred individuals of this remarkably inbred family, all are very healthy except the children of one of the latest marriages, in some of whom a scrofulous taint has appeared.

Mr. Voisin states that he found in one locality five marriages between cousins-german, thirty-one between cousins of the next degree below, and ten between cousins of the degree next below that. The first class produced twenty-three children free from all constitutional disease, two only having died of casual disorders. The thirty-one marriages of second cousins produced over one hundred and twenty children, all free of constitutional taint, twenty-four dying of acute disorders. The ten marriages of third cousins gave twenty-nine healthy children, of whom three died of accidental diseases. Sterility occurred in only two families, the parents being related to each other in the third degree (canonical; according to civil law they were related to each other in the sixth degree of consanguinity). Mental disorders, idiocy, deaf-mutism, hemeralopia, were all unknown. The general health of this population was good. The same author states that of 1,077 of his hospital patients, careful examination failed to trace one instance of his idiotic, epileptic or insane patients to healthy consanguinity as the legitimate cause of the affection. As analogous may be cited, also, the St. Helier strain of cattle. This bull was bred successively to his daughter and granddaughter, and by the latter begat a son (Oxoli), which was also a great-grandson, and a daughter (Chromatella), which was also his great-granddaughter. Each of these animals had eighty-seven and one-half per cent. of the blood of the great-grand sire (seventy-five per cent. more than has the offspring of a non-consanguineous union.) Chromatella was bred to the son of her brother, Oxoli, and dropped two daughters, both healthy and good breeders. Oxoli also bred to three daughters of St. Helier (having fifty per cent. of the latter's blood), one of them being his own (Oxoli's) grandam. He also bred to several cows having seventy-five per cent. of the blood of St. Helier, of which he himself had eighty-seven and one-half per cent. The history of this strain shows a larger number of unions of the closest possible nature, a great majority of the descendants having more than fifty per cent. of the blood of their progenitor; yet for excellency of butter record, general health, and fertility, the strain is most remarkable.

I have quoted largely from the "Reference Hand-Book of the Medical Sciences," and could multiply evidence to show that healthy consanguinity would not be productive of a depraved or devitalized offspring; but where consanguineous unions were productive of either physically or mentally inferior progeny, it was directly due to the impetus given by uniting the two morbid strains, thus intensifying the predisposition to a diseased progeny. It would seem to me that, should a perfectly healthy mare produce to her perfectly healthy brother, the colt would be perfectly healthy.

With the little light that I now have, which may be extinguished by the cold facts of practice, the conclusion is forced upon me that the only way to produce a perfect or standard type of equine excellence is to breed in-and-in, selecting only perfect animals in disposition, gait and conformation. The more any legitimate type is crossed, the more uncertain must one be as to the character or nature of the production.

It possibly is fortunate that there is the opposite extreme in almost every animal, and that by a proper blending a happy medium may be attained. One would hardly expect to breed a mare that it was found necessary to encumber with a heavy toe-weight to such a horse as Mambrino King and hope to get a colt with grand knee-action; neither would you expect from a union of typical Morgans an animal that would have a low, long, slow stride, the trappy gait being their characteristic.

"Hereditary influence" is bound to be felt, whether it be for good or evil; but if every effort is made to discard from the breeding-ranks all but perfect animals as far as perfection is discernible, I firmly believe that in the near future a perfect horse will be the rule, and not the exception.

To the professional writer, this article, by one unused to writing for publication, will present many crudities. But I have written in good faith, and will consider it a friendly aid for any one to criticize it; for if, in the beginning, I have started wrong, let me be set right at once.—Wallace's Monthly.

Hereditary Influences.

A pebble in the streamlet ceant
Has turned the course of many a river;
A dewdrop on the infant plant
Has warped the giant oak forever.

The influence of the most ordinary events of daily life, the mold or bent that they give to various minds, who shall determine their individual value? This thought is never more clearly set forth than in the study of the science of heredity, and its multiple influences and bearings. Slowly, but surely, the rising generation are learning what heredity means. If you ask a larger part of the young people who have arrived at years of discretion, you will probably receive an ordinarily satisfactory reply upon the subject. The knowledge is largely superficial, however, at best. Superficial, because modern life is more or less superficial in all its phases, except to a few. The blame rests upon the education of the day, as well as on parents. There is little desire on the part of the average student to probe any one matter or study it to its depths. Not, indeed, that many would not, but rather that they lack proper training to accomplish the work upon trial. There are few young people starting in life who have any idea of the vital importance of having a thorough knowledge of the practical questions which will necessarily arise, whatever the condition in life in which each one moves. They will talk to you glibly of money and house-furnishings, but beyond that they let life come as it may—treat it, in fact, in such a haphazard fashion that the great wonder is, not that we are as we are, but rather that we, as a nation, were not long ago exterminated. We have paid for our lack of knowledge of the laws of heredity to some extent. Whole families of children have been carried off in what seemed a most singular manner. Primarily, it was due to lack of knowledge on the part of their parents, or a willful breaking of well-established laws of which they were cognizant. Secondly, to a large number of local causes, unnecessary to enumerate. We have been said to be living in a practical age. It may readily be granted so far as inventions are concerned. Indeed, the labor-saving contrivances of to-day will undoubtedly save the lives of many children in future generations. Yet a general practical knowledge of the laws of heredity influence must supplement all this, if we would have men and women to continue the human race, and not miserable apologies for the same. In the course of a necessary examination into the ancestral pedigrees of several ancient American families, the writer has had a chance to observe the effects of a general knowledge of the law of hereditary influence, in contra-distinction to those whose knowledge of the subject was superficial or entirely lacking. The average of these families (covering a period from 1645 to 1885) who had a knowledge of the subject was very small.

Many of them, it was found, gained by chance what they did not realize at the time of action. We will take, for an example, two brothers, who, about 1700 were living in Maine. Their surroundings at that time were not as elegant as their ancestors had known, yet they had the comforts and necessities of life. They had inherited refinement and talent; no alien strain of impure blood was known to them in their ancestry, consequently they had the advantage of a good foundation on which to build the superstructure of a long and prosperous line of descendants. The town was prominent then, but it is not necessary to name it, save, perhaps, to say there was no need for either to go away from home to find a suitable wife. Force of circumstances, however, kept the younger brother at home, while the elder, called to Boston and elsewhere, was thrown among the most refined and learned men and women of his day. In course of time the young man met a most amiable, engaging young lady in the classic realms of Cambridge. She was a daughter of one of the early presidents of Harvard. Her father was a clergyman, she inherited not only a love for literature from him, but from her father and mother as well a strong constitution, and a refined and dignified carriage. The young people were engaged and married in due time. Their children were remarkably bright and strong. One of the sons became an eminent lawyer, and was at one time a Speaker of the House of Representatives. Others were eminent in office nearer home. The grandchildren and descendants have been even more distinguished, inasmuch as this worthy couple's posterity, to the health and valuable hereditary traits already possessed, added as equally advantageous marriages as their father's. The principle has been carried down in each succeeding generation, until to-day the combined result is certainly a most felicitous one. It cannot be readily determined at this day whether the older of these two brothers had anything more than a general knowledge of heredity and its various aspects. It can merely be adduced as an instance of a person building "better than he knew."

The younger brother remained in his native town in Maine. His marriage was with a young girl who inherited a good stock of health and common sense. Her father was a man of ability, but lacked the native refinement of a thorough gentleman; a sort of man who was not able to use his abilities to advantage—whether or not from a lack of early education in the right direction is not known. The young couple had a large number of children, of whom the greater proportion were girls. They had the sterling qualities of their mother, and the talents of their father. That they were more strongly attracted to the laboring class of men is not a matter of wonder. One of them married a worthy blacksmith in a neighboring town. Her only brother, much younger than herself, was early inclined to the same trade; and was undoubtedly instructed in his brother-in-law's shop. The other sisters married mechanics in the same way. Through ignorance or carelessness they never fitted themselves mentally in marrying, however much they may have gained in other things. The children of the succeeding generation, especially those of the brother, followed the trade of blacksmith—good, honest, sensible workmen; anything but a discredit to the family or town in which they lived, but nothing more. A generation later we see a change. Two of the descendants, by chance or purposely, allied themselves to families whose mental traits were more prominent than their physical abilities. As a result, there are to-day at least three descendants who are eminent: two in the law in California, one in journalism and authorship in Massachusetts. These two examples afford a very fair illustration of what, with a little care, might be found in the records of any old American family: the influence of marriage of equals, who are possessed of valuable traits to be handed down, and the influence of the marriage of those who, though perhaps not equal in station, are unequally united in mental ability. More than all is the influence shown of the mother, and the fact that one generation may build up or tear down in some degree what their ancestors have bequeathed them in mental, moral and physical equipage. There are two few examples in print of the traits of American families. We learn by national examples how best treat national evils or defects. Numerous practical illustrations are required to form correct ideas on the value or worthlessness of a given subject.

An interesting phase of the study of hereditary influences in American families is the frequency in early days of consanguineous marriages. This was undoubtedly attributable to at least two causes—the desire to keep property in one family, as instanced in manifold cases prior to that in England, and the scarcity that cultivated men found of girls of their own social and mental standing. Other reasons there were, but these are the most prominent. It is doubtful if one-tenth part of those thus united had any idea of the general disastrous results that might result therefrom. This is seen most prominently in the fact that the enlightened world of to-day does not, as a rule, follow this custom of early times. That consanguineous marriages were not confined to any one family can be readily determined by consulting any family genealogy which covers a period from 1650 to 1700, or later. Without going into the question of the attendant evils where the affinity was as near as that of own cousins, it can be shown that they are seldom, if ever, judicious.

In a New Hampshire city prior to 1500, two consins were married. Their families were of high standing, and the young people were educated and refined. They had seven children. Only two of these lived to manhood and womanhood. The remainder faded away at an early age. The two who survived to reach years of discretion died before thirty—the young man only a month after leaving college, and completing the regular course. This is one of many like instances in the early annals of our country. It was due in nearly every case to a lack of knowledge, inasmuch as the matter could have been remedied if the full evils attendant thereon had been widely known. Progress is gradual, but sufficiently marked to show that we of the nineteenth century are learning by force of example, although there still remains much to be learned. Out of the medley we have of humanity to-day must come the citizens of our future republic. Who shall say that due attention to the influences of heredity in all its various phases will not bring forth a well-rounded and developed nation physically, spiritually, mentally and morally? Yet carelessness has brought us many evils which might have been remedied by a very little effort in the beginning. We feel like exclaiming (involuntarily),

"How long will it be at this rate before we arrive at a period when man and woman shall consider their first duty to know themselves thoroughly?" Examples of the disobedience of natural laws are not more numerous than those where the laws of nature are obeyed. Yet the mind is naturally drawn to the former first, inasmuch as their effect is more prominent. If they impress one with the desire to correct in future the evils as seen therein, they have not been in vain. On the opposite side, examples of transmission of talents and physical and mental stamina are forcibly seen in many prominent families that exist to-day. The study of such families as the Sewalls, who first settled in Newbury, Massachusetts; the Quincys, whose name is a synonym for distinction in their native state; the Adams family; the descendants of Rev. Jonathan Edwards, and a host of others. They are examples of what a good physique, and care and good forethought may do for posterity. The evil effects of a lack of knowledge on heredity and its influences are never more sadly shown than where families perpetuate the taint of insanity. The cases are almost as numerous in early days as consanguineous marriages. There seems always to have been a lingering hope that the taint had left, or might not appear at least in the generation of the individual who married. Sometimes judicious marriages proved that there was such a thing as exterminating the evil. Again, some who should have known better made a bad matter worse by adding the evil of a consanguineous marriage to the inherited evil, and dreadful results ensued. A case of this kind came to the knowledge of the writer which concerned what was once one of the most prominent families of New England. It is a forcible illustration and worthy of consideration. The taint of insanity followed the family from England, and though some branches eradicated it by judicious marriages (one of these branches gave a president to Harvard), others seemed destined to be troubled by it forever. Of these, one branch which settled in New Hampshire claims our attention. Two consins there, inheriting the same name, were married prior to 1800. One was joined to a lady not at all related to him; the other to an own cousin, who was not on the side from which insanity was inherited. The inherited mental disorder followed both branches. In the first case the family all died out in the second generation. They did not all live to develop insanity, but those who lived to maturity developed it, and were inmates of asylums long before death came to relieve them.

In the case where the young man married his cousin, in addition to marrying a near relative, and inheriting a tendency to insanity, he was himself very delicate. His children did not inherit from either side sufficient physique to carry them through infancy, with the exception of two—a son and a daughter. The former died unmarried, free from the malady. The daughter married a cousin, who was also an inheritor of the trait which had carried away so many of their name. This seems almost incredible, except for its being authenticated. The result was nothing more than they had reason to expect. Of their five children, none of whom married, fortunately, every one was violently insane at a comparatively early age. Of these, one committed suicide under its influence. The others died off gradually (all under its baneful influence), until there was but one left. She had arrived at sixty years of age, and failed to show it. When her last brother died she was left alone. All her kindred were gone. Then insanity first evinced itself. Some said she was insane with grief, others with too much care. Few knew of the two close marriages and the inheritance. She finally followed the rest, and a marble slab, in a distant country grave-yard, marks the resting place of this fated family. There is food for reflection in this as well as in the preceding illustrations. Even those who are only cursorily acquainted with the subject can hardly fail to see the significance of each one. Mental disease struggled with an inheritance of fair physique, so that long life won at last; but disease haunted its victims through a long-suffering experience.

Let us hope that the more practical Americans grow, as regards complex machinery, they will also faithfully study their own idiosyncrasies and inherited traits, that the science of heredity, as it affects Americans, past and present, may be yet more fully known. From the fact that it is almost inexhaustible in its phases, and proportionately intricate, it behooves the men and women of to-day to look into it sufficiently to avoid the quicksands, even if they do not carry the study to its natural end. The men and women of to-day determine largely what is to be the future of humanity. In them and through them only do we see any possibility of a perfect manhood and womanhood. When they have learned and taught the law of their being, we shall have no fear of future deterioration. This is not a theory; it can be accomplished; neither will it necessarily be in the days of the millennium.—Cecil Hampden Howard in Phrenological Journal.

General Lymphangitis.

I will report at length the case of a heavy truck horse, seven years old, weight 1400 pounds, belonging to Geo. Blake & Co., Stockton, always in good health up to two weeks ago when he commenced losing flesh; worked every day until this evening, October 4th, 1884. On examination I found the horse in great distress, gaunted up, little appetite, pulse small, hard, accelerated, has great difficulty to back out of the stall and move the hind legs, especially the left one; found a hard lump on both cranial regions and under the abdomen; on the left hind leg various cordous swellings on tibial region covering the external surface only. All these tumours are very painful on pressure; complete absence of any tumefied ganglion; visible membranes normal. The two following days more swellings on front legs and inside of hind legs, horse having more distress and a greater difficulty to move. Numerous buttons appear across cords on left hind leg, some are soft and open. Every day more lumps appear, some very close to one another; the two legs are literally covered with tumours, while the two members of the right side have only a few. Those abscesses that were opened at first are cicatrizing quick in about two weeks, and are most numerous in muscular regions, of a large size and located deep. I counted at the end of the first week more than 100 abscesses. Horse is moving easier as the abscesses are opened. Fluid evacuated is half coagulated lymph, of an opaque color. The cranial muscles are decaying away. Never the least tumefaction of lymphatic glands, nor any nasal discharge. Treatment consists of tonic stimulants and alteratives. Iodide of potash, iron and arsenic, with nux vomica, in succession for two weeks, and good substantial food. Horse has a good appetite, but cold rainy weather set in and the patient falls in a complete marasmus, and died Jan. 23, 1884, after an illness of four months. The two legs on the left side that were at first covered with abscesses and swollen, became very clean and sound in about five or six weeks, while the two right limbs affected later a similar change. Eight or ten days before death came on I noticed a piece of the skin, of the size of a man's hand, fall off, as by dry gangrene, inside the fetlock of left fore leg; and another piece beginning to dry up inside the knee of the same member. On post mortem examination I found all viscera sound and clean, only yellow serous filtration under the skin in those places where swellings existed before death. All organs pale, very little blood in the body.

Now this was certainly not the farcy. The horse was always kept on the same premises, no measures of prevention were taken, neither was disinfection employed, and never any case of glanders and farcy appeared on any of the other five horses.

In January, 1886, I found at the ranch of John Ellis, Lachrop, three mules affected with this mule disease, and one horse suffering from chronic nasal gleet. Two mules and the horse were found loose in a large corral, where 48 working mules came in every day. All these animals were feeding in the same manger, drinking in the same trough, and working together; one mule was taken out of a gang of 8 mules with harnesses on, and bleeding from the nose. Found blood and mucons discharge on the wagon and fences of the corral; in the three watering troughs I noticed discharged matter floating on the surface and some that went down to the bottom. These four animals were taken to another place 6 miles distant, and killed 3 or 4 weeks later. On opening one of them I found the lungs perfectly sound and the Schneiderian membrane all rotten. Never this farmer had, to my knowledge, another animal affected with this disease before and after this time. I will mention that if these animals had been glandered, it would be a surprising wonder that the loss on this ranch was so small, and the contagious virus so weak and powerless.

John Wagener, of Atlanta, who had lost about 12 mules in 1883—1884, called on me to examine his stock. I found one mule seriously affected, and a buggy horse which he used to drive daily to Stockton until he was refused admission in all the stables; this horse had the same affection as the mule, and both were condemned as suspicious of glanders. In the field I found another horse working in a team of eight horses, showing sores in both nostrils, some of which sores were cicatrized, the discharge was middling abundant, and often mixed with blood; three large hypertrophied intra maxillary glands. Horse was fat, slick, in a very good working condition; all other horses sound. This horse was reported to me for two years later to be about in the same condition, and working all the time without any danger of contagion to other animals. I never heard that man complain of having lost another horse.

Mr. Henning, of Salida, Stanislaus Co., had one mule taken suddenly sick while at work, and in 24 hours the nasal passages, cavity and larynx were so much narrowed as to cause the greatest difficulty in breathing. That mule died in 24 hours. A week later I was called again to his place for treating the family horse, affected with a hernia, and was astonished to find, separated in another stable, two young fat mules that had both nostrils covered with sores. Mr. Henning received these mules from a neighbor, who, having lost several mules from the same affection, had resolved to kill these two. Mr. Henning being a man of study, of means, and having a good deal of time to spare, wanted to experiment with these two mules. So he commenced to treat these animals in most any imaginable manner; they broke out on the body, but improved in the course of a few months so well that he put them to work, drove round the country with them and mixed them up with the other stock. One of them happened to be over-heated and died; the other one was on the ranch in August last, four months ago, when I went over for the sole purpose of examining the recovered mule. I found two animals having clean legs, all swellings and tumours of the body disappeared, only white scars visible on such places where large sores had existed; two inter-maxillary glands, still hypertrophied; a light, serous, watery discharge from both nostrils, various cicatrices of old sores visible in the nasal cavities. Mule is lively and in good health.

Ed. Hall of Turlock works from 60 to 70 head of stock, and lost several years ago about $2,500 worth of mules within six months. On examining his stock I found two horses and a mare, with a sucking colt by her side, having a free double discharge of good character, and two soft glands, loose; this mare showed the same symptoms at the time the mules were dying, but was not glandered, as proven, not only by the character of her symptoms, but by the soundness of the colt and the other stock. And still the mare and the two horses became affected at the same time and pasture as the dead mules.

Murphy of Salida, one year ago, lost six mules out of a band of 50-60 head, while in pasture, of the same complaint. Never any measures of precaution were taken before or after the disease appeared and disappeared, and no more sick animals were heard of. The history of glanders never will mention a single case where this contagious affection will leave premises so easily and so quickly after having taken such a strong, fatal foothold on the same.

William Dale of Modesto, and three of his neighbors, had each one mule dying in the corral and stable from this affection, and never suffered any further loss, although none of these men ever cleaned or disinfected their premises.

From 1885 to 1887 at least 700 mules died, or were killed, in Stanislaus County as victims of this disease; only a few horses and mares were affected, and some of them are yet suffering from that disease to-day. Only a few ranches were spared. Nearly all these animals were treated by injections, inhalations, steaming, smoking, insufflations, all kinds of patented and non-patented condition powders, iron tincture, arsenic, calomel, coppers, etc., and not one person in the whole county of Stanislaus died of glanders or even septicemia. And still in Illinois and in other places cases of glanders appeared in families where one or a few horses were found affected with the chronic glanders. Our farming population in Stanislaus would have greatly suffered from the glanderous epizootic, and called forth the assistance of the Sanitary Board for destroying the contagions virus. But as this was not the case we can admit that the disease was very benign, or not the glanders at all.

I will now report one more instance in support of the non-contagiousness of this affection. Three farmers near Modesto had turned their working stock in an alfalfa pasture on the west side of the San Joaquin River, where about 400 head of stock-horses, mules, broodmares and colts were kept together for four months. About June 1st they took their animals—130 head in all—home and fed them on grain and hay, to prepare the same for work in the harvest. Hardly three weeks later each one of these farmers had one mule complaining of this mule disease: that one of David Kerr was all gangrened in the head and killed after 3-4 weeks; it formed the subject of the post-mortem examination given above. The mule of James Kenealy broke out in one hind leg; I lost sight of him, the third one belonged to W. W. Stone and received my close attention for one month. This mule was three years old, very fat; broke out on legs and body, and inside of one week I counted over one hundred abscesses and buttons; both nasal cavities were gangrened, but never had any trouble in the larynx. The mule was lively, ate well, and had all the time a splendid coat, but gradually the disease progressed, and before the farmer concluded to kill her, I was allowed to experiment on her. I inoculated an old mare in three places, one on the costal region and one on each side of the neck by making a cut about two inches long and pouring the matter, extracted from a recently opened abscess, in the pocket of these cuts, and closed them with one stitch. Then I coated a small sponge over with the nasal discharge of the same mule by holding and turning the sponge around in the nostrils and introduced this same sponge in both nostrils of the old mare for a few minutes. At the same time the mare was tied up near the mule, eating out of the same manger and drinking from the same pail. Fourteen days later I was ordered to take my mare away, as Mr. Stone resolved to kill his mule. The three wounds, where I had introduced the matter taken from the mule, were giving a good deal of suppuration of a very healthy character, and no swelling, nor cord, nor tumor could be detected neither around the three inoculated wounds nor on any part of the body. The nasal cavities were clean, and no ganglion swollen. The mare was declared sound—taken out and destroyed.

No sick animal could be found on the premises of either one of these three farmers nor in the pasture. In all certainty these three mules were not glandered, unless it be the acute type, nor was there any contagious virus existing at the home-places nor in the pasture. What was the real cause of this disease here? They all had pure air, and good nourishment, and no work, and good, clear water existed at that time.

To prove the change of original lymphangitis into farcy and glanders, I will relate the following two cases:

About four or five years ago a fast roadster, Lightfoot, kept in a very good lively stable in Stockton, was found suddenly in the morning bleeding from the right nostril. I noticed the right intermaxillary gland very large and painful, sending a cord toward the right nostril; lip on same side very much swollen; inside of right nostril a sore 3 inches long by $\frac{1}{2}$ inch wide. This was a lymphangitis of a benign character. In a few weeks the horse was recovered, but several months later I saw him again and condemned him for a confirmed chronic glanders, having a hard, adherent gland, a bad nasal discharge, and two indurated ulcers, all on the left side, while the primitive lymphangitis was on the right side.

About six months ago I examined at the home of Mr. Hamilton, near Salida, a mare sick for several months. I noticed a splendid lustrous coat, the appetite very good, the cranial muscles of left hind leg all decayed, same leg swollen below; from 20 to 25 sores on the inside surface of the same leg, those opening in the lymphatic vessels discharged a yellow fluid half coagulated; some of them recently opened gave exit to limpid lymph, in a normal condition; a few of them evacuating a white, cheesy fluid. No swollen glands nor nasal discharge, nor farcy buttons at any other place. Diagnosis, lymphangitis of the inguinal and cranial ganglions, but of mixed character.

Inside of two weeks the mare showed a great improvement; the most of the sores healed, a few new ones appeared on the mammary glands, the swelling of the leg went down, mare eats better and moves easier. But suddenly a cold north wind set in and caused a chill through the whole system, and 24 hours later the hair was staring, coat dry, appetite bad, expression dull, animal weaker, the affected leg swollen considerably, having the appearance of farcy infiltration; the aspect of the sores was bad, fluid discharged is white, looks like matter. Mare condemned as affected with farcy and destroyed.

From all the above considerations, theoretical and practical, I am induced to draw the following conclusions. First, that this disease affects the lymphatic system, locally or generally. Second, that it is non-contagious at the beginning, although it might be infectious, and that where several animals, on the same premises, are affected, the disease is caused by similar mysterious influences of locality, weather and climate, on all the animals in a like manner, without the existence of any contagious principle. Third, that with the progress of the disease, the animal organism might undergo such modifications as to transform the primitive lymphangitis into a farcious lymphangitis and then develop glanders and farcy. Fourth, that the disease resists all kind of treatment and is fatal to all mules, while the majority of horses will recover partially from its effects. Fifth, that the presence of a horse affected with chronic glanders, in a band of thus diseased animals, cannot lead to the conclusion that the disease is of a glanderous nature in every case, no matter how suspicious the appearances may be.

Prognostic.—Very serious and fatal. Death occurs almost in every case, if the animal is not destroyed by the hands of its owner. Those mules, which are affected only on the body and legs, can live six months and a year if properly cared for, although the system is losing strength on account of the great quantity of lymph, which is detracted from its natural course and is a direct loss to the general nutrition. When the same disease breaks out in the nasal cavity and larynx it causes a great difficulty to the act of respiration and thereby greatly impedes the complete arterialisation of the blood, besides indirectly impairing the health of the animal, as the inspired air, when going over the gangrened sores, absorbs a diseased, decomposed material that is introduced through the pulmonary capillaries in the blood and constitutes a permanent danger for blood poisoning. In horses affected in the same manner, the disease remains stationary and level for a long time, if they are in a sufficiently good condition, and many will recover except as far as the lesions in the nasal cavity are concerned, which will constitute a permanent, light discharge, render the horse unsound and constantly suspicious. But with horses there is always a great danger for this disease to turn into glanders, whenever a cold chill or a disturbance in the digestion, or a weakness of the constitution through heavy labor, insufficient feeding or exposure to inclement weather, or the consecutive effects of any acute fever, cause a change in the general nutrition and in the functions of the absorbing vessels and the whole lymphatic system.

Mules might likewise become glandered from similar changes, but as I never have found a clear, distinct case of chronic glanders in mules, I will reserve my opinion in that regard. I merely will state that they might be affected by glanders of a mixed or bastard character, or of an acute type. I desire to hear from the experience of other veterinarians about this question.

Treatment.—It is my earnest and honest conviction that this disease is incurable in mules, and therefore I would propose, in every case to destroy any and all mules thus affected, for the sake of humanity as well as a precautionary measure against possible glanders and farcy.

If horses that are suffering from this disease are in good condition, they might be submitted to local and general treatment, receive proper care and nursing, pure air and substantial food. Above all they must be kept separated from the other stock. The healthy animals ought to be removed to another locality, on high and dry lands if possible. This measure will almost every time, check the further outbreaks of the affection.

CATTLE.

Feeding Cows in Finland.

To anyone who could be satisfied with an unvarying diet of fish and black bread, accompanied by the best cream and butter that can be found anywhere it would be easy to satisfy his wants in any part of the country. How the cream and butter come to be so good is a mystery to me, for assuredly the Finnish cows are the worst and most scantily fed of their kind. What other cow that respected herself would be satisfied with hay soup in which the water formed so unfair a proportion of the hay? The most meager-looking hay, mixed with the dry branches of alder, simmers in a huge iron pot, and one sees the poor beasts dipping their noses into the unsavory broth and fishing out its sodden contents with the evident relish of hunger. It was complained to me by a resident in the country that cows could not be induced to look upon sawdust as the staple of their food. How far he had seriously made the trial I do not know, but should he ever succeed, there will be a rich prospect for Finland in dairy farming.

Early Maturity.

Speaking of the subject of early maturity—more especially as regards range cattle—Mr. Alex Macdonald of the Mark Lane Express, in his letter to that paper, appearing under date of Nov. 19, says:

The quantity of Indian corn necessary to ripen bullocks for the butcher depends very largely upon the age of the stock to which it is fed. A well-bred calf can be fattened on from 15 to 20 bushels of Indian corn; a yearling will require from 30 to 40 bushels; a two-year-old from 50 to 60 bushels; and a three-year-old steer will consume from 90 to 100 bushels. In ordinary years Indian corn is cheap feeding—rather less than 1s. or 24 cents per bushels—but there is abundant evidence to prove the desirability of feeding off ranch steers at a considerable earlier age than has hitherto been the case.

I had some little interchange of opinion yesterday on this topic with Col. Harris of Linwood, Kan., perhaps the most successful stock-breeder and highest authority on stock matters generally west of the Mississippi. He is strongly in favor of early maturity, and not inappropriately likens the fattening of a two-year-old steer to the disentangling of a wagon that has sunk axle-deep in mud. There is a waste of power before the machine can be put in motion. With the aged steer there undoubtedly is an unnecessary waste of power, as there is also of time; and though the cost of his keep on the ranch is wonderfully little there is no doubt that so long at least as the price of prime beef remains as low as from 4 to 5 cents—or from 2d. to 2½d. per pound—it will pay the ranchman better to keep the animals in a progressive fattening state from infancy, and feed them off say at 20 to 30 months old, than to gorge them until they are three or more years old. Commenting upon Mr. McDonald's opinion the Breeders' Gazette says:

The question of just how much corn is required to fatten a beast of given age is one that depends upon a great many circumstances; and any figures bearing upon that point can at best be merely approximations under average conditions; but upon the general proposition advanced there can be no controversy. The question with the average rangeman, however, has usually been not so much one as to whether to "keep the animals in a progressive fattening state from infancy" or to "gorge them" until three or four years, as it has been a query as to how to keep hide and body of the range stock together until they are big enough to ship into the feeding grounds of the grain-growing States, or to go into tins. Better methods are coming into vogue, however, in many portions of the range country, and with plenty of good grass and water, reasonable natural shelter, and enough good hulls, ranchmen are already producing in some cases a grade of feeding cattle that can be taken into corn-growing districts and finished with profit at a reasonably early age.

Feeding for Milk.

The albuminoid ratio of full cow's milk is 1:3.3. If the food consumed by the cow were used only for the production of milk then 1:3.3 would be the proper nutritive ratio of her ration. But the cow must use a part of her food for energy and heat, to repair bodily waste and to maintain bodily temperature; hence she must have a greater proportion of the carbohydrates and fats than is indicated by the nutritive ratio just given, says a correspondent of the National Stockman. If all the nitrogenous matter is reckoned as albuminoids the ratio of milk should have an albuminoid ratio of 1:5; if only the two albuminoids are reckoned, then a ratio of 1:6 to 1:7 is sufficiently high. As milk contains a comparatively large proportion of phosphates as well as of albuminoids the ration for milk should also be rich in the phosphates. And as milk contains, or should contain, a considerable quantity of fat, the food or milk production should be somewhat rich in readily digestible fat.

Early cut meadow hay has an albuminoid ratio of 1:4.14, reckoning all nitrogenous matter. Hence it is a good milk food, containing a little more than the necessary proportion of the albuminoids. But this hay was cut very early—in May. Meadow hay cut about July 1 in this latitude has a ratio of from 1:8 to 1:10, the ratio varying somewhat with the season. The albuminoid ratio of average meadow hay, reckoning only the digestible matter, is usually placed at 1:8; but to have so high a ratio the grass must be cut a week earlier than most of us cut—say just before the grass is in the height of bloom. Such hay, it will be seen, is a good food for milk animals, though it would be better if it contained a slightly larger proportion of albuminoids.

Clover hay is a better food for milk production, as it has a higher albuminoid ratio. Reckoning only the digestible matter early clover has an albuminoid ratio of 1:4. But to have so high an albuminoid ratio the clover must be cut very early—earlier than farmers cut it except in rare cases. Such hay is richer in albuminoids than is required. It may well be mixed with average meadow hay, with corn stover or with straw. Likely the better plan is to cut the clover somewhat later, say just before or at the height of bloom, when the most forward blossoms begin to turn. Then the hay will have an albuminoid ratio of 1:5 to 1:6, reckoning only the digestible matter; and mixing it with average meadow hay, or even with timothy or corn fodder; equal parts of each, will make a well balanced milk ration. Clover is a splendid food for milk, for the further reason that it is rich in fats.

Wheat, oats or rye straw is a very poor food for milk production. In fact a cow fed largely on straw cannot make a good yield of milk. This is apparent when we consider the albuminoid ratios of these foods (only the digestible matters are considered): Wheat straw, 1:46; oats straw, 1:30; rye straw, 1:47. Comparing these with the proper albuminoid ratio of a ration for milk, and we see that the straws are far deficient in albuminoids as foods for milk animals. If they are fed profitably they must be fed with foods rich in the albuminoids, such as very early cut clover.

Bran is an excellent food for milk. It has as near the albuminoid ratio for the milk ration as any milk food to be had. If anything it is a little richer in the albuminoids than is required, hence may be mixed with foods lacking in protein. The two best feeds for milk animals are wheat bran and average red clover hay, though of course the animal should have a greater variety in its rations.

Brewers' grains, malt sprouts linseed and cottonseed meals, etc., are very rich in the albuminoids; and while they should never be fed alone, are just the thing to mix with such foods as straw to make a well-balanced ration. Digestion is much better when the straw or other stover is cut and moistened and mixed with the grain and meal before feeding.

Splendid rations for milk would be sixteen pounds meadow hay, eight pounds wheat bran, six pounds cornmeal, and two pounds linseed meal; or eighteen pounds corn fodder, eight pounds wheat bran, four pounds corn meal, and four pounds cottonseed meal; or ten pounds corn fodder, ten pounds oat straw, ten pounds oat and corn meal, four pounds malt sprout and two pounds linseed meal; or ten pounds clover hay, ten pounds wheat straw, four pounds wheat bran, four pounds linseed oil cake, four pounds corn meal and two pounds cottonseed cake; or fifteen pounds straw, five pounds meadow hay, four pounds corn meal, four pounds bran, four pounds cottonseed meal and three pounds malt sprouts.

In general it is bad practice to sell feed off the farm when none is bought to take its place; and in general it is bad practice to buy feed having none to sell. Either alone argues bad farming; but by combining the two the large majority of us would make a wise and valuable transaction. First, our animals would get a greater variety in the rations; and our animals generally have fed by far too monotonous, lacking in variety. Second, our animals would have better balanced rations. The foods we have likely have an excess of some elements; some other farmer has foods lacking in these elements, and overly rich in the elements our foods lack. An exchange would be profitable to both. The dairyman has more need of these exchanges, I think, than the feeder of fat animals. For example, while both would gain by selling straw and buying bran, the dairyman would gain the more.

The Jersey is not commonly numbered among the beef breeds; and a good many people may be much surprised at the contents of the following letter from Mr. J. Irving Pearce (proprietor of the Sherman House at Chicago, and well known as an excellent judge of meat), concerning the fat Jersey steer exhibited at the Live-Stock Show by the Michigan Agricultural College and subsequently sold to Mr. Pearce:

"I do not think I ever used finer meat. I bought of the college meat from all the animals (Short-horn, Hereford, Devon, Holstein, Galloway and Jersey) they had on exhibition and put them on our menu as premium beef. The Jersey was pronounced by all, without hesitation, the finest in quality and flavor, and the tenderest beef they ever ate. I had the Jersey meat for Thanksgiving, and I do not think any one tasted it without remarking that they never tasted such meat. I had the round roasted and put it in the exchange without telling any one what it was, and nearly every one that taste it called on me to know what kind of beef it was, and spoke of its flavor and tenderness and said they had never eaten such meat. There was no waste meat in the carcass—even the fat was better than the others. We used the fat in cooking and in our mince meat for pies, because of the fine quality. It was profitable to the consumer because there was more edible meat than in any other carcass I have used of its age. The steak from the rounds of the Jersey were better than most loin you get from average beef."

San Francisco, - Saturday, Dec. 22, 1888.

Merry Christmas.

The management of the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN had planned the issuing of a Christmas number, as is the pleasant custom of nearly all the journals devoted to the horse and his master. But a variety of causes have combined to prevent the fulfillment of this plan.

The chief of these is the illness of Mr. Simpson.

While, therefore, the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN puts on no holiday dress, our holiday greeting is a hearty one.

MERRY CHRISTMAS TO ALL.

Washington Park Stakes.

The attention of all horsemen is called to the announcement in our advertising columns in reference to the Washington Park Club Stakes. The celebrated Chicago course has always been a favorite one with the "Californian Contingent," as it is called in the East, and it is fair to assume that the Orange and Blue, the Green and Yellow and the Black, Red Sash and Maltese Cross will have many entries for the liberal purses offered by the Washington Park Club.

The Melbourne Cup Winner.

A cipher message sent to the BREEDER AND SPORTS-MAN on November 7th from Melbourne, failed to reach this office until last Friday night. From the time taken in delivery it would seem that the information contained therein, had been tossed around the world and residents of Batavia, Point de Galle, Calcutta, Bombay, Port Said and Malta, given a chance to hear news, prior to its delivery in America. The message gave the result of Melbourne Cup Race, it being won by Mentor, the property of D. S. Wallace Esq. On the arrival of the next Australian mail we will be able to give our readers a full and detailed account of the great race as our special correspondent has forwarded one of his bright and neway letters.

A Good Move.

The recent Turf Congress has decided that when either of the great trotting associations has ruled off a man for dishonest practices, he shall be considered ruled off, also, from the Running Tracks belonging to the Congress. This is a step in the right direction. The leopard seldom sheds his spots, and a scamp at one sort of horse racing will probably be a scamp at another. The interests of these three associations are identical, so far as regards the desirability of honesty.

Several men recently ruled off by the trotting associations have said: "That matters little, I will follow the gallopers, and my field will be larger." But the door being now shut in their faces, it is to be hoped that the lesson will be a salutary warning to others who may have begun on the same downward road.

A Great Sale.

A telegram from W. T. Woodward, of Lexington, Ky., informs us that in 1889 he will hold a grand sale, from Feb. 18 to March 2 inclusive, at which he will sell Bell Boy, three-year-old record 2:20, and Blue Grass Hambletonian 2:26½; and the entire stud of Maple Ridge Farm. Other consignments have already been made by Woodburn Farm, John H. Shults, Crit Davis, Fred. Seacord, R. P. Pepper, Hermitage Stud, S.
A. Browne and Co., Robt. Steel, Wm. Singerly, Z. E. Simmons, B. J. Treacy, L. Witherspoon, Cecil Bros., and many others.

Entries to this sale will close January 1st, 1889.

Kentucky is not only a good place to buy stock, but it is an admirable place in which to sell good stock, as was amply attested at the great Glenview sale, where the animals offered brought prices far beyond the most sanguine expectation.
California bred stock is popular in the Blue Grass Region when bred to the lines in which the great performers are found, and it would surely be a good plan for some of the breeders on this coast to send a number of their youngsters to Mr. Woodward.

Gossiper, 2:29 1-2.

On account of the discussions which have been caused by the question of whether Gossiper has or has not a record of 2:22½, we arranged to publish this week the recent article in Wallace's Monthly, defining what a record is, and also to give to our readers the official report of Gossiper's performance.

The article, "What is a Record?" will be found in another column, but there is no record of Gossiper's performance on the books of the Bay District Association, so it does not come under the Wallace definition of a record.
But there is no regulation in the rules of the National Trotting Association, or those of the American, to make it necessary for a horse to take a record unless he wins a heat or makes a dead heat. There is a provision that the time of the second horse be taken so that if the first horse be set back by decision of the judges, the second horse may be obliged to take a record along with the heat. But this does not apply in this case, "Time" always trots true and steady, and here Time won the heat, in 2:18.

Why then has Gossiper a penalty? There is no official record of this 2:22½, so Gossiper has but a record of 2:29½. One of the officers of the Bay District Association declares that he was present all afternoon, and Gossiper did not start; another officer says that he did.
Who shall decide when doctors disagree? Why in this case, the official record book. The official record book is silent.

Catalogues Lately Received.

Inwood Stock Farm, Lexington, Ky., sends us a neat pamphlet list of brood-mares and young stock. The brood-mares are either performers or descended on both sides from speed-producing blood, and Mr. P. S. Talbert, the owner, has bred them to the best stallions available.

We have received from Messrs. G. & P. Cecil, of Cecilian Park, Danville, Ky., a handsome catalogue of some eight score fashionably-bred trotters. Cecilian Park is still very young, being not yet six years old, but the stock shows careful selection and liberal outlay. The chief stallions are C.
F. Clay, 2:18, and Gambetta Wilkes, 2:26, and the brood-mares show the blood of Nutwood, Strathmore, Onward, Simmons, Princes and other stallions of good pedigree and individual merit.

The fifteenth annual catalogue of Fairlawn Stock Farm has just appeared. Aberdeen is at the head of the stud since the lamented death of Happy Medium, and his list of nineteen 2:30 trotters shows him worthy of the honor. Sons of Almont, Happy Medium and Nutwood are on the steps of the throne. It is impossible to speak in detail of so large a number of trotting animals. To say that this is Fairlawn's catalogue is sufficient to indicate that the hundred brood mares are of good blood and individual merit, and that the purchasers of the young stock advertised herein, by General Withers, will be as well pleased as have been his many customers in the past.

Mr. Jerry Browell.

The announcement of the death of Jerry Browell, as he was familiarly and almost universally called, came with startling unexpectedness. On December 7th he was about the city, full of life and plans for the immediate future; on the morning of the 8th he was found dead in his chamber, the indications being that death from apoplexy had taken place many hours before. Mr.
Browell was born in San Francisco on July 24th, 1854, grew up in the city, was educated in its public schools and business colleges, and was in the best and highest sense a representative son of the soil. As soon as he completed his business training he went into the employ of Edmund Scott, remaining three years, then into a position as bookkeeper for Mr. A. B. McCreary, which responsible position he held for fifteen years. In a business way he had few equals and no superiors. Quick, accurate and unforgetting, his knowledge of the vast realty interests of his employer made him indispensable, and the knowledge of real estate values gained, made him an authority whose opinion was often sought by men much older. No young business man of the city was more faithful, nor had any brighter prospects.

The chief interest of our readers however, will centre in Jerry's love of and adherence to sportsmanship, of which art he was in every worthy sonso an exponent.

Beginning to shoot some fourteen or fifteen years ago in company with Mr. Dick Brooks, the two lads made the marsh about Alameda Island resonant with their breach loaders. In later years Jerry was a leading spirit in the duck shooting at the Bridges, usually enjoying his sport in company with Mc. A. H. Higgins, and being a member of the original Bridges Club in the "Garfield House." The old Cosmopolitan Shooting Club, the best in all respects that has ever existed in the state, owed much of its vitality and popularity to the dear old fellow whose days with gun and dog have merged into that long, dreamless sleep from which the only awakening will be when the last sportsman in all time shall leave the pleasures here for the only bourne where are brighter joys than those of the field. In later years Jerry had about given up marsh shooting, and devoted his days afield to quail, usually in company with Uncle Robert Liddle, the two gentlemen doing most of their hunting on the Throckmorton ranch in Marin. There was no keener hand than Jerry, no better posted sportman, no brighter, more interesting and loveable man, and the void left by his untimely taking off cannot be filled. We have known few men in whom there met so many of the attributes which go to make the upright man, good citizen and beloved friend, as were centered in
Mr. Jerry Browell.

He was buried on December 10th, from St. Peter's Church, a large company of friends attending him to the final rest, and coming away in the shadow of a grief greater than anything but the death of a good man can cause.

Senator David McClure.

In this city on December 8th, Senator David McClure died, the immediate cause being an apoplectic effusion.
His health for some weeks had not been good, but friends found no reason to suspect serious derangement. Born in Martinville, Clark county, Ill., on July 10, 1842, of sturdy farmer ancestry, Mr. McClure had a splendid physique and a constitution which under vicissitudes severer than fall to the lot of most men, had never weakened in so far as could be detected.

Mr. McClure came to California in 1856, his parents settling in Napa, where the boy passed his school days and remained until 1861, when he went to Washington Territory, mining there and in Idaho for several years.
Afterwards for a year he was a pony express rider in the mines, and he also served in other business capacities in that rough and wild country, being promoted from time to time until he was made purchasing agent for a great Mining Company. In 1865 he returned to San Francisco, and was for a time a superintendent in railroad employ. During all the years his mind had been fixed upon the law as his ultimate choice, and in 1867 he began systematic reading of the law, following up an ordinary tutelage in a law office by attendance at the law school of the University of Chicago, and being admitted to practice in 1871. From 1872 until 1875 he practiced in Napa County, and then located in San Francisco, where he remained until his death, in the enjoyment of a large and remunerative practice.

Although a deeply read and very able lawyer, and a forcible and successful advocate, Senator McClure's predisposition was toward politics, in which field he attained distinguished preferment, and gained recognition as a masterly executive, representing San Francisco constituencies several times in the Legislative Houses, where his course was that of a man of ideas and of the highest honor. His early training had developed extreme self-confidence and fearless determination, qualities which contributed much to give him the leading position which he held. All through his busy life he preserved his fondness for agricultural pursuits, and especially for horse breeding and improvement, so that when, four years since, the Pacific Coast Blood Horse Association was casting about for a President, the choice naturally fell upon Senator McClure, and the selection proved most wise. He gave to the Association the best thought and most vital energy of himself. Always alert to secure new attractions, and awake to all interests of the body, his administration did very much to build up interest in the thoroughbred horse, and to popularize racing in California. Of the personal qualities of Mr. McClure, too much cannot well be said in praise. Generous to a fault, true to his friends invariably, wise in counsel beyond compare, public spirited and utterly self-forgetting, he was a man of mark, and his death a loss, the measure of which will only appear in the years to come.

The National Trotting Association.

The official report of the recent meeting of the National Trotting Association appears in this issue. We also give a more full report of the decision in regard to the records made against time, popularly known—or one should say, unpopularly known—as “Tin Cup Records.” When they are finally abolished what a number of gallant-seeming steeds will be shorn of their glory!

Fair Dates for Next Year.

The question of adjustment of dates for the fairs of 1889 is one that cannot be too early decided. Los Angeles, Santa Rosa, Petaluma, Oakland, San Jose, Sacramento and Stockton, is the list as at present arranged, occupying the consecutive weeks from August 5th to September 20th. Many improvements have been planned at San Jose, and the Directors intend to give an extra meeting in the early spring.

The “Tin-Cup” Records. at The N. T. H. B.

[From the “N. Y. Spirit of the Times.”]

In the course of the proceedings Mr. S. A. Browne offered a resolution to the effect that hereafter no horse shall be entitled to a record for the purpose of registration with standard rank unless he has won at least one heat in a contested race. Mr. W. H. Wilson seconded the motion, and made the following speech in support of the resolution.

“By industrious work and patient waiting we have formed a set of rules that have, so far, suited the welfare of the general breeding community at large. Of course we have made some changes, as our progress demanded, which we have done with the view of meeting the wants of the majority of the breeders, and the public expects us to care for the interest and advancement of the scientific breeding of the American trotter. Therefore our mission here is to try to further accomplish the good results which have so encouraged us in the past, and, at the same time, to note and keep clean and healthy the laws that shall do the breeding public the most good, and protect by our honest and impartial actions the great interests entrusted to our care. We therefore should not allow ourselves to be governed by the wishes of our friends, nor in any case make laws that can be construed to have been formed for anyone especially.

“In my opinion the question now before this body is the most important that has ever been brought up since our organization. To put this question fairly, without any varnish or painting over in order to hide its objects, we are asked to allow ‘tin cup’ performances to stand equal with records made in a hard-earned contests on the trotting turf. Briefly then, allow me to say that it seems to me we are asked to venture on dangerous ground, and if we allow that rule to continue, instead of tightening up our rules in order that the high-bred trotter will be more valuable by virtue of our legislation, we would certainly be opening up an avenue which will not only annoy the management of our purely pleasant breeders’ meeting, but bring discontent to the majority of breeders in the country.

“I am fearful it would bring forth bad results and lessen the strength of our already well grounded rules. That instead of these public trials (or so called ‘tin cup’ records) being absolutely needed by the majority of the trotting-horse breeders of America it is, in fact, only the wishes of a few whose personal interests are only of a pecuniary nature, and whose wealth and influence, when actually brought to bear in all its strength, oratorically and through the medium of the press, will prove a dangerous power to be resisted by us.

“The great majority of breeders in this country are men whose expenditures are measured by moderate means, and yet they are trying to breed the long-staying trotter, and not a single-heat performer; and they will certainly expect us to legislate laws that will care for the general breeder, and in no way allow ‘tin cup’ performances, or so-called ‘breeders’ records,’ or time records to help or to affect the rank of animals in the Stud book; nor to be counted as a record to swell the list of any sire or dam; nor in any way figure as a record to be counted when the merits of the different trotting families are compared.

“If this is wrong, as most breeders admit, we should make no compromise, but stand by our principles, and at this time abolish forever all recognition by this association of any but the winner of a heat in a contested race to be credited with a technical record.”

After two hours debate, on motion of Hon. I. V. Baker, Jr., the subject was referred to the Executive Committee.

A communication was received from the New York State Breeder's Association requesting the co-operation of the National Breeders Association in procuring a drive way in Central Park, this city, for trotters. This communication was also referred to the Executive Committee for action.

The terms of office on the Executive Committee of Messrs. Leland Stanford, Charles Backman, B. F. Tracy, J. W. Gray, and L. D. Packer, having expired, they were unanimously reelected to serve until December, 1891.

STOCKTON, Dec. 14, 1888.

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN:—In your number of Dec. 8th, in your answer to your correspondent from Los Angeles about Mt. Vernon, I see you are somewhat in error, so I beg leave to correct. Mt. Vernon was foaled in 1881, it was in 1887 that he trotted eight races winning two, getting second money in three, and fourth money in two, this year 1888, he has started in but three races against Woodnut at Sacramento getting third money, and at Napa against the pacer San Diego, winning second money, and at Bay District in 2:20 class against Lilly Stanley.

Yours Respectfully,

J. A. McCLOUD.

What is a Record?

[From Wallace's Monthly.]

A record is a fact written down officially for preservation and reference. When, in a race, the rules require the time made to be written down, the writing of that time is the “record” of the time made. The time is officially ascertained and officially recorded. When one horse trots against another, the time made by the horse first to the wire is recorded against him. When a horse trots against time, say to beat 2:28, and his time is recorded as 2:28½, that time is officially ascertained and must be officially recorded. The essence of the contest in this case is the time made, and hence it must be measured with greater care than where it is horse against horse. Now, when the horse has been officially timed and that time officially recorded as 2:28½, shall we reject that fact because he did not trot a quarter of a second faster? How can we avoid accepting it as a fact duly ascertained and officially recorded? Where is the rule which provides that if a horse against time does not win, the time made shall not be a record? It makes no difference what the “usage” may have been in the long past, the rules as they now stand require the time so made to be recorded. They make it an official “record.” We have always accepted it as a “record,” and we will continue to so accept it till the rules provide that time so made shall not be recorded. In this office we have nothing to do with the future racing career of the horse. All we want to know is that he trotted regularly and to rule in 2:28½, and with this performance officially recorded we are compelled to admit him and his family to all the benefits of the 2:30 class.

The N. Y. Tribune in its sporting notes, says that William Astor, who is in England, has made up his mind to buy the best horse in England; that the horse of which he had such opinion is Caerlaverock, an animal of superb breeding.

ROD.

Among the Redwoods.

CHAPTER VI.

MYRTLE HEIGHTS.

The house which the two friends now approached stood well back from the road in a narrow grove of redwoods and firs. It was low and broad, and round three sides ran a wide verandah thickly ornamented with roses and woodbine. Two capacious chimneys thrust their smooth bricks through the roof, and invited all seekers after warmth and comfort to step into the wide hall, and a small wreath of smoke at the back told of another that might give a still more cordial welcome.

To judge the inside of a house from the outside is no more fair than to measure the quality of a man's mind by the clothes he wears, since money, natural taste and leisure enter into the make-up of both. But if we come upon a dwelling shabby, mean and poor it is generally safe to conclude that the owner is either a spendthrift, a miser, or one on whom the hand of misfortune presses heavily; to look for little within and pass on. And the man and his clothes? Ah me! A comparison must end somewhere, and I think upon Oliver Goldsmith, whose shabby coat never robbed his breast of the milk of human kindness, and upon Charles the Second of England, whose velvet and laces brought no virtue into the great gallery of Whitehall. But, lest you, sapient reader, should overmatch me with an adverse pair, I forswear controversy and proceed to my house.

Here were certainly no signs of what the descendants of the pilgrims would call shiftlessness; from the low fence in front to Bess' shed in the rear was as trim as a Quaker bonnet.

The color of the house, a deep, reddish brown, had a sleek healthy look about it that bespoke frequent renewal and first quality of paint; and the yard, albeit not laid out after the prim fashion indicative of a gardenor's hand, bore every trace of good care, the beds of roses and geraniums were thrifty, and the little square of grass in front as smooth and soft as moss. The paths, too, that led from the front gate on either side of it, were clean and even. Originally the grove of trees must have been thicker, for everywhere about the yard were low stumps covered with a soft growth of myrtle, and two of them formed odd but characteristic gate posts.

Over the spot, fitly named Myrtle Heights, rested a deep peacefulness, and this morning the sun looked in warmly as though it loved the dwellers there.

Too warmly, in fact, if the heated face of Mrs. Morrison, who was baking in the low kitchen, might be taken as an index. But the baking always proceeded just the same whether the thermometer on the shady side of the house registered sixty or ninety-five. Every recurring Saturday found the four loaves of crisp warm bread ranged one beside the other on the white kitchen table. Do you know the taste of bread like that, or do you get your loaves from a bakery, and then forget the delicious sweetness of fresh crust? If so you are not as well off in the world as little Tommy, Mrs. Morrison's grandson, who, at this present moment, sits on the kitchen steps munching a fresh slice, and caressing the head of El's tawny St. Bernard, Nestor.

Tommy is the usual blue-eyed wonder, rejoicing in a pair of breeches reaching to the knee, a checked gingham shirt, one suspender, no shoes and stockings, and a torn straw hat, but he could marshal more genuine spirits in an instant than any prince or potentate in a twelvemonth.

Within, his grandmother, sore of her bread, is deep in the mysteries of chocolate cake, and a discussion of affairs appertaining to the small, rough house that may be seen from the kitchen window.

This is under the management of a plump, short daughter-in-law, who has just run in to have the usual chat, and to ask advice which, generally, she has not the least intention of following.

Something mightier than household matters is on her mind this morning, for she slights the excellent recipe her mother-in-law has given for the proper management of roast veal, and slyly lends the conversation round to Rob and his chief shortcoming—an intermittent passion for Lorenzo whisky. This is a sore subject for his mother, and after expressing her opinion rather guardedly she ends suddenly by calling him a nonsensical jackass, amending if, however, in another breath by declaring he was too easygoing for his own good. As I find this expression frequently applied to persons lacking all strength of character, I dare not openly defend Rob, but must beg for a suspension of judgment until all the facts are in.

But young Mrs. Morrison is evidently not satisfied yet, and one by one she picks out the faults of her brothers-in-law until the elder lady stares in surprise, and finally makes the mistake of holding up her first-born as a pattern of virtue "just like his father." But alas for the blind fondness of mothers! In this direction lay the younger woman's grievance, and she proceeded to tell how the night previous her lord had come home so "befuddled" as to get into bed with head at the foot, and his feet on the pillow.

"And to-day," she added, beginning to cry, "he had a chance to go in to the new mill for more wages, and his head's so bad he can't get up."

"Well, well, child," answered the mother-in-law, with another ache in her heart that had borne so many during the last twenty years. "There's no use o' talkin', the world's like that. It never rained porridge but the dish is upside down. Go home and be good to him, and good to them all. If my Tom's drinkin' there's trouble at the bottom o' it, of that you may be sure. None o' my boys ever go to the saloon unless somethin' drives them. If it wasn't for his silly notion after Miss Elvoren Rob would know better. A man in trouble and a horse in a fright ain't got but one notion—to smash himself and everything else all to pieces. And Mary, you can be no man's wife without learnin' patience."

Mary, instead of becoming indignant, looked all at once very humble, and getting up asked if she should take Tommy home with her or leave him. And upon his grandmother's saying she would look out for him to-day, the young woman went away very quietly, thinking of her hard words to Tom yesterday, and how this morning she had refused him a cup of coffee.

I have always noticed that immediately people look in upon their own shortcomings, they cease multiplying those of their neighbors, and am persuaded that if every member of the human family could be secretly provided with some kind of spiritual reflection they would have scant leisure for anything but attending to its reflections. This was the way with Mary, who no sooner began to think over her own faults, than she was ready to forgive Tom's slip and wrap her love about him. She had a great dread of drink, poor thing, and small wonder if it be considered how hard it presses on the dependent creatures like her whose only sunshine is their husband's smile. And she remembered how it had always been said of the elder Morrison that he always had a ten for the saloon, though he found hard work to get a five for the grocery. It was well she was too sensible to fly in a passion and repeat this to her mother-in-law who bore such regard for the memory of her husband that she would bear no word against him. What were men like Tanner and Filbert with their long tongues and red faces that she should believe any tale of their hatching? Her husband in life was an image of goodness, and no one should stand up and say he wasn't now that he was dead and out of hearing. And if once in a while he had come home somewhat the worse for drink, it was the bother of work drove him to it and other men's hard ways. No indeed! Not a person should say her boys got a love of liquor from their father!

With which determined thought she finished, smoothing the top of her chocolate cake and wiped the tears from her cheeks on the corner of a spotless, white apron.

Many long days it had been since she could spare time for a good cry. Nor did she regret it—having a strong sense of the inevitable and a philosophical habit of thought rejected tears as useless and weakening. If she could once have gotten up a proper sympathy for "poor me" the stream might have flowed more freely, but as she was usually thinking of someone else, and working to the full limit of her strength, the "me" went out of sight with the mending of Tommy's shirt, or the baking of a pudding for El whom she looked upon as an idea possession.

Among her sad thoughts of Tom and Mary, of Rob and the rest of the boys, came always the picture of this wonderful girl whose baby prattle had won her heart, just as her voice came now, singing one of Mr. Seldon's favorite songs:

"Oh, wait thou in the cold blast,
On yonder lean, on yonder lean,
My plaidie to the angry air!
I'd shelter thee, I'd shelter thee;
Or did misfortune's bitter storm
Around thee blow, around thee blow,
Thy shield should be my bosom,
To share it all, to share it all!"

The last words were scarcely gone into the circle of impassible echoes, when the door between the kitchen and dining-room opened quickly and Erl came in. She was altogether radiant in a bright woollen dress, and looked as full of mischief as a half grown boy on a holiday.

"Oh, Auntie Morrison," she said, putting up her long forefinger directly in front of the good woman's face. "I know what you've been doing—crying. Now, now! Do you remember when Nestor's brother died, and I was broken-hearted over it, what you said to me? 'Don't go crying around too much, wet makes a bog.' That's what I say to you now, too much wet makes a bog."

"'Twould take an ocean to make a bog out o' a moufain, Pet, so you may have done with your teasing." Pet was the name on which Mrs. Morrison had compromised. It seemed out of place in some way to call her charge Erl, and Miss Seldon would never have satisfied the loving heart of the girl, so the old baby name of Pet was kept and used in perfect tenderness.

"A mountain?"

"Yes, a mountain." Mrs. Morrison was laughing quietly to herself at Erl's look of astonishment. "Leastwise, that's what I seem to myself when I look back on the storms I've stood through."

Something in this speech brought back to Erl her mother's story, and a shadow fell across her face. "Are all women unhappy at some time in their lives, Auntie Morrison?" she questioned gravely.

"A good many git in the hshit o' hein' always unhappy, and they're tiresome things enough, too, with their dear me's and oh my's; and others fall, or are pushed into hardship o' every kind, and suffer more than they tell. The lecturer we had last Sunday over at the hall said we needed trouble for the good o' the soul, but I believe happiness would do about as well. I wish you and your father 'd go over some time, it's more 'n worth the walk."

Mrs. Morrison was a little deep here. The Sunday lectures which formed such a green spot in her life were delivered by men chosen by the Temperance Union to which she belonged, and she fancied if Erl could be persuaded into going, Rob would follow and get some good from it. Then, too, she believed it would benefit Erl "to get out in the world." How small a part of that great Vanity Fair the little Temperance Union of Lorenzo represented would have been a difficult point to demonstrate conclusively to this stirring member of 15.

"Oh, we never could get papa to go again. He went once, you remember, and was hurt to the soul by hearing Mr. Tanner sing 'Rock of Ages' through his nose."

Erl laughed gleefully at this recollection, and Mrs. Morrison prudently hid her head in the closet to which she had gone for some eggs, lest she should be suspected of joining.

"You see, Auntie Morrison," Erl continued, taking the bowl of eggs from her and beginning to break them in separate dishes, ready for whipping—it was an invariable rule of the kitchen that yolk and white should never be beaten together—"You see, papa has grown into the habit of liking certain ways of doing things, and above all he loves to be quiet on Sunday."

"Yes, and he sits down and reads and reads in that old-fashioned book o' his that takes all the get-up out o' him, until anybody 'd think his head must split."

Mr. Seldon had a strong fondness for the literary and pleasing sentences of Jeremy Taylor, and indulged his fancy even to the extent of reading aloud to Erl, which annoyed the brisk housekeeper, who, perhaps, could not be expected to have much sympathy with the celebrated English casuist.

"Papa is fond of Taylor," said Erl, with the decided inflection that made Mrs. Morrison speak of her as having a "high hand," and so am I. His life was such a trying one, and he bore it all so patiently, sowing seeds of comfort right and left, and writing his very soul out for the good of those who might come after. I am afraid your lecturer was right about trouble, at least it seems to make hearts grow."

"Lord, bless us, child! what do you know about it! Not little innocent Tommy out there has less an idea o' any trouble than you!"

After all, you see, Mrs. Morrison was not broad in her ideas; and Tommy, at that very moment, suffering cruel tortures because he dared not use a cleverly constructed instrument of death on some birds which were making a great noise in the air by the shed, would have differed with her decidedly, because his bosom friend, Jack Tanner, was allowed to bring down all the birds he wanted. The juvenile heart knows its pangs as well as the more matured one. The masculine heart, too, differs from the feminine one; which being used to boundaries settles down within them, and only once in a while sends a throb beyond, so that in reference to Erl Mrs. Morrison was nearer right. But the girl was conscious of something within herself that the practical woman could never grasp—an understanding of things which in their definite proportions were, as yet, mysterious and vague,

This was why she made no reply to Mrs. Morrison's sudden exclamation, but flushed, and having finished beating the eggs, pushed them aside, and went to the window. Standing there she caught sight of her father digging almost tenderly about the roots of a rose bush, and Taylor's description of the lark beaten down by an east wind came into her mind. By a process that could never have been made intelligible to her kind and bustling friend, she cleared her own sky, and turning again, said sweetly:

"We'll not tease papa about the lectures, Auntie Morrison; he got a new book last week, Miss Peabody's little memoir of Dr. Channing. I know it will delight us both. And then he is so contented with my singing, and thinks our little organ so full of music that I couldn't think of taking it all away from him, could I you?"

"Not all, maybe," said Mrs. Morrison, firm in her own conviction, "but getting among people would do you both good. They're only useless things that live away from daylight."

"Whatever have you been at all the mornin'?" "Nonsense, as usual," then turning quickly and catching the rough, strong face in her hands.

"No, I haven't been about much nonsense this morning. I've cleaned my room, and put a great bunch of green in it, and dusted here and there, and read a little and practiced some; but the thing I want most to do I can not, because there's no one to show me how."

"And what great thing is it that no one can show you?" asked Mrs. Morrison, taking a deliciously brown and solid custard from the oven.

"It's nonsense, nonsense. I want to tie my own leaders. Papa and Rob buy theirs already tied, and those I get seem to be always breaking at the knots with me. I expect I'm not careful enough in using them."

There was a point beyond Mrs. Morrison who could appreciate a trout, but not the tackle with which it was lured; so she only answered that it was too bad, but that there was no real need of fish anyway, to-day, for the butcher had brought a roast of beef big enough for seven.

"Just out o' pure contrariness, I know," she went on, looking at the clock to see if it was time to begin preparations for their twelve o'clock dinner, "because I told him we'd have chicken to-morrow. If I'd said there wasn't a morsel in the house, he'd have shaved the roast down to nothin'. It appears to me that when a man gits to be a butcher he leaves off havin' sense."

Erl had heard the greater part of this speech so often, that she had nothing new or consoling to say by way of reply, and so opened the kitchen door bent on a romp with Nestor and Tommy. But that juvenile was just now, otherwise engaged. He had taken up a position at the side of the house, and was staring fixedly down the road, while Nestor assuming an expectant attitude was uttering low growls that boded no good to some one. Erl caught him firmly by the collar just as Tommy faced about and running back cried:

"Say Danda" (his abbreviation of grandma) "say Danda there's two tramps a couin' this way." PETRONELLA.

THE RIFLE

The McAlpin Matter.

The charges of fraud, against Captain McAlpin, made at the annual target practice of Company D, Third Infantry, have been investigated by a Military Court of Inquiry, Colonel Dickinson, Major Cutler and Captain Harber sitting as the Court, and the Captain has been perfectly exonerated as the subjoined findings of the Court will show:

HEADQUARTERS SECOND BRIGADE,) NATIONAL GUARD OF CALIFORNIA,) SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., December 14, 1888.)

General Orders, No. 11.

1. The Court of Inquiry, of which Colonel J. H. Dickinson, First Infantry, National Guard of California, is president, instituted by Special Orders No. 22, current series, from these headquarters, at the written request of Captain A. C. McAlpin, Company D, Third Infantry, National Guard of California, to investigate his conduct in regard to his score at the annual target practice of his regiment on the 9th of September, 1888, has reported the proceedings to these headquarters, with findings and opinion as follows:

The Court of Inquiry appointed by Special Orders No. 22, current series, from headquarters Second Brigade, National Guard of California, to investigate the conduct of Captain A. C. McAlpin, Company D, Third Infantry, National Guard of California, in regard to his score at the annual target practice of said regiment on the 9th day of September, 1888, begs leave to report the result and conclusions of its investigation, made in pursuance of said order, and finds:

That at the annual target practice of said regiment on said date, Captain McAlpin, with his company, attended, that Captain MacAlpine directed the first sergeant of the company, Murphy, to detail a competent man to go to the butts and see that the marking of the shots fired was correctly done; that Sergeant Murphy, in conformity with said order detailed Private Peter O'Rourke of the company for that duty; that Captain MacAlpin was the first to shoot, and during the time that he and perhaps other members of his company fired Private O'Rourke was at the butts in conformity with the before-mentioned detail; that Private O'Rourke indicated with the discs the result of the respective shots fired by Captain MacAlpin, and, as a result, Captain MacAlpin was credited with seven bullseyes, aggregating 35, and three fives, aggregating 12, making a total of 47; that after five other officers and members of the company had fired their ten shots each, and at the same target, the correctness of the score of Captain MacAlpine was questioned, and Lieutenant J. J. O'Brien, rifle inspector, of said regiment, accompanied by Captain MacAlpin and other officers of the regiment, examined the scores credited to Captain MacAlpin and the other five who had fired, and found ten bullseyes in all credited to them upon the score sheet, Exhibit "A"; they then repaired to the target, and upon examination found that but three bullseyes had been made, whereupon Captain MacAlpin's score was declared to be incorrect, and he fired another score of ten shots, making an aggregate of 34.

The Court further finds that Captain MacAlpin had no knowledge prior to the examination of the target that Private O'Rourke had incorrectly indicated with the disc the value of the shots fired by him, and that such false marking by Private O'Rourke was entirely without his knowledge or consent; that Captain MacAlpin, upon finding that his score had been falsely reported, called for this Court of Inquiry, and has used all diligence in arriving at the truth of the matter and placing the blame where it belongs.

From the foregoing facts the Court is of the opinion—

First—That Captain McAlpin is in no way to blame for the errors discovered in his score, Second—That Private Peter O'Rourke, Company D, Third Infantry Regiment, National Guard of California, knowingly and willfully indicated and marked falsely the shots fired at said annual target practice by Captain McAlpin; and the Court is of the opinion that said O'Rourke should be brought to trial before a court-martial for his conduct on the occasion referred to.

The testimony and proceedings of the court are herewith transmitted.

Very respectfully your obedient servants,
J. H. DICKINSON,
Colonel First Infantry, N. G. C., President.
A. D. CUTLER,
Major and Inspector Second Brigade, N. G. C.
ADOLPH HUBER,
Captain Co. C, Second Artillery Regiment, N. G. C.
J. N. E. WILSON,
Major and J. A. Second Brigade, N. G. C., Recorder.

The proceedings, findings and opinions, so far as they relate to Captain McAlpin, are approved.

Such further steps as are necessary and proper to ascertain who is guilty in the matter will be taken.

By command of Brigadier-General John T. Cutting,
JOHN A. KOSTER,
Major and Assistant-Adjutant General.

Riverside Sportsman's Club.

The regular weekly shoot of the Sportsman's Club, on Friday afternoon last, was well attended, and was decidedly interesting. In the medal contest S. R. Smith made the successful score which carried away the medal. There were ten contestants, and the score, at 20 Blue Rocks each, was as follows: S. R. Smith 18, J. N. Cundiff 15, C. F. Packard 14, J. Rule 13, J. E. Beamer 11, E. J. Davis 11, J. W. McLeod 10, T. Cundiff 10, C. Brackbury 9, W. H. Backus 8.

After the medal contest a sweepstakes shoot was had and was also won by Mr. Smith, breaking 5 Blue Rocks straight. The score was Smith 5, Packard 4, Brackbury 4, Rule 3, Beamer 3, Cundiff 3, Davis 3, McLeod 2.

Mr. E. D. Roberts, a prominent sportsman and member of the Grass Valley Club, had the good luck to kill a deer in Rough and Ready Township, near Grass Valley, on Dec. 14th.

THE KENNEL.

Dog owners are requested to send for publication the earliest possible notices of whelps, sates, names claimed, presentations and deaths in their kennels, in all instances writing plainly names of sire and dam and of grandparents, colors, dates and breed.

Occidental Coursing Club.

The following self-explanatory circular has been sent to members of the club:

SAN FRANCISCO, December 16, 1888.

At a meeting of the above club, held on Tuesday evening, the 11th inst., it was decided to hold a Coursing Meeting at Newark, January 1st, 1889.

A committee of arrangements was appointed, namely: Dickson, Boyd and Carroll, with power to postpone said meeting if advisable. Said committee waited on Mr. Shea, proprietor of Newark Coursing Park, and was informed by him that the charge for hares would be two dollars per dog entered. The committee was also informed that several active members would not be able to attend the meeting on the above date; and after consulting with some of the prominent club members we decided to postpone the above meeting until Washington's Birthday, February 22nd, 1889, when we hope, with your assistance, to hold the best meeting of the season.

A resolution was also passed debaring all greyhounds not bona fide the property of a club member from competing at any future meeting of the club. This rule does not prevent a member from running a dog owned by another member of the club. In order to be able to enforce the above rule you are earnestly requested to send the names, sex, age and color of all greyhounds owned by you to the secretary of the club as soon as possible. Describe the color rightly, and remember that "black and white" and "white and black" are very different, and the same with all other colors—black, blue, brindle, red and fawn; if more color than white, put the color first, but if more white than color put white first.

You are also requested to give us your opinion on the following proposition:

Would it be advisable to make the entrance fee for greyhounds at our next meeting ten dollars and give more prizes—say a prize to the winner of two courses, and better prizes to the winner and runner up?—Yours respectfully,

J. F. CARROLL, Chairman of Committee,

J. B. LINCOLN, Secretary, 224 Sansome Street.

A. K. C. Meeting.

At a meeting of the American Kennel Club held at its rooms at 44-46 Broadway, New York, December 6, 1888, the meeting was called to order at 10:05, President Belmont in the chair. Present:—American Field Trial Club by Mr. Vredenburg; American Gordon Setter Club by Mr. Bennett; Collie Club Association of America by Mr. Terry; Maryland Kennel Club by Mr. Malcolm; Philadelphia Kennel Club by Mr. Winslow; St. Bernard Club by Mr. McFarland; Washington City Kennel Club by Mr. Webster; The Westminster Kennel Club by Mr. Hitchcock; American English Beagle Club by Mr. Schellhass; St. Paul and Minnesota Club by Mr. Schellhass; Cincinnati Sportsman's Club by Mr. Ohl; Hartford Kennel Club by Mr. Peshall; New Jersey Kennel Club Kennel Club by Mr. Peshall; Pacific Kennel Club by Mr. Smith.

The minutes of the previous meeting were read and approved.

The Treasurer's report was also read and approved. The President—I should have stated in calling this meeting to order that through inadvertence in the call for this meeting it was stated to be the regular annual meeting. This confusion arose from the fact that the 6th of December has usually been our red letter day, and has been the important meeting of the year. This should have been called as the regular quarterly meeting.

The reports of committee being in order, Mr. Terry, chairman of the committee appointed to confer with the Canadian Kennel Club, reported progress.

The President—On behalf of the committee which was appointed and authorized to prepare and issue a circular with reference to the National Dog Club and the American Kennel Club, I would state that a report was prepared and was ready at the last meeting. The committee consisted of Mr. Peshall, Mr. Vredenburg, and myself, and in the absence of Mr.

Vredenburg I gave the draft of the report to Mr. Peshall, who has kept an practically suppressed it, and I have not since been able to get it. The committee had instructions to send it out, and we have been unable to do anything further in regard to it because of Mr. Peshall having pigeon-holed it.

Owing to the absence of Mr. Peshall at this time the matter was temporarily laid over.

Mr. Vredenburg—There is still another committee to report. It is the committee consisting of Messrs. Malcolm and Winslow on the protest made by the Hartford Kennel Club against the action of Mr. J. F. Campbell in substituting one entry for another at the New York show.

Mr. Winslow—As a member of that committee I will state that I forwarded all two papers in the matter to Mr. Schellhass, and I think they are all here. The matter came down to a question of veracity between two gentlemen, and I got both to give their testimony under seal, and I preferred that the American Kennel Club should decide the matter. I do not know what Mr. Malcolm's views are upon the subject.

Mr. Malcolm—I agree with you entirely, as I believe I wrote you.

The Secretary stated that he had some letters which passed between the parties, which were dated October 2d, November 27th, and October 13th respectively, which correspondence he read, as also the sworn testimony of Mr. Campbell and Mr. Mortimer.

It was moved that the matter be referred back to the committee with direction to report; that it was referred to the committee, and as it took the evidence, the committee should recommend some disposition of the matter.

Mr. Malcolm—I reported that I thought he ought to be severely dealt with.

Mr. Winslow—I fully agree with you, Mr. Malcolm, and I have so informed Mr. Schellhass. If it is in order, I move that Mr. Campbell be suspended for one year.

Mr. Peshall—I would suggest that possibly Mr. Campbell acted under misapprehension, and I offer an amendment to the motion made by Mr. Winslow, that he be reprimanded and that he be required to return the prize that he won to the Westminster Kennel Club within thirty days. I offer that as the delegate of the New Jersey Kennel Club, and as the delegate for the Hartford Kennel Club I see my instructions are to vote for his disqualification. There seems to be a mistake. He says he wrote to Mr. Mortimer in regard to the matter, and Mr. Mortimer might have made that reply to him, and he might have been misled, and it might have meant something else. I don't think we should use this disqualification too freely.

Mr. Winslow—I think a man who has exhibited dogs for a number of years as he says he has, and is known to every breeder of any prominence, should have known that he could not substitute one dog for another.

Mr. Malcolm—I fully agree with Mr. Winslow. I think that he knew he had no right to substitute that dog.

Mr. Vredenburg—I think that the mere fact that he accepted the proposition made by this man to get another dog and substitute it for the original entry, saying that it would never be known, of itself shows that the man really intended to commit a fraud. I think his intent was fraudulent, and I think it is time for the American Kennel Club to make an example of this case, and it will be a long time before another will attempt it.

Mr. Webster also spoke in favor of the motion to suspend, saying that it was absolutely necessary, if it was desirable to have these exhibitions take place, that they should be conducted in a proper manner, and if a case of this character was allowed to be established as a precedent, it was likely to be repeated in the future by other people less scrupulous than these gentlemen who undertook this bit of fraud.

Mr. Winslow—Mr. Malcolm and I had a long conversation with Mr. Mortimer the day we were appointed a committee to investigate this affair. Mr. Mortimer stated that he knew nothing whatever about the substitution of one dog for another, and when he found it out he had a long conversation with Mr. Campbell, and he then and there admitted that he had done wrong.

Mr. Malcolm—Yes, that statement was made.

Mr. Winslow—Then Mr. Mortimer asked Mr. Campbell, so he informed me. "What do you want to draw me in it for?" and that Mr. Campbell said, "Well, I had to get out of it in some way or other."

Mr. Peshall—in view of that statement I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. Winslow—I will include in my motion that Mr. Campbell be directed to return the prize he won, to the Westminster Kennel Club. Motion seconded.

The President—The motion as it now stands, is that Mr. Campbell be suspended for one year, and that he be required to return the prize he won to the Westminster Kennel Club.

The question was then put, and the motion carried.

Mr. Peshall, on behalf of the committee appointed to take charge of the Stud Book, reported that since the commencement of the publication of the official Stud Book there had been duly registered in it 5,378 dogs, giving the classifications. The committee desires to report that as the American Kennel Club has withdrawn the Gordon Setter Club, they concluded to make a class for Gordon Setters. A number of registers were sent in for record, which, upon investigation of the record presented, proved not to be Gordon Setters. That the Committee then investigated the subject, and were already of the opinion that there was now no such breed of dogs, and therefore declined to register such dogs under such classification.

On motion of Mr. Hitchcock, the report was temporarily laid upon the table.

The President—Before Mr. Peshall arrived I referred to the report of the Committee appointed to issue a circular to the breeders of the United States. That Committee, as I said, was unable to report owing to the fact that Mr. Peshall had pigeon-holed it. It is necessary for you to take some action, either to discharge the Committee, or decide whether or not the report ought to be published.

Mr. Peshall—I will say that after Mr. Vredenburg went to Europe I received the draft of the report which was to be sent out. I was away a good deal of the time. I saw that the opposition club had practically gone to the wall, died out, and I called on the President and Chairman of the Committee, and I suggested to him that it was hardly worth our while to kick a dead donkey. However he disagreed with me, and I promised to go on with the report, but, as I say, I was away a good deal, and I have not done so, and I certainly owe an apology to the Club for not completing the work, as I should have done, but I don't think there was any real damage done by not sending the report out. Mr. Vredenburg only returned last Monday from Europe, so I shall take the blame upon myself and say that Mr. Vredenburg and Mr. Belmont did their part of it, but I did not, and I ask to be excused. I don't think there is any necessity for our sending out the report now. I move that the blame be placed upon me for not sending out the circular, that the committee be discharged, and that the thanks of the club be extended to Mr. Vredenburg and Mr. Belmont, for having attended to their part of the work.

The President—That report was prepared in August. I have a communication from the National Dog Club. While it may be a donkey it is not a dead one.

The president further stated that the report covered the whole course of the American Kennel Club on the subject from beginning to end, and also gave the exact history of the American Kennel Club Register, and the exact official statement of the attempts to buy it and the failure to do so, and put the blame exactly where it belonged, and saying that every effort was made by the American Kennel Club to do what was considered its duty, and that it was thwarted by no action of its own. The subject has never been presented. Perhaps it comes in an untimely moment. Perhaps the time has gone by.

Mr. Terry thought as there had been a great deal of labor expended upon the report it would seem to be ungrateful to discharge the committee without seeing the report.

The President—The new constitution will provide for the appointment of an Advisory Committee, and if you will allow this matter to lie over until the Constitution is revised you can then dispose of this committee by throwing its duty into the hands of the Advisory Committee.

Mr. Terry—Why cannot the committee report progress, and hand it into the Advisory Committee?

Mr. Peshall—We will do that. I report progress, and ask that it be laid over for the Advisory Committee.

Mr. Vredenburg—There were two applications for membership laid on the table at the last meeting for action at this meeting, one from the Rochester Kennel Club, and the other from the Columbus Fanciers of Columbus, Ohio. It seems that they have both complied with the rules, having sent in their yearly dues and their constitutions and by-laws.

On motion of Mr. Peshall the two clubs mentioned were admitted as members of the American Kennel Club.

Mr. Vredenburg—I have some other applications here, one from the New England Kennel Club.

The application of the New England Club was read, as were also its list of officers, and Executive Committee and Bench Show Committee for 1889, signed by their secretary.

Mr. Hitchcock—I move that the New England Kennel Club be admitted to membership.

Motion seconded and carried.

The secretary stated that he had three other applications for membership, one from the Connecticut State Kennel Club, headquarters at Bridgeport, dated December 3d, 1888; another from the Toledo Kennel Club, dated December 1, 1888, and the other from the Rensselaer Kennel Club of Troy, dated December 6th, to-day. That all these clubs were anxious to give bench shows, but that their applications were too late to be acted upon.

On motion the applications of the three aforesaid clubs were laid on the table.

The President—Before taking up the rules it is necessary that I call your attention to what you all probably saw in the papers, to the effect that the National Dog Club appointed a committee to confer with us. That was at least two months ago. Perhaps it would be well for me to read Dr. Perry's letter, which will show you exactly what occurred, and then I will state to you the result of our interview. (Mr. Belmont then read the letter of Dr. Perry.) Before going any further I would state that in the absence of both Mr. Terry and Mr. Vredenburg there was nobody here but myself to see Dr. Perry, and during the conversation that ensued between us he let drop the remark that if this matter fell through the blame would be on us. If you read between the lines you will see that it is arranged to make it appear that we really wasted a great deal of time. Through our secretary we said we were ready to receive any proposition they had to make in conformity to the resolution to that club by us. Now, you have heard what he said in the last part of his letter, that they were ready to make concessions; that they wanted peace and harmony, but there is not one definite proposition made at all. The only thing that transpired during the conversation was that they had evidently discussed the possibility of joining the American Kennel Club. He asked me how many delegates we would give the National Dog Club in case they were admitted. After the discussion which had taken place, and when the associate membership had objected to making a separate organization, that they must come in as a part and parcel of the membership of the American Kennel Club, and I said that it would be impossible to allow them more than one delegate, and that we would treat them only in the regular ordinary way, as other clubs.

Then he said the proposition contained the idea of our amending our associate membership scheme and allowing them to become the substitutes for it and changing their constitution to suit us. I again brought up that subject that they could not have a separate organization and could not take the associate membership place without doing it in the way that we have it now, and that we insisted upon the abandonment of the National Dog Club bench show rules. After talking some time I saw that they would not stick on that point, and that if we retained the associate membership they would be still willing to come in somewhere. Then we discussed a great many subjects. I told them that we wanted their assistance if they chose to give it, and we preferred not to have their enmity, but we did not see how we could divide our duties, and considerable discussion followed.

Mr. Hitchcock—It strikes me the only possible way the American Kennel Club can deal with the National Dog Club is to notify their members to become associate members of the American Kennel Club, and abandon their organization as it is now formed.

Mr. Peshall—I move that the matter be left with the president of the club. He has been managing it, and I think the matter would be best disposed of if left to the president.

The President—The only object in bringing this up was in case you adopted those rules you would close the door to any possible arrangement, but having expressed your views, and having practically decided that something can be done to try and arrive at a solution of this question, we could now proceed to adopt the rules, as we will have any way our associate membership, and then you can take the question and refer it to the Advisory Committee, and relieve me of the responsibility that I would rather not take.

On motion of Mr. Schellhass the matter of the American Gordon Setter Club was taken up out of its regular order.

Mr. Malcolm—I would like to state that we, as members of the Gordon Setter Club, understood we had a class given us in the stud book under the name of Gordon, and upon that basis we advertised that dogs would be received. Now we have got a communication and several letters in the paper stating that the name had been withdrawn. I ask why it has been withdrawn, and if there is any way of patching the matter up so it will please everybody, and also to allow our club to go on as we proposed, we claim we are entitled to that class equally as much as the English are or the Irish.

Mr. Peshall.—In answer to the query propounded by Mr. Mulcom, stated that he had investigated the subject thoroughly, and had come to the conclusion that there was no recognized breed of dogs known as the Gordon Setter; that if they were anything they were the black and tan.

After a protracted discussion on this subject Mr. Hitchcock moved that all black and tan setters born before January, 1889, containing not less than 62½ per cent. of black and tan blood shall hereafter be known as the American Gordon Setter, and be registered in the stud book.

Motion seconded and carried.
The revising of the articles and rules was here taken up. On motion of Mr. Hitchcock, the following were adopted: Article XIII., Sec. 1, by adding—"and no delegate shall represent more than one club."

Proposed rule XVI.—"unit of weight" was amended to read "limit of weight."

Rule XVII., Sec. 15th, was amended by adding—"and for dogs for which no challenge class has been provided."

Last section of rule XVII. was amended so as to read—"All dogs qualified to compete in a champion class previous to January 1, 1889, shall compete in the challenge class. The winnings referred to in these rules apply only to shows recognized by the American Kennel Club, a list of which, together with these rules, must be published in the premium list and catalogue of each show."

On motion of Mr. Schellhass, the following amendments were also made to the rules:

Rule XVII., Sec. 3, amended so as to read, "a prize" instead of "a first prize."

Rule XXV. was amended to read after the word "show," fourth line, "where such offence was committed."

Rule XXVI. amended by cutting out the last four words and inserting "held by the American Club."

Rule XXVIII. amended by inserting after the word "show," in the fourth line, the words "as soon as sent to exhibitor."

To the list of awards recognized add, "in publishing the above list in the premium lists it must be revised to include all American Club shows given, or to be given, previous to the closing of entries of the show in question."

Mr. Peshall requested the club to elect some person to the Stud Book Committee to fill his place, as after to-day his office as a delegate to the club would cease, and he gave notice that he would resign after to-day as a member of the Stud Book Committee.

The President said the Stud Book Committee was elected only by a majority of the delegates, and that he did not see how a member of that committee could be elected to-day.

Mr. Vredenburgh called attention to the registration fee, which at present is fifty cents, and advocated in cases of voluntary registration the charge of one dollar.

On suggestion of Mr. Hitchcock, the matter was left to the Stud Book Committee.

A protest, entered by Mr. Charles T. Thompson, with John S. Wiese, of the Virginia Field Sport's Club, was read. The protest was entered, he stated, against the award at the Richmond County show, in October last, for Irish setter dogs that had a field record.

On motion the decision of the Richmond County judges was overruled, and the protest was sustained.

The meeting then adjourned.

Southern Field Trial Club.

The Southern Field Trial Club, organized recently by a company of gentlemen, most of whom found their casus in disaffection toward the American Field Trial Club, held its inaugural meeting beginning on December 3d, at Amory, Miss. The meeting was a good one, and the club seems likely to continue. The grounds were well suited to trial uses, and birds fairly plenty. The judging was satisfactory, except in three or four heats, when the running braces were either so nearly tied or had done so little as to make it impossible to determine their merits accurately.

The first annual meeting of the Southern Field Trials Club was held at the Amory Hotel, on Thursday evening, December 6, Col. J. W. Renfro in the chair; T. M. Brumby secretary. Nine members were present. The report of the secretary, which was read and approved, showed a balance in the treasury, after all expenses were paid, of $400, without any call on the guarantee fund.

The following new members were elected: Thomas L. Martin, Lexington, Ky.; H. B. Duryea, Robert L. McCook and James L. Anthony, New York; G. C. Smedburg, Covington, Ky. The first Monday in December was the date selected for the trials in 1889. The Derby was increased to $800, divided as follows: $350 to first, $250 to second, $200 to third. Mr. James L. Anthony donated $100 for the best pointer, and Mr. P. H. Bryson donated $100 for the best setter in the Derby, which will make the total value of the stake $1,000.

All the present officers were re-elected. Messrs. F. I. Stone, P. H. Bryson and T. H. Brumby were appointed by the chair to revise the rules. A vote of thanks was tendered Dr. Bell, Mr. Dillworth and the Messrs. Wright for courtesies and valuable assistance rendered the club. The meeting adjourned to Friday evening, December 7th.

At the adjourned meeting Col. J. W. Renfro in the chair, T. M. Brumby, Secretary, and fourteen members present, the minutes of the previous meeting were read and approved. On motion, a committee of two, P. H. Bryson and Col. W. C. Sherrod, was appointed to go to Florence and draw the grounds, and if birds were found plentiful to locate the trials there for 1889; if not to select grounds elsewhere. On motion the time for closing the Derby entries was fixed for June 1, and for the All Age Stake November 1. The entries for the Derby are to fill the Sunday evening previous to the commencement of the trials, and for the All Age Stake on the Monday night following. The meeting then adjourned.

Mr. W. G. Mellier, Kansas City, Mo., sold Bohemian Girl to Mr. J. Shelley Hudson of Covington, Ky., for $1,000. Mr. J. I. Case, Jr., Racine, Wis., sold Florence Gladstone to Whyte Bedford of Memphis, Tenn., for $300.

The judges for the Derby were Dr. R. I. Hampton, Athens, Ga., Prof. W. W. Legare, Marietta, Ga., and H. B. Duryea,

New York. Monday afternoon Thos. L. Martin, the regular judge in place of Prof. Legare, served.

THE DERBY.

The Derby was first run, and was an uneven stake, some of the work being very fine and other portions not above mediocrity, that of Oliver Twist being excellent, rapid, certain, effective and stylish. Florence Gladstone, litter sister to the California Kennel's Leadstone, was out of condition, being dysenteric, but she showed much pluck, and suggested high quality. Dimple won first by caution, not showing especially well in other respects. The winner of third, Count Piedmont, of famous ancestry, showed himself the keen, sure bird dog throughout. The summary follows:

ALL-AGE POINTER STAKE.

Judged by Dr. I. Hampton, B. P. Holliday and Thos. L. Martin, the Pointer Stake was a thorough test of the dogs and a very pleasant event.

Col. C. H. Odell's little Consolation which ran such a game and brilliant race in '86, only divided third, being stale and lacking style.

Mr. Anthony's famous Graphic went lame before his first heat was called, and was withdrawn by consent of the judges. After first had been decided the handlers agreed to let the judges place the dogs, in order to avoid the necessity of remaining over a Sunday, and to permit those present to attend the American Field Trials.

ALL-AGE SETTER STAKE.

The Setter Stake was rarely good, the entries averaging high in quality. The judges were Messrs. H. B. Duryea, Thos. L. Martin and Professor W. W. Legare. The handling was rather a rush, the judges permitting too much license. The weather and all other conditions were favorable.

Track Building in California.

Chatting recently with Mr. Irvin Ayres, we asked him to give us his experience in track-building, handing him the list of questions recently sent out by the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN. In substance his reply was: "I prefer a mile track, of elliptical shape with quarter stretches and quarter turns. This may be a prejudice, the precision and regularity of this shape being a great attraction. However this shape seems to me to give the most equal show to different horses. Some are faster on the turn than in the stretch, and with others the reverse is the case. The Reno track has stretches that are considerably short of a quarter of a mile, and the turns are proportionately longer and of course easier. But then there is a disadvantage here. The horse that is quick in starting gets the pole, and the horse at second place on the turn, is at a disadvantage greater than when on an ordinary shaped track, as he must trot much faster to get any show for the heat. If the stretches are long and, the turns short a large horse may injure himself in the attempt to get round the corner at a high rate of speed. Therefore it seems to me that quarter stretches and quarter turns give the most equal chance to all kinds of horses."

For a training track I prefer the same shape and size. Many colts are injured in the whirlbone by the twist at the turns. I would like a straight-away track for colts if I simply wanted to show speed, but to train for races, this elliptical track is, in my judgement the best.

Mr. L. J. Rose, of Los Angeles, says: "For a training track I prefer a three quarter of a mile track with quarter-mile turns. That is, the turns are the same as on a mile track, and the stretches are shorter. Any horse can trot on a straight stretch, but he must learn the turns. The three-quarter-mile track is less trouble to care for, and if a colt shows me a good mile at home, I am sure he will do as well or better on the longer stretches of the public track."

Mr. Dan McCarty has bought from Mrs. Lucy Goff a yearling bay filly, Niece Lucy, by Nephew, dam Lucy by Stockton McClelland, second, a Morgau Rattler mare.

The filly stands 15½ and is a very handsome animal. She is a full sister to Lucilla, 2:22, and showed to Chicago cart a quarter in 40 seconds.

Mr. McCarty has also purchased from Mr. Frank Davis three fillies, one by Dexter Prince, dam by Peerless; one by Nephew, dam by Peerless; one by Adrian, dam by Peerless, and a gelding by Nephew, dam by Peerless. Second dam of all these was by Hambletonian Chief.

At the Cook sale recently Mr. McCarty bought Castro, a yearling, by Clovis, a son of Sultan, dam Carrie Stoner by Steinway, second dam Carrie Clay (dam of Stewart, 2:23), by Coaster, 2:26½, third dam by Mambrino Chief.

Dreamer, yearling, broke his leg and was shot.

Grim's Gossip.

C. H. Todd, an American Derby winner, is now being used as a buggy horse in Sacramento.

French Park, the unbeaten two-year-old of last season, is in excellent shape at Jerome Park.

Volsnte and Miss Ford will be sent East next year if they can undergo training.

The Russian Government offers $500 for every horse that goes to Moscow next season to trot.

Royal Arch has been so seriously injured at Guttenburg that his turf career is ended.

The great $50,000 Electioneer colt, Beil Boy, will be sold at public auction, at Lexington, Ky., on February 18 next.

Owing to bad weather the races announced for Christmas-day at the San Diego track had to be postponed.

As soon as the races at the Bay District Track are finished, most of the running horses now there will be shipped to Los Angeles.

W. B. McCormick's g. m. Cricket, six years old, fell dead after a race at Clifton, on Monday, December 17th. She was in foal at the time.

The 30-mile race, announced for Christmas day at the Los Angeles track, has been postponed, owing to the bad condition of the course.

At least a half dozen of the Haggin string now at Monmouth Park, will be sold in the early spring. Only the pick of the stable will be retained.

C. V. Inpper of Santa Rosa has secured from M. T. Walters the running qualities of the horse Al. Farrow, the lease to extend until after the close of the Blood Horse Meeting of 1889.

Montana Regent, the celebrated crack race horse, is now at Guttenburg, and will be prepared for work. He is in good condition and will be sent to win some of the purses at that track.

Hamilton, the colored jockey, has signed with Matt Allen to ride for the Hearst stable next year. He guarantees to ride at not more than 106 pounds, and will receive $9,000 for the season.

According to Robert Campbell, trainer for the Baldwin Stables, Emperor of Norfolk will not be seen on the turf during 1889. He will be given a rest and prepared for the 1890 campaign.

C. J. Matlock, who was ruled off last year at Eureka, is desirous of being re-instated. The Eureka Jockey Club means to fight any motion made to that effect, and has so notified Secretary Culver.

Poor old Barnum will at last be given a well earned rest. Delong, who lately purchased the noble son of Bonnie Scotland, says he cannot go a furlong, there is no speed left in the old horse.

At Melbourne during the recent cup meeting, the hook-makers lost, so it is estimated, at least $1,000,000. If the backers of horses could strike one such meeting in this country, joy would reign supreme.

R. E. Bybee says J. B. Haggin has got a last spring colt by Antevolo, son of Electioneer, dam Mabel, sister of Beantiful Bells, that is as good superior to other colts as the Jersey Lily is to a Umatilla reservation squaw.—Rural Spirit.

All the Haggin horses are in prime shape at Monmouth Park, and if they continue to go through the winter all right, will have many a spring stake at their mercy. Firenze was never looking better, and Salvador looks the champion he really is.

Senator Stanford is at present negotiating with Mr. R. Cardigan, of Waverly N. J., for the purchase of Bayonne Prince 2:21½. $20,000 is the sum asked for the handsome son of Kentucky Prince, and in all probability he may shortly be seen at Palo Alto.

As usual, the eastern papers in speaking of the action, all attribute the separation of McLaughlin from the Dwyer stable to the above mentioned suit. A more probable cause was a blow struck in anger one morning, followed by the loss of almost a score of races in succession.

English papers state that the Prince of Wales has been a heavy winner on the Turf this year. The future King of England likes to bet on a horse race as well as the next man, but like most plungers his ventures have as a rule resulted in loss.

The Napa Agricultural Society intend to open some colt stakes for 1889 and succeeding years, and are now preparing the necessary announcements. Owners of good youngsters will do well to watch for the advertisements which will shortly appear.

Mr. Wm. Boots has lost a very promising bay colt by Bob Wooding-Gladys, she by imp. Hercules. He was a high-spirited horse, and becoming frightened at something, pulled at his halter rope, which gave way and the poor animal's hind legs spread out from under him as he sunk to the floor. He had to be killed.

The long deferred monument to Rysdyk's Hambletonian is about to be built. The contributions amount to $1,500, and are in the hands of E. A. Buck, Esq., who, in conjunction with a committee appointed by the National Trotting Horse Breeders' Association, will at once arrange to complete the desired object.

Mike O'Brien, who rode Manton for the Melbourne Cup, received from Mr. D. S. Wallace, the owner of the horse, a cheque for £2,500 after winning the classic event. Just think of it, $12,500 for a few minutes work. Why, it pays even better than pugilism or six day go-as-you-please business.

There is considerable interest among turfmen to know whether Mr. Haggin will nominate Firenze in either the Brooklyn handicap or the Suburban. The general impression is that the great mare will not be asked to undergo the severe preparation necessary for such a trial of acquired superiority. She would probably be penalized at 130 pounds in both races.

Jimmy McLoughlin, the jockey, has had to appear in a Brooklyn Court to defend the suit brought against him for $25,000 damages by Nelson King for the alleged alienation of the affections of his wife, Libbie King. By request of King's lawyer the case was adjourned. Some of his witnesses had failed to appear, and attachments were issued against them.

I had a very pleasant visit from Mr. Charles Kerr of Bakersfield a few days since. He is fitting up the home ranch of 360 acres as a first-class stock farm, and proposes to have the very best brood mares that money can procure. Mr. Kerr is now looking around for a good thoroughbred stallion, and inspected several in this neighborhood, but as yet nothing has caught his fancy.

Mrs. "Knap" McCarthy, says the Los Angeles Tribune, has purchased from Mr. Goodwin, the blacksmith, his bay mare by Dashwood, dam by Boston Jr. The purchase price was $500. Mrs. McCarthy has christened the mare Cora Van Tassell, after a well-known Eastern actress. Cora has already shown a quarter in 40½ seconds, and her fortunate owner would not now take twice $500 for the bay mare.

Knap McCarthy says, "If a colt is well bred it will do to buy him and take a chance. When two years old he is taken up and driven. If at this age the colt does not show speed the proper thing is to get rid of him then and there, for in nine cases out of ten it will do no good to fuss with a colt that cannot at two years of age show you that he can trot."

A Sacramento correspondent sends me word that Matt Storn has made up his mind to sell his yearling colt Belvidere, by Le Grand—Sunny Slope Belle, she by The Moor; second dam thoroughbred mare by Norfolk. The colt is one of the fastest youngsters in the State and has beat 40 seconds for a quarter in a driving cart. Who ever buys Belvidere will undoubtedly get a good one.

Still another stable of Californian horses will be sent East next year to represent the land of the Golden Fleece. The Elmwood Stable has entries for the Kentucky Derby, American Derby, Sheridan Stakes, Englewood Stakes, Omnibus Stakes, St. Louis Derby and the Kansas City Derby. The same stable is after the Futurity Stakes of 1890, having several entries therein.

I have received a telegram from Mr. William Easton of New York announcing the purchase of Ossory, a full brother to Ormonde, by Milton Young, Esq. of Lexington, Ky. A representative of Mr. Easton consummated the sale in England for the American purchaser. The price paid is 2,000 guineas.

Mr. George H. Hicks of Beacon Park, Boston, writes to say he will visit California before the winter is over.

Charlie Ossler, one of the brightest and most upright of the short track jockeys, had his leg broken at Clifton last week while riding Prince Karl. The lad will not be able to ride again, at least so says the doctors.

The patrons of the Eastern trotting pacers have a rare treat in store, as L. J. Rose, Esq., owner of Stamhoul, will not have his justly celebrated stallion in public service next season, it being deemed best to send him on the circuit for the purpose of meeting the Eastern cracks. If there be not some sensational racing in the near future I am much mistaken. There is talk, too, of a match with Patron, whose 2:14½ was the only five-year-old stallion record superior to that of Stamhoul, 2:17½.

Messrs. Look & Smith, of the Kentucky Live-Stock Agency Louisville, Ky., have sold to Mr. J. S. Hutchinson, of Louisiana, the black yearling colt "Brookview", sired by Kentucky Wilkes, 2:21½; dam Abbie, 2:20½ by George Wilkes, 2:22; 2nd dam Hattie Wilder, by American Clay, etc. This colt showed great speed for his age, and is an extra good individual. Price paid was $2,500.

Black and Blue seems to think that the Kentucky Derby of next season will be a gift for Proctor Knott. Still I fancy that as usual it will be a surprise race. Since its inception but one favorite has been a winner of the classic event, and California is represented in the entries by several dark horses, any of which are considered good enough to wage battle against Mr. Bryant's wonderful gelding.

At the Melbourne sale week before last, when Once Again was hanging on a bid of $5,400, Col. W. S. Barnes called to Milton Young, who was bidding on the horse, and said: "If you buy him for $6,000 I will go in with you." Young replied: "I won't do that, but I'll make someone else pay $6,000 for him." And with that remark he jumped to $5,995. There was no advance, however, on the bid, and the promising colt will next season bear the colors of the proprietor of McGrathiana.

Blue blood in horses now is based on a mile in 2:30 record. There are now about 600 such horses in the country, with sires in great number. It is rather pleasant to know, however, that the best record in the lot is that of Senator Stanford's Electioneer, who has twelve sons and daughters in the noble 600. Ranking next to him are Nutwood and Onward, with nine each, and then comes Red Wilkes with seven, Blue Bull six, and Harold, Strathmore and Sweepstakes with five apiece. Our handsome Californian is the Grand Duke of the American trotting horse aristocracy.

George Hankins, of Chicago, the owner of Galen, has been interviewed by a reporter in reference to the challenge issued by Sam Bryant, of Proctor Knott fame, which will be found in another portion of the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN. Hankins, in the course of the interview, said he was averse to making a match between Galen and Knott, believing that match races were the means of breaking down too many good horses. He was willing, however, to enter Galen in a sweepstake with Knott and any other crack, the more the merrier, the backing to be $5,000 a corner.

The San Jose Association will hereafter run the track themselves instead of renting it out as formerly. The directors have gone to work in earnest, and will thoroughly overhaul the buildings, fencing, etc., and place everything in first class order. A new inside running track is now being built and will be completed shortly. It is intended to give three meetings a year. A charge of $1.25 a month will be made for stalls, so I am told, but this will perhaps be done away with as I have heard of several who would like to go there if they could get free stalls as at Sacramento.

The following is from an Australian exchange:—"A critical operation was performed on a horse recently by Mr. J. Desmond, the local vet. The animal, which was owned by Mr. Alex. Lumsdon, Jr., had been suffering for a long time from an old injury to the off eye, which caused a wasting of the eye-ball, accompanied by great pain. Chloroform was first administered, and had the desired effect in five minutes. The operation consisted in removing the eye-ball and eye-lids, and to close the cavity, so that the horse would not be inconvenienced by accumulation of dust, etc., through the summer. This was completed successfully in less than three minutes, and when the animal recovered from the effects of the chloroform it was led into a paddock and at once commenced grazing as if nothing had happened.

The Melbourne Cup.

The Melbourne cup day of 1888 has come, passed and gone. From what I have been told my expectations were pitched to the highest notch, I was to see such a crowd that an American race track could not equal it, I was to see dresses on the female patrons of the turf, so rich that no other city in the world could show any comparison to it, the racing was to be of such a nature that even an American could take no exception thereto. In fact the promises made were so lavish that my ideas of the average Australian's truthfulness were very much shaken. But now that the annual racing holiday is over and a review is taken of all the sights witnessed, the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN'S representative has to confess that not one half can be told of the finest race course in existence, the mammoth grand stand, the crowd, the betting ring, the stables, the lawn and even the racing can not have justice done it by my humble pen. For several days prior to the grand event the hotels began filling up until Monday, the day before the race, beds were at a premium and lucky was he who could procure sleeping accommodation at all, a few Americans who arrived at a late hour from Sydney, had to be looked after by their countrymen or they would have had to walk the streets all night. Burke street was packed with human beings, Monday, thousands congregating in front of Tattersalls, to hear the latest tips from the many touts who flock around the great betting headquarters. Conversation on all topics but horse, was entirely tabooed, and turn where you would the first salutation was "what do you fancy?" Men, women and children, talked of nothing else, and made their wagers either openly with the book makers or privately among themselves. Tuesday opened up bright and fair, neither too hot nor too cold, a slight rain on Monday, cooling the atmosphere nicely, and a better day could not have been desired. While many thousands traveled to Flemington by coaches, bansom, four wheelers and private conveyances, the large majority patronized the railway trains from Spencer Street Station. There may be exceeding good train service in many other countries but I have never seen equaled such a service as that played between Melbourne and Flemington on Cup day. The head of the Service, Mr. Speight, is to be congratulated on the completeness with which every detail was carried out, the crush was terrific, still every one seemed good natured, a characteristic, by the way of large gatherings in Australia, and what is even more pleasant to record, not a single accident happened. Trains convey passengers to the main entrance, but a few steps being necessary before you arrive at the stairs leading up to the grand stand. As I beheld this sight for the first time it seemed to dwarf into insignificance any thing I had ever seen before, in the way of a crowd. The stand was completely filled and the lovely promenade which faces the seating accommodation, was one solid mass of moving life. To the left of the stand is the betting ring and there also the crowd was immense. Still further on is the saddling paddock, where large numbers congregate, anxious to take a last look at their favorites and possibly to pick up information which may be used to advantage in betting. Such a pushing, squeezing mass it is hard to conceive; one has to witness it, before it can be believed. The arrangements were all under the supervision of a committee of the Victorian Racing Club, at the head of which is Mr. Byron Moore a thorough gentleman and to whom I am under many obligations. The racing was of the most interesting kind, the sport starting with a hurdle event, the favorite, Blue Mountain, beating his field of eight very easy. You will possibly remember the horse's owner, Norman Wilson Esq., whom I had the pleasure of introducing to you some years ago. I may possibly visit his station, (ranch) near Ballarat, to which I have had a cordial invitation, if so, shall send you in the near future a description of this noted Australian breeding farm. The Railway Handicap, next, brought out fourteen to face the starter, Pin-tarch, owned by Hon. J. White, being the horse selected to carry the public money, 3 to 1 being the best odds obtainable. He made a good race but was outfooted by Tourbillon a 7 to 1 chance who won by three-quarters of a length from the favorite, the three-quarters being run in 1:16. A five furlong race was next on, the card, but Mr. White's g. g. Pippo was so vastly superior to the other seven, that it was robbed of all interest, he winning as he liked by about three lengths in 1:04. And now came the great event of the day. One of the local papers gives such an excellent account of it that I am tempted to copy its report.

The weighing-out process was as usual expeditiously got rid of by Mr. Miles, and, after an interval, the horses began to file upon the course, the first out being King of the West, who preceded the others by about three minutes. Then came, in quick succession, E. D. Touchstone, the Australian Peer, Recall, Malna, Phaon, Aristocrat, Bravo, Tradition, Arsenal, Dick Swiveller, Ensign, Carlyon, Chicago, Mentor, Spade Guinea, Cyclops, The Yeoman, and Whakawai. Some little delay occurred at the post, 4 o'clock going ere Tradition, the favorite, and Ben Bolt made up the full complement. Mr. Watson soon had his horses ranged in line, and the outside flank was composed of Maggie, Touchstone, Whakawai, Tradition, and Bravo, while on the inner rails were Melos, Malna, The Yeoman, and Mentor.

The flag was dropped at the first real attempt, Tradition being the first to break the line, while Melos lost a very trifling space of ground. Fairly settled down to their work, the line became scattered, and as they crossed the training track Lord Headington was slightly in advance of Mentor, the next most prominent being Malna, Ensign, Bravo, and Whakawai. Passing the home turn, and commencing to race down the straight proper, Melos had gone to the head of his field, attended by Malna, Mentor, Spade Guinea, Newmaster and The Australian Peer, at the head of the next division being Lord Headington, Bravo and Maggie. The positions were varied somewhat as they reached the end of the carriage paddock, Spade Guinea now holding the lead, followed in a compact body by Melos, Malna, Newmaster, Bravo, Touchstone and Menotti, Mentor lying well up, whilst the rear-most box half a length in front of Melos, along side of whom were Malna, Tradition, Bravo and The Australian Peer, Ilex and Mentor heading the rest, with E. D. and Ben Bolt as stern-chasers. Rounding the turn and leaving the straight Melos changed places with Spade Guinea, who was immediately passed successively by one after the other, the New Zealand bred mare having broken down. Melos was then attended by Malna, Newmaster, Bravo and Dick Swiveller, at an interval of a length coming, Touchstone, the favorite, Whakawai and Ilex, the next division headed by Mentor and The Australian Peer, Phaon and E. D. now bringing up the rear.

For a few moments the horses were behind the crowd, but when they again emerged into view, along the river bank, Malna was about a length clear of Melos, in attendance on whom were Dick Swiveller and Newmaster, then Mentor, Ilex, Bravo, Whakawai, Cyclops, Chicago and Tradition.

Streaming past the bridge, Mr. Inglis had a good hold of Malna, and Melos was close behind him, on even terms with the Sydney Derby winner being Mentor and Newmaster, then at an interval came Dick Swiveller, Whakawai, and the Australian Peer in a line, the next lot, close up, being composed of Ilex, Bravo, the favorite, Cyclops and Tradition. So they raced past the seven-furlong post, when Ilex all at once made a forward move and headed his horses, Whakawai going after him, with Cyclops, Malna, Dick Swiveller, Ensign, The Yeoman, and Mentor, the latter of whom was apparently running well within himself. The pace, which up to now, had been fast, was slightly increased, and approaching the abattoirs, Ilex has beat a retreat, and the leader then became Cyclops, who drew away three lengths from Bravo and Whakawai, Carlyon, Chicago, Dick Swiveller, Mentor and Tradition each occupying handy positions, while E. D. and Phaon still were last of all. Racing past the scraping sheds Cyclops was pursued by Whakawai, The Australian Peer, Bravo, Mentor, Tradition, and The Yeoman, the lot on pretty even terms, and the last-named lying on the rails.

Half a mile from home Cyclops was taking his horses along at a merry rate, Tradition, Whakawai and The Yeoman following, then Mentor (upon whom O'Brien had not yet moved), Malna and Dick Swiveller. At the bend, leading down to the home turn, Bravo ran into second place, followed by Whakawai, Mentor and The Yeoman. Cyclops and Bravo ran almost side by side to the turn, and The Yeoman at the same time took third position, and the two rounded the bend in that order, and headed for home, with Whakawai, Mentor, The Australian Peer, Malna and the favorite almost at their heels, Tradition also coming very fast on the outside. Below the distance The Yeoman drew up to his stable companion, Bravo and Whakawai coming next, then Mentor and Tradition, the favorite now showing signs of distress. Tradition now commenced a run, and drew alongside Mentor. This movement put O'Brien on the alert, mindful of the way in which Tradition had interfered with him in the finish for the Melbourne Stakes, and as he cleverly took Mentor on to the rails, the victory of the big horse was proclaimed. This was premature, however, inasmuch as Tradition, as usual, commenced to swerve, and he lost his advantage. Meanwhile Mentor had gained a leading position alongside the rails, and before the half-distance was reached, Cyclops being in trouble, he was alongside of The Yeoman, and an even struggle between the pair seemed probable for a stride or two; however, Mentor had Mr. Cook's horse beaten, and Tradition, having been steadied, gallantly answered the call made upon him for a final run. With a good hit in hand, though, Mentor shook off the challenge without the slightest difficulty, and, drawing out, O'Brien landed the game and fast son of Swiveller an easy winner by a length and a half, amid prolonged cheering. A length behind Tradition came The Yeoman, with Cyclops close up fourth. Whakawai was a good fifth, Bravo and Chicago sixth and seventh; and then came Recall, The Australian Peer, Carlyon, Arsenal, E. D., Melos, King of the West, Touchstone and Beryl, the whole whipped in by Ilex, Menotti, Maggie and Aristocrat. Time, 3:30. Net value of the stakes, 3,965 sovs. Ensign broke his off fetlock in the run home, and Dick Swiveller came in very lame.

As soon as the winning and placed horses had been announced, the ladies came out of the grand stand in large numbers and invaded the lawn, presenting a sight but rarely witnessed. The fabrics worn at the Cup was as various as the styles, and ranged from the humblest cotton through the gamut by gamut of embroidered and unembroidered zephyrs and muslins, tweeds, and serges, cashmere, and tennis flannel silks, thick and thin up to the richest satins, and velvets. The great body of ladies, however, wore cashmere or liberty silk. The directoire costume, with its coat generally of rich watered silk, was patronised by many elegant matrons, but many more adopted the empire style, with its full bodice and becoming sashes, more or less modified to meet the exigencies of each case. Josephine frocks in washing materials, and sashes, were common amongst quite young girls. There was no dominant note in colour. Grey and green were both plentiful, so were pink and blue. White and yellow in various forms were by no means left out of court. Several elegant grey gowns were embroidered in silver, others trimmed with steel passementerie. Oriental embroidery seemed to have gone off a little. Floral parasols were few, and those matching the rest of the toilettes as few. Here and there, like a belated poppy in a cornfield, a red one was to be seen, but the vast majority were either so far black or brown or, with light dresses of cream, of the walking-stick variety. Of course, bonnets generally were of modest attitude. Hats were very numerous, and as lofty as ever, but not quite so much overlaid with flowers as they have been.

The attendance was estimated at 140,000, over one hundred thousand paying half a sovereign admission to the grand stand. The Jockey Club, when it received from the government its grant of land for the race course, guaranteed that no profits should accrue from the meetings given, but that all money received over and above the expenses should be expended on the ground and buildings. As the profits have been enormous, and judiciously laid out, Flemington Race Course stands without an equal in the world for completeness and beauty. Underneath the stand mammoth bar-rooms and restaurants are fitted up for the use of the public, and a really excellent dinner can be had at a very moderate price. While a large proportion of the buildings are only to be entered by ticket, still under the law by which the club secured the land, a goodish portion of the enclosure is free to the public, who may there witness the contests "without money and without price." Strange to relate, this is not taken advantage of by as many as one would suppose, for the average Australian out for a holiday is willing to pay, and pay liberally, for his fun. When the races were over, that immense multitude had little or no trouble in getting back to town, for again the wonderful work of Mr. Speight was manifested by the enormous quantity of carriages standing ready to convey the traffic home to an early dinner.

SOUTHERN CROSS.

Our Kentucky Correspondent.

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN.—The superiority of the American thoroughbred over all other horses cannot be merely an American "boast" indulged as gratification of native pride, for it is clearly demonstrated by comparison, contest and competition.

That the combination of blood possessed by Lexington to transmit to his descendants speed, power and endurance to vanquish their competitors has been shown by their successors since they first begun to race.

A recent issue of the Live Stock Record, carefully noting the stake winnings of two and three year-olds in '87 and '88, shows that all the two and three-year-olds that have won each $5,000, and upwards number 58, while 53 of them have one or more crosses of the Lexington or Boston blood. The total amount won by them in 1888 footed up $767,153.50, of which amount the 53 won $723,718.50, leaving only $43,478 to the others. Nor is this year an exception, for in 1887 45 two and three-year-olds won a total of $608,459; of the 45, 37 had one or more crosses of the Lexington and Boston blood, and won $518,324, leaving only $70,135 to the representatives of all the strains. The two and three-year-olds of 1888 and 1889 who have won each $5,000 or more No. 103; ninety of these have Lexington and Boston crosses, and have won $1,242,104, leaving to all others winning each $5,000 or more $143,513. And further, the time test shows from 23 tables of fastest time on record, from half mile to four miles have been made by representatives of Lexington and Boston blood.

With such facts as these why import the less valuable horse to improve our native blood? Since the importation of Diomed, the famous old Derby winner, Friam, another, and the condemned and exiled Glencoe-Trustee, Yorkshire, Albion, Bonnie Scotland, Phaeton, Glenelg and Lexington, whose son, Iroquois, bore away the richest prizes of England, with numerous of the best mares of England, we can produce and develop stouter horses of higher speed and greater endurance than the lighter horses of far less stamina, that are now the type of English racers. As proof—but look at the number of yearlings annually imported, and see how very few can win their oats competing with our native bred horses. The value of importation of an earlier day should not be overlooked, for the infusion of blood of these strains, made Lexington the grand approximation to equine perfection his descendants prove him to have been. But that we now have better horses than can be imported the racing calendars plainly prove, by showing the success of horses rich in native blood over those without it. Had the English such horses as Longfellow, Falsetto and Iroquois at the head of breeding establishments they would come here for horses to improve their racing blood, and importation would be changed to exportation. I long to see the day when we will have a grand national event equal to or greater than the English Derby, where the Derby winners of our various states shall meet to prove the best.

Then welcome all the world to try conclusions with us, and prove what country brings out the conqueror. Had some American the enterprise and patience to await result, and the means to spare from quick speculations, who would take one of our first class horses to England and limit his service—and race his progeny, he surely would meet a success which would send the English here for horses. The best that we produce are good enough to race against the world. And the great breeding establishments of Kentucky before many years hence will be looked to for champions to go to every country where the thoroughbred horse has a friend. And if our stout, speedy, horse bottom-native blood is preserved, the competitors against it will be seen dancing far back as shadows fall when the evening sun is low. Preserve the pure metal we have, and let others be proud of their tinsel.

STANFORD, KY, November 10, 1888.

Good Names.

Scarcely a year passes that we do not have occasion to complain at the carelessness, and in some cases of the bad taste shown by American turfmen in naming their race horses. Whenever we compare the names they choose with those chosen by the turfmen of other countries we are reminded of it the more keenly. We have no desire to establish a censorship over the realms of taste and to formulate a set rule on the subject, but we would gently remind racing men when they are guilty of indifference to the naming of their horses, and show that although "a rose by any other name would smell just as sweet," a race horse well named is more attractive than an ill-named. Also that with the rapid growth of racing and the multiplication of horses, the proper attention to naming might be made the means of a more accurate identification.

The nomenclature of race horses is bound by no law written or unwritten. A horse must have a name for purposes of identification merely, but people are very apt to judge the character of the man by the nomenclature of his horses, and certainly in a sport like racing appealing to public favor for support, the names should be selected which convey some idea of good taste, and do not offend the ear. Naming horses after men, of which Johnny Kelly, Joe Mitchell, Joe Lee, Jim Murphy, etc., are samples. There is an undue suggestion of familiarity about such names, which are not pleasant. If we had the naming of a horse we think we should select something which is easily spoken or shouted, and naming horses after individuals might be followed with such names as Seymour, Bradford, Honeyman, etc.

Taking the names of some of our race horses there is much room to be found for improvement. Take Emperor Norfolk for example. The name is of the type more common to the Herd-book than to the Stud-book. There is no such thing as an Emperor Norfolk. It is a fanciful creation. Fan King is another which could only have existence in a mind which would sacrifice sense for sound. Kentucky Ban is another which means nothing, and that much too long. Little Jake is "tough," and King Idle has positively no significance.

If we were asked which, in our judgment, was the best name for a race horse, we should say that, where it is possible, the best name is one which is suggested by the name of his sire or dam—a derivative name. The beauty of such a name is that it facilitates the memory in recalling horses in conversation or in writing of them—no unimportant matter to members of the press, who are often forced to write hurriedly, without the time for referring to a Stud Book or Guide. For illustration we have the mare Barbarity, owned by the late Francis Morris, who named her foals Ruthless, Relentless, Regardless, Remorseless, Merciless, Barbarian and Devastation. This case was so marked that no mind once cognizant of it ever allowed it to escape. To mention one of them left no doubt as to its maternity. Many years ago Captain Duncan, of Alabama, gave us a pleasant example in his mare Object, by Marshall Nay. This mare had Linnet, Wren, Lark, Nightingale, Thrush, Falcon, Swallow, Oriole, Plover, etc. General Harding also gave us an excellent example in the case of his old mare Gamma, whose foals were named Delta, Kappa, Theta, etc.

We took up the English Racing Calendar the other day and were edited at the taste displayed in naming colts. There is no doubt in our minds that the English take far greater pains than we do in this matter. There was a world of humor shown in some cases, humor that was either transparent or deep. For instance, there are a horse and his full sister, both of which raced last season. They are named respectively, Separation and Divorce, and are by Quits, dam by Orange Blossom. Another case of ingenious punning is the case of a horse by Miser, dam Salute. This horse is named Present Alms, and it is a hit worthy of Mr. Gilpert, the keen witted librettist of the "Yeoman of the Guard," etc. Among other names, not so humorous, but which are suggested by the name of both sire and dam, are Yard Arm, a son of Privateer and Conviction, while a colt by Reverberation, dam Nnn, is called Belfry.

Running one's eye along the index of the English Racing Calendar we find a wealth of instances of the exceeding care and taste displayed by the English in naming colts and fillies. Arrow for a son of Quiver is good, but not as good as Arrowlight for a daughter of Bowstring. Andante is good for a daughter of Orchestra, and a daughter of Privateer is shrewdly named Alabama. One of the most clever is Bedfellow for a son of Nightgown, and Cabal is the name bestowed upon a son of Conspiracy. Camembert, out of Gruyere, are both sufficiently cheesy and Caution for a son of Precaution is thoroughly neat. Then we find Chivalry for a daughter of Gallantry, and Civility for a daughter of Courtesy. Currency is a daughter of Coinage, and Dauntless for a son of Fearless is natural enough. So for that matter is Decision by Umpire, and Downfall for a son of Downpour. Drizzle for a son of Scotch Mist is much more ingenious, however, and so is Explorer for a son of Eureka. Duplicate out of Double, while good, is easy, and so is Extortion out of Blacksmith. Dyspeptic by Plum Pudding, is suggestive. Galop, out of Mazurka, is commonplace, but Goldsmith out of Crucible is very neat. Then we have Harmony out of Glee; Palmleaf out of Palmflower; Pedestrian by Pedometer, and Pedigree by Highborn, but they are not as keen as Oblivion, out of Sideview. President, by Statesman, is good enough, but lacks the invention of Small Fry, out of Little Fish; Rebound, out of Bounce; Rebus out of Charade; Rnymede, by King John and Tirade, out of Talkative are all good, but not as clever as Van Dieman's Land, out of Distant Shore.

Among our turfmen none name their colts with better taste than Mr. Cassatt. We suspect that Mr. Cassatt often leaves the naming of them to his friends, and our occasional correspondent, "T. C. P.," who has made nomenclature a hobby. We happen to know that "T. C. P." named The Bard, and for a son of Longfellow nothing could have been more appropriate. Mr. Belmont, too, names his horses very well, Magnetizer and Magnetic, out of Magnetism, Forester and Woodflower, out of Woodbine, Prince Royal out of Princess being samples. Captain Brown also has given us one or two excellent instances: Reporter, by Enquirer, Galop, out of La Polka, Infanta, by King Alfonso, Budhist, by Hindoo, all being very neat. Mr. Haggin has named his horses very nicely, but he has never adhered to the system of derivative names. The same may be said of the Dwyers, whose horses are all well named, the colts mostly after towns and cities. Mr. Galway has adhered to the alliterative style, as did the former Master of Preakness, Mr. Sanford. Belvidere by Billet, was alliterative, but not suggestive, while with his Longfellow he has adhered to it with Lincoln, Larchmont, Lothair, Lysander, Livonia, etc.

People who attend the races are apt to either complain at Mr. Withers or poke fun at him and declare it "whimsicality" because he allows his horses to race unnamed. It is certainly very confusing to be compelled to identify two or three "Cyclone colts" or "Mary Buckley fillies," and it would save a great deal of this if Mr. Withers would name his youngsters before they raced. But the fact remains that no turfman of the present day has given us better names.

When Mr. Withers names a colt or filly it challenges criticism. They are "pinks of neatness" and derivative to the last degree. What could have been more apt than his Reporter a son of Ebbo, or Anarchy for a daughter of Revolt? What could have been more suggestive than Laggard and Sluggard for a son of Dawdle? Fitzroy for a son of a king (King Ernest) was immensely clever, and there was some invention shown in Auricoma (golden hair) for the Belinda filly, whose hair was golden in shade, and her dam was named for the heroine of Pope's "Rape of the Lock." Pampero for a son of Cyclone, who in turn, was a daughter of Typhoon; both showed great discernment and fine taste, while the pun of Bockstone for a son of Stonebenge and Mary Buckley evolved a very happy bit of naming, as did King Ernest for a son of King Tom and Ernestine.

While we prefer a derivative name, we regret to note a tendency to carry it to the verge of absurdity. Particularly is this the case in the names chosen for the get of Ten Broeck and Longfellow. Among the Ten Broecks we find in the "Guide" such monstrosities as Ten Fellow, Ten Bug, Ten Strike, Ten Times and Ten Thousand. Among the Longfellow are Long Fish, Long Knight, Long Dance, Long Light, Long Roll, Long Glen and Long Chance. Among the sons of Kingfisher, King Alfonso, King Ban, King Ernest, etc., are such names as King Carr, King Crab, King Fan, King John and King Troubler. But worst of all are the excesses into which the naming of the King Bans has run. Here we find an effort to preserve the Ban portion of the sire's name with Ban Boy, Ban Box, Ban Haz'em, Ban Hope and Ban Flag, not one of which mean anything.—N. Y. Sportsman.

Turf Superstition.

There is no doubt but that many of the men and boys who are employed around racing stables are influenced more or less by superstition. A BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN representative has endeavored during the week to ascertain the feeling of those employed at the Bay District Track in regard to mascots and hoodoos, but without much success, as almost every person connected with the various stables now there evidently disliked to talk about such matters. Even owners of horses were found who seemed to think the subject was forbidden ground, and their answers to questions put were very guarded, and in two cases the information required was refused. It may seem queer that in this age of enlightenment a person will be guided in his betting, and his judgment biased by such trifles as the sight of a black cat on the day of a race, yet there is a jockey, and a prominent one at that, who will advise all his friends not to back his mount if he should happen to notice a black feline when on his way to the track. He very seriously assured the writer that he had never won a race when such a circumstance had occurred, and always felt that he could not win that day. One of the trainers is the fortunate possessor of a box which decides the racing qualities of the horse entered, at least it is supposed to. It is a box nailed tight, and contains something which causes a rattle when the box is shaken. If a certain peculiar noise is heard the horse will win, but when a different sound is emitted the entry will lose, and consequently is not backed by the stable. This box, according to the stories told, must be a mine of wealth, for it invariably gives correct prognostications. It was originally used in the South and is highly esteemed by its owner, who would not part with it.

A story is told of a well-known racing man who will not permit one of his horses to be measured. You may guess a horse's height, but when it is discovered that one of the thoroughbreds has been measured that particular horse has to be sold, as it is supposed he cannot win any more.

Horses marked in any peculiar way are not considered lucky by racing men, and beauty blemishes will prevent them from buying horses that otherwise are thought very much of.

While no rabbits' feet were seen, still it is known that quite a number of the men and boys consider this charm one of the luckiest mascots imaginable—that is, if, as one colored man explained, "it be de lef hin' foot ob a rabbit what's done bin cotched in de dark ob de moon, in de middle ob de night, in de grave yard."

"I had a very good colored boy this season in the East," said a well-known owner, "who was particularly bright, and a very willing hand around the stable. One afternoon he asked me if he might have a holiday next day, if so he would get one of the other boys to do his work; he did not like to ask the trainer, he said, but would like me to give my sanction to his request. Knowing his faithfulness, I at once acquiesced, and thought nothing more of the matter till next day, when, on going to the stable, I saw the lad evidently searching for something. He ransacked boxes, peered into corners and turned over hay and straw, until finally I asked a jockey present what Joe was looking for. I was informed that the boy had become possessed of a rabbit's foot, which had been caught in some peculiar way, and he considered it a wonderful talisman, but, continued the jockey, he has lost it, and I do not think he will find it in a hurry. He was down swimming yesterday and I got the lucky foot and hid it inside the lining of his own hat. Don't tell him sir, will you? Seeing the youngster worry so much over the trifle I at last told him where the charm was, and I verily believe he would have done anything in the world for me. He had asked for the holiday on purpose to look for his lost treasure."

The bone of a murderer's hand is considered by many a great luck bringer, or, if that is not obtainable, a lock of hair from the head of one who has taken human life is supposed to possess equal power for good.

Why such a notion should have occurred to any person, that the possession of a portion of a murderer's anatomy could by any means bring good luck is beyond the conception of an ordinary mortal, but still the fact exists that this hallucination prevails in the minds of many turf men.

One of the stable boys said that he never had any success when a crow flew across the track or road on the morning of a race if it only cawed once, but on the contrary, if it cawed three times he knew that success was certain. He also said that he knew a trainer back east who invariably rubbed his horse's feet with a sort of paste, made by boiling the blood of a black cat mixed with the blood from a black pullet.

Dreams play a very important part in horse racing, and nearly all the boys are more or less influenced by their sleeping visions. A story was told of one of the boys who dreamt that two Kings won a race. All the stable lads heard of the vision next morning, so they bet on King Crab and King Idle. As both horses won in their respective races it is simply a matter of impossibility to try and make the superstitions ones believe that there is nothing in dreams. One of the owners who was met at the track said he saw in a dream a chestnut horse win the Derby. Sure enough Tyrant was the winner of the stake, and many persons whom he had told reaped profitable returns for money wagered on Haggin's chestnut.

Tattersall's.

Tattersall's formerly stood at Hyde Park corner, London, near the famous statue of Wellington, on Constitution Hill, which has now made way for improvements, and on the ground now covered by St. George's Hospital. It was founded in 1766 by Richard Tattersall, a Yorkshireman. He was apprenticed to wool-combing, but, like all Tykes, his love of horses predominated, and he took to curry-combing. He was forty-two years of age when he established his auctioneering establishment. A few years later he bought the celebrated horse Highflyer from Lord Bolingbroke for 800 guineas, a most remunerative purchase, and to this equine wonder he often attributed his after success.

Richard Tattersall did not confine his efforts to horse-dealing. He was a newspaper proprietor for several years, and in addition to partly owning the Morning Post, he started and ran the Morning Herald and the English Chronicle. He had, however, for a long a period managed his own affairs and been sole master that he could not brook the interference of his partners in the first-named paper, with the natural consequence of continual dissensions, resulting finally in the firm's dissolution. Tattersall nevertheless continued to conduct the Herald and the Chronicle for several years, until, wearied of not altogether pleasant experiences, he retired from newspaper life and took up his residence at Highflyer Hall (named after the old favorite), near Bury St. Edmunds. Here he settled down into what was his natural bent—a jovial, hospitable English squire, a favorite with all, an inveterate dinner-giver, whose favorite after-dinner toast was "The hammer and Highflyer." This toast was always met with a cordial reception.

He died at his own residence adjoining his mart at Hyde Park corner, 1795, seventy-one years of age, leaving behind him an unblemished reputation and to his descendants a flourishing business and extensive landed property near Bury St. Edmunds. This is the history of the man who created one of the most thoroughly English of all English institutions, and one whose name is as familiar to all sporting men in America as in England, in Australia and New Zealand as is that of the Derby itself.

"Tattersall's" underwent no change until 1865, when the lease of the old premises expired. Messrs. Edmund and Richard Tattersall, who then represented the family, tried hard to obtain a renewal, but the land was wanted for another purpose and had long before been hespoken. They therefore purchased a site at Knightsbridge, near Albert Gate, and yet sufficiently near the old original location at "The Corner," where they erected their present handsome and commodious premises, which are capable of stabling several hundred horses, and where the principal sales of racing and blood stock in the United Kingdom are held. In the subscription rooms adjoining the sale ring the chief races of the year are regulated, and all betting on horses takes its cue from the prices given, offered and taken at "Tattersalls."

The present head of the firm is Edmund F. Tattersall, a fine specimen of an English gentleman, and justly esteemed and respected by all who know him. He is nearing the shady side of life, being sixty-five years old, though a hale and hearty man, but he is beginning to look forward to resting from his labors, and it is undoubtedly with a great deal of satisfaction that he sees his son, Somerset, possesses no whit less ability and taste for the business which has grown so nobly since it was founded by "Old Tat" in 1766. Young "Tat" brings to the auctioneer's desk an education obtained at Eton and Oxford, and a modest, gentlemanly bearing, which augurs well for his social as well as business future.—British American.

A Ten Mile Trot.

There was a ten-mile trot at Belmont Driving Park, Philadelphia, recently, between E. M. Vasey's gray gelding Snowball and Mike Sullivan's gray mare Katie S., for $500 a side. Snowball is an old campaigner, who has a record of 2:22½, and who at one time was well known as White Cloud. Katie S. is a four-year old of great endurance. She has no record and this was her first appearance on any track. The conditions were unpropitious. A cold wind retarded the horses on the first quarter, there was a flurry of snow and the track was very soft. Katie S. kept the lead for eight miles, and then Snowball showed up to the front and at the finish he was five lengths ahead. Snowball showed great distress at the finish and pulled up lame, while Katie S. appeared fresh. The time was 32 minutes and 31 seconds for the ten miles. Turfmen say either horse can beat the record of 27 minutes and 23½ seconds on a good day and track. The time for each mile was: 3:46½, 3:34, 3:31½, 3:23½, 3:21½, 3:21, 3:09½, 3:07½, 3:06, 3:09.

About Ladies' Horses.

There is no lady's horse really, as any horse is as much suited to a skilled lady rider as a man, says a writer in an exchange. Still it is thought a horse exceeding 15 hands 2 inches in height ought not to be selected. The reason certain horses are set apart to ladies is because ladies do not usually enjoy one that trots, though some English ladies do, and in England ladies ride horses that jump fences and ditches, as they must to take part in fox-hunting. A horse that is ridden always or often by a lady is commonly despised by an expert gentleman rider, on account of its easy gaitedness. What is curious is that horses so used do not last so long as those ridden by gentlemen, "the difference being accounted for by the constant use of the off leg in the canter." Give a lady, then, a rather small horse. If she becomes a trained rider her voice and hand will be as effective with the animal as a man's. Some horses which will not stand a man's handling at all are at once obedient to feminine control. It is something of an art to mount and dismount a horse on the part of a woman. I don't know how common horse hocks are in England, but mounting and dismounting to the ground are there the usual way. But the woman to do this needs a groom. As a groom simply holds the horse a gentleman assists the lady in rising and coming down; there is more security, and the feat is more easily done. The good rider alone attains success, as in dancing, by considerable practice, joined to natural aptitude. She must sit erect and perfectly square to the front, looking forward directly between the horse's ears. When seated let the body accommodate itself with easy pliancy to the movements of the horse. Any moving forward or leaning sideways reduces her power over the horse and destroys the gracefulness of the exercise. A fair equestrienne is certainly one of the pretty sights. A woman or girl, if a skilful rider, never looks otherwise than attractive.—The Horseman.

A Boy's Letter.

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN:—Your request for a letter from me detailing my experiences in the East with the McCarty stable is somewhat of a surprise, as I supposed the usual course was for a newspaper to send a reporter and interview the person who has to be pumped. However, I will try and tell you as concisely as possible about the trip. Father promised me that if I was a good boy and progressed in a favorable manner with my studies that I should accompany the stable on tour. That I was taken along is evidence enough that the schooling part had been carried out, but occasionally if I did anything wrong father would say, "Now you shall not go with us." It was not until the cars were well out of Sacramento that I felt assured the eastern trip was really to be made by me, father then having no chance to get rid of me.

The ride was a slow one, the days being taken up by figuring how much we would win, and before reaching Ogden I was satisfied in my mind every stake in the East was at our mercy. I have neglected to state that we left on the first day of May, 1888, with thirteen horses all told, two of which belonged to Frank Vanness, they being Bolero and Adeline. Of the others, we placed most reliance in C. H. Todd, Sorrento, Tiburon and Gerty McCarty. We kept quiet about Todd, for we expected to pull off the Suburban with him, much in the same style as the American Derby was captured. That anticipation was knocked in the head, as he went lame immediately on his arrival in New York.

We stopped at Ogden to take a rest, and just before resuming our journey met the Porter Ashe stable, which had come on the train, leaving Sacramento one day later than we. I here discovered that they had an idea also about cleaning up the purse hung out by eastern associations, having such good ones as Triboulet, Geraldine, Flood Tide, Tracy and Gladys to do the trick with. From there we went by the Union Pacific to Chicago, where we again rested, putting up the horses at Leiby & Son's stables. We then took the Pennsylvania Road to New York, and arrived there without accident or anything worthy of mention. Father had telegraphed to Matt Storn to secure stall room for the horses at the Brooklyn track, but all the available space being occupied, Mr. Storn secured accommodation for the stable at Sheepshead instead. We walked the horses to the track, Mr. Vanness accompanying us. I staid around the stable for several days watching how things were going until the 22d of May, when we made our first entry, for a purse of $750. The horses had hardly come to from their long journey, and Tiburon was not at himself, so he only came in fourth. We did not start in any more races at that meeting, but waited until the opening of the Coney Island Jockey Club dates, the first venture being for a purse, on June 22d, but as before only secured fourth place, Gladys being just behind Tiburon. We laughed at the idea of the Californians keeping such close company even if we secured no place honors.

The first race which we thought was possible to win occurred on June 28th. It was a sweepstakes, and there were entered such cracks as Harrisburg, My Fellow, Marsac, Dalesman, Glory and the Janita colt, in addition to several others. Sorrento was quoted at 30 to 1, and I invested a couple of hundred at the odds, thinking it quite good enough. We were again doomed to disappointment, as third was the best we could do, Harrisburg being first and My Fellow second. We had the satisfaction of beating Flood Tide, however, he starting at 8 to 1 only. On June 30th we started in our first stake-race, Sorrento being the entry for the "Good-Bye." Flood Tide was also a starter, and after a whipping-finish managed to win, beating Tenny and Winfield, Sorrento being unplaced.

That was a good-bye for us for the present to Sheepshead, as we now journeyed to Monmouth Park to take part in the Independence Stake, Sorrento being again our champion. Gerty McCarty, while she had run very well here, did not seem to relish running in the East, and got very sulky in her work, so we could not depend on her. She only started three times and failed to do any good, so there is no necessity of referring to her again.

The Independence Stake is now run for on July 4th, and is, I think, a very appropriate name. We had changed the jockey each time the colt started, trying to get the one which would get most out of him, but we were playing in hard luck because he was on each occasion almost the last to get off, in fact we thought the starter was giving us the worst of it. We now secured the services of Martin to ride, but he was no better than the ones who had preceded him. Sorrento started at 20 to 1, that magnificent filly Lady Margaret being first choice at 5 to 2. She won easily by two lengths, Buddhist second, and Singlestone third. Again Sorrento ran unplaced, but still we were not discouraged, for all that was necessary was a good start, and we knew we could win. On the 10th of that month our next essay was made in the July stakes, Sorrento being again the starter. He had lost so often that the bookmakers were prepared to give almost any odds. There was not a large field, yet still the books showed 15 to 1 against the colt, and at this figure I placed $600, feeling that luck must change some time. Stewart had the mount, and when the flag fell was all but left behind, Forrest King getting a flying lead of about four lengths. Between the leader and our colt was strung out Diablo, Winfield, Galop and the Cyclone colt. It looked from the start as though California was again in the soup, especially as those rattling riders Garrison, McLaughlin and Hayward had mounts in the race. Stewart made a gradual overhauling race, keeping up a steady pace, increasing it slightly as he turned into the stretch, and one by one the field was cut down, Sorrento winning easy by two lengths in 1:19. I had been backing horses ever since our arrival, and with rather poor success, but this victory made us all feel good, and my purse was a trifle heavier than it had been. July 19th we entered Tiburon in the selling race, there being only five starters, Servia from the Dwyer stable being a strong favorite at 8 to 5. Tiburon was evidently thought least of by the book makers, for they offered 10 to 1 freely against him. It was an easy race for "Tib," the Reform—Elastic filly second, and Dalesman third. Winning two such races in succession made us solid, and now the newspapers began to talk about Dan McCarty and his son. It is wonderful what a difference the possession of money makes, hitherto unnoticed, now everybody wanted to see father and his white hat, while the ladies used to stop me and ask me for tips. The next race for which the stable had an entry was the Sapling Stakes, run July 23th. The winner would receive almost $7,000, so we secured the great Garrison to ride Sorrento. He was never in the race, for "Snapper," seeing he could not win, eased up the colt and came in last, Tipstaff securing an easy victory from those excellent young ones Faverdale colt and the Cadence colt. In this race Sorrento started at 7 to 1. My purse was a trifle heavier at the conclusion of this race, for while I played Sorrento straight I had also played Faverdale colt for a place. Being around the stables almost continuously I had a good opportunity of seeing the work done, so could make my selections with better judgment than those who only came down from town in time to witness the races. Tom Hanahan, the trainer for the Wither's stable, had taken quite a notion to me, and I got from him many good things which tended to keep my funds in pretty fair condition. The next event for which we had a go was the Amboy Handicap, August 9th, with Stewart again in the saddle. Sorrento had proved an in an out horse up to now, a hard race knocking all the go out of him for several days, so much so that he always required plenty of rest after a race. Stewart adopted Garrison's tactics in the Amboy, when he saw the colt could not get first place he pulled him up and made it more of an exercise gallop. The odds were 15 to 1 in this contest against Sorrento, Ransom, of the Haggin stable, being favorite at 5 to 2, but Minion, a 16 to 5 chance, won, the Invercauld colt, now called Infanta, being second, with Ransom third. The Junior Champion Stakes, on August 11th, had Sorrento again as a starter, but he was not himself yet, and the layers of odds seemed to know it, for Joe Cotton bet father $5,000 against $50 against the colt. That was the first time I saw Proctor Knott extended, and I have great confidence he will prove himself the crack of 1889. He won the Junior in hollow fashion, Faverdale colt second, and Fresno third. For fourth and fifth there were Salvator and Diablo, Sorrento coming in sixth, leading such horses as Eric, Oregon, Caliente, Lady Margaret, Reporter and others. August 16th saw us have a flyer at the Free Handicap Sweepstakes, for which there were twelve starters, Tenny a good favorite selling at 7 to 2, with Fides, who early in the season ran a dead heat with French Park, second choice at 4 to 1. As usual Sorrento was a long shot, 20 to 1 being obtainable at the opening, and never less than twelve. Father sent round men to bet at different places so as not to drive the price down too fast. Taylor had the mount that day and won in a cauter, Madstone being second and Fides third, the time being 1:15 for the three quarters, pretty good for a colt starting at 20 to 1. Poor Burton, he lost $7,000 on the race, and many others lost heavily. I always liked to bet with Billy Connor because he frequently gave me a point or two more than the others would pay. Tom Evans, a sporting man, asked me before the race who would win, and on my word he played our colt. As I always had a strong liking for Gorgo, the Isonomy filly which was in Senator Hearst's stable, Mr. Evans made me a present of a handsome breastpin, containing a hand-painted picture of the great English sire. August 21st the Select Stakes were run for, Sorrento again carrying our colors, but the bookmakers would only give 7 to 2, notwithstanding that such horses as Auricom, Tipstaff, Blue Rock and Florentine were on the card. When the flag fell the usual bad luck was in store for us as Sorrento's head was turned in the opposite direction, even with the bad start he came in third, Auricom winning, Tipstaff second. I played only lightly on this race, as Auricom was another favorite of mine, and I fancied her a bit against the balance of the field. The Carteret Handicap, August 23th, saw Sorrento again in the field, this time with Jimmy McLaughlin up. The starting price for the colt was 5 to 1, he being second choice, Fresno having first call at 8 to 5. The Faverdale colt won easily, Fresno second, Stephanie third and Sorrento nowhere. That was our last race at Monmouth, the stable going to the Brooklyn track, where on August 30th we started the colt in a sweepstakes in which the added money was $2,500. Diablo was first choice at 9 to 5, and Sorrento was an outsider at 10, 12 and 15 to 1. The temptation was too great to resist so we played $600 on the race at these odds, McLaughlin once more having the mount. For a wonder the colt got a good start, which Jimmy was not slow to take advantage of, and immediately got a lead of three lengths, which he kept to the finish, Diablo being second and The Lioness third.

The watch showed 1:15, this being the second time that the colt had gone three quarters in a minute and a quarter. We gave McLaughlin $500 for his work, and still had a little left out of the winnings, the value of the stake being $2,950, beside what we received from the book makers. Sorrento was still in his two-year-old form, but I had just passed my thirteenth birthday, so we determined to try the colt in an all-aged race. A sweepstake on September 6th gave us an opportunity, so we engaged the light weight Freeman as jockey, and started Sorrento against such old campaigners as Sam Harper, Counemara, Lottie Wall and Niagara. The colt was selling at 10 to 1, but he never had a show and ran unplaced, Harper winning easily, Niagara second and Grimaldi third. This was more of an experiment than anything else, to see if Sorrento could go a mile, and as the race was won in 1:42 with Sorrento well up we felt satisfied with the result.

The Laurel Stakes, September 22d, had Sorrento as a starter, the price being 6 to 1. I had watched Mr. Belmont's She at work and backed her heavy for a place, so although our colt was neither 1, 2, 3, my winnings on the race were large, She coming in first, Auricom second, Madstone third. Covington rode for us in the race, and was fully twenty lengths behind the field when the flag fell.

A purse race on September 26th next claims attention, and as this was another all-aged race we did not expect to win, however we played the colt for place honors and were beaten out by Banner Bearer, carrying 120 pounds, first, Sorrento second, and Speedwell third.

We now changed our trainer, Mr. Miller leaving us, G. R. Buchanan taking his place. Once more and for the last time the colt was started, the occasion being the Holly Handicap, September 28th. We had tried nearly all the good jockeys so far, except Isaac Murphy, so for this last attempt we secured the celebrated colored jock, but he was not successful, the colt running unplaced, Diablo first, Radiant second, Madstone third.

We started for California on October 3d, via the Atchinson, Topeka and Santa Fe route, resting as before in Chicago, and also at Raton, N. M. I hope to be able to visit the East again next year, and probably will if I can make a favorable showing in my studies. We have fifteen running horses at Sacramento now and may have more before the next season opens. Sorrento is entered for the American Derby, and also in many other three-year-old stakes. I trust he may be successful, if only for the reputation of California. In the Futurity we have Pasadena, by Himyar-Corbena, and also Pandora, by Rayon d'Or-Blue Grass Belle. Hoping this letter is what you desire,

Yours Respectfully,
DANIEL JOSEPH MCCARTY.

John Porter, one of the very best of English trainers, says that Ormonde, never having won a race of two miles or over, has not left a mark as good as that made by Isonomey. Mr. Porter gives Isonomey the credit of being the best horse he ever trained, as he twice won the Ascot Cup, as well as the Goodwin, Brighton and Doncaster Cups. Gorgo, which ran in the colors of Senator Hearst last season, is an Isonomey filly.

Chats.

"Tell you something about Yum Yum, eh?" "Well, I don't know as there is much to tell," said Si Mulkey, "I happened to be out at the ranch one day and took a look through the stable and finally went into a field where a lot of young ones was playing around, sort of kittenish like, and made up my mind there was some good stock running loose there. So I saw Mackay and told him I thought there was as good, if not better, horses in the paddock than he had in training. 'Well,' says he, 'you are doing nothing, suppose you take up some of them and see what you can do with them.' Well, I corralled fourteen as likely looking thoroughbreds as you ever saw, and among them was the Onondago filly. I had a lot of trouble with her, on account of a bad habit she had of striking one of her feet, and every two or three days she would show up lame. I got a pair of boots made much after the style used on trotting horses, and at last I got her in condition. Mackay offered to bet me a hat that I would get disgusted with the mare, and ventured the remark that Onondago stock did not amount to much, but when I showed him a trial in 1:43 he changed his tune and paid for a hat. From what I know of Yum Yum I should think it possible for the mare to make a record as a four-year-old equal to that of her stable companion Firenze.

"Well, Matt, what do you fancy as the coming three-year-old?"

"It will not require much guessing," said Mr. Storn. "Your exceedingly good article in last week's BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN from 'The Tipster' summed up the known quantity in such excellent style that there is hardly anything for me to say. Of the unknown quantity I understand Mr. Withers has two or three two-year-olds he did not start this season, any of which may prove cracking three-year-olds. The Dwyer Brothers also have several who are being carefully looked after and the Pacific Coast may have a few, at present unknown to fame, that will cause some surprises back East next year. Of course my preference should be given to a Californian horse if only from State pride, but laying all bias to one side I cannot see that Proctor Knott has any advantage over Salvator. The Kentucky gelding is a grand horse, and stands very high in my estimation, but at the same time I have an equally high opinion of Salvator. The latter was not over-run, he is a good weight-carrier, has a fine constitution, and when they meet you will find the Haggin colors as close to the wire as any other. However, you must not overlook two more that I have in my mind's eye. French Park and the Faverdale colt are the equal of any, and among the four mentioned it is likely the crack three-year-old will be found. Diablo is not a strong horse, and runs too much in and out. Sorrento and Caliente are not in the class with my favorites, but Sorrento may get better, as the Hooker stock improves with age. I do not think Fresno should be named with the big four, although he is a good useful horse. Auricom will be heard from later in the season. I fancy the King Earnest filly is not an early trainer, and it will take some time to get her just right. We did not see enough of the Minority filly to draw conclusive evidence as to her worth, but I judge her to be a rattling good mare. Eric will prove a bread winner or my judgment is much at fault. The big race he won at Monmouth in the mud stamped him as being a horse of rare quality, and I know Hayward thinks a lot of him. But remember what I said, there may be an unknown that will carry off the honors for 1889."

"Well, 'Grim,' what is it you want to know," said Mr. Ten Broeck one day this week, when I happened to meet the veteran horseman.

"Well, air, anything that will interest the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN readers. I hope your health is improving in this mild climate."

"Yes, I feel much better here than in England, for the gont does not trouble me here as it did over there, but I have tried to leave you, however. Some two or three weeks ago a friend informed me that President Cleveland was going to Europe when his term of office expired, so I wrote at once to him asking if any price had been put on his residence at Red Top, because if it was in the market I should like to purchase it. Only to-day I received an answer from his Secretary informing me that the place was not for sale, and I must confess the disappointment was great, as I should like to have owned the place. However, that will neither interest you nor your readers, for they want horse items. I have seen people disappointed on the race course though, that felt worse than I do now. I remember an occasion some years ago, at Doncaster, the Bradgate Park Stakes being the event, and Mr. Abington was desirous of backing Necromancer to win a large amount. As there was a probability of a small field, and in order to make a market, Mr. Abington gave 'Billy' Brown fifty pounds to run Grand Composer, at the same time paying both the stake and the jockey's fee. Grand Composer won, and Necromancer was second. Final result: Mr. Abington lost the winning stake; he lost the £3,000 he backed his horse for; he lost the money he otherwise would have won; and to some extent lost the horse as well, as Necromancer broke down."

A New Dance.

Some few months ago a delegation of Sioux Indians paid a visit by invitation, to the Navajo Agency, and had a right royal time, the home folks doing everything in their power to make the stay of their guests as pleasant as possible. The Sioux in return for the kindnesses shown them made up what was called a dog dance, one of the canine race being killed, and then a deal of ceremony gone through with, after which a weird sort of dance was instituted. It seems that that the Navajos had never seen that particular sort of a fandango before, and eagerly besought the strangers to sell the right of dancing it, for it is known, one tribe of Indiana will not use the dance of another tribe until the right so to use it has been regularly purchased. Money, blankets and arms were freely offered by the Navajos, but without success, the Sioux demanding six hundred head of horses for the privilege desired. The necessary number was ultimately raised, and the Sioux departed for their Northern homes richer by far than when they arrived there.

George Starr, well known as assistant to Budd Doble, has arrived at Los Angeles with Jack, 2:18½; Knight, 2:29½; Rutilo 2:27½. Among the pacers are Ed. Allen, 2:17½, and the champion Johnston, 2:06½. The string will winter in the southern county.

Two of the most successful and cautious betters to be seen on the "big circuit," says an Eastern exchange, are John Madden of Lexington, Ky., and Henry Simons of Louisville, Ky. They play heavy on the favorites and likewise on the field, consequently their losses are small. After the race they are usually to be seen assorting a big stock of pool tickets. Then they "flash up" the winning cards to their friends, who congratulate them on their good luck.

Electioneer now has 38 representatives in 2:30 and better—4 more than any other living stallion. Daniel Lambert has 34.

Among the twenty-five performers by Electioneer that entered the list prior to the present year, he has Wildflower, whose 2:21 stands next to Sunol's 2:18 in the two-year-old list; Manzanita, whose 2:16 is the best four-year-old record; Hinda Rose, whose 2:19½ has only been excelled by one three-year-old; Ansel, whose 2:20 is the fastest by a trotter bred from a strictly running bred dam, and Palo Alto, whose 2:20½ stands next to it. He has five others from running dams. Among his progeny a yearling has led the records, while eight two-year-olds, seven three-year-olds and thirteen four-year-olds have records in the 2:30 list. Ten of his trotters have records in 2:30 and better, a number equalling that of George Wilkes, and surpassing that of any other sire.

Bell Boy, 2:19 1-4.

The rain beat Bell Boy, says the Los Angeles Tribune. Nothing else could have prevented the gallant son of Electioneer from lowering the three-year-old trotting record of the world yesterday afternoon at Agricultural Park. The $50,000 stallion was in fine fettle, but the rain upset all calculation. Had it hung off for but a short hour, a world record would have been made on a Los Angeles track. Messrs. Gird, Rose and Thayer officiated as judges, and spectators were held by Messrs. Wood, Dennis and Covarrubias. Bell Boy looked the perfect little trotter that he is when Sam Caton brought him on the track, and all present expected a grand performance, but the rain began to descend and it was a regular downpour when Caton drove Bell Boy past the stand for the world without taking the usual number of warming up spins. "Knap" McCarthy followed Bell Boy around with a runner. The quarter was reached in 35 seconds and the half in 1:10. It was not even then a two to one proposition that Bell Boy would not break the record as he was moving along in faultless style, but the wind and rain was too much for the plucky stallion, and he came under the wire in 2:19½, making the last quarter in 34½ seconds. All in all the performance was a remarkable one, and there is no doubt in the world but that Bell Boy is capable of doing 2:17 under favorable circumstances. His performance yesterday, everything considered, was fully equal to 2:17½, as the mud could be seen flying from the wheels in all directions at every revolution. C. C. Seaman, the genial owner of this magnificent animal, leaves to-day for San Diego with Bell Boy, where he is to make a trial on Christmas day.

The rain prevented the carrying out of the programme, much to the disgust of "Knap" McCarthy, who expected to give Irma a record of 2:15. He brought the pacer out on the track, but the mud was then so sticky that he concluded not to make the trial, although she was just in trim for making a great mile, and had been driven a quarter an hour or so before in 32½ seconds.

California Stables in the East.

A correspondent writing to the Sporting World has the following to say about some California owned horses:

The largest stable at Sheephead Bay is that of Senator Hearst, in charge of Matt Allen, so that will be dealt with first. Allen finds that he has to give his young charges a great deal of exercise to keep them from getting too lively, and, as his shed walk is a trifle over a furlong, he uses the track but very seldom. He generally has about ten of them out at a time, and, as they are every one fine looking youngsters, it is a sight well worth going to see. They are all as full of life as an egg of meat, and the play they make against the sides of the shed sounds like a salvo of artillery, and at the same time suggests the fact that it would be rather unhealthy for an inquisitive person to endeavor to satisfy his curiosity as to how hard a yearling can kick. Of all the horses in Allen's stable, old or young, the quietest and most level headed is that high priced youngster King Thomas. During my visit this morning he was lying down in his stall, and when Allen went in and commenced patting him he took it as a matter of course, and never even offered to get up. Allen is falling more in love with the youngster every day. He says that when Senator Hearst bought him, of course, it was nothing more than a big gamble. 'Tis true that his brothers had both been illustrious performers, but that did not say that he would be, and consequently the chances that Senator Hearst took were very great. Allen now thinks that the Senator has won, as he says the horse is a grand looking one, and shows every attribute of a race-horse of the highest quality, and if he does not pull off the principal two-year-old events next year for which he is entered there will be a weeping and wailing and gnashing of teeth, and incidentally the loss of a great deal of money by the followers of the green and yellow.

Matt Burns has gotten back from the Lexington sales, where he purchased Hawkstone and Fernwood. They arrived at Monmouth Park last week, and Mr. Haggin's trainer thinks he has a couple of good ones in them, especially in Hawkstone, who is certainly a very fine looking youngster, and as level headed as an old horse. Firenze is wintering splendidly, and Byrnes says she was never better in all her life. Her coat is quite rough, and she has taken on considerable flesh. All of the stable connections think that they have the coming three-year-old in Salvador, and if he and Proctor Knott, who defeated him in the Futurity, ever come together on anything like equal terms next year there will be a barrel of money on Salvador. He has filled out magnificently, and is as good looking a specimen of the thoroughbred as a person would wish to see. Another one that Byrnes expects great things of next year is his yearling Rancocas. He has shown some great bursts of speed in his trials, and it would take a good sized check to secure him. He is a rather long colt, about the average height, and stands on a splendid set of legs. Yum Yum, Fresno, Guarantee, and in fact all the horses in the stable are doing well, and, as Byrnes says, that is all he asks.

Sales.

A. L. Wilson, of this office, has sold to Col. H. S. Russell, of Milton, Mass., the bay mare Soncy Lassie, foaled 1885, by Sultan, record 2:24, dam Bronco by The Moor; second dam by Blisk Warrior. In foal to Bell Boy, 2:19½.

W. H. Wilson, Cynthia, Ky., has sold to Chas. Gauntlett, Milan, Mich., the two-year-old black colt Coraloid, by Simmons, record 2:28, dam Coral by Clark Chief; second dam Cassia (dam of Caliban), by Strader's C. M. Clay Jr. He has purchased of Geo. D. Creighton, Omaha, Neb., the bay horse George Simmons by Simmons, dam Crip by Mambrino Time; second dam Bell by Regular, son of Volunteer and a black weanling colt, full brother to George Simmons. He also bought of Ferguson & George, Cynthia, Ky., the two-year-old chestnut colt Dr. Simmons, record 2:39½, by Simmons, dam by Mark Twain; second dam by Selim.

The Axtell Case.

An unusual case was No. 137, recently before the American Trotting Association's Board of Appeals. It was that of Messrs. Kirby, Aldrich and Redfield vs. C. W. Williams and the brown colt Axtell. It appears that Axtell was entered in a three-year-old race at Keokuk, last August, and started. In the third heat he distanced his competitors, and in announcing their decision the judges stated the winner to be a two-year-old, which Messrs. Kirby, Aldrich and Redfield say was the first intimation they had of his age. In the entry Axtell's age was not given. As the conditions of the race was for three-year-olds simply, protest was made as to the eligibility of Axtell. The Board held that all races must be in accordance with the published conditions, and ordered that the protest be sustained.

A $20,000 Purse.

A move will be made the coming year, says the Sportsman, to open a $20,000 stallion race or free for all, and will if successful, bring together the fastest horses in the land. One prominent breeder has already expressed himself in favor of it, and offers to back the proposition liberally. He is also in favor of a five per cent. entry fee, and that the race should be trotted on the best track in the west, so that the California horses will be induced to cross the mountains and start. How many thousands would travel miles to see Patron, Stamboul, Woodnut, Guy Wilkes, Antevolo, Jerome Turner, and Bonny McGregor, start in a race to decide the championship of the world? "Standing room only" would be the order of the day before the first heat.

Bread for Horses.

Horse bread is commonly made in Sweden, says Notes and Queries. It is also often made and used in Tyrol and in certain parts of Switzerland—Engadine for instance. Your driver stops at a roadside inn, and before he buys anything for himself buys for his horse a large cake of brown oatmeal circular; flattish, the size and shape of a Yorkshire yule cake. The strong, quiet steady horse—or mare likely—knows well what this means; looks on with eager eyes as the driver slices the cake; munches slice after slice with keen enjoyment; and finally perhaps lays his lips upon his palm, to suggest the possibility of another loaf. Some drivers, indeed themselves desirous of meal, are content to crumble the bread into a trough; and in that case the horse will not only eat all the larger pieces, but will with teeth and tongue take up every morsel and crumb that strews the bottom of the trough. Such are his views as to the merits of oatmeal bread.

A Horse's Mouth.

The following from the Western Sportsman should be heeded by every driver of the horse: "Be careful of the horse's mouth. Men who jerk the reins because they are too mad to be sensible and humane, should have a bit placed in their own mouths and have it jerked by some brutal fellow who enjoys giving pain. In breaking colts be very careful about the mouth, and bit an animal that has a sore mouth while it continues sore. The mouth of a horse should be more frequently examined than it usually is. Sometimes there is an inflammation that needs attention. Sometimes the teeth need attention, and occasionally it may even be necessary to draw a tooth. It is by no means uncommon that the poor condition of a horse can be traced to some ailment of the month, which prevents the proper mastication of the food. It is not much trouble to open the mouth and look into it, and it will often prevent trouble.

Wonderful Horsemanship.

A great many stories are told of wonderful feats performed on horseback, but it is safe to say that none of them can equal the following, which comes from Australia. Of course no one vouches for the story, but that is no matter. At any rate, it speaks well for the Australians if it is true, for their horsemanship, and if it is not, for their imaginations. Says the writer: "I do not know whether this one will be of any interest to you, but it happened on the Brisbane course (Eagle farm) at the races held Jan. 28th, in the Handicap Hurdle Race. Mr. Barker's Grafton, ridden by Paterson, while coming to the last hurdle before entering the straight for the second time, slipped, and striking the hurdle heavily, turned a complete somersault, landed on his legs, and went on after his horse again without losing more than twenty yards. Paterson, by an extraordinary display of horsemanship, sticking to the saddle throughout. I am sorry to say that he did not win, but came in a fair third. As you may imagine, he received a well deserved applause on his return to scale."

American Trotting Association.

The complete report of the proceedings of the Board of Appeals of the American Trotting Association, at its meeting recently held in Detroit, is especially interesting. The Association is comparatively a young one, and is of course, untrammelled by precedents established by previous decisions in most cases. Horsemen know with accuracy as a rule, how the similar board of the National Association will reward any given case, for almost every point that can arise under its rules has been passed upon by its courts. The younger body, however, is free to blaze out a new trail, and in some prominent cases seems inclined to do so rather than to follow the beaten track. This of itself is sufficient to make its proceedings very interesting, and as it happens, a large number of the cases considered at Detroit presented novel features. From the brief statement in each matter, as given in the report of Secretary Steiner, the Board awarded very substantial justice, extending ample consideration to merely technical offenders, and placing punishment in most cases where it belonged, and in a way to vindicate the law, and to sustain its terrors. Being human, it is probable that it erred in some instances, but on the whole its work in the judicial line has been well and wisely, and there are many of the supporters of the trotting turf that on the strength of what was done at Detroit, will cease to regard the American Association as a rump parliament, and will recognize it as co-ordinate in usefulness with the National Association.

From the long list of cases decided, the following are selected as presenting points of special interest:

The chestnut stallion, Helping Hand, trotted at Lansing, Mich., and was protested under the conditions, on the ground that he had not made a season within the district specified. The published conditions of the society state that animals competing in this class "must be owned in the district for a period of at least sixty days." The board, with evident propriety, overruled the protest, and added that "it was not its province to decide what period constitutes a stallion season."

J. F. Kenny and the gray gelding Bob White were arraigned on the charge of a fraudulent entry at Mexico, Mo., the horse being ineligible because of a previous record that barred him from the class. It appeared from the evidence that Kenny bought the horse in ignorance of his record, and that no report of the race in which it was made had been published by the recognized turf authorities. The board therefore exonerated Kenny, and merely required that the money won should be redistributed, according to law.

A number of cases were decided in which parties protested against suspension for nonpayment of entrance money, on the ground that the entry was unauthorized by the party held responsible. These constitute a very vexatious class of cases, and the American Board seems disposed to hold that in the absence of evidence that the entry was duly authorized by the party in whose name it was made. The denial by that party should be accepted and the liability should fall elsewhere. This was the ruling in the matter of John G. Allen, suspended by the Columbus, Ind., track.

In a case where a race did not fill and was reopened, those who made original entries were relieved from responsibility, but in a like case, where the entry was made by an unauthorized groom, and when reopened the entry made by the owner was held as valid, and payment was enforced.

There were several cases in which claims were presented against horses, for suspensions or other liabilities incurred under previous ownership. Where it appeared that the animal had been purchased in ignorance of such liability, the board placed the suspension upon the previous owner, and relieved the innocent victim. This is a broad departure from the practice of the National Association, which has always held that the purchaser of a horse, having access to the blue book, should take no man's word for the statement that a horse is free from liability. The remedy for the victimized purchaser is held by the National Association to be in the law courts, and it is further held that the Board of Review should not be occupied with the decision of such questions—just as a court of equity will not recognize a matter which the law courts can deal with. The American Association in its ruling on these cases, does not follow the established and more reasonable course, and would not be endorsed by any respectable court. Decisions in accordance with this view were rendered by the American Association in the cases of the suspension of James Leonard and the bay mare Louetta, and D. H. McEwen and the brown gelding William II. In each case the money paid under protest was ordered to be returned to the track, and in the former Mr. O'Reilly and in the latter C. C. Lyford were suspended until the old liabilities were paid.

The brown gelding, Egmont, controlled by Nat Bruen, and driven by D. E. Abbott, was entered by the latter at Dallas, Tex. Both men and the horse were suspended for nonpayment of the entry, and the amount was collected from each. Bruen alleged that the entry was made without authority and against orders, but Abbott produced evidence to the contrary, and the amount paid by him was returned.

George F. Case, of Detroit, and the brown gelding Little Mack were suspended by the Hamline, Minn., track for nonpayment of entry. Case claimed that he had made no entry, but had simply sent a letter of inquiry to be used as an entry in case certain conditions proposed should be agreed to. This was accepted by the Hamline people as an entry, and the horse was shipped there, but was out of condition and not started. The board held that the letter was a conditional entry, and that the track was entitled to the money.

The pacer W. D., with an alleged record of 2:32, made at Fairmount, Ind., started at Cambridge, Ind., in the 2:35 class under protest. Subsequently, after a change of ownership, he was entered at Topeka, Kan., where George W. Sutcliffe, who had purchased him, paid $100 fine for the performance out of class at Cambridge City. After investigation, Sutcliffe claimed that he was an innocent purchaser, and it was further alleged that the Fairmount track was short, but the board held that the horse was ineligible when he started at Cambridge City, and that the punishment must follow him, regardless of change of ownership. This would certainly have been the decision of the National Association. But following its precedent the board, crediting Sutcliffe with innocence, ordered that the amount paid by him be refunded, and that the former owner stand suspended until this is done.

The Lakeview Driving Park, Peoria, Ill., accepted the entry of the pacer Rocky Ford, after the published date of closing. Protest against his starting was made, but the society allowed the protest to be withdrawn. The board ordered that $250, the amount of the purse, be forfeited by the society to the American Association and that the secretary be censured.

W. T. Woodward and the chestnut gelding Voltaire, record 2:41, were suspended for six months for trotting in the 3:00 class at Salina, Kas., in September last. The board held that as the trotting season was so nearly ended when the suspension was ordered, the punishment was wholly inadequate to the offense, and added a fine of $100, with suspension until paid. This appears to have been a wise and righteous judgment and suggests that the trotting law should fix the minimum of suspension in such cases, at one year, which is mild enough for willfully trotting out the proper class.

A case brought up against the well known driver Gee Grimes, presented a well defined issue. He was under suspension, but trotted two horses—Edwin Q and Little Fred. Grimes did not deny the facts. On the contrary, he admitted that at the places and dates named he trotted the horses as specified, but he claimed that the suspension against him was not lawful, and that he trotted the horses because he would not recognize it. The board held that the question of the legality of the suspension was one that could only be decided by the board, and that Grimes should have paid the money under protest and then an appeal to the board would have been proper. That Grimes' doubt as to the legality of his suspension did not justify him in starting, and that it was his plain duty to have deposited the money ordered before starting. He was, therefore, fined $100 and suspended until the amount was paid. This case presents no particular feature, except that if Grimes drove in a public race the penalty, it would seem, should fall upon the track that allowed him to do so while he was disqualified as well as upon the man under suspension. They seem equally guilty of defiance of the law and should be punished alike. The board very properly refused to consider the question of the legality of Grimes' suspension, holding that he should have respected the law and paid as ordered before starting. It is difficult to see why the track that allowed him to start should not have been held to the same duty and accountability.

One of the most notable cases was that against the famous two-year-old Axtell, and his owner, D. W. Williams, of Independence, Ia. Axtell, it appears, was entered in the three-year-old class, free for all, at Keokuk, Ia., last August, and the original entry did not state his age. In the third heat he distanced the field, and in announcing their decision the judges stated that he was only 2 years old. The protesting parties claimed that up to the time of that announcement they knew nothing of Axtell's age, and supposed he was a three-year-old. They protested him at once. The board held that a two-year-old was not eligible in a class for three-year-olds, and also that where horses have been distanced by one not protested prior to the conclusion of the heat in which the distance is made, they are not to be placed in the race, and cannot receive any part of the purse. The protest against Axtell, was therefore sustained, and the purse reverted to the Keokuk track.

O. G. Athey, Columbus, Kan., was concerned in a number of cases which occupied the board a long time, and resulted in his expulsion for crooked work in connection with the brown pacing gelding Turk Franklin, alias Doctor G.

Evidence was introduced to show that R. L. Blair, of Uniontown, Pa., entered and drove the black mare Hattie T., under the name of Georgie Blair, at Peoria, Ill., and that he entered and drove the brown horse Consul, under the same name, at the same place. R. L. Blair was therefore expelled, but his brother, H. T. Blair, whose name was connected with the case, was declared innocent. Hattie T., alias George Blair, was expelled, and Consul, alias Friendship, was suspended pending the restitution of his unlawful winnings.

H. A. Oswald and the chestnut stallion Keller V. were suspended for trotting in a 2:45 class, when the horse had a record of 2:42. A demand for the return of the money unlawfully won was made upon Oswald, and was not complied with. The board, believing that Oswald was ignorant of the true record of his horse, suspended both until the money is refunded.

The famous case against Frank Van Ness, the Sire Brothers Burt Sheldon and James Hamerick is too well known to need notice. It is more than probable that the story was heard by the board in a one-sided way, and that the action will be reversed when the facts are fully presented.—Sporting World.

"Firing" as a Counter-Irritant.

From the Kentucky Stock Farm.

Some weeks since we printed an article from Mr. Joseph Cairn Simpson, of San Francisco, Cal., on the treatment for sprains of the suspensory ligament as practiced by him on his horse Antevolo, when preparing him for the National Stallion Stake. It will be remembered that Mr. Simpson is radically opposed to firing, and suggested much less heroic treatment. The veterinarians in his vicinity do not agree with him, and we find the practice of firing is strongly applied by veterinarians there as here. A well known member of this fraternity writes as follows:

Of all the counter-irritants there are none that has a better or more specific action than that of the actual canterly or heated iron, if judiciously employed. Stonehenge, in his work on the horse on the subject of firing, states that the purpose of firing is for a two-fold reason—first, to produce an immediate counter-irritation, by which the previous inflammatory action is reduced; and secondly, to cause the formation of a tight compress over the part, which lasts for months. He claims that it is the fashion to deny the existence of the latter effect of the operation, but that every practical man must be aware that it follows upon firing, to a greater or less extent, according to circumstances, but always lasting for a few months, until the skin stretches to its previous condition. The bluish which it leaves, and the pain which it occasions, both during and after the operation of the irons, should cause it to be avoided when any equally useful substitute can be employed, but unfortunately there are many cases where it stands without a rival as being at once the safest and most efficient remedy which can be adopted. Blisters he claims can be made to cause the same amount of counter-irritation, but the inflammation accompanying the former often extends beneath the skin, and increases the mischief it was intended to relieve. The pain of firing can be relieved entirely at the time of the operation by the use of chloroform, but the subsequent smartening is quite as bad, and this is beyond the reach of any anesthetic, independently, however, of the interests of the owner. It is also to the advantage of the horse to get thoroughly cured, for if he is not he will either work on in misery or he will be consigned to the knacker's yard, and therefore the adoption of the most efficacious plan of treatment, even of somewhat the most powerful, is the best for both. That, then, is the opinion of one of the best writers on the diseases of the horse that we have to-day. That there are many that deny the efficacy of the hot iron, and will cite numerous cases to strengthen their argument, we admit; but on the other hand innumerable instances can be cited wherein, but for the benefits that followed the use of the heated iron, the animal would be practically worthless. That this operation has recently become quite fashionable among owners and trainers of running horses is quite evident; but it is beyond contradiction that there are also many cases wherein firing is resorted to where milder methods would have accomplished the same purpose.

The benefits that have followed the use of the canterly iron in some cases (where judiciously employed) have led some of our owners and trainers to believe that it is a panacea for all the ills that horseflesh is heir to, and consequently the surgeon is often called upon to perform the operation when it is totally uncalled for, and when, if employed, it would be but inflicting an unnecessary torture to the animal.

That there are some surgeons who for pecuniary reward are satisfied to debase their professional calling, as well as their human feelings, while deeply to be deplored, is nevertheless a fact, which can be readily proven by visiting any of the larger stables in cities or on the tracks, where numerous cases will be found where horses have been subjected to the influence of the hot iron just to please the whim of the owner, where no possible benefit can result from its use. Some time since it was the custom to fire the joints of yearlings, as it was then currently believed that it strengthened them. This practice, however, is not now followed; at least not to the extent that it was formerly. That there are cases where firing, as a remedial measure, is called for we do not deny, but it is against this barbarous practice of subjecting animals to unnecessary torture that we are hopefully broken down, who, if left to nature, would so far recover, as perhaps to be of service in the stand, if not for any other purpose, that we raise our voice, and in so doing we know that we voice the sentiments of all humane thinking men. In cases of bony deposits, such as ringbone, curbs, side bones, splints, sprains, hardened wind puffs (oslets), thickened sheaths of tendons, etc., firing is beneficial by promoting absorption of the material poured out, or by the formation of a natural bandage about the part that for a time materially strengthens it, but that the operation should be resorted to in yearlings to strengthen the parts; or in case of big head, to arrest the growth of bone, or in broken down horses, where both tendons have given way, and are as yet inflamed from the severity of the lesion, we hold is a barbarous practice, which every right-thinking man who is a lover of the horse should lend his aid to check.

The Horse in Folklore.

The horse is thickly set in folklore. In parts of Germany a horse's head may still be seen over the doors of cattle stalls or about the house—a custom which survives among ourselves in the luck attaching to a horse's hoof. This perhaps, dates from the custom of our ancestors, mentioned by Tacitus, of keeping white horses in sacred groves at the public expense and idle, and forecasting the future from their neighings. A horse's neighing always presaged victory to a warrior, as his silence presaged defeat, and the French anticipated disaster at Agincourt from the fact of their horses not neighing on the eve of battle. A horse's hoof under a child's pillow is supposed to be a preventive of convulsions; a horse's teeth are a safeguard against toothache, and horses at which they shy are threatened with calamity.—Popular Science Monthly.

I Know What Ails Him.

Once in a life-time you meet a man, says Danton's Spirit, who will admit that he doesn't know all about a horse, but he is liable to come around next day and claim to have been temporarily insane when he made the admission. As a rule, every man knows exactly what ails a horse, whether anything is the matter or not, and can point out a dozen instances where nature could have improved on her work, no matter how well she did it. The other day a horse stood at the curb-stone tied to a post on Washington Street. He was as sound as a dollar, not even showing a wind-puff. Pretty soon along came two lawyers, and one of them remarked: "Pity such a nice animal as that is soundered." "Yes, and I can see that he is wind-broken to hoot," was the ready response. Then the cashier of a bank halted and took a look at the horse's teeth. He was going away when a mail-carrier asked: "How old do you call him?" "Some men might buy him for twelve, but they couldn't fool me. That horse will never see sixteen again." The best judges had called him five, and his owner had proofs that he wasn't a mouth older. The mail-carrier felt of the animal's ribs, rubbed his spine, and observed: "He's got the bottle, or I'm no judge of horses." Then a merchant halted and surveyed the horse's legs, lifted its front feet, pinched its knees, and feelingly said: "Been a pretty good stepper in his day, but he's gone to the crow's now." The next man was a book-keeper. It took him about five minutes to make up his mind that sweeney was the leading ailment, although poll-evil, heaves and glanders were present in a bad form. "What is sweeney?" queried an innocent hoothblack, who thought the horse had liver complaint. "Sweeney," repeated the book-keeper, "look at the way he carries his tail, and learn what sweeney is." "I guess not," said an insurance man, "I guess sweeney affects the lungs." "Lungs!" cried a broker; "you mean the atomach?" And while they were wrangling over the horse's ailments, along came his owner and began to untie the animal, which proved to be one of the fastest young horses ever owned in Chicago, and one which brought home as much money this year as the next horse.

The Color of Horses.

Prof. Wilkins, a German, has investigated the subject of hereditary color in the coats of horses. In the case of 1,000 reproductions of pure English blood horses, where sire and dam were of the same color, that color was transmitted 856 times to the progeny. In 1,000 cases where the colors of the parents were dissimilar 437 foals had the color of the sire, 508 that of the mother and 55 different from both. Foxy-red is the hue most reproduced when the parents are of the same color; brown, when they are of different colors. Black is the rarest shade reproduced in crossbreds; only 116 cases in 1,000 when the sire is black, and but 92 when the mare is so. When the breed is but half-blood the ratios are not very markedly different. Nor does Arab blood exhibit much variation from these proportion-standards, save that when sire and dam are white the number of foals of the same color is 900 per 1,000. But the color black is here again markedly rare. When the foal represents a coat different from both parents, it is foxy-red that dominates and which represents the inheritance of a color belonging to an early ancestor. Respecting sexes; here complexion is unequally transmitted. When the parents are of unlike hues, brown is the prevailing color for mares and white for stallions. There is no precise explanation for these divergencies. It is suggested that the better the work of food assimilation takes place during the period of gestation, the more the offspring would resemble the mother. In any case where the color of either parent dominates, there will dominate corporeal form also.

B Betting Yarn.

A gentleman stopping at the Baldwin has told me a good thing on D. D. Withers and "Doc" Street, the latter the owner of Niagara, a more than average purse horse. My informant who is a close observer of public form, saw that Niagara was rounding in good shape notwithstanding he had lost three consecutive races, so he determined to plunge on him and make a sure thing of winning. Going up to Mr. Withers he said, "Have you noticed how Niagara is being handled in his races, you who are usually so close an observer should have noticed it I think? If I were you I should speak to Street about it." Street just then happened to pass and Withers calling him up said: "Street, if I ever see your horses run again as they have been run lately I shall rule you and them off for all time, now remember what I tell you, no more nonsense. Now go on, I want no argument about it." Street was amazed, he did not know what to make of it, he had done nothing wrong and could not understand Mr. Withers language. However, in a day or two Niagara started again, and Street instructed the jockey to win at all hazard. My friend was watching for this opportunity so he put on $400 at odds of 12 to 1. There was nothing else in the race, it was Niagara hands down. Result a profit of $4,800. Withers satisfied that his scolding had been beneficial, and Street does not know to this day why he received it.

The Chronograph Clock.

The dial of the clock which shows the minutes and one-fifth seconds, has a diameter of thirty inches, thereby allowing divisions of time to be seen at a great distance. The chronograph gearing is made on the bevel-wheel principle, similar to the one used in the Waltham watch chronograph, thereby making a perfect instrument. The minute hand and the one-fifth second hand are started, stopped and returned to 12 through an electrical appliance, either from the judges' stand or from any part of the track. Should the horses start from a point distant from the judges' stand the hands are started by an electric button near the starter and stopped by another button behind the wire on the judges' stand. As many buttons as necessary can be placed on the track, and any one or all of the three operations can be made from any of the buttons. The starting and stopping of the hands is instantaneous, being obtained by a slight touch of the button. Both hands are returned to the starting point (12) by means of any of the electric buttons. The motive power is obtained by a weight of ninety pounds attached to the great wheel, which has a maintaining power, to allow the running of the clock to remain undisturbed while winding it. When the hands are at rest the clock keeps on running, thereby allowing the clock to be perfectly regulated. The clock will run one day or more if necessary, and the hands may be operated an unlimited number of times. The clock should form a portion of the paraphernalia of every first-class track. Loco Poison.

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN:—An article appeared in our paper of 25th August, 1888, on "Loco Poison," and you requested correspondence thereon.

I enclose two extracts from a copiously illustrated work entitled "Plants reputed poisonous and injurious to stock," by F. M. Bailey, F. L. S., Colonial Botanist, and P. R. Gordon, chief inspector of stock, published, by authority of the Hon. the Colonial Secretary, by James C. Beal, government printer, William Street, Queensland, 1887.

The preface states this book "has been prepared for the stockowners and farmers."

I also send an extract, on the same subject, from a Colonial newspaper.

GOULBURN, N. S. W., Nov. 22, 1888.

Order Leguminosae—Swainsona Galegifolia.

DARLING PEA OR INDIGO.

A perennial or undershrub one foot or more high, of a light grey color, the leaves composed of from 11 to 12 oblong leaflets, often having their ends notched, from one-half to nearly one inch long; the racemes of showy flowers on often long stalks. Flowers deep red or rosy in one variety (var. corniculifolia), and white in another (var. albaflora), large, and having at the base of the standard plate-like callosities; the style bearded longitudinally. Pod much inflated and of a membranous substance.

These and some other of the genus are known as "Indigo-plant" in Queensland, where it is common on downs country, also in New South Wales. Although this plant does not contain an irritant poison, it has undoubtedly occasioned great losses in stock. Its effect on sheep is well known to stockowners; they single out from the flock and wander about listlessly, and are known to shepherds as "indigo eaters." When once a sheep takes to eating this plant it seldom or never fattens, and may be said to be lost to its owner.

The late Mr. Charles Thorn made, in 1873, an experiment with this plant which is deserving of a place here, as showing its effect on sheep. A lamb that had become an "indigo-eater" was placed in a small paddock near the homestead, where it refused to eat grass. Mr. Thorn collected a quantity of the Indigo plant and this it eat greedily, following him all over the paddock and eating it out of his hand.

The Hon. G. King, M. L. C., kindly supplied a bag of the plant to the Chief Inspector of Stock for analysis. Mr. K. T. Staiger experimented on several animals, with the result of showing that it was possessed of very powerful sudorific properties, its effect on frogs, for instance, being to reduce them in a few hours to mere skeletons. Further experiments pointed to the probability of its being a most active poison when administered in a volatile state.

Of the Darling Pea Mr. William Nepean Hutchison says stock readily devour it, and it takes but little to drive them perfectly wild. On one occasion a mob of travelling sheep camped no distance from the town of Taroom. Quatuorities of the pea were growing about where the horses were bobbled for the night. The following morning it was noticed how strange the animals appeared. They had been on the road some nine weeks, and were up to this date caught without any trouble, but on this particular occasion it took several of the men to do so. Their eyes were staring out of their heads, and they were prancing against trees and stumps. The second day two out of nine died, and five others had to be left at the camp. When driven they would suddenly stop, turn round and round, and keep throwing up their heads as if they had been hit under the jaw; they would then fall, lie down for a while, and would go through the same agonizing performance when they once more attempted to stand. On one station in the course of a few weeks eight head were shot, having injured themselves past all hope of recovery.

There are ten or more other species of the genus Swainsona in Queensland, and they likely all possess somewhat similar properties; but the specimens which have usually been forwarded to us as the "Indigo" have been one or other form of S. galegifolia. It would seem, however, that in South Australia another species—S. procumbens, F. v. M.—is the dreaded plant, and the Adelaide correspondent of the Brisbane Courier in his communication of 7th October, 1885, states: "A Bill was carried for the destruction of thistles and Swainsona procumbens." A few weeks previous to this a member stated in the House of Assembly, South Australia, that great injury had been done to horses in the south-east by this plant. This species, which is not uncommon in Queensland, is somewhat similar in general appearance to S. galegifolia, differing, however, in the absence of callosities on the standard of the flower, and having the keel much incurved and produced into a long, obtuse, spirally twisted beak. The pod is also stalkless and turgid. It is found in South Australia, Victoria, New South Wales and Queensland.

Order Leguminosae.—Swainsona Greyana.

(Reference to) Lindl., Bot. Reg. t. 66; Flora Austr. ii. 216.

This species, which is suspected of poisonous properties in New South Wales, has been met with in some parts of Queensland, according to Baron Mueller in "Census of Australian plants," but is not common. It is nearly allied to S. galegifolia, differing principally in being of a more robust habit and having the calyx of the flower covered with a cottony down. It ranges throughout South Australia, Victoria, and New South Wales.

Extracts from "Town and Country Journal," newspaper, Sydney, August, 1883.

"Horses that become addicted to eating the blossoms and young shoots of the genus Greyana, and also other species of the genus (which are known generally among bushmen as indigo, poison pea, wild vetch, Darling pea, etc.) are affected with a species of insanity. If ridden say along a bush track, either at a gentle canter or at a stockman's amble, they will often, on seeing a twig on the track, jump over it as though it were a log three or four feet high, or they will spring aside (shy), or stop suddenly, as though some great barrier was suddenly placed before them. They have been known to display other vagrancies, both when under saddle and at liberty, such, for instance, as attempting to climb trees. . . . It would seem that the brain is affected by the shrub, and the final result is emaciation and death."

Polled Angus Sale.

Messrs. Killip & Co., 22 Montgomery Street, San Francisco, announce a sale of Polled Angus cattle. The herd comprises 15 head of choice animals; an 1,800-pound two-year-old bull, ten two-year-old heifers, two yearling heifers and two calves. The heifers weigh from 1,200 to 1,400 pounds. The cattle are superior in all respects, and the offering is a most favorable one for any one desiring to found a herd of the popular hornless stock, which is rapidly making its way into general use both for milk and beef purposes.

Seventy first-class Short-horn cattle, all recorded or accepted for record in the Short-horn stud-book, are offered through the advertising columns by Messrs. Prewett & Goff, of Winchester, Ky. The cattle are select, well-colored, in first-class condition and in all respects unexceptionable. They may be seen at the Railroad Stables, corner Turk and Steiner Streets, San Francisco, and will be sold at auction at a date hereafter to be published.

Coughed it Up.

A large piece of fine leaf tallow weighing about five pounds was lying at the corner of Front and Benton streets, the other day. A couple of honest appearing natives of the cow boy persuasion were basking in the sunlight at the same corner, when a stranger and a pilgrim came sauntering along taking in the sights. He observed the fine lump of tallow and it awakened his curiosity to such an extent that he turned to the guileless riders of the range and remarked: "Looks strange to see such a fine lot of tallow thrown out on the street and going to waste." "Oh, that's nothing in this country," answered one of the natives. "That tallow won't be thrown out there; some cow or steer coughed it up." "Coughed it up," exclaimed the pilgrim, "why I don't see how that could happen." "Easy enough," earnestly remarked the irrepressible old timer. "It they couldn't get rid of the extra fat that way the range cattle in this country would smother to death! Fact! Why, one fine fall like this, several years ago, me and my partner made quite a nice little stake drivin' around over the range gatherin' the fat and selling it to the hide and tallow buyers. But here lately the bosses has got so close fistled they gathers it up themselves. I tell you, my friend, times ain't like they wuz!" The stranger and pilgrim wended his way onward, wondering why he failed to come to Montana fifteen years ago and engage in the cattle business.—River Press.

Pure-Bred Cattle.

The following hints may be read with profit in view of the present offerings by Messrs. Killip & Co. and Prewett and Goff:

"There is positively no excuse for farmers who do not now procure pedigree cattle with which to grade up their herds. Prices are, on the average, lower than they ought to be, and undoubtedly lower than they will be again for many years. The depression in the market for two years past has brought this result, but the reaction must come, and has already commenced. 'Why were you not at the Blessing sale of Holsteins?' we inquired of an extensive dairyman a few days after. 'I was filling silos,' was the reply, 'and besides I thought prices would go too high for me.' Another dairyman said he had forgotten the date, and still another said he had never seen the advertisements. These cattle went begging for bids among city milkmen and a few farmers from the suburbs, none of whom wanted more than one cow, and wanted her for milk, not breeding. They were sold at simply good milk cow prices, and they should have been distributed over the Western Reserve, among farmers who would use them in grading up and improving the blood of their dairy herds. Reports of public sales throughout the country all show that prices, on the average, are within the reach of any farmer who is ordinarily successful in his business. A few animals in many herds, and all, or a greater part, of some herds, bring high prices because of real or fancied excellence of pedigree that will be valuable to the breeder. Aside from these, which only breeders buy, the prices of pure-bred cattle are so low that a lively demand ought to prevail throughout the country. There will never be a better time to buy such stock, and the farmer who has the money to invest will make no mistake in judicious investment of this kind.

Breeder's.

Breeders, like poets, are born, not made.

To be a skillful and practical breeder is one thing; to be a practical and successful raiser and feeder of domestic animals is quite another thing, says Herds and Flocks. Experience, as well as strict interpretation of terms, teach that this is not a distinction without a difference. The distinction made is warranted not only by the meaning of terms, but is recognized by common usage.

The practical, successful raisers and feeders of domestic animals living within the boundaries of a single state may number thousands. The skillful and practical breeders to be found within the same municipal boundary may easily be reckoned by the score.

When we speak of one having a practical knowledge of the laws of heredity and descent, and that degree of sagacity, patience, judgment and skill essential in producing a horse, cow, sheep, or fowl possessing in a superlative degree the characteristic excellencies common to individuals of their several kinds, or who is able to produce a new type of individuals in which is combined the valuable qualities inherent in two or more breeds or varieties, and is able to transmit, intensify, and make persistent these valuable traits and qualities, we call him a breeder.

The breeder must bring to his work a different equipment, both natural and acquired, from that of the horseman, the flockmaster, the feeder, or the dairyman. Strictly considered, the functions of the successful stock-raiser, wool-grower, or dairyman may be limited to the keeping, proper management and care of such breeds of animals as are known to possess traits and qualities adapted to the purpose for which they are kept, and the use of such means and methods as are best suited to secure the largest profit from the least outlay of labor and capital, and with the least hazard and loss.

The functions of the breeder may not be defined within such narrow limits. The meaning of the term implies that the breeder must not only be a stock-raiser, a wool-grower, or a dairyman, but that he must be something more.

He must be able by intelligent and pains-taking selection, and by skillful and patient application of the laws of heredity and descent, to develop the inherent constitutional potency appearing in any individual, and to stimulate the desirable, and eliminate the undesirable qualities latent in individual or race. He must be able to produce new types of superior individuals, in which shall appear the valuable qualities and traits distinguishing two or more individuals or races.

A definite and intelligently conceived standard of excellence must be set up. Ancestral foundations must be laid, and so built upon that this conception may be realized. The capacity essential in realizing this conception may in part be acquired by education and experience, but the sagacity, that keenness of penetration, the faculty of discerning and successfully meeting the conditions and requirements incident to the adaptation of physiological structure to functional capacity, must be born in the man.

The breeder may learn that like begets like, that prepotency inheres in paternity rather than in maternity, that habit—food, care and the like, are potent in developing disposition, constitution, form, organic and functional capacity, but the sagacity that discovers superiority half hidden by mediocrity, the power to sift pearls from pebbles, the faculty to conceive and produce a Duke of Airdrie, a Stoke Pogis, a Pieterje 21, or a Princess 2d, together with a love for the task, born, not made.

The Care of Butter.

Farmers are often unjustly blamed for the poor quality of butter, which was quite good when bought, but quickly deteriorates after it has been kept one or two weeks. The city housewife, or more generally the servant allowed charge of the kitchen, is largely to blame for this. In summer we have known butter to be placed in refrigerators along with meats and even fish, the idea being that as none of those touched each other no harm could come to the butter. Fat is very absorptive of any odors, and either cream or butter is thus easily tainted. In winter time butter should not be placed where it will get direct heat from stoves or furnaces. If the house is heated from the basement, as many city houses are, it has probably no really good place for storing butter. On a shelf near the kitchen it is sure to absorb odors from the daily cooking.

In the country, butter is generally kept in cellars, which in winter are largely used as storehouses for all kinds of vegetables that the farmer is fortunate or enterprising enough to produce. But the prudent housewife does not often try to store either cream or milk in proximity to the odors arising from vegetables, roots and fruits. If the buttery is not too close to the kitchen stove, and is properly ventilated, good butter may be produced, but, as is generally conceded, this is much more difficult in winter than in summer, when good ventilation seems so much more a necessity that it is rarely neglected.

The butter house should, if possible, be disconnected from everything else, and be kept both cool and free from noxious odors. Few farmers are able to keep any large quantity of butter very long without loss of quality, and never if their cellars are filled up with fruit and vegetables, as those of a farmer in mixed husbandry are almost sure to be. Nor is the city resident any better prepared for this business. As a consequence it is better that the farmer sell his stocks off about as fast as he makes them, and that the consumer should buy small quantities, that may be quickly used before danger of their being spoiled.

A Stubborn Cow Propeller.

To lead a stubborn cow, put a rope around her horns in the usual fashion, and then pass it back of and around her ear, then forward and under the rope which goes around the horns, pulling the ear tight against the horn. When the rope is properly arranged, the most stubborn cow will trot along nicely.—U. S. Dairyman.

P. T. Sharp has imported a herd of Polled Angus cattle for his ranch near Salem, Oregon. These are the first of their kind in the State.

The following is of interest to those who keep cows: A cross cow in a herd keeps the others always in perpetual fear, and in that matter lessens the milk from the others in quantity more than may be sufficient to balance that given by the cross cow. A cross or domineering cow should be got rid of.

Catalogues Lately Received.

Several gentlemen who are interested in the breeding and development of the trotter, have formed an association called the Kentucky Breeding Farm, and have just issued a neat list of the brood mares they have already purchased. Among these are the Mambrino Patchen mare, Lottie Thorne record 2:27, and the George Wilkes mare Bonnie Wilkes, record 2:29½, the dam of L. J.
Rose's four-year-old Bonbon 2:26.

W. R. Brasfield has sent a catalogue of the Hickory Grove Farm stock which he will sell February 12th at Lexington. James G, 2:20½ and some youngsters by Phallas, Summons and Dictator are to be offered as well as some good brood mares.

Second and Third Horses.

The remarks of J. T. Lowther Esq., at the annual dinner of the Grimmer Club, London, last month, have called forth criticism on both sides of the Atlantic. The gentleman suggests that more money shall be given the second and third horses than at present, so that the enormous sums now paid to one horse shall be divided more fairly. The Sporting World says editorially:

While the money awarded to the owner of a winning horse is constantly growing, nothing is done for the runners up.
Now, as the winners are but the few, it is evident that the great bulk of horses which are just a shade behind in point of speed to the successful ones are to a great extent valueless.
Take the case of a two-year-old like Tremont, or a three-year-old like Hanover, or an older animal like Firenze. They practically have a mortgage on all races they start for. Now an obvious remedy to relieve owners of other horses would be to increase the value of second and third money. In the case of highly important races the second and third money, at present are valuable, but it would obviously be to the best interests of the turf if the practice were made more general.
It would not alone confer a benefit, and a needed one on horse owners as a class, but it would insure better racing, harder trying for place, closer finishes and better betting.
Mr. Lowther's suggestion, which is almost certain to receive the careful consideration of the English Jockey Club, is equally worth attention on this side of the Atlantic.

A. W. Richmond.

The sire of the great Arrow died recently at the ranch of his owner, John G. Hill of Ventura Cal.

A. W. Richmond was by Blackbird and was the sire of such well known performers as Arrow, 2:13½; Romero, 2:19½; Elwood, 2:23½, made in first race and Len Rose,
2:27, and of Columbine who produced Anteeo, 2:16½, and Antevolo, 2:19½.

Stallion Herd Prize.

A Lexington special says about fifty representative trotting horse breeders held a meeting in that city to perfect the conditions of a unique herd prize to be given at the great meeting of the Kentucky Trotting Horse Breeders' association next October. The conditions read for the best standard-bred stallion and five of his get, the entrance fee to be $100, and the entire stake to go to the winner. Fifteen owners entered their stallions Saturday, and it is expected that fully fifty more will come in before the closing of the stake, on the 18th of next April. This will make the prize worth between $5,000 and $6,000, and make it the richest of the character ever hung up in Kentucky for trotting horses.

Payments in Stakes.

Third payment in Stanford Stakes for foals of 1886, second payment in the same stake foals of 1887, and in the Occident Stakes are due on the 1st of January, Tuesday next. Payments in the Stanford should be made

The Pedigree of Waxy.

In all probability we will have all available information in reference to the genuineness of Waxy's record in time for the next issue of the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN. Having only part of the necessary evidence, it has been deemed expedient to wait and publish it all together.

Track Building in California.

Count G. Valensin sends me the following answer to our inquiries, and also sends the surveyor's drawings of two tracks of which the dimensions are: Three-quarter mile stretches, 990 feet each, the ends are semi-circles drawn with a radius of 315.185 ft., making them each 990 feet. Mile track stretches 871.77 feet each, the four turns are quarter circles drawn with a radius of 424.115 feet each, with a 250 ft. straight at each end of the track.

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN.—I take pleasure in answering your inquiries about race tracks. I have built a regulation three-quarter track, and did not like it on account of the curves being too sharp; then built a mile track, and objected to that on account of the great distance to which colts would get from the place where I stood watching their exercise, also for the considerable labor it took to keep it in order. I have now just built a three-quarter mile which I think is the very best for a stock farm. So you see, my stretches are 881.77 feet long, then the curve is only 424.115 feet, then comes another stretch of 250 feet. The great advantage I find in this kind of a turn is that before the horse begins to unbalance himself going around the curve he strikes 250 feet of straight work, and gets on his balance again before striking the next bend. My experience is that a horse will hug the pole well enough going around the commencement of a turn, but after he goes say one-half way around he begins to lose his balance and wants to get to the outside. Then the driver is obliged to tighten the inside line and the horse to obey the command without slackening his speed, must throw the weight of his body towards the pole, making his high legs carry more weight than nature allotted to them, thence the mischief arises. Generally all trotters give out on the high legs from going around turns at a high rate of speed.

My track (I call it mine, because I gave the surveyor the dimensions of stretches and turns) has more straight work and easier turns than a regulation track. I send you designs of both so that you can convince yourself by putting one over the other, that the turn in a regulation track are more sharp, and that there is a longer distance to cover on a continuous circuit. Another advantage also is that to go a full mile on my track you can start at the one-half mile pole making the lap from it to the wire, and going very little more than two turns, while you take the word on straight work.

Leaving now the distance in design of the 2 three-quarter tracks, I think a three-quarter track preferable because to go a mile a horse has to commence one-quarter before the wire or go past it one-quarter. All horses are eager to stop after going once around the track, be it one-half, three-quarter or 1 mile around; by going the lap they do not stop at once after reaching the end of the journey marked by the starting point, and when they are worked on a mile track they go the journey more cheerfully, not looking to be pulled up at once.

In taking care of tracks much depends on the nature of the soil and the climate, in the moisture of the ground and the atmosphere, so that no rules can be established.

I hope to have answered all your questions intelligently, especially so I send you the plans of the two tracks. After having them used for your purpose you will oblige me by returning them.

Pleasanton, Dec. 24, 1888.

G. VALENSIN.

CORRESPONDENCE.

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN.—I thought I would pen you a short letter, thinking you would like to hear from your old town. We have had a delightful fall, up to date we have not seen any sleighing, the boys are waiting for it, however. The first fall of snow—if enough to make sleighing—will give us a Derby Day at Ed Smith's, between the boue of 3 and 6 p. m. Ed will give a magnum of wine, with a mince pie to the first cutter that reaches his Club House on 57th street.

Of course the man who wins the wine will open up the way for more. The chances are, wine will flow pretty freely for a while, the men who own the trotters and paces, will be to the front. The probabilities are, the fastest horse in the world will occupy Smith's shed that afternoon; would not be at all surprised if some fellow owned one that could pace or trot in 2:00 or better. I wish it were so you could drop in on us that day. I would take great pleasure in taking you down the road with me behind Kate Allen. By the way, she is a standard now, but I cannot see as she moves along any faster or smoother; it may be because I am not up in the standard line. Preenie she is much finer bred mare now than she was before Betty B. made her record last September at Nashville, which makes all of Midnight's colts by standard horses, standard, what a farce! The winners of 1888 were not bred that way, their records made them standard. It looks to me that you people out on the coast are up in breeding lines, you get the performers. And most of them out of thoroughbred mares.

It must have required lots of nerve for you breeders to have deviated from the old style standard aires and standard dams. How did you know but what you could look for mules instead of world beaters. Our old friend Wallace would have this country populated with a nice lot of old aires if everybody would take his advice and breed down, now wouldn't he. It would make him tired should Amadie get a world beater out of Kate Allen.

The only thing that worries me I am told I cannot get the foal registered. It reminds me of the waiter who asked the man if he wanted tea or coffee. "Tea, if you please." "By—, you take coffee or nothing." Now I must breed standard, or get left on the register business. Well, I would sooner get left than breed contrary to my own ideas. If any thing is worth doing at all its worth doing well, that's what I thought when I bred Kate Allen. Amadie is a Jim Dandy on four feet, he is too well bred for Dunghills, as I am Scotch and Irish, I think, and know I can appreciate a well bred horse.

The Park Commissioners have not given us our road drive yet, but I guess they will, they have been interviewed, and I think they begin to realize what the road drivers want. They are a pretty clever set of men, and will probably make a motion to strike off the chains from the gentlemen road drivers and give them a little bit of freedom they have been handicapped for years. They are right, as we have, but we will get a breathing spell after a while, and every body will be happy.

You would hardly know Grand Boulevard now, houses going up nearly every month; in a very few years it will be built up, and have the appearance of Michigan and Prairie avenues.

Yours as ever,

ON THE ROAD.

Is a horse eligible to registration in Wallace's Trotting Register if he trots a mile in 2:30 or better, when matched against time?

Answer.—That will depend upon circumstances. Send us the pedigree and the data concerning the trotting against time, and we can answer your question more clearly. The present rules for admission to standard rank are as follows:

FIRST—Any stallion that has himself a record of two minutes and thirty seconds (2:30) or better, provided any of his get has a record of 2:35 or better, or provided his sire or dam is already a standard animal. SECOND—Any mare or gelding that has a record of 2:30 or better. THIRD—Any horse that is the sire of two animals with a record of 2:30 or better. Owing to stormy weather the races announced for Christ-mae day at the Bay District Track were postponed, the course being wholly unfit for use. Now that the weather has improved the initial day's sport will take place this afternoon. The first event on the card is a five-eighths dash, and has the following entries:

Al. Farrow, 111; Lida Fergnaon, 110; Gladstone, 113; Minnie B., 105; Nabean, 108; Bogus, 113; White Cloud, 113.

John Hennessey, a prince among trainers, is wintering at Los Angeles. John's face is familiar on all the Eastern tracks and his friends are counted by thousands. Hope you like California better in winter than you do the back East climate, John.

The Napa Fair.

Mr. F. W. Loeber, president of the Napa Agricultural Association, was in the city yesterday, trying to make arrangements for the Napa Fair, which will probably be held in the week commencing August 5th. The liberal purses offered by this association last year made the meeting a popular one, and horsemen from all parts of the State look forward to the 1889 meeting with pleasure.

What They Won.

During thirteen years of active campaigning the Dwyera won upwards of $1,000,000 in stakes, purses, matches and handicaps, a larger sum than was ever won by any turfman or confederation of turfmen in this country. In that time they have headed the list of winning owners in 1881, 1882, 1883, 1886 and 1887. They have won more in one year ($208,000) than was ever won before. With Hanover they earned more money ($89,772) than any horse ever earned in a single year. In Miss Woodford they have had the most successful animal in the history of racing on this continent, her aggregate winning exceeding those of any other. They have won more races in one day than any other stable, capturing five at Monmouth Park during the season of 1885 with Panique, Richmond, Lulu, Portland and Barnes. In almost every season since they began racing the Dwyers have had the good fortune to own one or two of the best horses on the turf, and as they entered them liberally in valuable stakes the returns have been large. Those which have won upward of $15,000 each are as follows:

Miss Woodford won 22 races in four years, worth.....	$118,365
Hanover, 23 races in three years.....	105,767
George Kinney, 23 races in four years.....	61,680
London 23 races in two years.....	62,075
Luke Blackburn, 23 races in two years.....	47,475
Inspector R., 13 races in three years.....	46,482
Tremont, 13 races in one year.....	40,045
Sir Dixon, 9 races in one year.....	37,740
Kingston, 13 races in two years.....	35,285
Warfield, 40 races in five years.....	31,640
Bramble, 27 races in one year.....	27,210

Proctor Knott Not For Sale.

Two weeks ago the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN said that Mr. Haggin would not buy the great gelding, basing our opinion on the feelings of Mr. Bryant in the matter. From a letter received this week, we glean the information that in all probability, Proctor Knott will not be started in the Kentucky Derby, but Come-To-Taw will carry the Bryant and Scoggie colors for that event, Knott being reserved for the American Derby and the later three-year-old stakes. The Examiner of Tuesday, had a telegram from Louisville, which says:

Sam Bryant, the owner of Proctor Knott, said this morning: "Proctor Knott is not for sale to anybody. I am going to keep him. I offered him to Haggin for $30,000, and he wanted him at $25,000, and now, — me, if anybody shall buy him. I ain't goin' to sell this horse and then let him come out and beat me all summer and make me sick at the stomach every time I run second to him.

"I'll bet $2,500 that Knott'll beat Galen the first time he hits him. Play or pay. I'll bet $5,000 in cash that I beat Galen in the Chicago Derby, and I'll put the money up any day. I want the money, I don't want no withdrawals or backdowns. I'll put my $5,000 in the hands of any good man. Knott is engaged in eleven stakes, the first being the $2,000 at Nashville. He is in three three-year-old events here in Louisville, including the Derby and the Clark. He is in two at Latonia; the American Derby and one other at Chicago; the Omnibus at Monmouth Park, and the Coney Island Derby, and the Lorillard at Sheepshead. I believe that makes the eleven. He won't win 'em all, but he'll come near it."

A Match Race.

After the mile race on Thursday, December 20th, which Nabean won, the friends of the Elmwood stable persuaded Mr. Boots to run Nabean again, as the backers of Al Farrow were dissatisfied with the result. In consequence of the dispute, relative to the merits of the two horses, a match race was arranged, and was run off on Christmas day. Owing to the parties interested wanting Mr. E. S. Culver to be judge, starter and stakeholder, and refusing to have any one else in the stand, Mr. Chas. Hinchman announced that all pools already sold would be declared off, because the rules distinctly say that three judges shall be in the stand. Farrow had sold favorite at $20 to $14 for Nabean, still the backers of the Elmwood stable seemed more numerous than those willing to take the long end.

Everything being arranged to the satisfaction of the interested parties the bell was rung and the jockeys weighed in. Smith, a diminutive stable boy, had the mount on Nabean, while the veteran, Tom Haslett, sported the colors of the Oregon horse. The terms of the race were $500 a side, Nabean to carry 80 pounds while Al Farrow was weighted with 112 pounds. After one false start the horses were sent away on even terms, Farrow being three-quarters of a length to the good at the turn. Both riders hugged the outside fence, the running being much better there than nearer the rail. The same relative positions were maintained until the middle of the upper turn was reached, when Haslett drew away and assumed a commanding lead of three lengths. Turning into the homestretch Nabean seemed to tire, and showed an evident dislike for the heavy going. Haslett pulled Farrow to the outside of the track where the going was easier, and won as he liked by ten lengths. It is only right to state that Nabean was sent a very fast three-quarter early in the morning, which evidently left him unfit for the longer race of the afternoon, and Farrow was easy a fifteen-pound better horse than he was on the preceding Thursday.

CHAPTER VII.

REAL AND SPECULATIVE.

The word tramp produced an electrical effect upon Mrs. Morrison, who, like Achilles had her vulnerable spot. It was neither so limited in size, nor so exact in position as that of the warlike abductor of Briseis, but pervaded her entire being in the form of an especial detestation for the man who could not or would not find work. Left to this active woman the proper question would have speedily settled itself by force of a decree proclaiming that every man who did not get employment within a certain time was at perfect liberty to die of starvation.

Between her and Mr. Selden on this point, as indeed on most others—excepting the proper mode of preparing beef, or chicken, where he confessed her knowledge superior, there was an entire difference of opinion. Taught by his own life how easy it might be, in moments of discouragement, to lose the grasp upon better things, to murder faith by rebellious thought, and to become an Ishmael seemingly by command of God, he possessed the largest charity for everything in human form, with the possible exception of an intellectual Amazon for whose existence he could find no reason. Should anyone suggest to him that his own dealing with an exacting destiny was a direct refutation of his theory, he would only shake his head and look downcast. There was in him none of the arrogance born of fortuitous circumstance, which says: "Behold me how I stand here to-day, and will stand to-morrow, a shining light exempt from the follies of mankind."

Instead, he was wont to remember a night of the past, when, despite the ties that bound him to a sick mother, and the fealty owed her for years of tender care, he had packed his bundle and resolved to become a wanderer on the face of the earth, and how he was prevented not by remembrances that should have swayed him, but by a sudden illness robbing him of power to go. And yet another might come back in its black misery whenever he saw a fellow creature on the wrong road; a night that witnessed him ready to end his life and have done with unhappiness. So of our own temptation is born a loving charity for the weakness of others.

These things had been sealed in his heart so many years that they had become roots of conduct, and without bringing them to the light, he was, by degrees, able to make his house-keeper see the uselessness of bluster and storm when their charity was appealed to by some member of the itinerant brotherhood.

At first she would rush anxiously to the front gate, her stiff calico and stern features entering a protest, and her tongue sending out a volley of unsympathetic words, that, without the presence of Nestor was sufficient to drive away any but the most hardened. By this time, however, she had learned that Mr. Selden's interests would not suffer if she went no further than the foot of the kitchen steps, and here, at Tommy's shout, she took up her stand bidding him come to her, and directing Erl to call her father. Her admonition was not given in two or three words, but constituted a full statement of the subject from a matter of fact point of view.

"You'd best call your father, Pet," she said with evident disapprobation of Erl's coolness. "and let him tend to 'em. Each one 'll get four hits and stacks o' good advice; but the dollar 'd do you more good, they'll most likely spend it in Lorenzo fur whiskey; and the advice 'll go in one ear and out the other. It's a man's way o' doin' things, though, and women had best mind their own. You'll get small comfort from the sound o' your voice if you're alone in a wood."

Tommy obeyed his grandmother slowly and felt life particularly hard that he should be called away at the exciting moment when the two figures were nearing the top of the hill.

"Serves me right fur tellin'," he mumbled to himself, as he dug his bare toes into the path, and experienced such pangs as accompany the knowledge of a good deed unrewarded.

By the time he had reached Nestor his spirits had risen again, and with true juvenile temerity he said in the peculiar tone common to his kind when bent on mischief.

"Sick 'em Nest."

For this fact, his grandmother, distracted between loyalty to the Selden family and adherence to her own ideas, gave him a sounding box on the ear.

Here, at least, was a fitting culmination to the past hour, and Tommy cried out with such true boyish vigor that Mr. Selden left his rose bush before Erl could seek him, and came around, expecting to find the little fellow in trouble from a fall, or from too much curiosity concerning the manners and habits of a family of waags which had located itself just under the kitchen porch. Relieved that it was not so, he went toward the gate to welcome the strangers whom he saw, at a glance were not tramps but fishermen, while Nestor submitted to be chained by Erl, who, after Tommy's outbreak could subdue him in no other way.

"Good morning, Mr. Selden," said Dick, opening the gate. He spoke as if they had parted only yesterday.

Mr. Selden was slower and seemed to be turning something over in his mind. But after the first hesitation, he grasped Dick's hand so firmly and said, "good morning, Richard, good morning!" in so hearty a tone that the younger man's mind went swiftly back to a crowded school room of long ago, when the same warmth had turned him from a surly, idle little chap, into a studious boy.

Every salient point in their life history appeared in the minds of both men, as they stood with hands clasped and eyes fixed on each other, then Dick remembered Philip and introduced him. His welcome was cordial but not in any way effusive, and waving aside all apologies for untidy boots and rough outfits Mr. Selden invited them into the house.

It was a delightful place to rest in, that sunlit hall, with its hospitable fireplace—now full of close leaved manzanita—and its soft flush of redwood. No plaster, or cloth-and-paper decorated the interior of Myrtle Heights; overhead the polished beams stood out, and between them panels of fine boarding made an artistic ceiling. Like panels finished by a high waincoat formed the walls, that in color were neither exactly pale brown, nor pale red but an undecipherable shade just between the two.

As they entered, Philip, at least, was pleased that he had insisted on leaving all the luggage excepting rods and fish baskets on the veranda.

"We look outlandish enough without a lot of wet blankets," he said discontentedly as he caught sight of Erl at a far window.

"Have done," answered Dick half under his breath. His eyes were also fastened on Erl who turned as they entered and looked directly at Philip. The great tall fellow was conscious in an instant and his eyes, still fastened on her, filled with surprise. What a wonderful charm lay in the soft black ones that met his, in the dainty red mouth with its upward turn at the corners, in the oval cheek and firm, dimpled chin! Surely nothing could be more beautiful! It seemed a long time they looked at one another, though it was scarcely a second until Mr. Selden called Erl and presented her.

Dick was said to be famous for a certain way with women, and, whatever such a choice phrase may signify, it was true that high, and (I am sorry to confess it) low were known to go down before his glances like flowers beneath a storm.

To Philip, his friend's peculiarity had always seemed the merriest thing on record—a man with four sisters is not averse to having feminine weaknesses laid bare—though he had sometimes remonstrated with him in a jesting way.

"You waste yourself on all kinds, old boy, and some day when you are in earnest and want to win the one you love she'll not credit you."

At which Dick acknowledged and said it was easy for a certain prophet to read the handwriting on the wall, the language being his own.

But on this occasion as Philip saw Dick go up to Erl with his hand extended, and heard him say in his most insinuating tones and with a worshipful glance:

"Such a pleasure, my dear Miss Selden, to come into your perfect home," he felt a sudden indignation shoot through him, though he would not have been at a loss to tell whence it sprang. His own greeting was subdued in the extreme; and while he gave her his hand he was thinking to himself, "Of course she will go down before Dick, they all do."

But she noticed no lack of warmth in the greeting, indeed her thoughts seemed to be playing at hide-and-seek after a riotous fashion that robbed her of ease, and at the touch of Philip's hand she stood with downcast eyes, a flood of rich crimson dyeing her brown cheeks.

Dick sitting in the capacity of quiet observer raised his eyebrows. Your men who are most given to trifling with women are not infrequently the most annoyed at coming upon them accidentally when not in the proper mood—the way with Dick just now, who felt an inward weariness at the mere thought of anything so impressionable as a maiden of eighteen.

Many portions of Mr. Selden's history were unknown to him and until Rob's disclosures of the night before, he had fancied his one time teacher living in a primitive and lonely way, undisturbed by the feminine element. He was not exactly sorry to find himself in an abode of ease and comfort, for although a good old door man, he was an equally luxurious indoor one, and succumbed readily to the artistic in his surroundings.

But—if sport should prove not good—long, idle days with an intelligent companion like Mr. Selden, or a good fellow like Philip was one thing, and entertaining or being entertained by a possibly brainless creature, chiefly interested in herself quite another.

Dick, you see, even when talking entirely with himself was fond of putting things strongly, and that there was a maiden who would neither entertain for the mere sake of such amusement, nor be entertained for the amusement of some one else, he could not be expected to divine, though he admired the quickness with which she regained her self-possession, and the lively but modest dignity with which she suggested to her father that possibly the gentlemen might like an opportunity of sitting after their long walk.

Mr. Selden laughed in his gentle way, and drawing up some broad rattan chairs, said he hoped the gentlemen would make themselves perfectly at home, and pass over any little slips of etiquette he might make.

"A man gets very rusty in such things when he is out of the world of men and women," he said, smiling, "and if I tell you I am heartily glad you have found me out, it must include all, and you are to go about doing just as you please."

"If Miss Selden be of the same mind there is certainly no more to ask," said Dick, with a look that again stirred Philip's anger, and before she could reply he asked abruptly how long she had lived here.

"Since the beginning, I think," she answered, with a swift glance, "I'm a kind of human redwood."

"You are surely straight enough to be typical," said Dick, noting Philip's annoyance, and unable to resist teasing.

"And you broad enough," she answered, making him a little cresty and leaving the room.

On her way to Mrs. Morrison Erl said she should like Mr. Foote immensely, but in regard to Phillip made no confession. While bringing order into the spare room though she caught herself wondering whether the bowl of violets on the bureau would be in his way, and whether the strong, sweet odor of woodbine from the open window would annoy him. Then she blushed and thought the violets were blue like his eyes, and straightway after began to sing in a full, rich voice.

Her father heard her and stopped in the midst of an interesting reminiscence of the old days when Dick was a boy (so long ago, it seemed to Dick listening) to apologize for her buoyancy of spirit.

"You will find her all untrained, gentlemen," he said sadly, pushing the books back and forth on the table near him. "She has had few of the advantages usually given young ladies, and I despair of ever getting her to receive more. The first allusion to boarding schools seems to affect her with a kind of despair, and I have not strength to battle against her inclinations."

"Why do you imagine anything of the kind necessary. Is not this life good for her?" asked Dick, with his customary frown.

"Perhaps," said Mr. Selden slowly, "perhaps. There seems at times to be a necessity for conventional training and again none. I often think the woman nature is a complex thing."

"It is," said Dick, emphatically.

Here Philip, who had been a close listener, joined in the conversation, and pictured simplicity and faithfulness and affection in so clever a way that they seemed to form a particular part of unconventional training.

When he had concluded Dick raised his eyebrows very high, and Mr. Selden said:

"Well, well, the child may get on, she has force, and her character is not without depth."

He stopped a moment, as if thinking, and then continued, "In saying the woman nature is complex I mean only that its fineness makes it intricate. To properly develop a woman's intellect and not rob her of the intangible essence, which I am assured in her birthright, constitutes a difficult problem. The too independent woman who thrusts her intellect at you becomes in a short time as ridiculous as poor old Don Quixote, and in much the same way. She is an intellectual crusader against whom you want to bar the gates."

Mr. Selden, gentle as he was, evidently had opinions—the chief fault for which he corrected Erl.

But to an interested and unbiased person it was amusing to note how quickly Philip and Dick took up this part of the subject, and how finely they handled it. From the extreme radicalism of their onslaught you could almost feel some sympathy in your soul for the women whom God (probably from a mistaken sense of kindness) had endowed with an intelligence more befitting the opposite sex.

Mr. Selden himself seemed slightly surprised at the storm he was raising, and thought it better to qualify his remarks: "I would not have you think," he said gently, "that I undervalue either natural capacity or proper development of it in the female sex, for I do not. On the contrary I believe the most wonderful work of the Creator to be a beautiful, gifted and modest woman."

And ad led after a short silence:

"I hope you will not find my little wild girl annoying."

Much to the amusement of his guests he spoke of her exactly as if she were six years old, and Philip, that his confusion might not be made manifest, branched off upon a new subject, and inquired how the fishing was.

"About the same as usual, I think," said Mr. Selden, "particularly in the San Lorenzo, and one or two good baskets have been brought in from Boulder Creek. It is just a trifle early yet, maybe, but I like it better than when the main stream is full of cels."

"Eels?" queried Dick, "how—what do you mean?"

"Yes, yes, myriads of them, dead and floating with the current. They disappear, however, as suddenly as they come, and with equal mystery. Sometimes I have thought I would look into the matter. It is doubtful though, if there would be enough ascertained to repay investigation. I fancy it is a simple fact of usefulness ended. Nature makes service her stronghold and is inexorable in exacting the pound of flesh. Looked at from a small standpoint this relentless method of hers seems altogether sad, and one is often disposed to inquire if the price paid in the way of pain and suffering is not too great for the gift of life. I remember when I was a lad in school how the fate of that poor insect—I have forgotten the technical name of it now—which seems born just to nourish something alien, affected me. You know the little fellow who lies in a helpless state and is stung, not killed, but stung by another insect whose eggs develop into a grub which feeds off this body until it reaches the proper stage of development to take flight. Never mind, Richard, don't try to think it up, there are so many like examples that one does not matter. Judged, I say, from such minute sources life is an inexplicable problem. Looked at from the larger scheme of the complete universe it becomes equally confounding in an opposite ratio. That at once sets the finite mind adrift by the vastness of its excellence, and makes a man feel his insignificance to the point of wondering why any conditions are arranged for him at all."

"Do you not think, Mr. Selden," said Philip guardedly, and trying very hard to call up some ghostly recollections of the Darwinian theory, "do you not think that in the original scheme a great amount of individual freedom was allowed, and that working upon it men have made bad—bad—" "Selection—choice of materials at hand," said Dick quickly, seeing Philip was in a dilemma.

"Yes, that's it. And could it not have been so in all the circles of living things?"

Mr. Selden smiled. "I, myself," he said, looking out of the window into the shadowy depths of forest beyond, "Am a believer in original free will. But we must always remember that selection is made by a predisposition inherent in the individual, who gains wisdom not by his act, but through the results of it. Such an arrangement seems necessary to insure variety, which greatly enlarged the field of choice."

"But now, Mr. Selden," said Dick, with twinkling eyes, "suppose a man is born with a propensity for lying, and too much stupidity to judge from results that it is a base thing, what becomes of the free will theory?"

"From my knowledge of natural life I should say such a man had in the first place been made up of atoms which should never have come together; that in a certain sense, his parents had robbed him of the natural power of right selection. But you can readily see that such a case does not touch the original free will. If we distort a gift it is not the fault of the giver. Then, too, the power of the selection may be cultivated, thereby creating individual responsibility, and so long as individual responsibility exists, there must be to a greater or less degree free will."

"Or it," said Erl, who had been standing unseen just at the edge of the folding doors during the final part of the conversation, "or if a man should be afflicted with a propensity for eating dinner at twelve o'clock, and that dinner was waiting, and he should desire to be shown to a room where he could make ready for it, would he be free to do so?"

"How perfectly like a woman!" said Dick, following Mr. Selden toward the spare chamber.

But Philip said nothing. He was too occupied in watching the deep blushes and sweet downcast eyes that succeeded the impulsive silly.

PETRONELLA.
SAN FRANCISCO, December 26, 1888.

Fly Fishing Conducive to Immorality.

A careful statistician recently obtained from 262 trout fishermen the weight of fish caught by each one during a year, and also the number of fish caught. He then divided the whole number of fish by the whole number of pounds, and as a result discovered that the average weight of the North American trout is eleven pounds two and a quarter ounces. In this case it would not be right to say that the figures lie, but there is ground for suspicion that the truth has in some way suffered; and the public will interpret the statistics as fresh evidence that trout fishermen can not tell the truth.

Another curious fact in connection with fishing is that the country boy who catches trout with worms or grasshoppers never tells any important lies as to his success. He never catches a trout that weighs more than a pound, and if he does speak of losing a big fish off the hook he never describes it as a ten or even a two pounder. No one pretends that the average country boy is exceptionally truthful, yet there is the undeniable fact that he tells the truth concerning his trout-fishing.

From these facts we can safely assume that fly-fishing is more destructive of veracity than fishing with live bait. The man who fishes with a worm does not make deliberate false statements to the fish. When he calls their attention to a worm the worm is genuine, and though he does observe a wise reticence in regard to the existence of hooks, this is at the worst a mere suppression of the truth, and is much less criminal than a direct falsehood.

On the other hand, the art of the fly fisherman is a prolonged process of deception. He assures the trout that a collection of silk and tinsel tied around a hook is a particularly able and toothsome fly, and every fish that he captures is the victim of this cruel deceit. The fly fisherman represents that his "bait" is made of catgut, whereas it is simply a solid piece of crude silk. He pretends that he fishes with a rod, knowing at the same time that his so-called rod is a collection of short sticks put together with ferules. Thus the trait of false pretence colors all his work, and as a natural consequence his respect for veracity is destroyed, and he tells fish stories without a blush.

Then, too, it must be remembered that the trout fishermen usually make long journeys into the wilderness when he goes fishing. This renders it difficult, if not impracticable, for him to send his fish home where they can be inspected and weighed.

We are, therefore, compelled to believe that the fisherman who comes home from the wilderness with stories of the fifteen or twenty pound trout caught by them, and the sixty or seventy pound trout that escaped just as he was about to be gaffed, are unworthy of credit. That the use of the fly is the sole cause of their mendacity is not as yet demonstrated, but there is surely good reason to believe that the fly is the evil influence which saps the fly fisherman's veracity.

An attempt may be made to introduce salmon into the Aude, which flows into the Mediterranean near Narbonne. One hundred thousand ova of the Sacramento salmon will be taken from America shortly and placed in the river.

An angling reader remarked the other day that his Christmas had been passed in rereading "Petronella's" sketches now appearing, and that he found in them not only very much of interest, but was also delighted with the literary worth and exceeding finish of the articles. His generous expressions, will meet like opinions wherever the charming bits of wisdom, angling experience, sentiment, and fancy find readers.

One variety of seaweed found on the European coast is known as Lucky Minney's lines. The arms, or fronds, grow to a length of forty feet. When outer bark and gelatinous filaments are removed the frond is found to be composed of a single filament like a thread of silk, that grows in a coil, forming a tube, the edges of the filament adhering to each other. This is uncoiled by the coast people, and when braided up in a four-ply cord makes a fishline of extraordinary strength.

Reelfoot Lake.

In the extreme western end of Tennessee, lying alongside the Mississippi River, is Reelfoot Lake, the Southern sportsman's paradise. Nowhere else in all the country lying south of Mason and Dixon's line and east of the Mississippi, can such a variety of game be found. There are not three months in the year when shooting of some kind cannot be had. The lake, situated as it is somewhat remote from the sporting centers, first became known only about fourteen years ago, but since that time the visitors have increased in number year by year, until now no less than three thousand devotees of the rod and gun come to its shores every season.

Until 1880 the accommodations to be had were very poor, most of the parties taking camping outfits, while many found shelter with the fishermen and farmers along the lake's banks. But in the year mentioned a syndicate of Tennessee sportsmen bought a large tract of land at a point most accessible to railway travel, and built a hotel capable of accommodating 1,000 guests, and it is a bad year when Idlewild, as the hotel is called, is not crowded from the opening to the end of the season.

During the duck-shooting season proper, which begins in October and ends in March, the bang, bang of the ten bores is heard from the early hours of the dawn until darkness settles down, and everything from a sand-hill crane to a didapper may fall to a sportsman's aim, but the mallard and wood-duck, the blue-wing teal and the Canadian goose furnish the best sport. When the first sharp winds are felt in the fall, then they begin coming in from the great lakes of the north, and unless the winter is very severe, Reelfoot is peopled with the feathered beauties until halmyspring comes again.

The shooting is done almost altogether from pockets, as the little coves or inlets are called. One needs nothing more than a good ten-bore, plenty of shells, a guide and an ordinary skiff. The guide will furnish the boat, and do all the pulling, and half the retrieving for $3 a day. You engage your guide—there are always plenty of them—the night before. He calls for you at the hotel just before daylight, takes your luggage to the boat, and as the gray streaks of approaching dawn appear above the eastern hills, you are two miles away on the water and are landed in a pocket. On the north side a neck of timbered land juts out into the water perhaps three hundred yards. If the land is high and dry you are put ashore, if not you remain in the boat.

As the light grows the ducks begin to fly. They come from the northern end of the lake, staying close in shore and flying low. If you are ashore you are hidden in the grass, if in the boat a full-grown cypress tree three or four feet in diameter will give you ample concealment. You hear the quack, quack of the birds coming over the water, and suddenly a flight of forty, fifty, yes, a hundred, swing with a swish of their wings around the timbered neck and drop down in the pocket. Perhaps they are not thirty yards away. You get in one at them as they are hunched upon the water, and another as they rise. Your guide is always a good shot, and ten to one will get a couple as they go off. One flight follows another in quick succession, until sometimes your gun barrels get so hot as to scorch your fingers. Above and below you the guns roar. In the numerous pockets other men have taken their stands, and the ducks are kept moving always. The greater the number of shooters the better and faster the shooting. Each man makes his bag from a drove, and sends them scurrying away to his neighbor in the next pocket.

And so it goes on until near midday, and when your morning's sport is over, if you shoot fairly well, you should be able to count out your 250 birds; fine, fat, full feathered and handsome. The mallard far outnumber the other varieties in your bag.

The morning's work in the pockets ends as noon approaches. The flights are less frequent, and they are higher in air. The go to the southern end of the lake, where their marshy feeding grounds lie, to remain there until about four o'clock in the afternoon, when they begin their flight back to the northern end. From four o'clock until total darkness sends the sportsman in home, the work of the morning is repeated.

While this method of pocket-shooting is followed by the great majority, now a few of the most skillful hunters follow the birds to their feeding grounds, and shoot from blinds built of dead grasses and brush, but the bag is always poor, and the hunter is put to much labor in securing his dead, and the wounded are rarely caught. In the marshes or "scatters" the tangled weeds and grasses are so thickly interlaced that the best dog will tire and refuse to work, so the ducks are in comparative safety while feeding, but they run a terrible gauntlet on their return to roost.

The Canadian geese also come south in the fall, and are very plentiful on Reelfoot. They are shot from pockets, and for them only are decoys used. They roost on the lake, but in the day time go back into the country two and three miles and feed in the extensive wheat fields. These same wheat fields, when in stubble, furnish some excellent quail shooting.

The shores of Reelfoot are covered with dense forests that grow right down to the water's edge. Back from a half to two miles the hills begin to rise, and on these one occasionally can knock over a deer, and very frequently a gobbler or two. Squirrels abound, and I have known 125 to fall to one gun in an afternoon. To men engaged in duck shooting a squirrel does not cut much figure, but in the fishing season, when the ducks have gone northward, many a pleasant day can be passed in the hills bagging the "grays," and they make anything but an unsavory dish.

Reelfoot Lake is one of the natural wonders of America. It is a body of water from three to five miles wide and about thirty miles long. At the lower end it has an outlet into the Mississippi. Away back in 1814, one summer afternoon, there was an earthquake, and the spot now covered by the waters of the lake sank down to an unknown depth. Into the huge gap the Mississippi poured, and twenty-four hours were required to fill the hole. With that rush of water came the finny tribes that now teem in the lake. Trout, black bass, perch, cat, buffalo, and many other varieties of fish are caught in the greatest number with an ordinary trolling spoon. On a frosty morning in October it is nothing to land thirty or forty speckled beauties in a couple of hours. Trout fishing with live minnows and perch fishing with the red worm are the favorite methods with anglers. Fly-fishing is a thing unknown, but a bare-footed boy with a paw-paw pole and a bob, made of three hooks and a piece of red, fannel, will land more trout in a given time than the best of anglers with the best of out-fits. Not so scientific, perhaps, is the boy, but his returns are infinitely larger, and he enjoys it.

Sport on Reelfoot is better every year as the place becomes more generally known. There seems to be no diminution in the number of ducks and geese that come every fall, and to exhaust the waters of the finny tribe would be impossible. In all probability the time will come when Reelfoot will be one of the most popular resorts east of the Mississippi. SAN FRANCISCO, December 25, 1888. TREV.

Large game is more plentiful in Sonoma and Mendocino than for many years last passed. Deer are often seen, and several bears have been grubbing about in the hills near Petaluma.

A 1,700-pound grizzly bear was killed in Big Horn Basin, Wyoming, recently. One hundred and ten cartridges were expended by nine cowboys before the bear quit.

The Parker Bros. have at last completed their hammerless shotgun, and placed it upon the market. Sportsmen by thousands have waited longingly for the weapon, being certain that it would embody many excellences, and be a thoroughly well built, sound and first class shooting machine.

Mr. J. R. Stice recently won the championship of America with one of the new guns.

We regret to note that a cruel sport, so-called, has been reintroduced. There are theorists who see cruelty in pigeon shooting, and in field shooting but with them and their absurdly one drawn talk we have no sympathy. But the game of shooting at chickens, with shot, the winner being the man who finally knocks over the wretched bird, is barbarous, indecent, unmanly, unsportsmanlike and utterly indefensible. If the first shot either killed the bird or left it unscathed there might be little verge for strictures, but in practice, shot after shot is had, each one mutilating the chicken more or less, until perhaps a half dozen or more cartridges have been emptied, when the bird falls, cut and bleeding. The shameful butchery lacks all elements which make sport, and should be stamped out at once, even if sportsmen have to enlist the services of the officers of the law.

A sad instance of inaccuracy is noted elsewhere, and another is to be imputed to Captain C. W. Bellairs, who launches the appended yarn from his eyrie in the St. Louis Republican block:

"Freaks of nature are becoming quite common nowadays. Last week a white woodcock was to be seen at Judy & Co.'s game house on Broadway, and now word comes from St. Louis County that William Foebringer, of Altheim, bagged a rabbit which had two well-developed horns. The former case is far more probable than the latter, because many varieties of birds have been seen that were almost white, when their natural color should have been brown or some other dark color. The gentleman who tells the story says he saw the rabbit and felt the horns."

In a life of many years, our worthy friend Holt, of the Riverside Press, has not, to our knowledge, been rightly accused of felony, joking or any other crime or misdemeanor, but even that pillar has wavered, and in his last issue inflicts the following upon a world already weighed down by a Waugh, a Sam Davis and an Ananias. The Press says: "Mr. Beamer, president of our Sportsman's Club, has received a letter from Jas. H. Jacobs, of Atchison, Kansas, a maker of targets and artificial birds for marksmen's use. Mr. Jacobs wishes to come to Riverside to engage in the manufacture of these articles. He makes a flying target, which has a detachable illuminating device, by attaching which the object can be seen after dark, thus enabling a shoot to be continued right along after the darkness sets in. A contest could also be arranged for the evening for those whose business prevents them attending in the day time. We understand that Mr. Beamer has encouraged this inventor to come to Riverside and look the ground over."

Miss Annie Oakley, the famous trap-shot, broke all records at double clay-pigeons on December 18th, at Gloucester, N. J. The conditions of the contest were that Miss Oakley could not break forty-five birds out of twenty-five pairs of clay pigeons, 16 yards rise, Mr. Wm. Howell, of Gloucester N. J., wagering $50 against accomplishing the feat, which was promptly accepted by Miss Oakley's manager, Mr. Butler. When Miss Oakley faced the traps the wind was blowing quite a small gale, which aided the flight of the clays. Miss Oakley was given five trials; on the first trial she made a straight score of fifty breaks, thus beating all records at double birds. Frank McQuade officiated as referee, and pronounced Miss Oakley's shooting the most remarkable he had seen for many years. Miss Oakley used her 6 1/2 lb. 12g. hammerless Lancaster, loaded with 3 dra. Schultze powder and 1 oz. No. 7 shot. A large number of the pigeons were smashed at long range, eliciting hearty applause from the audience. Several chippers, that skimmed away like rockets, received particular enthusiasm. The little lady was heartily congratulated on accomplishing her remarkable feat.

THE KENNEL.

Dog owners are requested to send for publication the earliest possible notices of whelps, sales, names claimed, presentations and deaths in their kennels, in all instances writing plainly names of sire and dam and of grandparents, colors, dates and breed.

From Col. Stuart Taylor.

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN.—The advertisement of a mouster St. Bernard dog in your paper week before last, conveys an erroneous impression to the readers of it, which should be dispelled. It is not fair, nor is it true. The dog is not a St. Bernard, nor is he 35 inches high at shoulder.

I don't like to think of lovers of well bred dogs being deceived by such an advertisement. The dog is a mongrel, that is, he is a cross between what is called a Leonberg and a St. Bernard. He was brought to my office for inspection by a German lady and gentleman.

I measured him. He is about 33 1/2 inches high at shoulder, measuring from the skin (not over the hair) down to ground. He is a very tall, lanky dog, and will undoubtedly, when filled out, be a grand, big dog. But nothing more. It is not right for anybody to palm off this monster as a St. Bernard. His head is not typical, being too long and narrow. From the eyes to end of nose it is too lean and sharp. The nose is not blunt or square enough. He is what is called bitch faced in a large degree.

The head of a true St. Bernard should be massive, even inclined to be ponderous. I have never seen a longer, smaller and narrower face on so large a dog. I hope that his owner will get a good price for him as a big, fine-looking, gentle and intelligent dog. That is just what he is, fit for a ranch or farm, or even for a companion to children, or to accompany a gentleman in his walks, who only cares for a large handsome animal without reference to perfection in breeding. But "honour bright" he never would be allowed by any honest and capable judge, to compete for a prize as a genuine specimen of a St. Bernard.

Nor are his color and markings correct. His color is too pale. Any one of your readers can satisfy himself of what I have said if he will consult any accepted authority.

The "Leonberg" cross is not desirable, as scarcely any body knows how the animal so named is bred. A prize for such a class is never offered now.

On this coast we stand sadly in need of No. 1 specimens of both St. Bernards and Mastiffs. In our last bench show there was but one really fair St. Bernard, and he did not get the prize because he was in poor condition. There is but one good and true Mastiff, Mr. Preston's.

So don't let any one wanting a St. Bernard proper, be fooled by this advertisement.

I write to you simply, Mr. Editor, in the interest of good breeding and fair play. Perhaps I will get no thanks for my advice or suggestions, as by reason of trying to lift up the standard of canine excellence here I incurred hostility.

And finding my efforts unappreciated I resigned the presidency of the Pacific Kennel Club on that account. Still I take enough interest in the subject to give a word of warning with the very best intention.

Thank goodness! I observe that the P. K. C. through its secretary has written to Mr. Mason, inviting him to come hither to judge at the next show.

Dog owners here will then see how hasty they were for thinking me too particular, and will discover that Mr. Mason, as an honest and fearless judge, will not only support opinions I have uttered, but will never be coaxed into giving any prizes to mongrels, or even first prize to animals which stand only in the third rank. Yours for Improvement, STUART TAYLOR.

San Francisco, Dec. 18, 1888.

[Those who read the editorial mention of the "big dog" week before last, may recall the fact that the writer carefully refrained from styling it a St. Bernard. In fact, even intimated its Leonberg character. All that Colonel Taylor so properly and pungently writes about the animal is justified, and does credit alike to his judgment and his fearlessness. Secretary Watson has not yet invited Mr. Mason to judge, but has merely written to secure his terms for the work.—KEN. ED.]

The Field Trials.

It is with much satisfaction that we are enabled to give all necessary facts about the field trials of the Pacific Coast Field Trial Club, which will begin at Bakersfield, Kern County, on January 14th next. On Monday last the Executive Committee of the club met in this city, and selected Messrs. R. T. Vandevort, of Pasadena, Payne J. Shafter, of Olema, and I. N. Aldrich, of Marysville, as judges.

The Southern Pacific Railroad Company, with its usual alertness and consideration which sportsmen are always glad to acknowledge, has granted a reduced fare benefit of which must be obtained in the following manner: Intending visitors to Bakersfield must send their names and addresses to secretary, N. P. Sheldon, Room 13, 320 Sansome Street, San Francisco. Mr. Sheldon will at once forward blank receipts. When tickets for Bakersfield are purchased, the full fare to that point must be paid, and the blank receipt signed by the ticket agent, showing that the holder of the receipt has paid full fare. When a return ticket is bought at Bakersfield, the agent there will sell it for one-third of the regular rate upon presentation of the receipt. This arrangement fixes the fare for the round trip at $12.05 from San Francisco, a very moderate and reasonable rate, which all can pay without inconvenience. In order to secure the reduction it is absolutely necessary that the blank receipts shall be procured from Mr. Sheldon. He has a supply on hand, and will meet all requests instantly. Unless the receipts are procured, properly filled out and preserved, the ordinary full rate will have to be paid.

It would contribute very much to the comfort of those who intend to take part in the trials if they could send requests for rooms to the Kennel editor of this paper, who will visit Bakersfield several days before the competition begins, and will arrange for accommodation for those who desire it. It is no small matter to provide a hundred sportsmen with good rooms, suitable table, and comfortable horses, in a town already full of visitors, but the Knights of the Trigger are looking out for the interests of their brethren, and none will be left unprovided for. Those who prefer to secure their own accommodation can write either to Mr. Richard Seymour, of the Central Hotel; Mr. I. L. Miller, of the Arlington; Mr. W. E. Houghton, or Mr. C. E. Lechner, all of whom are keen sportsmen and most friendly and obliging men.

The judges selected are impartial men, and sure to reach unbiased conclusions, and to announce them fearlessly. Mr. Vandevort has served in a similar capacity before and proven his ability to judge closely. Mr. Shafter has also judged field trials, and is an observant, studious man, at whose hands none will suffer. The third judge, Mr. Aldrich, has never attended a field trial, but has owned several well-bred setters. been in the habit of breaking his own dogs and shooting over them considerably, so that he will be able, after studying the rules, to interpret them properly.

As has often been said in these columns, the trial ground's are by far the best in America, and we believe not equaled elsewhere in the world.

There is an elegantly fitted sportsman's club-house to which visitors will have access. Those who tire of the trials can have quail, duck, rabbit and snipe shooting such as no other locality within our knowledge affords.

Mr. J. G. Edwards, president of the Field Trial Club, was at Bakersfield last week, and had the rarest quail shooting, getting four dozens in one spurt of three hours, and seeing hundreds of birds.

No shooting is permitted upon the few thousands of acres reserved for the trials, but there is ample opportunity to shoot upon ground equally good and quite as near to Bakersfield.

American Field Trial Club.

A summary of the Derby was given last week, except the placing of Count Piedmont fourth, and Daisy's Hope fifth. The Derby was a lively and good stake and the success of the Memphis and Avenir Kennel was not reached by a walk-over. The weather and grounds were good and birds plenty. Mr. John Davidson again acted as marshal and kept the best of order.

The ten starters were all notable dogs. The judges were J. H. Gilbert and T. S. Martin of Lexington, Ky., and C. W. Paris of Cincinnati. The work done was of high class and very satisfactory. First and half of third went to the Memphis and Avenir Kennel, second to that brightest and keenest of the younger field trial men, Mr. J. I. Case Jr., and half of third to Colonel Odell's rattling little Consolation.

*Divided.

Doctor J. F. Perry, whose writings over the name of Ashmont have given him authoritative standing in the kennel world, recently wrote some sentences about the much discussed query, are blue bloods more prone to disease than cross breeds, which may well be read by dog owners. We have long adhered to the belief that thoroughbred dogs, as generally bred and raised were much more susceptible to canine ills than those, the breeding and worth of which made it not worth while to care for them, and we shall continue in that belief until Doctor Perry can suggest something more conclusive to the contrary than he does in the subjoined notes.

"The statement has been made 'that blue-bloods were more liable to disease than mongrels.' If this is to be accepted as a fact, what reason therefore can be assigned. In other columns the writer has suggested the possibility of an error in such an assumption, in absence of statistics or argumentative material.

To invite discussion on this interesting subject, doubts may properly, for a time, be put aside, and the above statement of increased tendency to disease among pure breeds be believed. The question then to be considered is, What agencies are most likely to be active in inducing this increased liability to disorders? Naturally, the first suggesting itself is close breeding. This term, while nearly synonymous with in-breeding, seems preferable in this connection, as indicative of breeding dogs very closely related. The subject of intermarriage among near relatives, and the results of close and continued interbreeding among animals, has been fully discussed by many able writers. Patient research and a collection of facts have led to deductions which must be believed till disproved by as complete statistical evidence. It is now more generally accepted that close breeding, considered alone, is not pernicious. Idiocy, deafmutism, and other evils, once in so large a per cent. assigned to descent from the same ancestry, can more justly be attributed to causes independent of consanguinity.

The theory of the non-renewal of blood as a specific evil has many advocates. The arguments used in attempts to disprove it have been based on assumptions rather than facts. It is believed by many that these morbid conditions, the inheritance of consanguineous unions, are but transmissions of diseases or diseased tendencies.

The phenomenon of atavism is brought forward to sustain their theory, and certainly the fact that peculiarities of ancestors, more or less remote, may be absent in parents and yet make their appearance in the offspring, is a powerful argument.

The niceties of distinction are somewhat bewildering, and an acceptance of either theory to the exclusion of the other is impracticable for the breeder of dogs. In his belief that predisposition to disease is due to a non-renewal of blood, the writer has not been an advocate of either theory alone, but of both. A hereditary taint is evident in many cases, in some it is unrecognizable, yet present in latent force.

IMPORTED BERKSHIRES.
REDWOOD DUKE 13368.

Prize winners at all the fairs in California and the entire list of sweepstakes premiums at State Fair Sacramento, 1886 and 1887.

Importations made direct from England every year from the most noted breeders, selected from the best blood and most fashionable families of Disb-faced Berkshires, regardless of cost, and all recorded in English and American Berkshire records.

Young pigs from these importations, male and female, from entirely different families for sale at reasonable prices, and every pig guaranteed. Address,

ANDREW SMITH, Redwood City,
Or at 218 California Street, San Francisco.

There are doubtless many slight and inapparent deviations from health in different ancestors, which combined in the offspring, bring into existence a disease until then unknown to the kindred.

If a knowledge of all constitutional defects was possible, and brood animals could be selected entirely free from them, and close breeding would no longer be an objection, but rather possess many advantages. Such marvelous perception is, however, denied, and until a growing knowledge of their oh-however, is matured in the canine race, predisposition to disease will continue theirs by inheritance.

At the present time, fanciers study none too closely their animals; form and quality of offspring are too often out weighed by prize-winning records. The craze for pedigrees which possesses many exerts an evil influence, and in some cases forbids the blending and perpetuation of changed characters which improvement demands.

When it is realized that all abnormal peculiarities of structure, faulty proportion of parts, functional irregularities of the different organs, habits, temper, disposition, etc., all may be transmitted by inheritance, then it is earnestly hoped fanciers will breed to preserve from extinction the virtues of the canine race.

An admixture of blood of different families of the same breed has been strongly advocated by many. It is probable that by wise selection is excited an influence which, in a measure, opposes the evil hereditary tendencies.

Mr. G. W. Bassford left for Bakersfield on Thursday last with the aged pointers Solano B, Don and Blossom, and the Derby pointer Doty B. He will give them the final touches for the field trials near Bakersfield.

The membership of the Knights of the Trigger of Bakersfield is growing apace and the accretions include many of the leaders in field sports. The club is fairly entitled to the most generous support, because of its splendid work in enforcing the game laws in Kern, and because it offers such fine facilities for sport to its members. The time is not far distant when all who desire the best of sport on quail must visit the lower counties and none is so peculiarly suited to such uses as favored Kern.

Messrs. J. Martin Barney, Judge Post and J. M. Bassford, Jr., have been in San Francisco recently, their only apparent object being to sample the ecrevisses furnished forth by Mr. John Bergez, who by the way intends to be in Bakersfield during field trial week to show his extraordinarily fine young pointer by Don—Sall.

The matter of foot gear is a serious one with sports men who must tramp many miles on every trip, without especial preparation or hardening of the feet. A good, comfortable shoe therefore becomes a desideratum and it is with pleasure that notice is called to a peculiar style of shoe-pack which may be seen at Mr. E. T. Allen's on Market street. The device is simply a moccasin with a sole attached. The sole as furnished with the shoes is a little too thin, but when a good thick sole of ordinary leather is added the shoes become the lightest and most comfortable that we have ever seen. Recent trial of a pair, furnished all proof needed to establish the shoes in favor and we shall not be without them in future. A feature is that no seams are on the inside of the shoes to irritate and annoy the wearer and there is consequently no painful "breaking in" necessary.

Secretary Sheldon requests members of the Pacific Coast field Trial Club to forward their club dues to him immediately. Some are considerably in arrears and the coin is needed to meet current expenditures. The dues are not high enough, they should be at least $10 per year, when it is remembered that the club scales no purses, but pays all trial expenses out of its receipts for dues and initiatory fees.

The annual meeting will be held at Bakersfield on the evening of Wednesday, January 16th, when it is hoped that a majority of the members will be present.
